"This diary was not written up, as one suspects of some more modern specimens of diary keeping, with one eye on a publisher. It strives for no literary graces. It is scrappy and inconsequent and often so intimate that many footnotes and a glossary are needed to explain the identity of many of the people met and mentioned by the diarist. But intimacies and incoherencies, though sometimes a little bewildering, help to make much of this diary very delightful and diverting reading."

+ Sat R 149:488 Ap 19 '30 850w

Reviewed by Amabel Williams-Ellis

Sat R of Lit 6:1204 Jl 19 '30 1350w

"The best part of this delightful book is a record of table talk. Being who they were, all the conspicuous people of their generation dined or breakfasted with the Gladstones or their cousins in a long and brilliant succession, and apparently all talked in character. Of politicians there were, of course, no end—one after another ministers dropped in to meals 'continuing the Cabinet while eating.' Impressions of them all find a place in the diaries. Only the greater enemies remain in the shadow. . . It is not, however, the politicians who hold our attention most firmly in this entertaining bit of social history. It is the men of letters, the painters and poets, clergy and philosophers who crowded to Carlton House Terrace, Hawarden, or Harley Street."

+ Spec 144:577 Ap 5 '30 1300w

Springf'd Republican p6 S 15 '30 900w

"On the whole her political judgments are too much an affair of emotion to be of first-class value. The excellence of the diary is rather in its brief sketches of personality and in that 'panoramic record' of society of which the editor speaks."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p287 Ap 3 '30 950w

DRIBERG, JACK HERBERT. People of the small arrow. 338p il $3 Brewer [10s 6d Routledge]

30-26956

The "people of the small arrow" are an East African negro tribe, the Didinga, inhabiting the mountainous regions of the Sudan. The author of these stories was one of the first white men to come in contact with them, and he thus writes, from first-hand knowledge, of many aspects of their tribal existence, embodying his material in psychological sketches that resemble folk-tales in style and method. Among the most interesting of the stories are the Tragic love of Lotingiro and Nachai, and The bewitching of Amongin. The book is illustrated with black and white drawings by the author's wife, Pearl Binder.

"One's first reaction is that these studies of an East African native tribe could be translated literally into the aboriginal language and be accepted as authentic saga literature capable of stirring the emotions; that the Didinga might feel as they heard it recited almost as much as the Greeks felt when Homer was recited to them. . . The artistic triumph of this book is due to its author having lived among these natives of Africa not merely as an administrator and as a scientific observer, but as a sensitive human being." John Langdon-Davies

+ Books p5 Mr 2 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p79 My '30

Living Church 83:344 Jl 5 '30 200w

"Intimate, vivid sketches like these of the life of a primitive tribe are rarer than they should be. These are written without condescension, with an obvious delight in the very charming native scene. They are equally free from the pedagogue's responsibility to inclose the greatest possible amount of information in the given sugar coating."

+ Nation 131:132 Jl 30 '30 200w

"By means of a series of sketches and stories the author has produced a kind of saga in miniature. With war and famine, sacrifice and propitiation, legend and pæan, love and death, a film of savage life passes before our eyes. But it is more than a film; it is invested with the inward light of sympathetic understanding." William Plomer

+ Nation and Ath 46:709 F 22 '30 270w

"It should prove an extremely valuable addition to the libraries of those advanced schools and educators who are interested in combating the current idea of intrinsic—and imperialistic—white superiority with one more realistically humanitarian." M. P. Levy

+ New Repub 63:132 Je 18 '30 220w

"The success of the book—and it is a notable success—is mainly due to the writer's calm acceptance of the tribal conventions and of the whole native attitude of mind. . . It is, indeed, not the least merit of an unusually meritorious book that it does something to knock the conceit out of us. The white man is never once mentioned."

+ New Statesman 34:644 F 22 '30 620w

Reviewed by Max Lerner

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 900w

"Dr. Driberg was the first European who ever lived among this particular East African tribe, the first to solve their grammar. He apparently knows and understands them remarkably well, and he writes of them sympathetically."

N Y Times p2 Mr 30 '30 850w

"The author's knowledge, gained by actually living among them, is put to excellent use." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:427 Mr 12 '30 80w

"Mr. Driberg has written a very remarkable book, which, without being a romance, since it is a series of sketches dealing with the life of the Didinga, a pastoral tribe living in the mountainous region of the Sudan that borders on Abyssinia, is yet as exciting as a romance. Its freshness, vitality and strange charm make it especially welcome in these days, when a glut of book production seems to have made every possible subject as monotonous and dull as stale beer." Liam O'Flaherty

+ Spec 144:95 Ja 18 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Alain Locke

Survey 64:406 Ag 1 '30 230w

"Out of his deep knowledge and poetic insight he weaves his tale around the lives of tribal individuals, so that a full stretch of tribal history and life is put before us. In the background we have delicate sketches of the scenery, unstrained and convincing as the talk of the characters. Mr. Driberg has a true artistic restraint and economy of words."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Mr 27 '30 270w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. More about me; poems for a child. 110p il $2 Houghton [new ed 3s 6d Collins]

821

A book of verses for children. The majority of the poems are expressions of everyday happenings as they appear to the child.

" 'More About Me' is in every sense a charming book."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 3 '31 389w

" 'More About Me' will probably be demanded by every child who enjoyed the author's former verse book. H. M. Brock's illustrations are, however, a little disappointing, and the book itself is uneven, though the plums are quite delicious. No one could resist such gems as 'Washing' and 'Animals Eating.' But there are pieces of doughy cake, especially in the long concluding poem, in which a child is taken to fairyland and finds home infinitely preferable. So do we."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:sup382 D 7 '29 100w

New Statesman 34:sup xxiv D 7 '29 120w

Reviewed by A. T. Eaton

N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 80w

Sat R 148:690 D 7 '29 60w

+ Sat R of Lit 7:476 D 20 '30 300w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Pepys, his life and character. 374p il $3 Doubleday, Doran [21s Heinemann]

B or 92 Pepys, Samuel [30-30791]

Mr Drinkwater is interested in that external side of Mr Samuel Pepys which must have been presented to his contemporaries, rather than the intimately unveiled and unadorned Pepys known to our world thru the diary he kept, which covered only a decade in his life. Mr Drinkwater shows us Pepys as young man, lover, husband, a public-spirited business man. He portrays the outer Pepys as a much more worthy and dignified individual than the frank record of human weaknesses in the diary would lead one to believe. The biography is therefore something of a rehabilitation of the man.

"Mr. Drinkwater's contribution to the literature of his subject is critical rather than scholarly. With the exception of the great diary itself, the material for the present study is drawn largely from secondary sources. Even the interpretations are solidly founded upon earlier conjectures. The results justify the method. Mr. Drinkwater has given us a new and thoughtful and sympathetic portrait of the busy little Navy official." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:424 D '30 400w

"The immortal diary not only succeeds in investing with importance all the trivial details of its author's daily round during the ten years it covers, but lends a borrowed luster to all the rest of his life and the lives of his relatives and friends. It is not surprising that it should do so. We are privileged to know the Pepys of a single decade better than we know any other human being. The temptation is irresistible to extend the picture to cover all his seventy years. Mr. Drinkwater, to do him justice, has demonstrated that it is now almost possible to do just that. He has written the first complete life of Pepys that does not over-emphasize the diary. . . His emphasis on the serious Pepys is sound. It removes forever the suspicion that the diary was the casual product of a shallow nature. Pepys was a remarkable man, whether dealing with great affairs or small." G. F. Whicher

+ Books p6 N 23 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 600w

"Pepys the Civil Servant kept the diarist locked up; and then the diarist ousted the Secretary of the Admiralty. Mr. Drinkwater's design has been to weld the two together. He gives us a Pepys both nobler and nastier than the one we smile at placidly in the diary; a Pepys heightened, deepened, individualized beyond a mere mirror of humanity's foibles and chronicler of contemporary life. This was worth doing, and Mr. Drinkwater has done it well." Sylva Norman

+ Nation and Ath 48:438 D 27 '30 280w

"Mr. Drinkwater has accomplished with consummate skill the task which he has set himself in this book: 'To present a portrait combining in one figure the Pepys known to his own generation as a distinguished civil servant and a connoisseur of liberal tastes, and the Pepys known to later ages as a Diarist of unique attractions.' This was work which needed doing, but it required a competent hand to do it well."

+ New Statesman 36:246 N 29 '30 580w

"In a volume whose intention is interpretive, rather than scholarly, Mr. Drinkwater has examined Pepy's character and achievements, not so much as they are set forth to us in the diary, but as they must have appeared to his contemporaries. The figure which emerges from the examination is a more admirable and infinitely more consequential one than the reader of the journal might expect. . . In short, Mr. Drinkwater has discovered for us a Samuel Pepys who, undeniably great as a diarist, was equally great, if less memorable, as a man." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p5d N 22 '30 900w

"Mr. Drinkwater has not drawn a lively picture of Pepys, but he has produced a volume of solid worth, one that is continuously and intensely interesting. 'Pepys' His Life and Character' is vastly important both as biography and as history."

+ N Y Times p4 D 7 '30 1350w

"To millions of the lovers of the Pepys of the Diary the scholarly biography and study by John Drinkwater will be a revelation. The result is an entirely new Pepys, a man of tireless energy, the associate and confidant of statesmen, the intimate of Montagu, the friend of the Duke of York, afterward James II, and an incomparable servant of the nation in the navy." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p3e D 28 '30 450w

"One of the charms of Mr. Drinkwater's writing in this book is that he shows a Pepysian saturation. The frequent quotations from the Diary do not look like a patchwork. The spirit of discipleship, not of imitation, has worked this pleasant accommodation. . . Mr. Drinkwater knows his man; and his book is distinguished in the literature of Pepys by being the work of one who not only admires the Diarist, but actually realizes what he is admiring." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 150:563 N 1 '30 1000w

"Part of the value of Mr. Drinkwater's book lies in his successful attempt to bring the Pepys of the Diary into his proper perspective. It is very well done, with a humorous and courtly dignity, worthy of its subject, but Mr. Drinkwater would, no doubt, be the first to admit that the main object of his work is to send readers back to the Diary itself, with added zest begotten of greater comprehension. . . Mr. Drinkwater is very fortunate. He has been able to draw upon the latest results of Pepysian scholarship; he has had access to the Hinchingbrooke papers in the possession of Lord Sandwich, and he has made diligent search in the various church registers in the neighbourhood of Huntingdon." James Laver

+ Spec 145:599 O 25 '30 1000w

"Mr. Drinkwater has written with much skill and with an easy pen. He has succeeded in a task which Pepys began so brilliantly himself that some might think a man rash and even arrogant to attempt to complete it. But he has not allowed the Diary to domineer, as it might so easily have done, if he had been content to quote from it at length. On the contrary, he has chosen from the Navy records as much as from the Diary and, combining the evidences of both, has produced a complete picture."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p936 N 13 '30 1400w

DRINKWATER, JOHN; CANBY, HENRY SEIDEL; and BENET, WILLIAM ROSE, eds. Twentieth-century poetry. 636p $4 Houghton

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections 29-27945

An anthology of English and American verse since 1900. The poetry of each nationality appears separately, with groupings arranged by the editors; and a short biographical sketch precedes the work of each poet represented. John Drinkwater writes the introduction to the section on British poetry, and William Rose Benét introduces the American groupings.

Booklist 26:195 F '30

"That so much significant verse could be assembled from our own time as is included in this volume gives courage to the lover of America and England. Certainly no longer can the pessimist wail that poetry is dead. The brief introductory biographies are interesting; and the book is worthily printed." C. L. S.

+ Churchman 141:17 Ja 11 '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '29

Nation 131:49 Jl 9 '30 100w

"They have garnered a large and rather academic representation of the lyric verse of England and America: but they have harvested in an indecisive fashion which leaves the purpose and usefulness of the anthology somewhat in doubt. . . This anthology disappoints us possibly because the editors have taken a position more critical than appreciative, and because they have been interested, not so much in good poetry for its own sake, as in the illustration of movements, tendencies and innovations—in short, in a sort of poetic fashion show." Margaret Wallace

— N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 550w

"Messrs. John Drinkwater, Henry Seidel Canby and William Rose Benét have come closer to triumph in their difficult task than any other anthologist since Conrad Aiken issued his rigorously selective 'Modern Poetry.' They have covered a huge field and selected from it with tact and understanding, the result being a good-sized book that actually does give a comprehensive picture of what has been accomplished in English and American poetry during the last three decades."

+ N Y Times p25 Ja 19 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:13 F '30

"Twentieth-Century Poetry has the advantage of being more up-to-date in some details than earlier volumes in its field, but the very fragmentary representations, as well as the bromidic, suspicious, and often erroneous information purveyed in the biographical notes, and the absence of Miss Sitwell and Mr. Masters (among others), will test the patience of most purchasers. The make-up is attractive, and the publicity given to such poems as Miss Bogan's Men Loved Wholly and Mr. Crane's The Tunnel highly commendable."

— + Poetry 37:165 D '30 230w

Pratt p27 autumn '30

St Louis 28:49 F '30

"They have approached their task with love, skill, and restraint—a little too much restraint in Mr. Drinkwater's case. The American editors have taken more chances and shown more catholicity than their British colleague. Mr. Drinkwater, despite his experience and courtesy, has inherited the British habit of forcing a man to make good before he is completely acceptable. Often, all too often, the man has to die to make good. One does not ask a critic to be lenient with his contemporaries. But a little more daring and willingness to err should reside in his heart, though the heart lead his head astray." Alfred Kreymborg

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1139 Je 21 '30 1450w

Wis Lib Bul 26:66 F '30

DRISCOLL, CHARLES BENEDICT. Doubloons; the story of buried treasure. 319p il $5 Farrar

910.4 Pirates. Treasure trove 30-31009

Stories of pirates and buried treasure. The author describes the long-conducted searches for hidden treasure on Oak Island, Nova Scotia; Tobermory Bay, on the west coast of Scotland; and in Central America off the Gulf of Darien. He gives an interesting account of the pirate Blackbeard, or Edward Teach, and his bold companions: Sandy Gordon and Stede Bonnet—all of whom left buried treasure somewhere. The work of Lieutenant Williams, an Englishman who by means of a radio apparatus locates and unearths such treasures today, is also given place in the book.

"There have been other books on buried and hidden treasure, but Driscoll's is the giant to date. There remains only one chapter to complete it, one on the search for Inca treasure in the Andes. . . Mr. Driscoll has flung open a door to the hall of imagination. He has written a pirate book which is rare because not infantile." C. J. Finger

+ Books p18 N 30 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 250w

"Mr. Driscoll's book is a sort of pirate anthology, and each hiding-place evokes associations for the pirate-yarn enthusiast. Illustrators for pirate books, we have noticed, always go about their work with a great deal of bloody zest, and Harry Cimino is no exception. One can sup most luxuriously on his pictured horrors." S. L. Goldsmith

+ Nation 131:560 N 19 '30 150w

N Y Times p13 N 16 '30 750w

"Although this record of lost treasure is not written particularly for children I doubt if any child of reading years could set it down after turning the third page. And I don't see, for that matter, how any person of maturity could fail to find out all that the author has to tell about treasure trove. He gives truth where he has found it, admits the presence of romance where truth has been thinned by too frequent repetition, and writes often with his tongue in his cheek. Having chosen a glamorous subject, his pen gives it a further glamor which is irresistible." A. F. Loomis

+ Sat R of Lit 7:329 N 15 '30 700w

DRURY, FRANCIS KEESE WYNKOOP. Book ^{2} selection. (Lib. curriculum studies) 369p $2.75 A.L.A.

025.21 Books and reading. Bibliography—Best books. Libraries—Order department 30-16966

A study of the field of book selection for libraries which presents the practice used in many libraries large and small. The subject is covered from five different aspects: selection based on demand; anticipated use; resources; textual content; and physical appearance. Aids to book selection are listed and evaluated. Methods used in some large libraries, notably Chicago and Cleveland are analyzed. Organization for selection and the personal qualifications of the selector are considered. Index.

Booklist 27:7 S '30

"This treatment of book selection is altogether beyond criticism as an orderly presentation of methods used by librarians in selecting books. . . It meets every reasonable requirement that a book should meet in order to acquaint prospective librarians with the best current library practice in selecting books of most value to a given community." Douglas Waples

+ Library Q 1:95 Ja '31 1000w

DRURY, FRANCIS KEESE WYNKOOP. Order ^{2} work for libraries. (Lib. curriculum studies) 260p $2.25 A.L.A.

025.22 Libraries—Accession department. Libraries—Order department 30-16965

A study of all the processes involved in the aquisition of books in a library prior to cataloging and after the selection has been made. The aspects discussed are: the organization of an order department; selection of agents to supply books and periodicals; uses of trade bibliographies and sales catalogs; detailed routine for outgoing book orders and incoming books; the acquisition of books, pamphlets and periodicals by purchase, gift or exchange; rented books; supplies and equipment. Accession methods, mechanical preparation of books, office management, and statistics and reports are outlined.

Booklist 27:7 S '30

"The presentation is clear, logical, and effective. The author's extensive experience in the field was supplemented by the data gathered by the curriculum-study staff from a sampling of various types and sizes of libraries. The teacher or the order librarian will find here the ways in which libraries under differing conditions solve the problems of acquiring material for the use of their readers and staffs." H. E. Howe

+ Library Q 1:94 Ja '31 420w

DUBLIN, LOUIS ISRAEL, and LOTKA, ALFRED JAMES. Money value of a man. 264p il $5 Ronald

368.01 Insurance, Life. Cost and standard of living. Wages—United States. Value 30-9328

"Here we have, for the first time accessible to all, specific figures which may be used to calculate the value of a wage earner to his family; how much life insurance he should carry; how much compensation should be paid by employers or insurance companies for physical disabilities from accident or illness; the residual

DUBLIN, L. I., and LOTKA, A. J.—Continued
value of a partially disabled man; what money value is ascribable to accident prevention and health work in individual establishments and in the community; and the average costs of raising a child to adolescence."—N Y Times

---

Reviewed by F. H. Hankins
Am Econ R 20:551 S '30 250w
Booklist 27:50 O '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

"A thoroughly practical approach to the problem of measuring the economic worth of human life."
+ Columbia Law R 30:1226 D '30 350w

"The authors of The Money Value of a Man avoid controversial ground, and frankly disclaim any attempt to estimate the sentimental and other intangible elements of value which attach to a man, or to evaluate his importance as a member of the community. The book is concerned only with his value to his dependents as a wage-earner. . . Within the limits of accuracy which the nature of the problem imposes, the results have been worked out methodically and in a scholarly manner. An important feature of the work is the series of tables giving values for various ages and income classes, and showing the effect of injuries and other disabilities. The book is worthy of use not only by life insurance agents, for whom it is primarily designed, but also by lawyers, judges, and legislators who are faced with the necessity of determining the proper amount of compensation to be given for loss of life or diminished earning power."
+ Harvard Law R 43:1187 My '30 220w
J Home Econ 22:500 Je '30 50w

"If we accept the assumptions, hypotheses and statistical estimates of earnings at different ages laid down by these authors, there is little left to criticize adversely in this excellent study. The readers of the book should be warned, however, not to take these valuations for anything other than they are. They do not pretend to give the one and only true estimate of the value of a man. . . The best features of the book are the full and clear explanations of the methods employed and the rich statistical materials contained in the appendices." Irving Fisher
+ N Y Times p4 Je 22 '30 900w
St Louis 28:207 S '30

"All the book is readable and every page a lesson." Haven Emerson, M.D.
+ Survey 65:99 O 15 '30 400w

DU BOIS, THEODORA. Devil's spoon. 312p $2.50 Stokes
30-5177

Haroot was once a heavenly being who used to go to Saint Cecilia's Sunday afternoon teas. Sent to earth to be a fig-seller, he sinned, and for punishment was made to serve under Iblees in Hell. But Iblees sent Haroot up to earth again, and Haroot chose to come back in the body of a plump and drowning suburbanite, Benjy Bingham—because Benjy had a lovely wife named Sally and three adorable children. Haroot, once in the flabby body of Benjy, discovered that Sally had only a cold contempt for her husband, and he tried very hard, as Haroot, to win back her love. And, because he refused to join Iblees's plot to destroy the Christian religion on earth, and went on a long celestial journey to tell the Almighty about it, Haroot was given Sally's love as a reward.

"However the book is taken—satire, story, allegory, an evening's entertainment—it will be found capital fun, with an idea completely out of the beaten fictional track. The humor, farce, and love episodes are not over-emphasized, and there is an agreeable swing to the writing." Edmund Kennedy
+ Bookm 71:442 Jl '30 280w

"Miss Du Bois has leavened her little satire till it puffs in a frothy lightness. It is highly digestible. And the more you chew of it, the more you want."
+ Books p21 Mr 16 '30 280w
Boston Transcript p5 Mr 22 '30 200w

"The story is told with much good humor and occasional satire." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 80w

"This love story of a gentleman from the celestial regions, whose nature is not wholly heavenly but marred by those faults which paradoxically make for attractive personality, affords the author opportunity for satire and the exposition of human shortcomings."
+ N Y Times p17 Mr 2 '30 300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Je 4 '30 220w

"The story is very amusingly told. A certain bright shamelessness in Haroot's memories of other, less conventional, existences, and quirks of thought that suburban residents don't indulge in, keep him spiritually apart in the pretty but rather uninteresting world he has found himself in. For love of Sally he sticks it out, leaving the reader with the hopeful feeling that one creature so vivid may yet save the whole dull lot."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 300w

DUBREUIL, HENRI. Robots or men? a French workman's experience in American industry; tr. by Frances and Mason Merrill; an auth. tr. for the Taylor society, of Standards: le travail américain vu par un ouvrier français, Paris, 1929, Bernard Grasset. 248p $3 Harper
331.8 Labor and laboring classes—United States 30-8157

"M. Dubreuil's book is unique. The report of a French mechanic who worked for many months in American factories, it presents a point of view impossible to most other types of observer. M. Dubreuil breaks many lances in defense of Taylorism, but there is nothing to hint that his opinions are formed by anything but his honest judgment. Although our French mechanic's first experience in an American factory was with a grafting employment manager, he likes our ways and our spirit, our workers and our foremen. Not only does he sing paeans to mass production and the assembly line, but he helps in the good work of puncturing those twin myths, that the worker in mass production needs little skill and takes no pride in his work, and that he is the slave of a tedium and monotony which the craftsmen of other days never knew."—N Y World

---

Booklist 26:341 Je '30

Reviewed by J. A. Flexner
Books p20 Ap 6 '30 800w

"Nothing short of actual reading can give the sense of dynamic research, forceful and enlightened reasoning, calm analysis. It is richly detailed and carefully documented. Really he must owe a good debt to the translators. They have rendered his incisive French into acute English. The book itself is addressed to French readers, but Americans find it an enthralling account, particularly because they are without any comparable work in the field. Our debt to M. Dubreuil is very large indeed, as it is to those who present the work in English." C. B. P.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 600w
Christian Century 47:1531 D 10 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p107 Jl '30

"He reports what he saw and did in factories, and it makes a unique report by a European upon America. The black spots have a new view and the bright spots are made to live. For an inside assessment of both the defects and the merits of our culture this book deserves the widest possible audience. It will surprise many Americans as it will many Frenchmen. But it will teach both many facts and, what is more, a fruitful attitude toward industrial problems and a humane tolerance toward other cultures." T. V. Smith
+ Int J Ethics 41:123 O '30 550w

Reviewed by R. G. Tugwell
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 1400w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
N Y Times p5 Mr 23 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p7m Je 8 '30 350w

"It is refreshing to look at our industrial conditions through the eyes of a candid, intelligent French mechanic, as we may by reading Robots or Men?" E. T. Devine
+ Outlook 156:232 O 8 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

"'I traveled about the country under exactly the same conditions as an American worker,' says the writer. But he plainly did nothing of the sort. He traveled as a student. It is also important that M. Dubreuil made his tour of American factories during the few months of the boom period of 1927; he draws all his generalities from his personal observations. Obviously enough, such generalizations can mean little. In the face of such a rapid economic shift as has occurred in our industries within the last few months M. Dubreuil's deductions become almost humorously inadequate. Even more striking are his statements concerning skilled labor and the possibilities of employment under all circumstances." M. P. Levy
— Sat R of Lit 6:984 Ap 26 '30 900w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 23 '30 600w

"Unfortunately his book, though readable, does not give a correct impression of American industry from the worker's point of view. As a skilled worker, the author did not see much of the seamy side; what he did see he mentions indeed, but plays it down. And his observation is in spots so faulty (he finds prohibition enforcement really effective) that our confidence in his authority cannot be great." H. B. Davis
— Survey 65:99 O 15 '30 350w

Reviewed by J. J. Spengler
World Tomorrow 13:343 Ag '30 600w

DUCASSE, CURT JOHN. Philosophy of art. 314p $3.50 Dial press

701 Art—Philosophy. Esthetics 29-29217

An attack upon the traditional views of the nature of art and beauty. It is the author's contention that art is not a creation of beauty but the objectification of feeling, and therefore has no essential connection with beauty. His book contains chapters of criticism of the esthetic attitude, art and the Freudian wish, and the instrumentalist and play theories of art.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

"There is a vast amount of labor and diligence in the work, but no plausible conclusions to aid and comfort the exhausted layman who has had the patience to wade through the interminable speculations."
— Books p17 My 18 '30 150w

"Professor Ducasse has labored eloquently to objectify his notion of the meaning and purpose of art. As an example of the lectical branch of endotelic art, his work is highly illustrative. As a guide for sound ideas on the most fascinating subject under the high heavens, it merits no little praise." T. S. L.
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 26 '30 1000w

"Mr. Ducasse gives the reader heart to strike out for himself and like what he likes, no matter what it is. . . There are many rich insights in Mr. Ducasse's book, and much good humor. There is an excellent discussion of the tragic and the comic, and in the Appendix an entertaining exposé of the significant form of Clive Bell." Van Meter Ames
+ Int J Ethics 40:441 Ap '30 1000w

"Here is a book by a man who knows exactly what he wants to say and can say it with clarity, intelligence and force. If one detects errors in it, it seems reasonable to charge them to his method rather than to the mind behind it." Carl Thurston
+ New Repub 63:295 Jl 23 '30 950w

"There is a proverb among artists to the effect that estheticians need know nothing about art. Having read this exposition of the philosophy of art by the professor in Brown University, it is borne in upon me that his book may be an apt illustration of the proverb. One who should turn to it for light and leading amid the clamors and solicitations of the schools, and for judgment against the ballyhoo over articles of doctrine and vertu of the market place would be disappointed." H. M. Kallen
— N Y Evening Post p6m Ja 18 '30 1000w

"On the whole Dr. Ducasse's ideas are chunky and hard, rather than adequate to the ductile, even ethereal experiences involved. In his fundamental conception it is as if he had caught a glimpse of something, then remained content not to follow up what he saw, and erected an abstract scheme of crystallized glimpses which only here and there touches the fullness of reality, yet is advanced and passes as a successful presentation of it. With regard to a number of points 'The Philosophy of Art' is a considerable piece of work; but the use of the definite article in the title is incautious, to say the least." Axton Clark
— + N Y Times p12 Mr 2 '30 1750w

St Louis 28:102 Ap '30

"As is so often the case with a philosophical work, Curt John Ducasse's book is frequently suggestive and stimulating in criticism of accepted theories, but ineffectual in efforts to erect a valid substitute theory. . . Prof Ducasse devotes a good deal of space to arguing that under certain conditions any feeling may have esthetic quality. This makes needless confusion —confusion arising in a deliberate choice of terms."
— Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 23 '30 280w

DUCHARTRE, PIERRE LOUIS. Italian comedy; the improvisation, scenarios, lives, attributes, portraits and masks of the illustrious characters of the Commedia dell'arte; auth. tr. from the French by Randolph T. Weaver. ltd ed 350p il $15 Day [42s Harrap]

852.09 Italian drama—History and criticism. Commedia dell'arte 30-15755

A history of the beginnings, growth, and influence on European stages of the Italian "Commedia dell' Arte." The original conceptions of Pierrot, Harlequin and Columbine are presented; and a specific merit of the book lies in its two hundred illustrations, which include the drawings of the artist Callot.

"Being a scrupulously studious work, and a sympathetic one, though not 'inspirational' in style, it comes as an added valuable sourcebook, treating of one of the few most engaging and important features of dramatic history. The book has more than two hundred illustrations, including many of the incomparably spirited drawings of Callot. A few are in color."
+ Bookm 70:viii Ja '30 200w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p16 F 23 '30 550w

"The publication of the English translation of Duchartre in a sumptuous edition with a wealth of illustrations provides unquestionably the fullest source of information for English readers. Duchartre's exhaustive and scholarly but hilariously entertaining treatment, admirably translated by Randolph T. Weaver, is worth all the time it takes to read it." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:595 My 7 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

"M. Duchartre's book presents a vivid cross section of the beginnings, the rapid growth, and subsequent influence on European stages of the 'Commedia dell' Arte.' He manages to catch the buoyant, zestful excitement of this restless cloud of tempestuous theatricality which passed over the towns and courts of Europe in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. . . The author has gleaned from every source well-ordered information which makes this volume a complete seismographic record of one of the greatest eruptions of the comic spirit in all times."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:607 D 28 '29 200w

DUDEVANT, MME AMANTINE LUCILE AURORE (DUPIN). See Sand, G., pseud.

DUDLEY, OWEN FRANCIS. Masterful monk. (Problems of human happiness) 314p $2 (5s; pa 3s 6d) Longmans [29-21559]

A novel of Roman Catholic propaganda rather thinly veiled under the romance of Beauty, a society girl, and Basil, a handsome but not very intelligent young man. The main theme of the story is the debate between an apostate Catholic and free-love propagandist, Julian Verrers, and Brother Anselm, a monk, the champion of Catholicism, who upholds its views on the wickedness of birth control, divorce, etc. The monk, by virtue of the compelling physique and personal heroism with which the author endows him, saves Beauty from the sinister influence of Verrers, and Basil from harm when Verrers, in a fit of insanity, tries to kill him.

Boston Transcript p2 F 1 '30 550w

"Father Dudley has competence as a narrator, and his characters live, though conventionally and without much vitality."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p900 N 7 '29 220w

DUFF, BELDON. Ask no questions. 318p $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-7572

Annassa West, with red hair and a will of her own, decided to rent Bride's House, an old Connecticut mansion, in spite of the fact that the last tenant had met a mysterious death there, that the whole countryside believed the place to be haunted, and that the lease to the property admonished the prospective tenant to "ask no questions." Annassa moved in, and notwithstanding the appearance of the ghost, followed by two gruesome murders, stayed until the mystery of Bride's House was solved.

Bookm 71:xxviii Ap '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Mr 23 '30 100w

DUFF, CHARLES. This human nature; a history, a commentary, an exposition from the earliest times to the present day. 405p $4 Cosmopolitan bk. [12s 6d Cayme press]

901 Civilization—History 30-29429

Our unchanging human nature is the theme of Mr Duff's cheerfully ironic commentary upon human whims and foibles. His survey compares ancient patterns of life with those of today. Contents: A preface to all history; The taming and sophistication of human nature; Roman materialism and institutionalized Christianity; The wayward progression of human nature; Western civilization today and tomorrow.

Bookm 72:x N '30 150w

"Anybody who can read can understand it, and that is in its favor, and it is probably good for any man to read how excessively stupid and brutish most men are. What Mr. Duff aims to do is to puncture current superstitions and conceits; sometimes he does this with generalizations which one could easily dispute, sometimes with some example of human idiocy which is hardly strong enough to damn humanity any more than the items in Mr. Mencken's Americana can damn America." J. L. Davies
Books p12 D 7 '30 300w

Sat R 150:758 D 6 '30 380w

"The publishers say that the writing of Mr. Duff is 'brilliant, witty . . . ironic, provocative, indefatigably fresh and entertaining,' and no doubt they are right. But sometimes where I should be dazzled by the continual coruscations of these qualities, I am merely puzzled. His ideal of happiness, he says, consists in 'basking philosophically in the sunshine on some pleasant semi-tropical beach' and talking about the functioning of the body and how nice it is not to do any work. But why, if he holds these views, he should go to the immense labour which the preparation of this highly creditable book must have involved, and allow himself to be swept by the sense of burning indignation by which it is obviously inspired, I cannot understand." C. E. M. Joad
Spec 145:909 D 6 '30 700w

DUFFUS, ROBERT LUTHER. Books, their place in a democracy. 225p $2 Houghton [8s 6d Allen, G.]

655.473 Publishers and publishing—United States. Booksellers and bookselling—United States. Libraries—United States. Books and reading 30-18267

A study of the status of book publication and distribution in the United States, undertaken by the author for the Carnegie corporation. He discusses questions of interest to author, publisher, bookseller, librarian and reader.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 S 20 '30

Booklist 27:53 O '30

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger
Bookm 72:197 O '30 450w

"Despite that sermonesque conclusion, Mr. Duffus's is a factual survey which any one interested in the future of books—publisher, bookseller, author, critic—will do well to read thoroughly and to ponder." Lewis Gannett
+ Books p4 Jl 20 '30 920w

"Historically, commercially and from the literary point of view this survey appears sufficiently complete. With the skilled craftsmanship of the workaday reporter, Mr. Duffus gets in his facts and figures without being dull. One absorbs the historical aspect almost unconsciously. For the most part, except for one opening chapter, he keeps this factor subservient to the practical question of books; their place in a democracy. And whatever question he considers, Mr. Duffus avoids the didactic. He offers his material reasonably and always without any thesis to prove."
+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 16 '30 1850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

Reviewed by M. O. Young
Current Hist 32:1240 S '30 80w

"Mr. Duffus's book is informative, it is attractively written and well put together, and within its chosen field rather thorough. But more than one of its conclusions is vitiated by the author's democratic complacency. Whether Mr. Duffus knows it or not, his plea is essentially one for diluting and debasing literature. No artist can produce great work if he tries to adapt it to the ignorances and prejudices of an inferior audience. Commercial writers do not need such advice, and creative writers will ignore it. The man who consciously 'writes down' nearly always writes badly. His work not only lacks profundity, but what is worse, and what even his intended audience can sense, it lacks sincerity." Henry Hazlitt
— + Nation 131:248 S 3 '30 900w

Nation and Ath 48:144 O 25 '30 80w

"It is not at all necessary to agree with Mr. Duffus at every point to appreciate the value of his book. Read with Stanley Unwin's 'The Truth About Publishing' it will give any intelligent person an entirely new perspective upon the whole industry, revealing the reasons for the high prevalence of insomnia among all those who have anything to do with making or selling books—or writing them." Herschel Brickell
+ N Y Times p2 Ag 3 '30 1470w

"A very learned and dignified study of what is commonly called the book game." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 Jl 21 '30 830w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 O '30 950w

Sat R of Lit 7:49 Ag 16 '30 800w

Springf'd Republican p8 Jl 12 '30 730w

"Admirable volume, the most complete and organic picture of how books get to people we have ever had. The book should be read for its general illumination of our entire cultural nexus, and especially because it presents the not widely known facts, statistical and economic, that must be grasped before we can make a program for betterment." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 64:477 S 1 '30 1750w

Reviewed by M. M. Quaife

Yale R n s 20:401 winter '31 80w

DUFFUS, ROBERT LUTHER. Mastering a metropolis; planning the future of the New York region. 302p il $3 (10s 6d) Harper

710 New York (city)—Description. City planning. Regional planning 30-6160

The author outlines the proposed Regional plan for the future metropolitan New York and its environs. He discusses first the growth of Manhattan during the past, and the congested, unplanned situation we have at present. The New York region for the future, as architects and engineers have planned it, will include the 22 counties surrounding the present city and suburban area, with their 400 separate municipalities, covering over 5,500 square miles. Plans for new traffic ways, housing facilities, and metropolitan farms for New York's future twenty millions are discussed.

"This book is interesting and significant because it is a definite and intelligent effort to popularize a great undertaking." C. R. Woodruff

+ Ann Am Acad 149:210 My '30 200w

Booklist 26:308 My '30

"Mr. Duffus's work is not the vision of an inspired artist like Hugh Ferriss or LeCorbusier: it is the sober and intelligent summing up of a thorough inquiry made by specialists over a number of years. . . If this portable encyclopaedia of regional planning is not absolutely complete, it is remarkably clear, and, within its appointed limits, very well balanced. All citizens who are not engrossed in a mere game of 'Grab whilst the grabbing is good' should own it, study it, be ready to back its reasonable proposals with all their influence." Albert Guerard

+ Books p2 Mr 16 '30 1100w

"The book is no mere theoretical dream of fanatic reformers, but a practical source of inspiration and information, specifically applicable to New York, but worthy of consideration by every city and town in the country." F. E. W.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 1 '30 480w

J Home Econ 22:499 Je '30 100w

N Y Times p6 Ap 27 '30 480w

Pratt p31 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:13 Ag '30 280w

St Louis 28:139 My '30

"Mr. Duffus has written an interesting book which presents a telling analysis of a thorough and painstaking plan." Benton MacKaye

Sat R of Lit 7:68 Ag 23 '30 1550w

Springf'd Republican p10 F 28 '30 950w

Reviewed by L. D. Lasker

Survey 64:47 Ap 1 '30 650w

DUFFUS, ROBERT LUTHER. Sante Fe trail. 283p il $5 Longmans

917.8 Sante Fé trail. Southwest—History 30-26894

The origins and history—from the time of Coronado to the arrival of the first railway at Sante Fé—of the first of the great transcontinental trails and for two decades the most travelled. Mr Duffus takes up ths story of the famous trail makers, tells of skirmishes and wars with Indians along the trail, describes the pioneer civilization of Sante Fé itself, and traces the course of railway construction to the portals of the city.

Booklist 27:98 N '30

"Mr. Duffus writes with an unerring sense of both the national and the human drama, and he employs a fine balance between such imagery as fills his literary chinks and the facts upon which he builds his book."

+ Bookm 72:94 S '30 220w

"Mr. Duffus has told the exciting story of the Santa Fe trail with an admirable appreciation for its dramatic and romantic characteristics. . . The historical significance of the trail is rightly evaluated; its economic significance balanced by its social and personal. By skilful use of source materials, of which there is a wealth, Mr. Duffus has preserved much of the flavor and color of the trail. It is difficult to improve on Gregg, or even on Inman, but Mr. Duffus has given us a vivacious and accurate chronicle of one of the great highways of commerce." H. S. Commager

+ Books p1 Ag 10 '30 1550w

Boston Transcript p5 N 15 '30 300w

"The test of a book about places is to read it in the midst of the scenes which it describes. Submitted to this test by the literary editor during his September vacation, Duffus's book stood up wonderfully well. It gave added meaning to the modern motor counterpart of the old trail, and was a congenial companion during evenings at Taos."

+ Christian Century 47:1355 N 5 '30 180w

"Mr. Duffus has ransacked many of the original sources of this fabulous saga and recreates in no small degree both the glamor and the sordidness of an era so close to us in time and yet so distant in its astonishing contrast to the life which we lead in this day."

+ Nation 131:631 D 3 '30 180w

"The book is written with distinction and with charm. Though the absence of notes and citations seems sometimes to throw a burden of needful details on the text, the skilled craftsman knows how to manage these things without clogging the narrative to the weariness of the reader. Also Mr. Duffus has caught the spirit of the time and the color of the environment. . . The work as a whole is of solid substance, brilliantly effective in treatment." W. J. Ghent

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 10 '30 1150w

"Books on the trail have been written before, but none so comprehensive as this. It supersedes the classic of Josiah Briggs and the fantasia of Henry Inman. But the chief value of Mr. Duffus's work is that it represents a sifting of intricate history and a fresh point of view." Don Glassman

+ N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 420w

"R. L. Duffus has told this story with a fascination that the novelist can only rarely attain."

+ Outlook 155:588 Ag 13 '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:16 O '30 80w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

DUFFY, HERBERT SMITH. William Howard Taft. 345p il $5 Minton

B or 92 Taft, William Howard 30-26895

The greater part of this study of William Howard Taft is devoted to his years as solicitor general, federal judge, governor general of the Philippines, secretary of war, and president of the United States. There is one brief chapter on beginnings and background, and one on his work as chief justice.

Booklist 27:155 D '30

DUFFY, H. S.—Continued

"Quite the most interesting and valuable chapters of the book are those chronicling Taft's administration of the Philippines . . . Mr. Duffy devotes almost one-third of his volume to this fascinating story, yet it cannot be said that he has added much to our stock of knowledge of Filipino history or of Taft's achievement. . . Mr. Duffy's account of American intervention into Cuba is distressingly incomplete, but it does bring out that happy combination of genial diplomacy and the judicial temper that characterized Taft. From this point on Mr. Duffy's biography becomes increasingly inadequate, and marred by inaccuracies and obiter dicta. His chapters on Taft's Presidency leave much to be desired. The failure to deal adequately with Taft's career on the Supreme Bench is even more unfortunate." H. S. Commager

— + Books p5 Ag 31 '30 1450w

"Taft's career for many years was woven into the history of the United States, therefore a fully adequate biography, which would be a part of our history, should be historically written. Here is where Mr. Duffy is not quite up to the specifications. He admires Taft and his brief is all on his hero's side. The weaknesses and errors are generally elided. Not always does he grasp the nettle of hostile fact. Like a retouched photograph, the likeness is very smooth. The balance of the book suffers from this." S. L. Cook

— Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 1800w

"His book is on the whole a readable and just account of a notable period in American history, and an adequate estimate of a most unjustly treated statesman." W. J. Abbot

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 S 13 '30 550w

Reviewed by E. F. Brown

Current Hist 33:xxiv N '30 180w

Reviewed by L. M. Hacker

Nation 131:501 N 5 '30 220w

"Mr. Taft was not among our most successful Presidents, but he was a great success as Chief Justice of the United States. Mr. Duffy, however, gives only one of his thirty-two chapters to the nine years of Taft's Chief Justiceship. . . The same lack of proportion appears in Mr. Duffy's treatment of the different subjects as they come up. . . . The book is disfigured by Mr. Duffy's intemperate and unhistorical tone in his treatment of everybody who at any time opposed Taft." C. W. Thompson

— N Y Times p3 Ag 24 '30 1650w

Outlook 156:27 S 3 '30 950w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:78 N '30

St Louis 28:272 N '30

"Mr. Duffy's story is melodramatic because it omits almost entirely reference to [the] public sentiment which doubtless President Taft's friends called public clamor and felt was manufactured and hence more or less negligible. But the public wrath vitalized this melodramatic skeleton story which Duffy relates and gave it power, changing the melodrama to a tragedy. . . And Mr. Duffy, outside of the controversial matters, has made a fairly clear, reasonable picture of an amiable statesman. Posterity will see from Mr. Duffy's picture an understandable man. As a biographer, Mr. Duffy has left something to be desired in the way of shades in his portrait. His subject is a little too waxy, not quite human enough." W. A. White

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:261 O 25 '30 900w

Reviewed by Richard Hooker

Yale R n s 20:388 winter '31 30w

DUFOUR, YVONNE, pseud. (YVONNE DUFOUR MONTAUTRE. Monique. 249p $2 Dutton

30-24843

An international marriage is the basis of the story, in which Monique, a cultured French girl, marries a New York business man. It is a study of Monique's slow and rather dreamy progress in adjusting herself to love and to the ways of America.

Bookm 72:viii N '30 180w

"Mademoiselle Dufour has written her book in errorless English, an accomplishment which is marred only by the fact that it is very trite English and not at all flexible. The unfortunate part of trite expressions is, as in this case, that they are likely to harbor trite thinking, so that while Mademoiselle Dufour shows ability to make accurate observations, her conclusions and reflections are elementary."

— Books p17 O 12 '30 300w

"The book is smoothly written, indeed, too much so; it lacks the tenseness of conflict, the strength inherent in an adequate thesis boldly defended. It must be admitted that the thoughts of the heroine comprising the body of the narrative are not very profound. Little can be said of the plot; since its very existence is open to debate. The reader must find his interest in Monique's reflections, her abiding sentiment for the ancestral estate and her vague aspirations. The other characters are society people, quite a conventional lot, with the exception of Adrian, her husband's cousin, musical genius and lady-killer."

— + N Y Times p7 N 2 '30 380w

"The picture of the sensitive girl torn between the new home and her old is touching. The novel is slight, but has considerable charm." F. L. R.

+ — Outlook 156:311 O 22 '30 80w

DUKES, ASHLEY. Jew Süss. 178p $2 Viking press [5s; pa 2s 6d Secker]

822 Süss-Oppenheimer, Joseph—Drama. Feuchtwanger, Lion 30-26265

A drama in five acts, based upon "Power," Lion Feuchtwanger's historical romance. The Jew Süss, eager for power, rises higher and higher in his manipulation of the politics of the duchy of Württemberg. The Duke attempts to make love to the beautiful young daughter of Süss, and the girl commits suicide. The Jew uses his power to the limit, achieves a terrible revenge, and pays the penalty.

Booklist 26:272 Ap '30

"Seems in the reading—and one fancies would seem in the acting—oddly thin. When characters and events are conceived for the stage they seem to come to the able dramatist with a sharpness and compresson which gives them bulk. But when they are boiled down from a novel they almost always are shadowy and vague. Certain that is the case with 'Jew Suss.'" W. P. Eaton

— Books p20 Mr 16 '30 80w

"'Josef Süss' as a play, suffers from a certain episodic quality, but it is none the less powerful and impressive." H. H.

+ — Nation 130:226 F 19 '30 120w

"Taking it as a play solely, it is an intelligent outline into which the acting fits effectively; it is written with ease and taste, though without any of the tension and dark inner working that these Jewish themes must have had in the novel. The characters, especially the minor personages in the story, cannot, of course, be developed to the fulness and intricacy that a book would allow, and the stir and pain and spiritual ferocity are therefore far less." Stark Young

+ New Repub 61:301 F 5 '30 1150w

"'Jew Suss' gives us everything the novel gives us in a tenth the space, with less melodrama and less mystifying, and more drama and more reality." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 1 '30 80w

"In the peculiar conviction it provides that unseen ethical and moral principles are the substantial rock upon which human society is built, it is an unusual play—the impression being conveyed entirely by an inferred comparison, with not one line of moral propaganda." F. R. Bellamy

+ Outlook 154:271 F 12 '30 600w

St Louis 28:143 My '30

DULLES, FOSTER RHEA. Old China trade. 228p $4 Houghton

382 China—Commerce. United States—Commerce—China 30-25479

"In this story of the old China trade I have attempted to recapture something of the spirit of adventure and daring which at the close of the Revolution sent the young merchant seamen of the Atlantic seaboard throughout the length and breadth of the Pacific. Many of these voyages had as their objective other ports than Canton, but it was the China trade which gave greatest proof of the resourcefulness and ingenuity of the Yankee traders. Furthermore, it had a significant result in the opening-up of political relations with the Chinese Empire."—Pref.

Booklist 27:188 Ja '31

"Very wisely he has confined his research and his narrative within a certain, and always fascinating, period, with the result that here we have not only a record which will be of priceless assistance to the student and an inspiration to the writer of adventure fiction, but the casual reader will be entranced by the amazing true tale which Mr. Dulles tells, the sheer romance of the thing—preposterous, unbelievable."

+ Bookm 72:93 S '30 350w

"While there are many books treating different phases of this subject, it is only within the last decade that any serious effort to collate the material has been made. American histories were written without scant mention of this important and fascinating influence on American development. The facts are narrated with steady, unerring precision." Sydney Greenbie

+ Books p3 Ag 31 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 800w

" 'The Old China Trade' recalls an extraordinary episode of American expansion. By a patient and methodical use of his material Mr. Dulles, without any brilliance of style or devices of narration, makes of it a continuously absorbing book." Isidor Schneider

+ Nation 132:21 Ja 7 '31 240w

Reviewed by John Wheelwright
New Repub 65:78 D 3 '30 230w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:109 S 17 '30 30w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:16 O '30 80w

"Mr. Dulles in a dozen fascinating chapters has followed the bold sailorman of the young republic, giving us a welcome appendix to our more stereotyped history in a volume whose readability detracts not the least from its authority." H. K. Norton

+ Sat R of Lit 7:454 D 13 '30 550w

DUMAS, ALEXANDRE. Nutcracker of Nuremberg; tr. by Grace Gingras. 154p il $2.50 McBride

"Beginning with human beings in an eighteenth century setting in Nuremberg the scene melts into the realm of Faerie, and gentle little Marie, her ringlets like a 'moving sheaf of gold,' becomes the heroine whose devotion frees the young prince, long bewitched as a nutcracker, and together they go to the Marzipan Palace to reign over the Kingdom of Toys, and, as in all real fairy tales, live happily ever after."—Sat R of Lit

Library J 55:924 N 15 '30 80w

"The story is told by a master of the arts of suspense and make-believe, and the emergence of the hero from the ungainly person of a nutcracker is a triumph of the favorite ugly-duckling theme."

+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 120w

St Louis 28:303 D '30

" 'The Nutcracker of Nuremberg,' by Alexandre Dumas, who borrowed the tale from Hoffman, is gay, delightful, and whimsical; indeed, so unlike the dreary weird tales of the German author that it is impossible not to suspect Dumas's rendering has given it a certain Gallic flavor, the malice you find in Perrault and miss in Grimm. . . The silhouette illustrations, cut by Else Hasselriis, a Danish profilist, are excellent, and, in a great measure, have recaptured the feeling of the eighteenth century, the golden age of the shadow-art." A. Van L. Carrick

+ Sat R of Lit 7:330 N 15 '30 360w

DUMAS, ALEXANDRE. On board the Emma; adventures with Garibaldi's "Thousand" in Sicily; tr. and with an introd. by R. S. Garnett. 568p il $5 Appleton [21s Benn]

B or 92 Garibaldi, Giuseppe 29-23710

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

Reviewed by Grenville Vernon
Bookm 71:122 Mr '30 850w

"It is a splendid book, wondrously alive on every page. . . Mr. Garnett's editorship and translation cannot be too highly praised." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:25 Mr '30

St Louis 28:52 F '30

Reviewed by E. P. Dargan
Sat R of Lit 6:674 Ja 25 '30 1100w

2 DU MOULIN-ECKART, RICHARD MARIA FERDINAND, graf. Cosima Wagner; tr. from the German by Catherine Alison Phillips; with an introd. by Ernest Newman. 2v 892p il $10 (42s) Knopf

B or 92 Wagner, Frau Cosima (Liszt). Wagner, Richard. Wagner family 30-28591

"In this minutely detailed biography, which ends with the death of Wagner and will be completed later in a work on 'The Lady of Bayreuth,' one sees that Cosima's nature was essentially that of an impassioned devotee. What she asked of life was self-fulfilment through service. . . With the story of her almost incredible abrogation of self before the demands of a genius from whose character affection could never cast out irritation and peevishness, the greater part of these two volumes is concerned."—Nation

"This huge opus can scarcely be called a whitewash; it is a glorification. If ever whitewash had been applied to the edifice of its heroine's life and deeds, that purifying coat has been lost under the rainbow hues of eulogy that glow from every page. What this book accomplishes in particular is the setting before us with infinite detail of the particular universe that Cosima inhabited, from the days of her Parisian youth to the realization of her dream at Bayreuth and the death of Wagner in her arms at Venice." Peter Bowdoin

Books p3 O 12 '30 1350w

"In Richard and Cosima Wagner destiny brought together two complements—the complete egoist and the complete altruist; the one found an obscure satisfaction in inflicting pain, the other in enduring it. Of the two, the egoist is the more helpless. We now know what has long been suspected—that without Cosima, Richard Wagner would have met spiritual disaster in mid-career. In giving us this certainty, the Graf du Moulin-Eckart has presented the data with an excess of adulation and sentimentality, and in a redundant style. One loses sight of the faults, however, in the richness of the material. The work is essential in every musical library." R. C. B. Brown

+ Nation 131:418 O 15 '30 950w

"This elaborate biography is a document in the old style of "Wagnerism,' which seems curiously out of date in this age of the world. It is one in which it is vain to look for any dispassionate statement or candid discussion of disputed points. But it does give information

DU MOULIN-ECKART, R. M. F.—Continued
on matters that have not been generally known, especially as to Cosima's younger days. . . It can truly be said that Frau Cosima emerges from its pages as a more human, a more tenderly feminine, a more likable character that she had seemed to many who have heretofore only glimpsed her as a shadow in her husband's life and work." Richard Aldrich
+ — N Y Times p9 O 12 '30 1200w

"With this premise in mind—that Wagner was a god and Cosima his ministering angel—we may approach du Moulin-Eckart's book with intense interest. In spite of its partisanship it is the only study of Cosima Wagner that is at all adequate. It is well written, circumstantial and creates an atmosphere of high endeavor, great ideals and human striving. . . The book will be invaluable for the close relationship it maintains between the master's life and his creative work, and how it reveals, step by step, the influences that shaped his great music. Such an intimate record of the part played by creative emotion is rare in biography." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p12 O 10 '30 800w
St Louis 28:301 D '30

DUNCAN, HANNIBAL GERALD. Race and population problems. (Longmans' social science ser.) 424p $2.50; trade ed $3.25 (10s 6d) Longmans
312 Population. Race problems 29-10135

This text book is the outgrowth of the author's fifteen years of study of racial problems and seven years' experience in teaching university courses in population. Part one, treating of the rise and spread of the human group, discusses the origin of man and the formation and classification of races; part two discusses biology and racial problems; part three, movements of population and the diffusion of culture; part four, the theories of population; and part five, population and its control.

Reviewed by A. B. Wolfe
Am Econ R 20:544 S '30 420w

"The book will admirably serve the needs of the small college that can give only a semester to the consideration of the whole range of bio-social problems and must depend upon a text for both the organization and the materials." E. B. Reuter
+ Am J Soc 35:501 N '29 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '30
St Louis 28:5 Ja '30

"Dr. Duncan has striven to refrain from 'injecting his own conclusions,' and the result is a volume which some people may find unsatisfactory, acquainting the student, as it does, with 'the viewpoints, many of which conflict, entertained by numerous scholars, without subjecting him to any single view held by an individual author.' However, that may be, the work is extremely comprehensive."
Times [London] Lit Sup p515 Je 27 '29 200w

DUNCAN, JOHN CHARLES. Astronomy. 2d ed ^{2} rev 435p il $3.75 Harper
520 Astronomy 30-22137

The first edition (Book Review Digest, 1927), including both text and illustrations, has been revised, rearranged and extended, with the addition of new star maps and exercises at the ends of chapters.

Booklist 27:115 N '30

"This is something more than a college textbook; it is a compact compendium of modern astronomy. . . Its popularity has proved its worth as a textbook, scholarly, clear and cogent."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 180w

DUNCAN, RICHARD. Stunt flying. 183p il $2.50 Goodheart-Wilcox [7s 6d Lockwood, C.]
629.13 Aeronautics. Airplanes 30-12762

A textbook based on the Gosport system of flight training. The larger part of the book is given over to instructions on elementary flying: controlling, taking off, landings, testing the airplane, etc. There are chapters also on exhibition flying, stunt flying, speed and instruments.

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:15 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30

"This is another of the many semi-instructional books now being produced upon flying. It provides a very useful groundwork for any pilot in that it enables him to grasp the general principles of flying and the main points to watch before he actually undergoes practical instruction."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p579 Jl 10 '30 180w

DUNCAN, RUDOLPH L., and DREW, CHARLES E. Radio telegraphy and telephony; a complete textbook for students of wireless communication. 950p il $7.50 Wiley [37s 6d Chapman]
621.384 Radio 29-11638

"Explains fundamental theory and telephone or telegraph transmission and reception for commercial and amateur purposes, including ship-board installation, and information for candidates for commercial operators' licenses." —Pratt

Booklist 26:225 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p56 Ap '30
N Y New Tech Bks 14:41 Jl '29
Pratt p18 spring '30
St Louis 28:8 Ja '30

DUNKERLEY, WILLIAM ARTHUR. See Oxenham, J., pseud.

DUNN, WALDO HILARY. Froude & Carlyle; a study of the Froude-Carlyle controversy. 365p pl $5 (15s) Longmans
B or 92 Froude, James Anthony. Carlyle, Thomas [30-715]

A study of the controversy in regard to Froude's fulfilment of his duties as literary executor and biographer of Carlyle and of the literature that has grown out of this controversy. During his long study of the evidence, the author states that he has remained impartial and that the result of his investigations has increased his respect for Froude, while detracting in no way from his opinion of Carlyle.

"The book is a careful, minute, documented study of Froude as biographer and editor of Carlyle." John Chamberlain
+ Bookm 71:347 Je '30 430w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin
Books p12 My 4 '30 1050w

"Professor Dunn seems to have settled the main questions once and for all in a volume which is a model of scholarship in its careful examination of evidence and its clear, dispassionate interpretation of the evidence." John Macy
+ Nation 130:366 Mr 26 '30 1000w

"Reputations should be protected by signs such as we see on bridges—'This reputation unsafe for loads of more than four tons.' From the charge of overweighting the structure, Professor Dunn's volume must be excepted. Rather has he cleared the way for normal traffic. Of Carlyle's relations with Froude he has given a clear and comprehensive account. He has shown to what extent the personality and reputation of Froude himself entered into the controversy." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 63:184 Jl 2 '30 2000w

Reviewed by Peter Quennell

New Statesman 34:772 Mr 22 '30 1700w

"He has brought within the compass of a stirring narrative of about 130,000 words the dramatic and evidential parts of about fifty volumes and hundreds of articles. This narrative is well documented and annotated. Professor Dunn may not convince everybody of Froude's validity as a historian, but few would be unreasonable enough to question his verdict on Froude as Carlyle's biographer." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 6 '30 1000w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"Professor Dunn displays not only the necessary courage but also the requisite delicacy of judgment for stating the issues and offering a verdict, which, in the light of the documents presented, the reader may reject or confirm. . . The great value of Professor Dunn's book may strike many readers as resting less on its dexterous defense of Froude than on three other services which it performs: it isolates and presents the opposite testimony; it reveals the unreliable nature of the evidence and argument of Froud's enemies; and it points out the next great tasks necessary for bringing the controversy permanently to an end. It is the suggestion of a future task which will interest both the scholar and that small public which still finds something vital and curiously magnetic about Carlyle's personality and work." C. F. Harrold

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1205 Jl 19 '30 1550w

"Professor Dunn may have overstated the case for Froude, at least in so far as he unnecessarily disparages some of Froude's critics, but we hope that his book will convince a wide public that the disparagement of Froude himself has been carried too far. Froude is, indeed, one of the historians and biographers who must deserve rehabilitation and we venture to say that this book will help him back towards the position he deserves."

Spec 144:sup491 Mr 22 '30 1100w

"Prof Dunn writes as a Froude partisan, and his partisanship helps to defeat the main purpose of the book, which was to defend Froude's personal integrity (if that needed defense) against the onslaughts of the Carlyle family. . . In regard to the larger question of Froude's accuracy as a historian Prof Dunn's book is pathetically unconvincing."

— Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 1100w

"Mr. Dunn ought, we think, to recognize that one may criticize Froude's portrait of Carlyle without imputing obliquity to the artist or denying the literary power of his biography. . . Mr. D. A. Wilson, Carlyle's latest biographer, has said things about Froude that are patently unjust; but it is not redressing the balance to give such an unfair estimate of Mr. Wilson's remarkable book as Mr. Dunn does in his twenty-second chapter. What Froude needs to-day is a just judge, not counsel."

Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 6 '30 1750w

DUNOIS, DOMINIQUE, pseud. Natural mother; tr. from the French by Angelo S. Rappoport. 313p $2.50 Macaulay [7s 6d Jarrolds]

29-23494

Awarded the Prix femina, this novel by a Frenchwoman is a story of a French peasant woman, Georgette, who, as heir to a considerable portion of land, marries her farmhand. As time passes and no children are born to them, Georgette hires a neighbor to present her with an heir. A son is born, but village gossip finally estranges Georgette and her husband and child, and in the course of time Georgette leaves them to run away with her lover, a Belgian workman. The main theme of the novel, against which the story of Georgette moves, is the French peasant's cupidity for his land.

Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 100w

"Nothing could be more suitable to the elements of this story—the country setting, the peasant characters, the primary emotions—than Mme. Dunois's style. . . Her pictures of Georgette are truly superb. . . In her ability to portray the peasant character with a sympathy quite devoid of sentimentality and with an essentially intellectual art, Mme. Dunois reminds one of Willa Cather. Like Miss Cather, too, she is able to create radiance around a primitive personality by focussing upon it all the subtlety of a highly civilized understanding." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p18 Ja 12 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

"Ruggedly virtuous and marked with the same paucity of detail with which Flaubert would have written, there is unveiled in this novel the certain touch of a master craftsman. Steadily the story moves forward, a document of the lack of human appreciation of sacrifice of the soul to material gain, the underlying motif of the whole romance being buried beneath the inarticulateness of the French peasant." M. L. Bird

+ N Y Evening Post p12m D 7 '29 550w

"How Georgette lost her two most precious possessions, the love of her husband and son, is told with a sympathy and understanding that lifts the story to a high plane."

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 12 '30 650w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Fifty poems. 57p $1.50 (5s) Putnam

821 30-11498

A selection from the recent poems of the British dramatist. These lyrics express a love for the poet's native land, Ireland, as viewed in retrospect by a man who has traveled and observed much.

Booklist 26:387 Jl '30

Reviewed by E. L. Walton

Nation 130:737 Je 25 '30 100w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p18 Ag 17 '30 220w

Reviewed by T. E. Welby

Sat R 148:582 N 16 '29 250w

"The whole tone of the volume is that of a man who has been to places and has done things; who rests and muses, his mind by no means dull, but the sharp edge of his emotions no longer impelling, or at least, apparent. It is impossible to read any casual page without realizing that here is an easy user of words and a not intolerant observer of that phenomenon commonly called 'the world as it is.' "

Sat R of Lit 6:882 Mr 29 '30 450w

Reviewed by Austin Clarke

Spec 143:984 D 28 '29 150w

"The charm of Lord Dunsany's best verses lies in his capacity to reconcile the new moment with the ancient memory. . . It is because his verse lacks any strong creative necessity that it can descend, as in 'The Forsaken Windmill,' to contemporary comment. But if never compelling, it is a glass in which moods and memories that at times transcend the personal are reflected with distinction."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p948 N 21 '29 180w

DUPONT, MARCEL. Sealed lips; [tr. by Margaret Hartigan]. 285p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-8786

André Geslain, a French cavalry officer, whose salary is too small to support wife and children, is torn between his love of his country and career, and his love for his family. His wife, used to luxury, has an affair with a millionaire but eventually returns to André.

DUPONT, MARCEL—Continued

"A tale falling rather short of its apparent goal."
— Books p17 Je 29 '30 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

"It is always something of a surprise to read a book that some one has taken the trouble to translate into English, and to find, after making full allowance for loss in translation, that it is nothing more than an ordinary and unimportant novel. Why translate a book into another language unless it is well worth the language it has already been written in? Every country is overwhelmed with its own mediocre novels and has no need for those of another."
— N Y Times p19 Ap 13 '30 150w

DURAND, EDWARD DANA. American industry and commerce. 653p il $4 Ginn

330.973 United States—Industries. United States—Commerce. United States—Economic conditions 30-18023

Written as a textbook for courses in business administration, this book aims "to set forth systematically the major facts regarding the present riches of the country, the character and magnitude of its industries and commerce, and the history of its material development, especially during the recent decades." It further outlines the basic causes of American prosperity, and discusses the relation of the general economic status of the country to the well-being of the masses.

Booklist 27:93 N '30

Reviewed by F. A. Fall
Outlook 155:343 Jl 2 '30 180w

Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 50w

DURANT, WILLIAM JAMES. Case for India. 228p $2 Simon & Schuster

954 India—Social conditions. India—Politics and government

In his preface to this study of modern India and its problems Mr Durant writes: "I saw such things in India as made me feel that study and writing were frivolous things in the presence of a people—one-fifth of the human race—suffering poverty and oppression bitterer than any to be found elsewhere on earth." Mr Durant attributes India's ills largely to British imperialism, and endeavors to enlist American opinion in favor of the Indian nationalists.

"Mr. Durant's response to an Indian journey is frankly and disarmingly described by himself as one of 'astonishment and indignation' at British domination, one of 'partiality and passion.' I might add that it is one accompanied by almost the minimum of scientific method and philosophic perspective. His sources are those of a journalist or a propagandist, not of a historian or a philosopher. . . But if Mr. Durant's story of India does only doubtful credit to his head, it at least speaks volubly for the excellence of his heart. The sight of unfortunate humanity arouses his pity, his chivalry, his fighting spirit, and the chief spokesman for that humanity, Gandhi, receives an admiring, but not undiscriminating, treatment from his competent pen. The personality of that man and his message cannot too often be brought before us." W. N. Brown
— + Books p16 N 9 '30 950w

"The heaviest charge against it as a piece of literature is that it fails of its purpose. Its argument is not convincing. Moreover, with so much citation of authority, it is extremely difficult at times to tell whether the expression of opinion, when not between quotation marks, is that of the author himself or of someone else. . . Dr. Durant's book seems to us not so much a presentation of India's 'case' as a bitter and biased denunciation of England." J. W. M.
— Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 550w

"His point of view is that of Nationalist India. Though he makes some effort to be fair to the opposing camp, his verdict is overwhelmingly in favor of India. On the other side of the Atlantic the book will be referred to as another example of mischievous meddling by an outsider in a matter that concerns only Great Britain and India. . . Casting the whole weight of his influence with the side that has enlisted his sympathy, Mr. Durant has done that side a service by presenting its cause—not precisely its case—so clearly in such short compass."
Nation 131:619 D 3 '30 450w

New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton
N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 50w

"It has already been suggested that Dr. Durant's book is inspired by political emotion. It may be added that he is somewhat uncertain as to his facts. . . There are many signs of carelessness, but they do not go to the heart of the matter which is an emotional denunciation of British rule in India. He collects many facts, but for each of them it would be easy to choose a counterbalancing quotation." Charles Johnston
— N Y Times p9 N 9 '30 450w

DURKIN, DOUGLAS LEADER. Mr. Gumble sits up. 232p $2 Liveright 30-23905

After being dead two days, Mr Gumble sat up in his coffin, and decided to enjoy his second life by wandering about the countryside in search of adventure. Among the people he meets in this fantasy of after-life on earth are the woodcutter, the widow Flippins, her blind sister Lilla, and the puppet master.

"There is in the account a certain amount of humor, but it is as vague as Mr. Gumble's post-mortem existence. It never attains that delightful foolery of the Philosophers' dissertations, yet the flavor is there, to tantalize with its inadequacy. Various people reading the book will attempt to draw this and that inference from it, succeeding in accord with their own imaginations. The practical soul will be faintly amused and vastly puzzled." M. M. Waterman
— + Bookm 72:174 O '30 280w

"In the study of one of those gentle and bewildered souls never quite at home in this world, Mr. Durkin devotes himself to the creation of a mood. He tells his story quietly and humorously, without bothering much about structure or suspense. There is the wax of a philosophy imbedded in it, soft enough to take the impress of each reader's interpretation."
+ Books p18 D 7 '30 280w

"There is something reminiscent of Hawthorne and even of James Stephens in the story. It is not funny, but it has a certain delicate whimsy about it that makes it unusual. It is a good book to read, but it is even better when reread."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 3 '31 220w

"Mr. Gumble's story might be taken as a very deep allegory, which would be a mistake. Actually, it is simply good entertainment."
+ N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 380w

DURNFORD, HUGH GEORGE EDMUND. Tunnellers of Holzminden; an adventure of the German prison camps. 2d ed 199p il $2.50 Macmillan [6s Cambridge univ. press]

940.472 European war, 1914-1918—Prisons and prisoners

An account of how a number of British officers in Holzminden, a German prison camp under a thoroly detested commandant, laboriously constructed a tunnel and worked their way out to freedom.

"He colors his account with a rather conspicuous contempt for German food and German manners, but neither the clumsy construction of his story nor his obvious bias can dim its appeal to human venturesomeness. It should be rewritten in the Monte Cristo manner, but even as it stands, with its photographs and explanatory diagrams, it should provide entertainment for anyone who can remember with pleasure the holes he once dug in the back yard or the dreams he once had of highhanded escapes from moated castles." Lambert Davis

+ — Books p16 S 14 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 380w

"It is interesting for the reason that it gives a measure whereby to chart changing states of mind about the war." L. C. Woodman
N Y Times p17 Ag 3 '30 50w

Reviewed by Emerson Taylor
Sat R of Lit 7:54 Ag 16 '30 200w

DURRANS, THOMAS H. Solvents. (Monographs on applied chemistry) 144p il $5 Van Nostrand [10s 6d Chapman]
542.61 Solvents

A scientific exposition of the technical application of solvents to products of industry—more particularly in connection with the cellulose-lacquer industry.

"The author has made an excellent literature review of the subject of solvents. . . He acknowledges assistance from various American solvent concerns, but apparently did not interview the largest solvent concern in the United States. Unquestionably this over-sight affects somewhat the subject matter in the second section of the book. . . Although the second part of the book reflects the British viewpoint and though it contains largely British specifications, nevertheless its completeness will be appreciated by everyone. In brief, the entire book will be found interesting reading by anyone who uses solvents." D. B. Keyes
+ — Ind & Eng Chem 22:1412 D '30 450w

Nature 126:645 O 25 '30 50w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:37 Jl '30

St Louis 28:265 N '30

DUTTON, CHARLES JUDSON. Shadow of evil. 290p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hurst]
30-10251

Harley Manners, professor of abnormal psychology, solves the mystery of two strange deaths, one of them following closely on the other and both caused by the same rare and swift acting poison.

Bookm 72:xxv N '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p17 Ap 27 '30 100w

"A very clever tale."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 31 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 250w

DUUN, OLAV. Trough of the wave; tr. from the Norwegian by Arthur G. Chater. (People of Juvik, v 1) 241p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf
(30-6544)

"The story of the men of Juvik is a six-volume novel of which 'The Trough of the Wave' is the first. This story traces the ancestry of these men and brings us into the early nineteenth century. It is largely concerned with the experiences of the two sons, Per and Jens, who are born at a time when the Juvik blood has run thin. These two have been reared in the tradition of their more powerful ancestors and throughout their lives they make a fierce struggle to equal these deeds, though as a matter of fact they represent the period when the family lies in the trough of the wave and no great deeds are done."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 27:28 S '30

"Consists of a few family chronicles having little artistic unity. In the complete work these episodes might fall into place as part of a larger plan. But the novel has distinct qualities which may be tentatively assessed. Duun's style is unusual: it is colloquial, consciously naïve, exclamatory, almost playful. He is at once subjective in presenting snatches from the thoughts of his people, and objective in characterizing them mostly on the surface, without partiality, and without expressed analysis. Bits of description of the weather and the country, with archaic and vivid personification, set the story solidly in the background of a harsh but vigorous nature. The translator, Mr. Arthur B. Chater, mentions difficulties in properly rendering the Norwegian; certainly one is often conscious that he is reading a translation." A. R. Thompson
+ — Bookm 71:211 Ap '30 600w

"One cannot help comparing it with 'Growth of the Soil.' Both books deal with peasant life. Both authors are Norwegian. But whereas Knut Hamsun succeeds in producing an immense book of art that will last through the centuries, Olav Duun writes only a gripping story. He lacks Hamsun's humor, Hamsun's irony, Hamsun's deep psychological insight."
+ — Books p16 Ap 20 '30 550w

"The story is strongly conceived and told in a dialect which fits finely into its spirit. It is a penetrating picture of two men who in spite of their physical strength battle against inherent weaknesses in themselves."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30

"As befits a prelude to so long a work, the movement is slow, the acceleration gradual. Standing by itself 'The Trough of the Wave' evokes a mood and portrays a background—and does little else. But further criticism had best be withheld until more volumes have appeared."
Nation 130:524 Ap 30 '30 150w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh
N Y Evening Post p6s Mr 1 '30 750w

"The method [which] was tremendously effective in 'Growth of the Soil,' leads us to hope for something good in the story of the Juvikings as an entity. In 'The Trough of the Wave' the method fails because the people are not of epic dimensions."
— N Y Times p24 Mr 16 '30 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"It is a novel of hearty, rapid action, brusque insight, written in a rolling, crackling prose. It is the vigor of this prose that astonishes and pleases—a new thing for the readers of Norwegian fiction because it is written in a new medium, a new-old language, the landsmaal of Norway. The peasant for the first time speaks for himself; there is a vitality about him that is lacking in the many careful and detailed studies of him that have heretofore appeared. This great work can rightly be called by that much abused term, saga; it has the force and movement of the saga, the saga's hearty gusto of living, and the saga's lack of introspection often fruitless." P. D. Carleton
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1089 My 31 '30 900w

"These books are the quintessence of Norway, both in subject and in treatment. It is safe to say that no Norwegian writer has produced anything which is at the same time so redolent of the life and character of the country and so faithful in style to indigenous literary models. Duun's method is peculiarly calculated to convey the illusion of oral narrative. Though the dialect becomes broader in reporting the speech of the characters, the whole story is told with a close approximation to the style of expression, and still more the mentality, of a Namdal peasant. Hence the almost insuperable dilemma presented to the translator. In these circumstances Mr. Chater seems to have adopted the best available compromise. For the most part he is closely literal."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p351 Ap 24 '30 800w

DWINGER, EDWIN ERICH. Prisoner of war; a Siberian diary; tr. from the German by Ian F. D. Morrow (Eng title: Army behind barbed wire). 296p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Allen, G.]

940.472 European war, 1914-1918—Prisoners and prisons 30-25638

In 1915 Ensign Dwinger, seventeen-year-old German officer, was severely wounded in action and taken prisoner of war by the Russians. The first division of the book describes with unsparing realism his experiences in the prison hospital. Then follows an account of the deportation of recovering men to one of the most horrible of the prison camps in Siberia, where unspeakable suffering, neglect and disease brought physical and moral corruption. The story, which varies little thruout the remainder of the narration, throws a strong light upon the heroism of human nature in face of privation, degradation and the pressure of a wholly artificial life.

"'Prisoner of War' is a book of welling hatred: Dwinger can neither forget nor forgive those gnawing hours of horror in a Cossack prison. It is a book of shrill discords, of strident maddening cacophony, of days of furious irritability succeeded by weeks of deathly apathy. Nevertheless, it is to this episodic sensationalism and incoherence, this relentless rancor that the book owes its power. Undoubtedly this is an hysterical book, but it is also a true book, a scathing arraignment of the human race. The reader will find nothing here to fortify his faith in the natural goodness of man. Nor can it be called a work of literary distinction in its stabbing frenzy; it stands as an inglorious confession of man's inhumanity to man." W. J. Fadiman

Books p21 O 12 '30 350w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton
Nation 131:683 D 17 '30 500w

Reviewed by R. P. F. Strachey
Nation and Ath 47:540 Jl 26 '30 120w

Sat R of Lit 7:226 O 11 '30 420w

"This story of appalling brutality and magnificent courage grips the reader and will not let him go. And the beauty of the book lies in the fact that so much suffering should have led to so little bitterness." Vernon Bartlett

+ Spec 144:981 Je 14 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p748 S 25 '30 950w

DWYER, JAMES FRANCIS. Evelyn; something more than a story. 214p $2 Vanguard press 29-27799

"Evelyn loses her fiancé in the war. Her health, always tenuous, seems about to collapse. But somehow she stores up enough vitality to go on living. An obsession of her subconscious controls her entirely. She goes to France. There, in a garden of Avignon, she stays for the brief stretch of her days, caught midway between life and death by psychic promptings. People in distress, humble people of France whom she has never seen, are found and helped by the messages that shoot through her frail mind."—Books

---

Bookm 71:ix Jl '30 100w

"Whether Mr. Dwyer bases his story on hearsay or not, it will have a sound of authority to those who need to believe it. Grief always seems to be the key which opens the door to such experience. And other griefs echo an eager response. People who want to believe will do so. Those who do not have no need of it."

Books p11 F 2 '30 280w

Reviewed by F. F. Van de Water
N Y Evening Post p10m D 7 '29 70w

"Mr. Dwyer has woven into his adroit and oddly conceived little story an air of conviction and a very appreciable emotional force."

+ N Y Times p7 D 22 '29 480w

DYOTT, GEORGE MILLER. Man hunting in the jungle; being the story of a search for three explorers lost in the Brazilian wilds. 323p il $5 Bobbs [12s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]

918.1 Brazil—Description and travel. Indians of South America 30-4717

"Colonel P. H. Fawcett together with his son and another companion entered the hinterland of Brazil in 1925 under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society with the intention of searching for a supposed lost race of people. For a time letters came back, then all communications ceased. Three years later Commander Dyott set out with five companions to track down Fawcett and learn his fate. Traveling most of the time at full speed to conserve provisions, and with his whole attention concentrated on Fawcett's trail, no observations of importance could be made concerning details of the physical geography, fauna or Indians. The book becomes an excellent story of modern adventure. Dyott seems definitely to have established the fact of Fawcett's death."—Books

Bookm 71:xviii Je '30 430w

"This volume is a clearly written, entertaining, running diary of usual neotropical jungle travel, with unusually intimate contact with Indians of uncertain temper." William Beebe

+ Books p4 F 16 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 380w

Reviewed by Sylva Norman
Nation and Ath 47:90 Ap 19 '30 140w

"The chief fault of Mr. Dyott's lively book is that it is too aggressively popular. He 'writes down' to such an extent that one might almost suppose him to be addressing himself to children. But he has plenty of good stories."

+ — New Statesman 34:608 F 15 '30 950w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 200w

"One would like more of the color and variety of the jungle; especially would one like to get more of the 'feel' of the exotic country he passes through than Dyott is able to convey. And it seems an oversight that such a book should not have been more generously supplied with adequate maps. There is an unnecessary vagueness in the narrative. But the tale is real, human, and, to use an overworked word, thrilling. One has no right to ask more." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p4 Ja 26 '30 1250w

"'Man Hunting in the Jungle' is told simply, but with effect. Dyott is a master of suspense. He never gives the point away until the last. He holds the reader spellbound as he and his companions move forward through swamp and jungle, fighting undergrowth, dangerous insects, disease and, finally, hostile tribes. Those who did not read this book in newspaper form should get it for the entertainment and information it conveys; it is easily the best of the travel books." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Ja 25 '30 370w

St Louis 28:146 My '30

Sat R of Lit 6:932 Ap 12 '30 500w

Spec 144:284 F 22 '30 230w

"The narrative of his expedition is naturally of unusual interest, yet, although it may appear ungracious to say so, it is in some respects unsatisfactory. The language in which it is written lacks distinction; occasionally it descends to a facetiousness which seems wholly out of place, when in all truth a more dignified narrative could not have lacked drama and excitement by reason of the facts themselves. Mr. Dyott had the opportunity of writing a book that might have taken its place as a classic of travel literature. That he has failed to do so is a matter for regret, but it cannot detract from his high qualities as an explorer."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p135 F 20 '30 1950w

E

EARLY, ELEANOR. And this is Boston! (and seashore and country too). 256p il $1.50 Houghton

917.446 Boston—Description. Boston—History. Massachusetts—Description and travel 30-17698

A guide to Boston, with its surrounding towns, and to Nantucket and the Cape.

Booklist 27:60 O '30

"It is written in the vein of 'Listen, my children, and you shall hear'. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred such a book is tiresome, if not annoying. This is the exception. It possesses the indefinable quality of charm. Spontaneity is its keynote. And This Is Boston is to be recommended cordially to everyone contemplating a visit to Boston." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 72:xiii S '30 400w

Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 230w

"It is a vastly entertaining and informing guidebook which no visitor to Boston will want to miss. To go about the one-time cowpaths with this handy little volume in hand will add greatly to the pleasure and the knowledge to be gathered by a stay in the city beside the Charles. And for good measure the author has included chapters which will guide the traveler round about the country and seashore."

+ N Y Times p5 S 21 '30 470w

"Its pages bring back to you much of Boston's romantic past as well as guide you through the byways of her not less interesting present. The book should prove of value not only to the tourist but to the native who doesn't know his city as well as he should." Bernice Whittemore

+ Outlook 155:470 Jl 23 '30 120w

EASTON, EMILY. Roger Williams, prophet and pioneer. 399p $5 Houghton

B or 92 Williams, Roger 30-13850

This biography of Roger Williams, founder of Rhode Island, pioneer of religious liberty and friend of the Indians, marks the Puritan tercentenary. A 60-page introduction describes the London of Williams's boyhood, the background of the Puritan movement and the social conditions that influenced him.

Booklist 27:24 S '30

"A scholarly and copiously detailed picture of English life and of life in New England prefaces the entrance of Roger Williams to his own history. The author creates a sense of the thought-currents in an England more scholastic than the Scholastics. Indeed the book is as much a history of England and of the New England colonies during the lifetime of Williams as it is a biography of the rebel. Against the richly filled-in background, the life of Roger Williams and the incidents of his life assume the value and significance which a more dashing and less conscientious biographer would most certainly have lost."

+ Bookm 71:453 Jl '30 350w

"Miss Emily Easton's biography is a most disappointing affair. With skillful though somewhat indiscriminate pen she sketches in the English background—London in the seventeenth century, Charterhouse and Cambridge, but she fails to bring out the connection of this background with Roger William's later development." H. S. Commager

— Books p9 Ag 31 '30 320w

"One feature of this comprehensive biography is the extent to which the author lets Roger Williams tell his own story wherever it is possible. Furthermore Emily Easton has pictured New England for fifty years with vividness and usually with fairness. There seems to be little critical treatment of him or his attitude or methods, which were sometimes not above criticism. She has made a good case for Roger Williams and has presented it in an attractive way." T. C. Richards

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 7 '30 1900w

"The earlier chapters of Mrs. Easton's biography are virtually a history of the Puritan movement in England, with a detailed account of social conditions in the early seventeenth century, and sketches of several of the leading men of the day. This is valuable and interesting material, particularly the portion that describes the streets and buildings of the old City of London. No doubt it sometimes distracts the reader's attention from Roger Williams. As Mrs. Easton's narrative reaches the point where Roger Williams goes to the country of the Narragansetts, attention is more completely focused on the man who gives the title to the book. Through his own words and deeds, the services he rendered as peacemaker between the English and the Indians and between conflicting parties in Rhode Island become strikingly clear."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 My 24 '30 600w

"There is little originality in the book, no artist's portrayal of character and personality. The correspondence and other writings of the Founder of 'Soul Liberty' at Providence is made to tell his life-story, which, in fact, is very much the history of Rhode Island and even of New England during his lifetime. . . The collecting of so much source material and placing it in interesting story form makes the book one of very real worth as a ready reference for early New England history." R. E. E. Harkness

+ — Crozer Q 7:524 O '30 380w

Current Hist 32:1031 Ag '30 180w

Reviewed by William MacDonald

Nation 131:276 S 10 '30 600w

Reviewed by R. C. Washburn

N Y Evening Post p8m My 31 '30 450w

"Her treatment of the subject is always dispassionate, and there is hardly an adjective about him; her style is calmness itself. There is no eulogy, no apologia. But she brings out every fact obtainable, even facts which show that Williams was no meek saint but highly human and on occasion passionate and vehement. She calls him a 'prophet and pioneer,' but her book shows him also a daring frontiersman, a statesman and an adventurer." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p1 My 25 '30 1700w

"An excellent objective biography. The book will please especially those who like their biographies to be easy reading, and who prefer their historical to their psychological aspects." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:145 My 28 '30 200w

Pratt p36 autumn '30

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"This book on Roger Williams is chiefly interesting for its liberal extracts from Williams's own writings and from documents pertaining to Williams. As an historical interpretation, or the picture of a period, it is not altogether skilful."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 1100w

EASUM, CHESTER VERNE. Americanization of Carl Schurz. 374p $3.50 Univ. of Chicago press [16s Cambridge univ. press]

B or 92 Schurz, Carl 30-5616

"Mr. Easum has devoted his book to the first decade of Schurz's life in the United States, from 1852 to the beginning of the Civil War, and has produced an intensive study of the process which made of his subject an ardent and militant American patriot. . . Mr. Easum very wisely begins his study of this Americanization process with an account of his subject's life in Europe before he came to this country in 1852."—N Y Times

Reviewed by M. L. Hansen

Am Hist R 35:928 Jl '30 430w

EASUM, C. V.—Continued

"The book bears the marks of scholarly research and originality and is interesting reading."

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:797 Ag '30 80w

"Mr. Chester V. Easum has told the story of the Americanization of Carl Schurz with exceptional skill." H. S. Commager

+ Books p20 Mr 16 '30 800w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p2 F 1 '30 1850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

Reviewed by O. G. Villard
Nation 131:206 Ag 20 '30 850w

"Carl Schurz, his brilliant personality and the striking story of his life, have hardly had from writers of biography and history the attention they deserve. He should be much better known because of the outstanding importance and molding influence of his activities in the public service. . . While Mr. Easum is no iconoclast, he writes in judicial temper, with a tolerant smile for the foibles of temperament which his political opponents had no difficulty in finding in Carl Schurz's character." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 26 '30 650w
St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Drama in English. 365p $2 Scribner

822.09 English drama—History and criticism. American drama—History and criticism. Theater—Great Britain. Theater—United States 30-13752

A history of the development of the drama in English from the first plays in the church to the plays of Paul Green and Eugene O'Neill. Bibliographical notes and an index.

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"Mr. Eaton's research into the development of the theatre and his deductions therefrom are of considerable interest and constitute the chief merit of the book. . . Some irrelevant emphasis is placed on the economic aspect, since playwriting is an art, not a business, and the book is strewn with questionable generalizations." Olga Katzin

+ — Bookm 71:470 Jl '30 400w

"A useful book for students or for drama clubs and one which will also interest playgoers who ask for more than uncritically accepted amusement from the theatre." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:225 Je 11 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Theatre guild; the first ten years; with articles by the directors. 299p pl $4 Brentano's

792 Theatre guild 29-28816

The history of the Theatre guild is told by Walter Prichard Eaton, with chapters of experiences by several of its directors. Contents: The history of the Theatre guild, by W. P. Eaton; Behind the scenes with the executive director, by Theresa Helburn; The Guild and production, by Philip Moeller; An art theatre without endowment, by Maurice Wertheim; The actor's relation to the art theatre and vice versa, by Helen Westley; Setting the stage, by Lee Simonson; The Little theatre grows up, by Lawrence Langner; Casts of the Theatre guild subscription productions.

Booklist 26:193 F '30

Reviewed by Arthur Ruhl
Books p18 F 23 '30 700w

Reviewed by Paul Sifton
N Y World p11m D 29 '29 1000w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 153:589 D 11 '29 50w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30
St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

EBERHART, MRS MIGNON G. Mystery of Hunting's End. 341p $1 Doubleday, Doran 30-27061

Two murders, following one five years previous, occur during a house party snow-bound at a northern hunting lodge. As in the author's former tales, Nurse Keate once more tells the story, and Lance O'Leary, detective, reveals the murderer.

Booklist 27:165 D '30
Bookm 72:xxii N '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 N 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:469 N 19 '30 100w

EBERHART, MRS MIGNON G. While the patient slept. 313p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-26182

Sarah Keate, capable and red-headed, arrived at the old Federie house to nurse old Mr Federie, who had had a stroke. Immediately she became a witness to mysterious and sinister happenings, for on the first night of her arrival Adolph Federie was shot on the curtained and gloomy tower-stairway. That her friend Lance O'Leary, detective, takes charge of investigations cheers Nurse Keate considerably, and together the two contrive to catch the murderer.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"This book places detective fiction on a higher level than ever before and is heartily recommended to fans."

+ Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 70w

"Mrs. Eberhart is an adept at eerie atmosphere, suspense, surprise and exciting clews. Her book deservedly takes this year's Scotland Yard prize." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 F 16 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 150w

Reviewed by Herbert Kahan
Nation and Ath 47:446 Jl 5 '30 100w

"This is Mrs. Eberhart's second mystery story, and it is even better than her first."

+ N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 150w

"Eerie it is, as eerie can be, and a good yarn to boot." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:320 F 19 '30 120w

"It has all the ingredients of a first rate thriller. Federie House, with its sombre ruggedness on an almost deserted road, with its mysterious turrets, its darkened draperies, its heavily carpeted floors, and its sinister occupants, is an almost perfect setting for a mystery story." Eugene Reynal

+ Sat R of Lit 6:830 Mr 15 '30 250w

"We have only one fault to find with this absorbing mystery story: that the nurse cannot resist commenting on the events she is describing with an inside knowledge of their real significance, a knowledge which the reader naturally does not share unless he has broken every rule of the game and peeped at the end of the book. Otherwise, the story makes excellent reading."

+ — Spec 144:753 My 3 '30 160w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 200w

Reviewed by Arthur Kellogg
Survey 64:101 Ap 15 '30 220w
Times [London] Lit Sup p460 My 29 '30 150w

EBERHART, RICHARD. Bravery of earth. 127p $2 (5s) Cape

811 [30-10496]

"A young man's first intellectual throw with the Universe as adversary. With the pitiable courage of youth he dares all in this poem which is determined to put mental interpretation upon the ever-new, ever-old force of life."

(Spec.) The first long poem of a young American written while he was in residence, recently, at St John's College, Cambridge, England.

"The young poet's attempt is serious and his poem pretends to considerable accomplishment. His point of view is optimistic and affirmative. Nevertheless Mr. Eberhart seems to me a young American gone wrong as a result of too much academic study of English poetry." E. L. Walton

+ — Books p17 Je 22 '30 300w

"Those passages in which he allows himself to speak personally are his best. He is probably not aware that he is imitating, but he seems, at one and the same time, a would-be scientifically minded person and a student immersed in nineteenth-century poetry. After he has passed through this apprenticeship we shall expect from him another, different, and probably more interesting volume of verse, without this curious mixture of unassimilated modern scientific thought and romantic enthusiasm."

+ — Nation 131:75 Jl 16 '30 220w

"'A Bravery of Earth,' by Richard Eberhart, is a modern 'Prelude.' It does not have the biographical framework that Wordsworth gives to his poem, but both poets have wished to work out their emotional and intellectual life. The poem is written in short lines of no regular metre beyond a quadruple rhythm. There are here lyric possibilities that are beautifully put to advantage, but the drawback to a short line in a long poem is the difficulty, when in a lower key, of making the verse paragraph. There is a temptation to pile one line upon another. This, however, interferes very little with the simplicity of the poem's movement." James Thornton

Nation and Ath 47:117 Ap 26 '30 160w

"In many ways this poem is groping, immature and confused. There are long abstract passages in which the concrete quickening image is lacking. There are frequent roughnesses of rhythm which seem quite wanton, considering the pure music of some of the lyric interludes. Nevertheless, Mr. Eberhart is master of a priceless secret. He touches ecstasy more closely and more often than do most of the poets of this century." E. H. Walton

+ — New Repub 63:214 Jl 9 '30 320w

"Although in A Bravery of Earth, a long poem of one hundred and twenty-two pages, Mr. Eberhart nowhere comes up to the level he attains in his contributions to Cambridge poetry: 1929, and although it is not a volume of poetry to buy for itself, those who are interested in the better young poets of to-day would not do ill to acquire it for their libraries. There is a chance that Mr. Eberhart may become a good poet. . . The author must conquer his transatlantic attitude toward verbs. It is the result of laziness, and gives his work a strangely hysterical quality."

New Statesman 35:22 Ap 12 '30 220w

"A very good poem, and its conception is impressive." Vincent McHugh

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 80w

N Y Times p19 Je 1 '30 300w

"There is plenty—a too great plenty—of bad writing in this one-hundred-and-twenty-page poem. It would be easy to complain of tiresome or even absurd passages. But I prefer to credit this young poet, not only with sincerity and enthusiasm in his effort at a genuine interpretation of life, but also with an outreaching imagination, and an authentic talent which, we may hope, will develop a surer technique as time goes on." H. M.

+ — Poetry 36:343 S '30 350w

Reviewed by W. R. Benét

Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 450w

"He will have to be content with less if he is to become a master of his art: but his is a fault that contains great promise. Meanwhile he might learn something from Katherine Mansfield." Richard Church

Spec 144:sup623 Ap 12 '30 170w

"We cannot say that the goal of reality, the stillness at the heart of all motion, is reached. Yet he does succeed in making his voyage at once an inward and an outward adventure, and the men who share in it shapes and shadows of the reality which he seeks. And, although his impulse is always too frenzied to be sufficiently mastered by 'contemplation turning inward,' his verse has a nervous power which is at once a condition of and a compensation for its incoherencies and diffuseness."

Times [London] Lit Sup p332 Ap 17 '30 400w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON. Little known England; rambles in the Welsh borderland, the Cotswolds, the chalk hills and the eastern counties. 132p il $5 Lippincott [12s 6d Batsford]

914.2 England—Description and travel
30-21823

In five long chapters the author describes his rambles along the untravelled roads in the lesser known parts of England: the Welsh borderland, Shropshire, Herefordshire, the Cotswolds, the Berkshire downs, the Chilterns, Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex. There are illustrations from photographs and paintings, and maps.

Booklist 27:152 D '30

Books p12 N 2 '30 200w

Reviewed by Sylva Norman

Nation and Ath 48:52 O 11 '30 350w

"It is curious that a firm of publishers standing very high in the matter of illustrated books should be associated with writing of this absurd kind. The illustrations, needless to say, make the volume. They are very numerous—photographs and drawings; a delightful series of country, town and village scenes."

— + New Statesman 35:575 Ag 9 '30 200w

Reviewed by Lindesay Parrott

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 550w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 S '30 20w

"Mr. Eberlein has plenty of well-selected pieces of information to give us; he is anecdotal, and perhaps the best things he tells us are the legends and scraps of history. The description is unfortunately poor, and is disfigured by the 'perchances,' 'betakes,' and 'ablooms' which seem inevitably to characterize the manner of those who write books on the country. The photographs are excellent, and Mr. Eberlein provides several maps and a chapter of useful hints to tourists."

+ — Sat R 150:210 Ag 16 '30 220w

"His book is admirably presented and produced, containing innumerable plates, some sketches and—most usefully—five maps. It combines, indeed, the doubly engaging qualities of a book to read for pleasure (and instruction), and a book to keep for use." E. L. Lutyens

+ Spec 145:168 Ag 2 '30 450w

"The notes on scenery, architectural and historical details, and notably on parish churches, are succinct and show close personal knowledge. The book is illustrated with a number of photographs, small in size, but excellent in technical qualities and choice of subject. Any reader who explores the ground here described under Mr. Eberlein's guidance will discover endless beauty and interest in corners of England which are still for the great majority terra incognita."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p655 Ag 14 '30 180w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON; MARKS, GEOFFREY J.; and WALLIS, FRANK A. Down the Tiber and up to Rome. 207p il $3 (15s) Lippincott

914.5 Italy—Description and travel. Tiber river
30-15758

Italy viewed from its natural water way, the Tiber, from its source to Rome, is the subject

EBERLEIN, H. D., and others—Continued
of this travel book. The three authors made the trip in a black rubber boat. The beauty and the perils of the upper Tiber valley are described, as well as the interesting little towns along the river banks. Frequent repairs to the rubber canoe were necessitated along the way; but, after successfully navigating the most dangerous of the river rapids, the party finally reached the Campagna—and thence arrived at Rome. The book is illustrated with twelve drawings made by Frank A. Wallis on the voyage.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xv Jl '30 100w

Books p10 Je 8 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"They tell the story of their experiment with a cheerful, quizzical humor that makes it all very entertaining, and they bring out constantly the rich historical associations of the country through which the Tiber flows."
+ N Y Times p23 My 4 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

Spec 145:392 S 20 '30 250w

"The narrative generates its own animation, which is not that of acute dangers surmounted, but rather that of a tour of observation in which mind and senses are constantly alert. For these travelers are disciplined observers, trained in the arts, and the passage down the river yields a pleasant record of people understandingly met and places understandingly seen, in which there is a notably exact proportion of activity, archeology and living beauty. The narrative is set forth in a style of charm and substance, matching the travelers' perception. Fourteen sketches by Frank A. Wallis are architecturally revealing, yet suffused with atmosphere."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 1300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Jl 31 '30 150w

ECKENRODE, HAMILTON JAMES, and WIGHT, POCAHONTAS WILSON. Rutherford B. Hayes, statesman of reunion. (Am. political leaders) 363p il $5 Dodd

B or 92 Hayes, Rutherford Birchard 30-12586

The present biography is the first of a series entitled American Political Leaders and edited by Allan Nevins, which promises "a thorough, scholarly, and interesting biographical treatment of all the prominent political leaders in the United States from 1860 to the present day." It is the record of a somewhat drab era and of an honest president whose rôle consisted chiefly in helping the United States to settle down after the scandals of the Grant administration. A full account is given of the disputed Hayes-Tilden election which the author concedes to Tilden.

Am Pol Sci R 24:1065 N '30 60w

"Mr. Eckenrode's book gave me a pleasant surprise. Partisanship is wholly absent. The line between the overwhelming significance of the social and political trends of the period and the total insignificance of the actors is dispassionately drawn. The author starts out with no predispositions and no desire to enhance the importance of his work by enhancing the importance of its subject. The result is a fair, authoritative, and (what is more surprising) very readable story of Hayes' career." A. B. Miller
+ Ann Am Acad 151:301 S '30 320w

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz
Bookm 71:335 Je '30 400w

"The approach in this biography is decidedly that of Claude Bowers in his 'The Tragic Era,' that the oligarchy which ruled through the Republican party in Reconstruction days had put an end to all constitutional restraints, professing insincere apprehensions for the Negro in order to crush Southern Democratic power, and loosing a veritable deluge of corruption. . . The approach does not invalidate the splendid appreciation of the man Hayes and his period or prevent this from being an outstanding biography." Avery Craven
+ — Books p7 Ap 27 '30 1150w

"This is not a fair life of Hayes. Far too much does the author seek to press his figure into the mould which he thinks he ought to fill. But he does sympathetically, though always with true Virginia condescension, present the excellences of an administration too little picturesque to be popular, but which deserves, and greatly deserves, the encomiums of the scholarly and discriminating." S. L. Cook
— + Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 1950w

Cath World 132:503 Ja '31 420w

"Mr. Eckenrode's fine biography gains in interest from the fact that its author writes with a southern background."
+ Christian Century 47:598 My 7 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 Jl '30

Reviewed by William MacDonald
Current Hist 32:605 Je '30 650w

Reviewed by L. M. Hacker
Nation 130:654 Je 4 '30 1250w

"Mr. Eckenrode has linked Hayes with reconstruction, but actually has taken him out of his time by calling him 'the first modern President,' belonging spiritually to a new generation which was ready to forget sectional strife and preparing to turn its energies to a period of industrial expansion, for which peace was necessary. One feels after reading this book that Hayes has been made comprehensible at last." A. S. Will
+ N Y Times p1 My 11 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 Ap 26 '30 900w

"As a biography of Hayes, Eckenrode's book is not notably important. But as a vivid narrative of events preceding and following the presidential election of 1876 it is not merely readable but stimulating, even when one does not agree with the author in all his views." R. D. T.
+ Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 230w

Pratt p35 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:10 Je '30 180w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"Considering the pervading drabness of large parts of the subject, the authors (Dr. Eckenrode appears to have written the bulk of the book) have dressed the narrative in an unusually lively style, but while few opportunities to characterize an actor or an event by striking phrase or comment have been allowed to pass, the work is sound, sensible, and impressive." William MacDonald
+ Sat R of Lit 6:985 Ap 26 '30 1200w

"Hayes may not have been a 'brilliant' man He was an honest and a brave one who, getting into a place of great influence, stuck to his colors. Now at last, with the aid of Dr. Eckenrode's volume and other contributions to our knowledge of the time, of like import, he may be seen in a true light." E. P. Oberholtzer
+ Yale R n s 20:416 winter '31 420w

ECKLES, CLARENCE HENRY; COMBS, WILLES BARNES; and MACY, HAROLD. Milk and milk products; prepared for the use of agricultural college students. (McGraw-Hill publications in the agric. and botanical sciences) 379p $3.50 McGraw

637 Dairying. Milk. Dairy products
29-24331

"A textbook for a course in dairying. It includes elementary bacteriology, the constituents and properties of milk, dairy tests, and the manufacture of dairy products."—Pratt

---

"It covers the field in a thorough and comprehensive manner. One striking characteristic of the book is that it has no bibliography and practically no references. The book is well printed, competently illustrated, and has a good index. It should prove of value to those who have to deal in an official or commercial capacity with milk and its many important products." J. A. Tobey

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:564 My '30 180w

Booklist 26:225 Mr '30

"The book is well prepared and is free from errors of a serious nature. In the hands of a competent instructor it should prove an excellent text for the students, for whom it was primarily written." G. E. Holm

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:402 Ap '30 330w

Pratt p20 spring '30

St Louis 28:101 Ap '30

EDDINGTON, ARTHUR STANLEY. Science and the unseen world. (Swarthmore lecture, 1929) 91p $1.25; pa 50c Macmillan [2s 6d; pa 1s 6d G. Allen]

215 Religion and science. Friends, Society of 29-19461

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"This delightful little book by the great English astronomer carries my mind back to the golden days of John Fiske and his little volumes on 'The Idea of God,' 'The Destiny of Man' and 'Through Nature to God.' Here is the same luminousness of phrase, the same clarity of exposition, the same direct and simple presentation of scientific data, and the same use of these data not to contradict but to confirm the spiritual convictions of the race." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p15 Ja 26 '30 600w

Cath World 131:117 Ap '30 720w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:82 Ja 15 '30 300w

"Whether one followed or could not easily follow the author in his larger work, he will find here, if a brief, nevertheless a convincing statement of the views of this distinguished astronomer and physicist as to what science may or not mean as to religion. There are many concessions of a comforting sort to those who are disturbed by the attitude of some scientists; and also some clear affirmations which should give the brood of lesser scientists reason for pause and poise." S. B. Meeser

+ Crozer Q 7:124 Ja '30 850w

"Professor Eddington's 1929 lecture before the Society of Friends is shot through with provoking and stimulating thoughts about matters seen and unseen; we may not agree with him but we enjoy to be stirred." Vergilius Ferm

+ Int J Ethics 40:459 Ap '30 500w

"Professor Eddington develops his convictions with a powerful because restrained eloquence that might almost persuade one to be a mystic. This little book, like an exquisite poem, defies review. It must be read to be appreciated." E. B. McGilvary

+ J Philos 27:187 Mr 27 '30 3100w

"The lecture is characterized by loose definition of such terms as 'experience' and 'knowledge,' so that the argument is vitiated thereby."

— J Religion 10:162 Ja '30 70w

"In this book Eddington is not a scientist talking about the Unseen. He is a Quaker talking about a kind of experience, a sense of searching and a sense of light to which the formulas of quanta and of relativity are irrelevant. His Quakerism and his science are as usual beautifully stated, with humor, lucidity, and color. But they are not logically related to each other. The astronomer and the Friend meet here purely by accident." Irwin Edman

Nation 130:75 Ja 15 '30 650w

Pratt p9 spring '30

St Louis 28:36 F '30

"No one scientist is writing so provocatively and thoughtfully today."

+ World Tomorrow 13:139 Mr '30 50w

EDELHERTZ, BERNARD. Russian paradox; a first-hand study of life under the soviets; with an introd. by William N. Haskell. 155p il $2 Walton bk. co., 143 W. 41st st, N.Y.

914.7 Russia—Social conditions

In this small book Mr Edelhertz sets forth his impressions of soviet Russia, which he considers a paradoxical experiment in government. From his observations the author concludes that, when the Russian workers awaken to a desire for a higher standard of living, the soviet government will be forced to make larger and larger concessions to personal enterprise and initiative—and thereby become, in itself, weaker and weaker.

"By no means a comprehensive survey of Russia under the Soviet experiment, but a series of impressions of different aspects of Russian life and the enormous difficulties confronting the re-makers of the nation, this volume is valuable in that it attempts to present the situation from an unbiased, unprejudiced point of view."

+ N Y World p3e N 9 '30 180w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 156:390 N 5 '30 80w

EDIB, HALIDE. See Halidah Adib.

EDINGTON, ARLO CHANNING, and EDINGTON, MRS CARMEN BALLEN. House of the vanishing goblets. 334p $2 Century

30-9316

The setting is California. A movie director and an actor are killed in a mysterious house, full of secret doors, uneven stairways and sliding panels. There is a perfect network of clues, out of which a famous detective from Los Angeles finally succeeds in working his way, and the murderer is found.

Bookm 71:xx Je '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p17 Ap 27 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 330w

"Although the final solution is a bit far-fetched, the story, as a whole, is good entertainment."

+ — N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 170w

"An uncommonly good thriller, fresh in setting, solid and completely baffling in the mystery factor, unusually skilful in characterization." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p9m My 18 '30 220w

"An undisciplined mystery yarn. We think it only fair to apply to it a word which the authors apply to practically everything in it: it's goofy." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 154:599 Ap 9 '30 80w

EDINGTON, ARLO CHANNING, and EDINGTON, MRS CARMEN BALLEN. 2 Tundra; romance and adventure on Alaskan trails, as told by former Deputy United States Marshal Hansen to the Edingtons. 334p $2.50 Century

917.98 Alaska 30-25711

The experiences and adventures of Bert Hansen, former U. S. Deputy Marshal of Alaska, as told to and transcribed by the authors. Marshal Hansen has mushed with his dog teams over the great Alaskan interior, tracking criminals or saving the lives of lost prospectors and adventurers.

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"In this tale the Edingtons have recaptured the spell of the Yukon, made famous by Robert W. Service, and offer a true version of the land of the Eskimos."

+ Bookm 72:xii D '30 100w

"The Edingtons have set down a thrilling narrative of bleak trails, blizzards, huskies and sixty-below weather, a true story that easily

EDINGTON, A. C. and C. B.—Continued
caps the wonders of most frozen fiction for honest to goodness excitement. Bert Hansen is a man to meet."
+ Books p14 D 7 '30 100w

"It is a breath-taking narrative of the life and deeds of a typical man of the northern frontier, and Mr. and Mrs. Edington have written it in his own words, as he told it to them in California, and in their telling have not allowed a thrilling situation or a dramatic moment to escape."
+ N Y Times p18 O 5 '30 200w

EDMONDS, CHARLES, pseud. Subaltern's war. (Soldiers' tales) 224p il $2.50 Minton [7s 6d Davies]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-1101

"A memoir of the Great war from the point of view of a romantic young man, with candid accounts of two particular battles, written shortly after they occurred, and an essay on militarism."—Subtitle

"One is in doubt as to exactly what the author of 'A Subaltern's War' wishes to convey. His 'Essay on Militarism' is pointed enough, but the book as a whole is rather commonplace, and, compared to a number of recent war books, dull. He opens with a statement to the effect that the war was not anywhere near as bad as most writers have painted it and then proceeds to show it in colors that are duller than the worst. Only the spirit of his epilogue glows dimly with a prophetic light of its own. . . On the whole, the epilogue is as interesting and impassioned as the book is dull, and as change in diet from more commonplace reactions to wartime experience it is refreshing."
— + Books p13 Ag 31 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

"Its chief fault is that though Mr. Edmonds's experiences of the 1916 Somme offensive and of the Third Battle of Ypres were recorded not long after they happened, they have lost most of their documentary value because of his unwillingness to mention the name of his regiment, its recruiting district, the number of his brigade, or even that of his division. He has a more workmanlike field-message style in which he speaks of casualties. But he spoils its force by quoting familiar passages of Shakespeare, Carlyle, Wordsworth, Kipling, and Bunyan. And he seems reticent about the really shameful things that happened." Robert Graves
— + Nation and Ath 45:629 Ag 10 '29 550w

"Our latest diarist belongs to what may be called the School of Returning Sanity, one of whose ablest spokesman was Mr. Blunden. He does not belong to the earlier school of the Disenchanted (inadvertently founded by Mr. Sassoon and Mr. C. E. Montague), or to the still earlier (and now extinct) Enchanteds. He does not belong to these, because he always expected to find war horrible, and was not disappointed. . . All the contradictions, the never-ending mental conflict, so well remembered by everyone who survived the war, needed to be rcorded in this simple, plain spoken way, as Mr. Edmonds has done it, if only for the benefit of future generations."
+ New Statesman 33:530 Ag 3 '29 1050w
Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y Times p6 My 18 '30 350w
Outlook 155:29 My 7 '30 20w
St Louis 28:219 S '30
Reviewed by Edward Shanks
Sat R 148:217 Ag 24 '29 1250w

"Altogether A Subaltern's War will not rank as one of the great War books, but it will be a valuable record of how the War appeared to an eminently sane and solid, and very intelligent, Englishman of the upper classes."
+ Spec 143:133 Jl 27 '29 800w

"The author had, and claims for the majority of his fellows at the front, more spiritual toughness and less self-pity than most recent writers of War novels and reminiscences would lead us to suppose were general. It is exactly the impression which one gathers—at least, this is the reviewer's experience—from discussion of these books with one's friends. . . Mr. Edmonds's book is not likely to make war appear any prettier than it is or the young to think more lightly of it. But it contains a tribute to British spirit and endurance, timely at a moment when well-meaning writers are unconsciously belittling them."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p585 Jl 25 '29 980w

EDMONDS, WALTER DUMAUX. Big barn. 333p $2 Little 30-23435

As in his first novel, Rome Haul, Mr Edmonds deals with the Erie Canal country. Ralph Wilder's big barn, near Boonville in the 1860s, dominates the countryside and the action of the story. Wilder's two sons, in love with the same girl, Rose, supply the love motif. Henry, the book-loving son, hates his savage and domineering father; Bascom, the younger, is old Wilder's pride. Rose's growing love for the farm makes her turn from Henry, her husband, toward Bascom—and the war brings the triangular situation to a climax.

Booklist 27:104 N '30

"Mr. Edmonds is doing his full share toward transcribing the lore of a dying and picturesque past in terms of living interest and racy idiom." C. B. Sherman
+ Books p6 S 14 '30 480w

"Mr. Edmond's second novel is neither as colorful nor as convincing as Rome Haul. It attempts more and it achieves much less. Many of the incidents and situations turn out to be quite pointless, like the false trails in a detective story, but the genuine complications are resolved in ways more melodramatic than satisfying to the critical reader, who is led to expect, in the face of Mr. Edmond's undoubted abilities, something better." F. T. Marsh
— + Books 72:417 D '30 220w

"Mr. Edmonds has more than fulfilled the high promise of his first novel. 'The Big Barn' is better than 'Rome Haul,' bigger, better written, finer. It raises the standard of American fiction." J. W. West
+ Boston Transcript p3 S 13 '30

"It is a pity that Mr. Edmonds could not have written 'The Big Barn' first. For in moments when the reader has laid aside the odiousness of comparisons, he enjoys this novel. It is ably conceived, ably shaped; again and again it evidences the author's grasp of word values. Yet one might liken it to a person entirely estimable, endowed with features flat and commonplace, a figure no taller, no shorter, no more shapely than the average." M. W.
— + Christian Science Monitor p7 O 4 '30 320w

"Although Mr. Edmonds does reproduce the idiom, color and stern tribal code of a pioneer scene, his suggested literary kinship with Mark Twain is merely the accident of a similar subject matter. Twain's excursions into 'local color' were nearly always grounded on a detached and precise insight into his personages; and his humor merged invariably with satire or irony. There is none of Twain's implicit 'criticism of life' in 'The Big Barn.' Since Mr. Edmonds himself is never outside provincial American attitudes, his characters are presented and judged after the manner of the average movie thriller."
— + New Repub 64:357 N 12 '30 220w

"The author deserves praise of an unstinted sort for his ability to create life-like dialogue, to re-create unforgettable scenes of farm life, as monotonous and as ever-fresh as life itself, and to enter into his characters frequently with the eagerness to understand frailities which is a characteristic of Galsworthy."

+ N Y Times p6 S 14 '30 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

"The materials for this story are less picturesque and extensive than those of his remarkable first novel. It is a more tightly woven story. With fewer advantages of background and plot than in his first novel, Mr. Edmonds has produced a book which will doubtless be less popular, but which is just as interesting and which marks an advance in some essential elements of fiction." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:156 S 27 '30 550w

"In addition to being an important historical novelist, Mr. Edmonds is one of our very few first-rate regional novelists. He knows his country and the people; and the people not as types but as very decided individuals. Mr. Edmonds writes of farm and village life with a shrewd knowledge of its values and relationships; frequently his insight and divination approach the inspired; there is writing in this book that can take rank with Mary Webb's and Henry Williamson's and Willa Cather's. His work is too interesting and too important to miss." Coley Taylor

+ Survey 65:170 N 1 '30 450w

EDSCHMID, KASIMIR. Passionate rebel; the life of Lord Byron; tr. by Whittaker Chambers. 432p $3 Boni [7s 6d Cayme press]

Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th baron—Fiction 30-25386

Choosing as his principal theme the love of Byron for his half-sister Augusta, the author of this fictional biography prefers to picture his subject as a victim of circumstance and the restrictions of society rather than as a morally responsible being. The story follows otherwise the accepted outlines of Byron's life: his strange affection, compounded with hatred, for his mother; his university career, his inevitable failure in marriage, his friends, his Italian sojourn, and his death in Greece. Very little attention is paid to Byron the poet.

"There is nothing deliberately erotic in Edschmid's interpretation of the affair; he shows restraint and good taste in his writing; but internal drama is lacking. The Passionate Rebel is a clever piece of writing, but with Byron for subject cleverness is not enough." Grenville Vernon

+ — Bookm 72:323 N '30 400w

"One might forgive Mr. Edschmid for not being as eloquent or as savage as Byron, but it is impossible to forgive him for failing to get the main facts of his story correct. But the inaccuracies are considerably less important than the omissions. Notable among these is the complete suppression of all Byron's daily repeated savageries to his wife and to Augusta, whom he seemed to have hated and loved together, and the substitution of a beautiful, but quite fictitious, mauve tragedy of devotion to them both." A. B. Parsons

— Books p19 N 16 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p1 N 8 '30 1350w

"The book is pretentious, depressing, and absurd."

— Christian Science Monitor p4 D 6 '30 120w

"A reader of 'The Passionate Rebel' must first of all notice the style. That is a double misfortune for the author because we have but a translation from the German. The result is discouraging. Kasimir Edschmid is described as 'A German Expressionist,' therefore it is possible that in the original some telling effect is made by language which, reproduced in English, is often naive and grotesque, disconcerting but never successfully original. There is no nostalgic recreation of the past here, it is all brisk and perfunctory, the main characters being designated throughout the book by nicknames. If the matter-of-fact manner is an intent to bring the vanished lives close to us, it fails simply because the characters are not the personages they are stated to be." George O'Neil

— N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 700w

"The difficulty with the book is a general difficulty. The style is jerky and the author teeters between the two points of contact with some reality—the character as his imagination forms him and the character as reported. The greater fictionized biographies have escaped very largely from any detailed use of fact and have recreated a character. This Mr. Edschmid does not do."

— N Y Times p8 D 14 '30 550w

"In the present book Edschmid is 'post-war,' that is, vigorous, bold and perhaps a bit hard-boiled. This hard-boiled quality is one of the most marked features of the present interesting book. On the whole the book's method fails to convince, and for two reasons: One is that the understatement—particularly in respect of Byron's poetry and his poetic conscience, which was considerable and made Shelley believe that Byron was a greater poet than himself—does not come off; the second is that there is a non-English ring to the dialogue (which may be due to the translation), and the atmosphere of Byron's time is but dimly given. The sotto voce method has only contrived to suppress the fullness of life which was in Byron and in Byron in relation to his age." Pierre Loving

+ — N Y World p3e N 2 '30 700w

"The mixture of fiction and biography destroys the flavour of both, for the virtues of each are destructive of the other's. Why did not the author take a hint from life and make a satisfying novel out of an extraordinary story? Instead, tied to his frame, he picks out an incident or two from Byron's Italian experiences, follows him to Greece and sketches his familiar end. . . Herr Edschmid is a writer of ability, but his materials have refused to mix." Osbert Burdett

— Sat R 150:205 Ag 16 '30 1200w

"Herr Edschmid's unorthodox portrait of Byron, though it presents a pleasanter and far kinder view of him than any we should expect at this time of day, is a thoroughly enjoyable piece of work. It is, in fact, little as it may command approval or agreement, a very ingenious character sketch, done with sympathy and great liveliness. . . We are accustomed to German views of Byron which are at once more lenient and more enthusiastic than our own, but it is unusual to meet a Byron of the integrity of character of Herr Edschmid's hero. It is, in its own way, a very entertaining study, though the general verdict must be that it errs on the side of chivalry. The translation is excellent."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p510 Je 19 '30 400w

EDWARDS, DOROTHY. Winter sonata. 244p $2 Dutton [6s Wishart]

30-16621

A quiet, uneventful description of the daily doings of six young people during a long winter in a tiny English village.

"All this is dissatisfying not because the author has failed of her intent, but because the intent itself is not enough. Half-lives and half-emotions are not rich enough material, the skilful arrangement of patterns too unambitious a task for a talent as considerable as Miss Edwards displays. Something meaningful has been left out of her pages: some quickening event, some illuminating concept which would have made of the book a small masterpiece." Guy Holt

— Bookm 71:238 Ap '30 230w

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books p22 Ap 20 '30 600w

"That 'Winter Sonata' as a first novel is altogether too apparent. Actually, it is not a novel at all, certainly not a sonata, but a mere interlude in the passage of time in the uninteresting English village which the author pictures only too well. Description is her forte, for there is no plot, hardly a narrative even. The book is best described as a mood."

EDWARDS, DOROTHY—Continued
— Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 200w

"Miss Edwards has described scenes without trying to tell what they mean; she records occurrences without attempting to show their cause and effect. This is not to everyone's taste, but nearly everyone will admit that she has shown remarkable restraint in keeping so precisely to her chosen method. If artistry means the perfect adaptation of the means to the end desired, Miss Edwards is an artist."
Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 350w
N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 180w

"If the reader seeks plot, let him not turn the pages of this book—he will seek in vain. If he demands character in the sense of human portraits, 'Winter Sonata' will not satisfy him. But for those who delight to read of 'dream-bound children waiting for some one to awaken them into reality,' 'Winter Sonata' will strike the responsive chord."
N Y Times p25 F 23 '30 420w

"The book is provocative. Because of the very sparcity of incidents, every gesture and every remark assumes significance. Behind the gray curtain of swirling snow, the figures, though dimmed, are real. And when the book is finished, we want to sit down and listen to a story about them. But the author has resolutely confined herself to the monotonous exterior. And for all our impatience we come to feel that in so doing she has accomplished a work of real beauty."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:995 Ap 26 '30 380w

"This author excels in description, beautifully written, but a little more plot would make the reading more of an entertainment."
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 100w

EDWARDS, JOHN HUGH. David Lloyd George; the man and the statesman; with an introd. by James John Davis. 2v 727p $7.50 Sears

B or 92 Lloyd George, David. Great Britain—Politics and government. European war, 1914-1918—Great Britain 29-29717

"The new authorized biography of Lloyd George is a full, and, on the whole, not unfair picture of the man and an authentic record of his amazing climb from the dull and apparently hopeless poverty of a cobbler's household in an obscure Welsh village to the triumphant days when he, with two other men, sat in a library in Paris and swayed the destinies of the civilized world."—N Y Evening Post

---

"The whole effect of the book is oratorical rather than literary; it is the expression of a spellbinder born and bred. Yet it has its points. Especially is this true of the first volume, which encompasses the story of Lloyd George up to the outbreak of the World War. In spite of its rotund periods and stilted phraseology it manages to convey an indelible impression of the Welsh environment which produced the little giant of British politics and to relate him to this environment in such a way that his subsequent career becomes thoroughly explicable." W. M. Houghton
+ — Books p2 Ja 5 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p4 D 21 '29 2600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

"This is an old fashioned biography. It does not seek to find and emphasize all of the subject's shortcomings. It does not confine itself to the drab colors, although not omitting them. It gives us a picture of a great man and when we are through examining it, we have some conception of why he was a great man." C. R. Woodruff
+ Living Church 83:344 Jl 5 '30 780w

"The book has the merits and the faults common to authorized biographies. It can be relied upon for fact and date and the accuracy of its quotations, for Mr. Lloyd George himself has consented to vouch for them. It is useful as a record of what Mr. Lloyd George would like the world to think about him. . . It is a pity that the book is not a far better book than it is, in view of Mr. Edwards's opportunities and qualifications. But in spite of that it remains readable, interesting and full of sidelights on the course of world history." John Bakeless
+ — N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 750w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:30 Ap '30
St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

Reviewed by J. W. T. Mason
Sat R of Lit 6:796 Mr 8 '30 1750w
Springf'd Republican p10 S 16 '30 550w

EDWARDS, JUNIUS DAVID; FRARY, FRANCIS COWLES; and JEFFRIES, ZAY. Aluminum industry; with the collaboration of a group of experts from the staff of Aluminum co. of America. (Chemical engineering ser.) 2v 358;870p il set $12 (60s) McGraw

669.7 Aluminum. Aluminum alloys 30-11822

"Volume 1 of this outstanding comprehensive work covers the history of the subject, the mining and refining of ores, and the production of the metal. Volume 2 deals with the properties of aluminium, the fabrication of products and their numerous applications in the industries. A multitude of literature and patent references."—N Y New Tech Bks

---

Booklist 27:53 O '30

"The praise which is due this work . . . is not unmixed with a feeling of envy for the men who have succeeded in turning out a book nearly free from shortcomings." M. G. Corson in Metal industry, July, 1930
+ N Y New Tech Bks 15:31 Jl '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

"The most important book on its subject, up-to-date and authoritative. Prepared in collaboration by eighteen experts from the staff of the Aluminum Company of America. Discusses the sources and production of aluminum, and, in detail, its products, their fabrication and their uses, together with much related matter concerning aluminum."
+ Pratt p20 autumn '30
St Louis 28:212 S '30

EGGEBRECHT, AXEL. Pilgrim to the abyss; tr. from the German by M. M. Bozman. 288p $2.50 King, A.H. [7s 6d Methuen]
30-5236

"One may consider this work by a young German author either a sociological treatise, a historical novel or an allegory in which the vividly drawn characters merely serve to project the idea of the utter meaninglessness of life and the absurdity of human institutions and aspirations." (N Y Times) The novel is said to follow very closely the life of a flesh-and-blood Russian princess, a near relative of the royal family.

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger
Books p14 Ap 20 '30 380w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 280w

"He has written a true novel, a powerful and dramatic story of human lives acted out before colorful, shifting backgrounds. . . It could well have been made longer. Some of the incidents are so lightly sketched in that they seem pointless, and the end of the story is weakly executed. The author descends, after the manner of certain biographers, to catch up loose ends, disposing of them as speedily as possible. Perhaps he was not at all times sure whether he was writing biography or fiction. But a strong novel has resulted from his method, and Herr Eggebrecht will bear watching." F. T. Marsh
+ — Nation 131:46 Jl '30 600w

"The present translation introduces to the English-reading public an important young German writer and poet, Axel Eggebrecht, still in his early thirties, who has written in 'Pilgrim to the Abyss' one of the finest pre-revolutionary and revolutionary novels about Russia that we have been so far privileged to see." Pierre Loving

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 700w

"The philosophic implications will doubtless attract only a few of Eggebrecht's readers in this country, where the cult of pessimism has few followers; but the sociological interest and, more especially, the stirring adventure make this novel by a former Communist one with a wide popular appeal. Mr. Bozman's translation deserves a word of commendation: it is exceptionally fine."

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 9 '30 600w

"While some of its most vivid scenes approach dangerously near to melodrama, they never leave the realm of the credible. The story is told with a youthful zest and fire; the style is nevertheless firm and clear, swift in movement, and wholly unlike the dominant type of German novel. It is, on the contrary, almost French in its directness and pungency." Faith Maris

+ N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 550w

"There is, in 'Pilgrim to the Abyss,' little suspense, little characterization (save of the princess herself), and no plot. Minor characters crowd in on each other's heels and then disappear ingloriously. Episodes occur in chaotic confusion; they are neither developed nor articulated to their greatest possible effectiveness. Yet the narrative as a whole is saved from being dull by the figure of the tragic princess—a princess whom neither governments, nor men, nor evil itself could quite conquer. A magnificent woman—and a woman most profoundly to be pitied!"

Sat R of Lit 6:969 Ap 19 '30 300w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 320w

"A clever and entertaining piece of fiction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Ap 10 '30 340w

EHRENBURG, IL'IA GRIGOR'EVICH. Extraordinary adventures of Julio Jurenito and his disciples; tr. by Usick Vanzler. 399p $2 Covici

30-19512

"[The fantastic adventures] of Julio, exiled Mexican dreamer and prophet of destruction, of his seven cosmopolitan apostles and their wanderings with the Master about Europe before, during and after the war. Julio's ferocious philosophy is limitless nihilism and anarchy. His followers embrace his faith, in theory, with fanatical ardor, but like their beloved Master, when the test comes, they are singularly harmless and ineffectual. They journey haphazardly from one continental country to another, a weirdly assorted crew: M. Delhaie, French pacifist and hack; Alexei, a Tolstoyan; Mr. Cool, pious American financier; Ercole, an Italian illiterate; Schmidt, a German realist; Poet Ehrenbourg himself, who writes this narrative of the Master's final eight years of life, and Aisha, a Senegalese black."—N Y World

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

Books p3 Je 22 '30 550w

"A fantastic and intermittently entertaining legend of a contemporary prophet and his crazy crew of disciples. . . Jurenito himself is a strangely fascinating characterization."

+ N Y Times p7 Jl 6 '30 250w

"There is a wealth of gorgeous satire and fantastic comedy in this hilarious tale." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 200w

"A brilliantly and powerfully written 'satirical delusion,' an emulation of the immortal Candide, entirely lacking in Candide's subtlety. . . Continual and inept references to the sexual impulse in the human relationship and the animal kingdom prove so distasteful that it is hard for one to rise above this predomination to the appreciation of a narrative well written. One might feel more kindly toward the arguments presented if they weren't so lewdly and salaciously thrust down one's throat." Bernice Whittemore

— + Outlook 155:470 Jl 23 '30 350w

"Parts of his book are excellent satire—biting, fresh, derisive. Other parts, including much of the extravagant nonsense which binds the narratives together, fail pretty flat. The book is worth reading for what is good, and superlatively good, in it. But it is uneven in execution, and there are many episodes we should willingly have done without. . . In Mr. Cool and M. Delhaie Ehrenbourg has produced two figures of Gargantuan proportions and great satiric strength. It is unfortunate for the effectiveness of his book that it is so loosely knit." Clinton Simpson

— + Sat R of Lit 7:7 Jl 26 '30 650w

EHRENBURG, IL'IA GRIGOR'EVICH. Love of Jeanne Ney; tr. from the Russian by Helen Chrouschoff Matheson. 388p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Davies]

30-4489

Against a background of soviet Russia and Paris, the idyllic love story of Jeanne Ney, daughter of a French consul in Russia, and Andrew Lobott, a young Communist, moves thru a tragic and ironic course. Andrew, performing his duty as a soviet official, kills Jeanne's father. The lovers are separated, Jeanne going back to Paris to her uncle's house. Andrew, on his way from Paris to Toulon, stops to see Jeanne. On the night they spend together in a dingy old hotel, Jeanne's uncle, who runs an unsavory detective bureau, is murdered by the villain of the story, Halibieff, who, jealous of Andrew, leaves clues so incriminating that Andrew is arrested for the murder, and in the course of time executed.

Booklist 26:280 Ap '30

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

+ Books p3 Ja 26 '30 900w

"The swashbuckle of the melodrama casts doubt on the seriousness of the theme; one is inclined to think that this is nothing but a high-toned and pretentious adventure story. Yet the effect of the pain and the tragedy cannot be entirely discounted, and there is freshness in the use of this spy-story technique for deep sorrow and heroic defeat." L. T.

+ — New Repub 62:27 F 19 '30 180w

"As art, except to the most thorough-paced fatalist, 'The Love of Jeanne Ney' fails to reach a level it might have achieved. Its moral conflict is really neither true nor deep; its characters are not inwardly developed by its action so far as they should to be really moving (Jeanne's growth seems, on mature reflection, conventionalized); its many talents are not centripetal; they are genuine and varied, but ununified. This is a real pity. But it is unfair to emphasize this failure too much. It is important to repeat that here, often, is masterly story-telling, creative imagination and a mind that is almost always interesting."

+ — N Y Times p6 F 16 '30 650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p14 Ja 29 '30 500w

"It is difficult to give, in a word, much notion of a talent so vivid and versatile, so fluid and flamelike; of a writer who can be as concrete and even topical as you please, and in his style is always simple and restrained, and yet so completely makes his own world. The fact that Ehrenbourg is a Russian Jew, and has been boiled about in a whirlwind of the Revolution and flung out on dry land in Paris, in a double sense a man without a country, and the usual limiting and inhibiting roots, may have something to do with it. The artistic result, in any case, is of unusual quality and unusual interest." Arthur Ruhl

+ Sat R of Lit 6:669 Ja 25 '30 850w

Times [London] Lit Sup p45 Ja 16 '30 300w

EIKER, MATHILDE. My own far towers. 413p $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-25821

Lucy Vale wants to be an artist, but is forced to remain at home and care for an ailing mother. At the same time her friend, Margaret Delprat, talented as a violinist, is taken abroad by her mother and pushed into a musical career—which she hates and longs to escape. So Lucy, watching Margaret's effort to escape fame, gradually becomes reconciled to her drab life and at forty marries an early lover.

"In Miss Eiker's first two books there was a burning resentment at the lot of womankind, which animated the story with an unusual force and effectiveness. Here, however, that emotion seems to have become outworn. A conventionalized protest escapes in situations and verbiage, and the characters, to me, are left flat and lifeless. Despite realistic strokes of the quality which gave such promise to Miss Eiker's earlier work, 'My Own Far Towers' is to me as incredible as it is dreary."

— Books p10 O 5 '30 600w

"The middle class tragedy of self-sacrifice has been done over and over; Miss Eiker hardly improves the genre. A prolixity in the sentences, an obviousness in exposition, a flatness of analysis, continually slow up the advancing story. Even these defects, added to a stiff-kneed dialogue, cannot discount Miss Eiker's knowledge of her milieu. Lucy is the accumulation of a thousand details." Vincent McHugh

— + N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 220w

"Mathilde Eiker has painted a number of excellent characters here. The novel is capably written, the narrative well plotted. Nevertheless, the book is somewhat dull. Why? Probably because we have another of those realistic novels which never rise to any heights of feeling or vision, which have no theme of significance, no passion of significance. It is life—yes—life which we recognize all too well; it is pain and monotonous endurance, but it reaches no pitch either of excitement or of suffering."

— + N Y Times p18 N 9 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"'My Own Far Towers' is shorter than 'Mrs. Mason's Daughters,' and easier reading; but it has the same faultless and minute observation, the same cleareyed perception of what is, not what ought to be; the same pervasive irony." Elmer Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 7:284 N 1 '30 600w

EINSTEIN, LEWIS DAVID. Roosevelt: his mind in action. 259p il $3 Houghton [10s 6d Murray, J.]

B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore 30-23873

A new appraisal and interpretation of Theodore Roosevelt, in which the author attempts to penetrate into the springs and action of the man's mind. Dividing his study of Roosevelt's career into three parts entitled Struggle, Victory, Adversity, Mr Einstein analyzes the reasons for his achievements, appraises his foreign policy, compares his abilities with those of Woodrow Wilson, and attempts to explain Roosevelt's change in attitude during the World war.

Reviewed by F. R. Dulles

Bookm 72:320 N '30 400w

"Not only is Mr. Einstein's approach admirably impartial and analytical, but he has a happy gift of characterization and of turning a phrase that gives a real distinction to his volume." H. S. Commager

+ Books p18 N 23 '30 1000w

"Mr. Einstein has certain very positive opinions about the personality of Roosevelt which he desires to state with equal positiveness. So he reviews the already well-known facts of the Colonel's life for this express purpose. The resulting book is interesting in proportion as one shares Mr. Einstein's conceptions. But it is very well written and worth reading." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 6 '30 1000w

"Much information and experience have gone into the making of Mr. Einstein's book. He knew and admired Roosevelt. Despite a possible feeling on the reader's side that the character interpretation is sometimes dogmatic, the book is worth reading."

+ Christian Science Monitor p9 N 15 '30 500w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 64:354 N 12 '30 550w

"Had Mr. Einstein dug into original sources his book would be more valuable. He was, however, content to read the official biography, the autobiography, the Lodge letters, the Spring-Rice letters and one or two other books. Most of these are the very works which any one attempting to view Roosevelt impartially would weigh in the balance. There are errors which lead one to wonder just how carefully Mr. Einstein read even this sparse material. . . Mr. Einstein has apparently never read the study offered by Dr. Hill a year or so ago which disproves the Roosevelt version of the Venezuela trouble in 1902. He repeats this version, as set forth by Dr. Thayer in his similarly hurried life written several years ago." Henry Pringle

— N Y Times p13 N 30 '30 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:12 N '30 100w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

"Mr. Einstein gives one a real sense of his vitality, his courage, and his indomitable will-power, and if he goes less deeply into aspects of Roosevelt's character which are more subtle and more important, and though one feels that his final estimate of Roosevelt's place in history is at once premature and extravagant, his book remains an excellent and, in many ways, illuminating contribution to the study of Roosevelt's life."

+ — Spec 145:946 D 13 '30 650w

"Mr. Einstein contributes little or nothing that is new in the way of documentary material and makes no pretense of so doing, but devotes his book, which is of modest proportion, to an analysis of Roosevelt's mental processes which is often penetrating and not without some substantial criticism."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 20 '30 550w

Reviewed by Richard Hooker

Yale R n s 20:385 winter '31 380w

EINZIG, PAUL. Bank for international settlements. 2d ed 242p $4 (10s 6d) Macmillan

332.1 Bank for international settlements [30-17166]

"The proposed Bank for International Settlements, known as B. I. S., is just now being organized at Basle under the presidency of Mr. Gates W. McGarrah, who in order to give this service recently resigned as federal reserve agent for New York. In his introduction Mr. Einzig points out that the B. I. S. is not designed as a superior authority for central banks any more than the League of Nations is meant to be a superior state over the existing states." —Am Econ R

"This book will be welcomed by many business men and economists as a straightforward, easily understandable and satisfactory explanation of the workings of the proposed Bank for International Settlements." H. E. Fisk

+ Am Econ R 20:323 Je '30 1250w

Booklist 27:50 O '30

Books p12 Jl 6 '30 120w

Current Hist 32:1032 Ag '30 80w

"Dr. Einzig combines in a rare degree three separate gifts—he understands the technicalities of what goes on in the City, he can explain it in language intelligible to the ordinary reader, and he can comment on it in terms which are interesting and enlightening to the academic economist." D. H. Robertson

+ Nation and Ath 47:56 Ap 12 '30 250w

"In a series of useful appendices, the various documents which have led up to the creation of the Bank, including the Statutes, are reprinted; and the book takes largely the form of a commentary on these documents. It is exceedingly handy to have these together; and Dr. Einzig's comments, while they are not very conclusive, are probably as good as can be made at this stage, when no one really knows how the Bank will develop or which of the powers conferred upon it will prove to be actually important in its working."

+ New Statesman 34:576 F 8 '30 800w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

"Much depends upon public opinion and Dr Einzig's book, the first and only one on the subject, is invaluable. It is short, clear, neither too hot nor too cold, contains appendices reproducing all the relevant official documents, and should be widely read."

+ Sat R 149:170 F 8 '30 600w

EIPPER, PAUL. Animal children; with thirty-two portrait studies after original photographs by Hedda Walther; tr. by Frederick H. Martens. 71p il $2 Viking press

591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior. Photography of animals 30-27990

The author of Animals Looking at You has made the acquaintance of all kinds of baby animals, played with them and made them his friends. Hedda Walther has supplied the illustrations—charming portrait studies after original photographs.

"Paul Eipper has caught in 'Animal Children' the most important characteristic of wild animals, their personalities. To any one knowing or loving animals the reading of these exquisite little stories will bring back vivid memories of past joys and sorrows in the company of four-footed playmates. . . To read 'Animal Children' is to make new friends—lovely, graceful, tragic little friends who have been cooped up for man's enjoyment."

+ Books p23 N 9 '30 150w

"Those who have read Paul Eipper's 'Animals Looking at You' know how profound is his love for wild animals and how great his knowledge of them. That same affection and intimate acquaintance are manifest in his stories of the baby baboons, pumas, elephants, seals, tigers and other animals that he has played with, cared for, watched grow up."

+ N Y Times p22 N 2 '30 320w

EIPPER, PAUL. Human children; with thirty-two portrait studies after original photographs by Hedda Walther; tr. by Frederick H. Martens. 70p $2 Viking press

136.75 Children. Photography of children 30-28165

Paul Eipper, who has made charming studies of animal children, now writes about the beauty and fascination of very small human children. Mr Eipper has observed the behavior of these children of whom he talks from a wise and sympathetic viewpoint; and Hedda Walther has pictured them delightfully.

"Although the author tells many entertaining stories of children, his own and others, and writes interestingly of the physical training of infants, the volume as a whole is less engaging than the other [Animal children] and its text shows often a strong tinge of sentimentality."

+ — N Y Times p23 N 2 '30 100w

"It is a pleasant change to find a book concerned with children written by a keen and reverently sympathetic observer who is not afraid of the subjective, even affectionate, point of view, nor of enjoying children as he finds them. . . The numerous delightful photographs in the book, beautifully taken by Hedda Walther, not only help the author to make clearer some detail, but also to emphasize the fact that esthetic pleasure is frequently stimulated in the fortunate observer of children. . . The critical will detect a trace of sentiment in the Victorian sense of the word in this book, which may, however, for the most part be characterized as delightful." R. W. Washburn

+ Sat R of Lit 7:327 N 15 '30 350w

EKREM, SELMA. Unveiled; the autobiography of a Turkish girl. 320p il $3 Washburn

B or 92 Turkey—Social life and customs 31-26044

"Selma Ekrem belongs to one of the most distinguished families in Turkey, and in recent years has been one of the leaders among the new women of Turkey."—Boston Transcript

Bookm 72:v O '30 50w

"The real charm of the book unfolds in the delightful intimacy of Turkish household life, to which the reader is hospitably admitted. . . Woven into the pattern of life in old Stamboul, the servants add an appealing note to the child memories of Selma Ekrem." Gertrude Emerson

+ Books p4 O 5 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p5 N 26 '30 700w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS. Ash-Wednesday. 29p $1.50 Putnam

811 30-25658

"'Ash Wednesday' is, as its title indicates, a poem of repentance and renunciation. Its various sections are a ritualistic chanting working through the personal desire for oblivion toward some universal statement of the meaning of death in life, and life in death. . . 'Ash Wednesday' is a difficult poem, although simply enough written. . . Its difficulty is due to the fact that the poet asks one to understand not only Catholic symbolism and medieval literary expression, but a personal symbolism also."—N Y Times

Reviewed by E. L. Walton

Nation 131:155 Ag 6 '30 1100w

"In 'Ash Wednesday'—the ironic intent has completely vanished from the poems of Mr. Eliot, and with it perhaps the superficial qualities that made him appeal to the younger generation. He is now out for what is known as 'beauty,' and 'beauty' is less in request than wit. The six short poems that make up 'Ash Wednesday' are an elaborate study in pure form; and to my mind contain many passages of great loveliness. The main difficulty I have in facing this remarkable poem is that I do not understand what it is all about." Francis Birrell

Nation and Ath 47:292 My 31 '30 700w

"I am made a little tired by hearing Eliot, only in his early forties, present himself as an 'agèd eagle' who asks why he should make the effort to stretch his wings. Yet 'Ash-Wednesday,' though less brilliant and intense than Eliot at his very best, is distinguished by most of the qualities which made his other poems remarkable: the exquisite phrasing in which we feel that every word is in its place and that there is not a word too much; the metrical mastery. . . And above all, that peculiar honesty' in 'exhibiting the essential sickness or strength of the human soul' of which Eliot has written in connection with Blake and which still gives him a place among those upon whose words we reflect with most interest and whose tones we remember longest." Edmund Wilson

+ — New Repub 64:24 Ag 20 '30 950w

"The whole poem is remote and sad. It has, of course, Eliot's beauty of rhythm and sound. It is not the poem of a religious teacher, but

ELIOT, T. S.—Continued
of an intellectual man who would wish to renounce any intellectual conception of life and finds the task very difficult." E. L. Walton
N Y Times p9 Jl 20 '30 700w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl
Outlook 156:590 D 10 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

"He will never be capable of forming a slovenly concept or judgment: his present poems are distinguished by lucid statement and well-reasoned concision. They contain passages of subtle beauty. But of the impact of profound conviction and the absolute creative certitude of which the early poems partook, one finds little here." M. D. Z.
+ — Poetry 36:336 S '30 450w

Reviewed by John Piper
Sat R 150:600 N 8 '30 230w

"The most distinguished volume of poetry that has come to us recently is 'Ash Wednesday.'" W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 7:249 O 18 '30 600w

Reviewed by Richard Church
Spec 145:170 Ag 2 '30 70w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p452 My 29 '30 700w

ELKIND, HENRY BYRON, ed. Healthy mind; mental hygiene for adults, by Joseph Jastrow and others. 269p $3.50 Greenberg

131 Mental physiology and hygiene 29-28960

Adapted from a course of lectures entitled Keeping mentally fit, given under the auspices of the Massachusetts department of education the book is an attempt to introduce the main principles of mental hygiene to readers with little knowledge of psychology. Contents: The child is father of the man, by D. A. Thom; Do we Americans really live? by J. J. Walsh; Fatigue, worry and the "blues," by K. M. Bowman; Emotion and intellect in adult life, by T. V. Moore; Normal and abnormal fear, by Abraham Myerson; The job and mental health, by V. V. Anderson; "Nerves"—their meaning in our lives, by E. L. Richards; Keeping mentally fit, by Joseph Jastrow.

"The book is uneven in style, unsystematic in arrangement, and inconsistent in statement, though never crudely or excessively so. Even if it does exhibit defects, the book is also interesting, informative, and indubitably of value. Much of the range of mental hygiene is ably and acceptably presented. . . It is a valuable contribution to one of the most important of modern health problems. Sanitarians can read it and recommend it with profit." J. A. Tobey
+ — Am J Pub Health 20:681 Je '30 320w

Reviewed by S. W. Fernberger
Ann Am Acad 149:sup203 My '30 320w
Booklist 26:260 Ap '30

"This book is one of the most practical, common sense and at the same time authoritative applications of psychiatry to everyday life that has come to our attention. It really gets somewhere and shows one how to have a healthy mind." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 4 '30 400w
St Louis 28:201 S '30
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 200w

"Most of this seems to me sound, so far as it goes. The chief fact about it is that it preaches the Babbittian or Main Street morality: 'Stand pat. Don't be radical; don't make a disturbance of any kind. Be quiet, orderly and law-abiding.' This is good advice for a certain fraction of mankind—the obstreperous, complaining folks But for the complacent, lazy-minded, imitative people—who are certainly not rare in America, it is a poisonous doctrine—or would be if it reached them." R. C. Cabot, M.D.
— Survey 63:596 F 15 '30 450w

ELLINGER, ESTHER PARKER. Thomas Chatterton, the marvelous boy; to which is added The exhibition, a personal satire. 75p $2 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [8s 6d Oxford]

B or 92 Chatterton, Thomas 30-14107

A brief psychographical study of the young poet whose life and death were both tragic, together with an interpretation of his poetry.

"This commentator's chief contribution consists in presenting the plausible conclusion that Chatterton was not insane, as others have held, but a neurotic with an inferiority complex who sought an escape—which he found in the world of his imagined Rowley—and compensations in the pride and arrogance with which he excoriated his elders in his verse satires." Harry Salpeter
Bookm 71:453 Jl '30 280w

"Miss Ellinger has written an interesting study of an interesting subject. Chatterton's achievements may be of small value, but of his genius there can be no question."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 250w

"The personal tragedy of 'the marvelous boy' with the poetic neurosis will always remain more interesting than his literary forgeries. The present study covers both with aptness and at not too great length." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 50w
N Y Times p5 Je 22 '30 250w
St Louis 28:272 N '30

"Although closer acquaintance is somewhat disappointing, one finishes his slender volume hoping it may be a preliminary sketch for a full-length study; or, if Miss Ellinger has nothing of the sort in mind, that it may provoke another student to such work. . . Miss Ellinger writes extremely well. Her prose runs easily and clearly." H. K.
+ — Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 5 '31 750w

"The sketchy summary of the poet's life on which this inquirer bases her Adler-Freudian conclusions leaves, from a scholar's point of view, much to be desired. . . An inferiority complex may perhaps shed some light on 'the marvellous boy' never (so it would seem) publishing a single work under his own name, but it will not unravel the composition of 'Narva and Mored' on May 2, 1770, while 'The Exhibition' was in the making."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p625 Jl 31 '30 1000w

ELLINGWOOD, ALBERT RUSSELL, and
2 COOMBS, WHITNEY. Government and railroad transportation. 642p $4 Ginn

385 Railroads and state—United States. Interstate commerce. Railroad law 30-7729

A textbook which presents, by the case method, the subject of government regulation of railroads, in which the student "reads for himself the statutory provisions which deal with a particular situation and, by analysis, meditation, and simplification, builds up his conception of their meaning."

Reviewed by H. R. Trumbower
Am Econ R 20:729 D '30 320w

"This is by far the most comprehensive collection of readings to be found on the subject." H. L. E.
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:794 Ag '30 180w

ELLIOTT, MRS GRACE LOUCKS. Understanding the adolescent girl. 134p $1.25 Holt

136.7 Adolescence. Girls 30-9007

A book for those who seek to understand the everyday problems of the normal adolescent girl. It is a book for parents, advisers, group leaders, teachers, and girls themselves. For many girls would like to understand themselves, and this book will help toward self-understanding. Mrs Elliott frankly assumes that a book for leaders of adolescent girls is a proper book for the girls themselves.

Booklist 26:339 Je '30

"The book is an exact statement and careful analysis of most of the problems of the adolescent girl and should be useful both to the girl herself and to those adults who wish to help her." E. M. Allen

+ New Repub 63:53 My 28 '30 580w

St Louis 28:201 S '30

Reviewed by Halle Schaffner

Survey 64:200 My 15 '30 250w

ELLIOTT, VIRGINIA, and STONG, PHILIP D. Shake 'em up! a practical handbook of polite drinking. 80p il $1 Brewer

663.8 Liquors 30-23642

A book of cocktail recipes, and directions for making the canapes, sandwiches and other dainties to serve at evening parties.

Bookm 72:xv O '30 100w

"It's a sprightly performance in recognition of an established function—gay and unrestrained in its spoofing. It imparts a pleasant glow, entailing no after-effects."

+ Books p23 O 26 '30 230w

"'Shake 'Em Up!' is not only chock-full of recipes for food and drink but is spiced with wit and illustrated by Herb Roth. . . The book is simply packed with information. A complete commissary is outlined for the harassed hostess, with suggestions about salted almonds and caviarettes and pates de foies gras and cheeses." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p9 S 2 '30 750w

ELLIOTT, WILLIAM HENRY HATCHARD. Plain man looks at life; addresses broadcast from London. 76p 80c Morehouse [2s Mowbray]

252 Sermons

In these ten sermons, which were originally broadcasted, Canon Elliott talks about the formation of character; the need of love and sincerity, the beauty of home life and other aspects of self-discipline and improvement.

"The Rev. Canon Elliott's attitude to life, as his profession demands, is always didactic, and even religious; but in these ten addresses, which have already been broadcast to thousands of 'listeners,' he does his best, you feel, to put off the bonds of clericalism and to adapt himself quite simply to the needs of the plain man, and the plain woman." P. M.

+ Nation and Ath 47:737 S 13 '30 220w

"These short statements on character and conduct are excellent through and through, and a man must be very good indeed who would not feel better for reading them. We commend them heartily to the clergy as examples of the kind of sermons that attract congregations to listen."

+ Sat R 149:698 My 31 '30 100w

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Man and woman; a study of secondary and tertiary sexual characters. [rev and enl ed] 495p il $5 Houghton

136.1 Sex. Woman. Man 29-23074

"Published in 1894, the result of twelve years' investigation, 'Man and Woman' has been translated into many languages and passed through many editions. The present volume has been more thoroughly revised than its predecessors and represents the mature and perhaps final judgment of Havelock Ellis as a man of seventy upon the patient research of his earlier years, the cornerstone of facts upon which so much of his later writings were based. This book is essentially a collection of facts concerned with the differences between men and women, and contains (now as at its first publication) the most comprehensive systematic analysis of human secondary sexual characteristics assembled in a single volume."—Sat R of Lit

Boston Transcript p7 D 14 '29 600w

"A remarkable fund of pertinent information, catalogued under anatomical, physiological, and psychological headings, has been selected from a diverse and contradictory literature, criticized and evaluated by a man who is familiar not only with the facts of anatomical and pathological museums but with the recent investigations of clinical medicine into the glands of internal secretion and the hypotheses of psychoanalytical psychology. It is a sign of the extraordinary general interest of our own social group that this book will be welcomed by the lay reader, even if he will be compelled by its factual character to read it in small doses." A. L. Barach

+ Sat R of Lit 6:775 Mr 1 '30 1600w

ELLSBERG, EDWARD. Thirty fathoms deep. 266p il $2 Dodd

30-18863

Commander Ellsberg, deep-sea diver and author of On the Bottom, writes this adventurous tale of the search by Bob Porter and his uncle, for the treasure-laden Santa Cruz, sunk more than three hundred years ago off the coast of Peru.

"His essay into fiction is creditable, for he sticks to his last and builds an interesting plot around his extensive knowledge of diving operations."

+ Bookm 71:xi Ag '30 150w

"It is a refreshing experience to realize that there are men who can do things and write about them with an appeal that grips the attention. It is no mean feat to describe the locating of sunken gold by the use of spherical trigonometry and keep your reader's anticipation whetted keen." D. C. L.

+ Books p8 Ag 3 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 300w

"A more thrilling tale of undersea adventure it would be very difficult to find. One may have a slight feeling that Bob, the amateur, is credited with a little too much forethought and ingenuity in sinking the pirate ship, but it is nevertheless one of the finest and most engrossing adventure tales presented for boys' reading in some time." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 S 6 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"It is a good yarn with lots of excitement, the best parts being those which describe the work of the divers and what life looks like to them thirty fathoms down." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 130w

"Interesting and well written, this is a book which will appeal to boys from 12 to 16 and to older readers who enjoy sea and adventure stories."

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 31 '30 200w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Jl 18 '30 680w

"Out of his diving experience, Commander Ellsberg is able to furnish his naive adventure story with much technical detail. And out of memories of his childhood reading, he has provided it with a wealth of incident." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:467 Jl 23 '30 150w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"This book is an adventure story of very high order, in which deep-sea diving, its technique, its perils, its personnel, play a dramatic part, entwined with Spanish gold, pirates, and plenty of gore." John Carter

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1178 Jl 5 '30 320w

ELM, IENAR EWALD. Weather and why. 109p il $2.50 McKay

551.5 Meteorology. Weather. Aeronautics 29-29691

"An aviator's presentation of aeronautical meteorology. It is a suitable text-book for ground schools and home study, and gives a

ELM, I. E.—Continued
non-technical and simple account of the fundamentals of weather, its causes and forecast, emphasizing those elements that are of particular importance to pilots."—Subtitle

Booklist 27:15 S '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:8 Ja '30
Pratt p15 summer '30
St Louis 28:98 Ap '30

ELTON, OLIVER. C. E. Montague; a memoir. 335p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran [12s 6d Chatto & W.]
B or 92 Montague, Charles Edward 30-9133

Professor Elton's biography of the great English journalist, for years the leader writer of the Manchester Guardian, is written with deep appreciation but with a reticence befitting its subject. Many of Montague's letters are included and almost half the book is given to his life in the World war. He entered the army as a private at the age of forty-seven, and having proved himself a soldier of immense courage returned to his newspaper work with freshly awakened powers, which he turned to novel writing.

Booklist 26:354 Je '30
Reviewed by Douglas Bush
Bookm 71:220 Ap '30 450w

"This is as modest a memoir of a remarkably modest man as Montague himself would have desired. It is, moreover, competent and complete, although never essaying finally to measure the worth of the great journalist whose life it records, who ranks high as a critic and as a novelist. At every point the effort has been to let Montague through his letters and his published works betray—as he would have put it—his real self to the public." O. G. Villard
+ Books p3 Mr 23 '30 850w

"This biographical memoir attains to a degree of interest seldom reached by works of fiction. C. E. Montague, the hero of it, is a character never to be forgotten." E. B. H.
+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 18 '30 420w
Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

"Professor Elton's admirable memoir gives just the background for which the large audience that delighted in 'The Right Place' or searched its heart and conscience over 'Rough Justice' was looking. It excels where such memoirs often fail; in restraint, in selection, in balance and justice of tone. . . Mr. Montague's friends will rejoice that his character and his genius have now been interpreted to the world by so admirable a critic." J. L. Hammond
+ Nation and Ath 46:110 O 19 '29 1200w
New Statesman 33:786 O 5 '29 550w

"The outstanding impressions of this memoir are twofold: what a charming personality C. E. Montague must have been, and with what a sureness of touch and understanding sympathy has Oliver Elton written. That Montague, and again Montague must be the tenor of this review, is, perhaps, the best tribute to the almost faultless prose of the author. Losing himself in his friend he has drawn for us, finely and vividly, him whom he loved." B. B. O'Reilly
+ N Y Times p5 My 18 '30 700w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 900w

"Dr. Elton's record of the life and collection of the letters has just the severity, the lack of fuss, and the simplicity of statement that befit the subject. The exhilaration of the man is there in all its vividness, and the book is quick with Montague's leaping spirit."
+ Sat R 148:386 O 5 '29 700w

"Professor Elton disclaims any attempt at a 'full-dress criticism' of Montague's style. This is a pity in a way, for few men of letters are better equipped to do what Professor Elton seems to have regarded as unnecessary. The memoir, admirably put together, nevertheless throws floods of light on a career which in its main facts will be new to most readers."
+ Spec 143:413 S 28 '29 1100w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 13 '29 400w

"The work is a model of its type. Prof Elton effaces himself completely, leaving Montague's story to tell itself in his letters and diaries and in the reminiscences of his friends. When none of these are available the narrative is continued directly and simply, everything being subdued to a clear and honest portrait." H. K.
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 1650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p733 S 26 '29 1400w

ELVESTAD, SVEN CHRISTOPHER SVENDSON. Case of Robert Robertson; tr. by Agnes Platt. 241p $2 Knopf [7s 6d Lane]
30-16616

"This is in some ways a double-barreled yarn. Robertson is at once detective and criminal. As the latter he preys not on honest citizens but on criminals themselves; as the former it is to his advantage to ferret out the perpetrators of crimes so that he may feather his own nest. A certain Dr. Gravenhag is found murdered. His face is smashed in, and identification is possible only through a cross-shaped scar on his arm. The police follow several clues, and then comes the news that the same Dr. Gravenhag has been found murdered in a Berlin hotel. Here the trails of the police and Robert Robertson cross, and the amazing mystery is at last unriddled."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 29 '30 150w

"A nicely contrived unorthodox melodrama. Pleasantly cold-blooded, smoothly written, it is easily one of the season's best." Dashiell Hammett
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 50w
N Y Times p18 Jl 13 '30 100w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:550 Ag 6 '30 80w

"The method used—alternative long statements by the author and by Robert Robertson—is a bit confusing, but the technique is excellent, with a slightly foreign flavor that makes it even more interesting."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1164 Je 28 '30 180w

"It is quite a good average mystery story: there is originality in the conception of the character of Robertson himself, the solver of the problem, and the central idea, which consists in getting the same man apparently murdered twice over, is not lacking in ingenuity. But Mr Elvestad has still a good deal to learn from the best models in the matter of technique. He violates two of the fundamental rules for a good detective story—that the clues, while not obtruded, should all be available to the astute reader and that the artifice of disguise should be used sparingly, and hardly ever be pushed so far as to involve the complete personation of one character by another."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p58 Ja 23 '30 450w

ELWYN, ADOLPH. Yourself, inc.; the story of the human body. 320p il $3.50 Brentano's
611 Anatomy, Human. Physiology 30-9304

"In a simple and interesting way the body is compared to an empire and its functions to a central government whose interest is the welfare of the whole."—Publishers' Weekly

"The 70 illustrations are excellent. The drawings and photographs, if studied by themselves, will give the reader some clear conceptions as to cell division, cell structure, various kinds of membranes, the main routes of body transportation, etc." E. W. Stearn
+ Am J Pub Health 20:911 Ag '30 200w
Booklist 27:142 D '30
Bookm 71:lv Ag '30 120w

"A capital story of the human body. Professor Elwyn is not brisk, but he is entertaining and his story is, better still, a compelling one. For although he goes into the most minute details of the structure of the body tissues, he never loses sight of the larger structure, nor of their purposes and functions. He not only goes into cellular details which few have attempted, but he manages to keep them continually alive and in the story." Louis Johnson

+ Books p17 My 18 '30 550w

J Home Econ 22:689 Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by Ida Craven

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 150w

"A book on physiology of unusually graphic quality. With full and accurate knowledge of the human body, he is careful to keep his comparison with a political commonwealth precisely true in all its main features and to point out situations and processes in which there is divergence. The comparison is worked out so deftly, fully and vividly that the book is intensely interesting from beginning to end."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 13 '30 350w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

"The style in which the book is written is somewhat monotonous. It might have been lightened by illustrations, anecdote, or pleasantry, or a more narrative form. It is as severe as an elementary textbook of high school physiology which, indeed, it strongly resembles. A pious chapter looking forward into the blessed future completes the volume. Many statements in this closing chapter are both debatable and pernicious, typical of the shoddy ballyhooing of half-baked nostrums which has characterized the medical profession in the past twenty years. . . The book on the whole, however, seems to me to be competent." Logan Clendening

— + Sat R of Lit 7:22 Ag 2 '30 420w

Reviewed by Haven Emerson, M.D.

Survey 64:405 Ag 1 '30 200w

EMERSON, DAVID. Regency windows. 406p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Low]

30-12692

"Beginning in the clubrooms of London and the colleges of Cambridge in the eighteenth century, the story follows in graceful meandering fashion the changing fortunes of Richard Langley, younger son of a newly created Peer. Richard is destined by his mother to be Prime Minister. But although he introduces the Prince Regent in person, Mr. Emerson touches only the fringe of politics, telling just enough of the troubled story of the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars to keep us within historical bounds, and concerning himself rather with purely human misfortunes: Richard's marriage; the relations between his wife and mother; and the ill-effects of indecisive character on a man thrown into a society where only the trivial matters."—Spec

---

Books p15 S 21 '30 150w

"The subtle development of the story, its brilliant characterizations and descriptions, its epigrammatic tang, make it in itself memorable. It presents moreover a rarely vivid picture of the era which envisioned it." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 21 '30 850w

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 150w

"Whether the Whigs or the Tories got in a Prime Minister in 1814 is not of very great consequence to us here and now, but the individual problems, the dominant mother, the restless wife, the too-gentle husband are more absorbing, and Mr. Emerson in this, his first book, has done an excellent job with them."

+ N Y Times p8 My 11 '30 500w

"Except for some unfairness to Byron, he is true to history; and his leisurely narration is a welcome relief from the bare journalism of most modern novels."

+ Spec 144:342 Mr 1 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 80w

" 'Regency Windows' is a particularly promising piece of work."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p124 F 13 '30 300w

EMERSON, GERTRUDE. Voiceless India. 458p [2] il $4 Doubleday, Doran

915.4 India—Social life and customs. India—Social conditions 30-26046

The northern Indian peasant village of Five Trees is the scene of the author's study. Gertrude Emerson spent many months there in intimate contact with the lives of the people, observing the conditions of poverty, ignorance and superstition under which they eke out a bare day-to-day existence. "It is these villagers," she states, "poor, simple and illiterate, who cherish the traditions of centuries and keep alive the essentially Indian spirit."

"Many people will read Miss Emerson's book as a travel book; and they will find it an unusual specimen of that sort of literature, for it offers illuminating contacts with humanity rather than with scenery, pageants or antiquities. Others will read it for a greater or less degree of information concerning the economic, social, and, by inference, political life of India; and, they, too, will be well repaid. It is indeed one of the few popular books recently published on India that is worthy of wide reading. Miss Emerson has raised a clear voice for India's silent millions." W. N. Brown

+ Books p6 N 16 '30 850w

"Miss Emerson has by no means exhausted the possibilities of 'travel,' sociological, anthropological, or economic investigation, or color; but she has combined them all, meaning her book to reach a wide circle of readers and to give a clear, reliable, as well as readable, picture of village life. . . At a time when most of the popular books appearing on modern India treat their subject with 'passion and prejudice' or obfuscate issues by the use of bad logic, it is a relief to meet a study that is neither sensational nor sentimental, but on the contrary is objective, even if personal, and sober, thoughtful, honest, original; not propagandist but instructive." W. N. Brown

+ Nation 131:682 D 17 '30 550w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton

N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 220w

"In this adventure of hers Miss Emerson followed the examples of the true born travelers of that golden age of traveling when the pilgrims across the seas and mountains did not carry with them their own mental and physical habits,—the barricading aloofness of their own race and culture. . . I feel personally grateful to Miss Emerson for the masterly picture she has drawn of our pathetic village life so vivid and yet sober in its color,—the honest color of truth." Rabindrinath Tagore

+ Sat R of Lit 7:468 D 20 '30 850w

EMERSON, WILLIAM ROBIE PATTEN. Diagnosis of health. 272p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

613 Hygiene 30-2659

Dr Emerson, health director at Dartmouth college and president of Nutrition clinics, Inc., explains in the opening chapters on the diagnosis of health how to rate health intelligence and health habits. In the second division of his book, under training for physical fitness, he discusses nutrition in relation to health, lists the means of acquiring physical fitness, and illustrates his discussion by describing experiments in health measures as conducted under his supervision at Dartmouth college.

Reviewed by L. L. Meanes

Am J Pub Health 20:795 Jl '30 320w

Booklist 26:344 Je '30

J Home Econ 22:317 Ap '30 60w

"Dr. Emerson can speak with authority for he has been doing outstanding work for some years in the promotion of public and individual

EMERSON, W. R. P.—Continued
well-being. This book ought to have a very stimulating effect on the movement, for it is a sort of handbook that can be used both by those adults who want to rate themselves for health and direct their own health development and by those who are in charge of health work for children and adults in schools or communities."
+ N Y Times p29 F 23 '30 500w
Pratt p16 autumn '30
St Louis 28:136 My '30

Reviewed by W. J. Fishbein, M.D.
School R 38:630 O '30 350w

"School principals and even college presidents may well judge their performance of a public trusteeship for youth by the tests of fitness, the evidence of a well proportioned regime here offered. The Diagnosis of Health may easily become as common a family possession for early youth and young maturity as Dr. Holt's classic has been for the rearing of babies. It is a timely book, convincing in its evidence, and encouraging for the future." Haven Emerson, M.D.
+ Survey 63:725 Mr 15 '30 360w

EMERY, STEUART MACKIE. Romance by request. 320p $2 Macrae Smith co.
30-10465

An eccentric great-uncle left Stephen an enormous summer hotel, fully equipped—provided three romances ending in marriage resulted during his first summer's occupancy. Failing in this the hotel would go to an unknown, Mary Smith, of Denver. Stephen thought the proposition sounded very easy, but Mary Smith appeared on the scene and a lively summer ensued.

"A light and pleasing story that, slight as it is, could be made into a good musical comedy."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 230w

"Mr. Emery's story is as light, inconsequential and amusing as one could wish from this sort of plot."
+ N Y Times p19 Ap 13 '30 170w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 100w

EMIN, AHMED. Turkey in the world war. (Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of economics and hist. Economic and social hist. of the world war. Turkish ser.) 310p $3.25 Yale univ. press [15s Oxford]
940.3496 European war, 1914-1918—Turkey. Turkey—Politics and government. Turkey—Economic conditions. Turkey—Social conditions
30-9837

A study of Turkey—its political and economic situation, and its foreign relations—before, during, and after the World war. The author, as professor of statistics at Constantinople University and cultural leader of the Turkish nationalist movement, has had ample opportunity to view the war situation from the inside.

"To read this book is at once a disappointment and a satisfaction. It is a disappointment in the sense that of necessity it could picture only part of the situation. It is a satisfaction because the author reminds us of certain things about the Ottoman Empire which for Western readers need repeating. But it is a satisfaction for a more important reason. It succeeds in linking up the flowering of Turkish nationalism with its origin and growth. This is a contribution worthy of note." D. C. Blaisdell
+ Am Hist R 36:158 O '30 700w

"Dr. Emin finished graduate study at Columbia University in the year of the outbreak of the World War. During the four years of Turkey's participation he was a constant observer in the advantageous capacities of editor, war correspondent and Professor of Statistics in the University of Constantinople. In the latter capacity he was closely associated with the cultural leader, Zia Goek Alp. During the period of armistice, Dr. Emin was deported to Malta for twenty months, among more than a hundred Turkish officials and soldiers prominent during previous years. These active experiences, with subsequent years of reflection, have made him uniquely capable of setting forth the economic and social aspects of Turkish life during the war." A. H. Lybyer
+ Current Hist 33:xii N '30 900w

"Any book which pictures the Ottoman forest as well as the trees should receive a warm welcome in critical circles in America. This is such a book. Many of the trees were dead and decayed long ago, yet continued to dominate the horizon at a time when they should have been destroyed. But their portrayal by a Turk, who does not hesitate to call a tree a tree, should be a special recommendation of the work to Americans, who pride themselves on their ability to see the whole landscape. It is unfortunate that the volume contains no index, although there is a fairly complete bibliography." D. C. Blaisdell
+ — Hist Outlook 21:296 O '30 750w

"Ahmed Emin's book is valuable as a contribution to history, and, without seeming to do so, it pays a well-deserved compliment to the truly amazing devotion and endurance of those of the rank and file of the Turkish Army who stuck to the Colours to the hopeless and disastrous end."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p635 Ag 7 '30 1350w

ENCYCLOPAEDIA of the social sciences; ed. by Edwin R. A. Seligman and Alvin Johnson. 15v v 1-2 646;696p ea $7.50 (31s 6d); set $112.50 Macmillan
303 Social sciences—Dictionaries · (30-3962)

A scholarly and comprehensive work which interprets the social sciences in a broad sense to include many topics in related sciences. The articles are signed by writers of authority and have bibliographical notes. Brief biographies of persons whose work has attained social significance are included. It is planned to bring out the fifteen volumes of this great reference work at the rate of three volumes a year.

Reviewed by J. R. Commons
Am Econ R 20:256 Je '30 700w (Review of v 1)

"The Encyclopaedia aims frankly, one fears, too optimistically, to put an end to the existing confusion. . . Certain it is, however, that no scholar in the social sciences can ignore this series or can fail to derive from it an augmented appreciation of the unity of the whole field of the social disciplines and of their interrelations." R. H. Gabriel
+ — Am Hist R 35:285 Jl '30 1200w (Review of v 1)

"The general impression which this volume gives, in spite of minor defects, is distinctly favorable. It will be a useful vade mecum for every social scientist for many years to come." Ellsworth Faris
+ — Am J Soc 35:1112 My '30 950w (Review of v 1)
Booklist 26:262 Ap '30

"If the other volumes keep up to the high standard set by the first several hundred topics, the Encyclopaedia will be a monumental achievement of permanent credit to American scholarship. It should be added that the first volume has been printed with care and dignity." R. L. Buell
+ Books p2 F 9 '30 1450w (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by R. L. Buell
Books p12 Ja 4 '31 600w (Review of v 2)
Boston Transcript p5 Mr 8 '30 500w (Review of v 1)

"Most of the topics are handled succinctly, authoritatively, and without apparent bias. The same can hardly be said for the article on 'Alcohol,' the authors of which indulge themselves in obviously incomplete historical data and unsupported conclusions hostile to prohibition. On the whole, however, the editors are to be congratulated on the vision which prompted it and the scholarly technique which has brought this first installment of a notable and much needed work to a successful issue." A. J. Todd

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 600w (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 31:1044 Mr '30 230w (Review of v 1)

"For those who want formal proof, the participation of the Association of American Law Schools amply attests the relevance of this Encyclopaedia to the concern of lawyers. . . The library of every appellate court should possess this Encyclopaedia, if only as a standing symbol and reminder that law ultimately is an expression of economic, social, and psychological forces." Felix Frankfurter

+ Harvard Law R 43:1168 My '30 1150w (Review of v 1)

"This eagerly awaited Encyclopaedia, sponsored by ten associations in the field of the social sciences, is in its inception an American enterprise. In its contributors it is international. Certainly the work in its completion promises to be one of the most creditable, as it is one of the most ambitious, produced by American scholars." J. H. Tufts

+ Int J Ethics 41:234 Ja '31 850w (Review of v 1)

"Certainly no one conversant with the difficulties of encyclopedia-making will question lightly the judgment of conscientious editors either in choice of topics, in space assignment, or in the selection of writers. A complete appraisal must await the appearance of future volumes, but it is not too early to praise the boldness of the project, the breadth of the conception of social science that it embodies, and the speed and efficiency with which the work has been executed."

+ Nation 130:143 F 5 '30 700w (Review of v 1)

"Professor Boas's forty-page article on anthropology is reminiscent of the scholarly treatises that used to appear as articles in the old 'Britannica.' "

Nation 131:505 N 5 '30 100w (Review of v 2)

Reviewed by George Soule

New Repub 64:23 Ag 20 '30 1350w (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by Robert S. Lynd

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 1 '30 1000w (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by William MacDonald

N Y Times p6 F 2 '30 2050w (Review of v 1)

"Judging from the two volumes that have now appeared, no one need expect to find in this great work any special infusion of advocacy or propaganda. A distinguishing virtue of the undertaking thus far, aside from its sound scholarship and able editorial direction, is its catholicity." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p5 N 2 '30 500w (Review of v 2)

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 F 1 '30 950w (Review of v 1)

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:54 Je '30 (Review of v 1)

Pratt p9 summer '30 (Review of v 1)

"The editors are determined to keep the articles free from what Dr. Seligman calls 'scientific jargon' and most of those thus far printed are good examples of the employment of clear, simple English in the presentation of both facts and arguments." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:9 Mr '30 900w (Review of v 1)

St Louis 28:130 My '30 (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by C. H. Judd

School R 38:627 O '30 450w (Review of v 1)

Springf'd Republican p7e F 9 '30 1050w (Review of v 1)

"Volume 2 illustrates more fully than Volume 1 the comprehensive scheme on which the 'Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences' is based but intensifies doubts as to the utility of this scheme. The very comprehensiveness of the plan is, in fact, open to criticism, for there is some possibility that the work will approach a general encyclopedia without establishing any reason why subjects so diverse should be assembled in a partial encyclopedia. . . The real opportunity of a work of this type was to provide adequate and impartial treatment of social subjects which do not receive satisfactory treatment elsewhere. To some extent this opportunity has been realized; but the pages of the work seem needlessly cluttered up with short personal sketches."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 O 7 '30 320w (Review of v 2)

"The Encyclopedia will be both a dictionary and a handbook, but best of all this first volume is a history. With great wisdom the editors have given half its pages first to progressive studies of The Development of Social Thought and Institutions and secondly to background monographs, each by an authority." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 63:666 Mr 1 '30 1350w (Review of v 1)

Times [London] Lit Sup p288 Ap 3 '30 1050w (Review of v 1)

ENDORE, S. GUY. Man from Limbo. 296p $2 Farrar

30-25822

A novel within a novel. Harry Kling, a poor young man, fascinated by the idea of riches, tries to escape the narrow confines of his humdrum existence by reconstructing the imaginative life of an acquaintance, Redland, who had died. From a few scraps of paper found among Redland's effects, it appeared that he too had been absorbed in riches, and it was this fact which prompted Kling to work out his story.

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 72:338 N '30 250w

" 'The Man From Limbo' is excellent entertainment, a sublimated mystery story and tale of buried treasure. It is, moreover, rare in its humor and wit and delightful in its satire. But beyond these things it is written in a style at once simple and subtle, a fresh, vigorous style not without the strangeness and fascination of poetry."

+ Books p11 D 28 '30 300w

"A novel of ideas in which an element of suspense is maintained until we have reached the last page of the narrative. Mr. Endore flatters his readers by telling his story of vicarious adventure with no little show of intelligence and dispatch." Horace Gregory

+ Nation 131:628 D 3 '30 550w

"Mr. Endore possesses intelligence, lively ideas and an encyclopedic memory for stray facts; it is too bad that with such equipment he was unable to contrive a better book. . . It is a completely honest book and one that is, apart from a certain rhetorical manner of writing which is not impressive, above the average initial effort. Its chief shortcoming is that it is utterly lacking in characterization. Is it possible for a work of fiction to be successful artistically unless into at least one of the characters there has been pumped the breath of life? It seems doubtful." Howard Coxe

— + New Repub 64:304 O 29 '30 220w

"The handling of the double theme which merges into one has been very well managed. . . There is a little too much repetition, and the grotesque toothmania seems a little overdone, but the etchings of Harry Kling's childhood home, the irony of the contrast between people and circumstances as they are and as Harry Kling imagines them in his sentimental and benevolent dreaming, are clearly and sharply

ENDORE, S. G.—Continued
incised. 'The Man From Limbo' is an interesting piece of work, more than a little out of the ordinary."
+ — N Y Times p6 O 26 '30 550w

Reviewed by Jerome Mellquist
Sat R of Lit 7:424 D 6 '30 480w

ENGLAND, FREDERICK ERNEST. Kant's
² conception of God; a critical exposition of its metaphysical development, together with a tr. of the Nova dilucidatio; with a foreword by G. Dawes Hicks. 256p $3.50 Dial press [10s 6d Allen, G.]

193 Kant, Immanuel. God [30-10521]

"Dr. England here sets forth, in scholarly fashion and largely for critical purposes, the conclusions which Kant reached regarding God, along with the various changes which were evident in the philosopher's thought on the subject."—Boston Transcript

"Regarded as a comprehensive and adequate account of Kant's conception of God, the book is very one sided and incomplete. Judged, however, from the point of view of what is actually undertaken rather than of what one is led to expect from the title, it is, in many respects, an interesting and valuable study of important stages in the development of some of Kant's ideas." T. M. Greene
+ — Books p18 D 14 '30 950w
Boston Transcript p5 O 4 '30 500w

"Kant students (others keep off) will enjoy the close discussion even though they may doubt whether the emendations of Kant's inconsistences and difficulties are always advances. Dr. England knows the writings; does he always understand the man? May he not have tied himself to current Bridgewater treatises from which Kant, in no perverse mood at all, resolutely cut himself free? The translation of the Nova Dilucidatio is good; the Foreword by Professor Dawes Hicks as engaging as ever." E. F. Mettrick
Int J Ethics 40:560 Jl '30 260w

"His work constitutes in the main a just and even generous recognition of the philosopher's eminence. . . Nevertheless, this criticism of Dr. England's, effectively as it is introduced and developed, does not strike one as achieving the admittedly difficult task of shedding any fresh light upon the figure of the much-discussed philosopher."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p890 N 7 '29 1000w

ENSLIN, MORTON SCOTT. Ethics of Paul. 335p $4 Harper

225.92 Paul, Saint. Christian ethics 30-12630

The extent to which Paul's thought was molded by his struggles with moral problems is the theme of this volume. The four governing principles of Paul's doctrine as Dr Enslin treats them are: separate yourselves from all that would defile; be steadfast in all the conduct of life; thru love serve one another; and rejoice in the Lord always.

Reviewed by W. L. Sullivan
Books p15 Ag 3 '30 450w

"The professor of New Testament literature and exegesis in Crozer theological seminary has made in this careful work a new and too long neglected approach to the historical significance of the apostle to the Gentiles. Thousands of volumes have 'flooded the world with an ocean of verbiage' dealing with the Pauline theology with minute variations of interpretation, but attention to his moral teachings has been almost entirely lacking. Hence the value of an analytical treatment which meets the ideals of scholarship in its evidences of research and which at the same time should prove greatly useful to the preacher who is anxious to have the moral impact of Christianity felt upon the problems of our own day." Rodney McQuary
+ Christian Century 47:869 Jl 9 '30 630w

"Its contents are of intense interest and significance." S. B. Meeser
+ Crozer Q 7:412 Jl '30 50w

"A permanent addition to Pauline literature, as useful to the preacher as to the student."
+ Living Church 83:275 Je 21 '30 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p923 N 6 '30 320w

EPHESIAN, pseud. See Roberts, C. E. B.

ERLANDE, ALBERT, pseud. See Brandenburg, A. J.

ERNST, MORRIS LEOPOLD, and LORENTZ, PARE. Censored; the private life of the movie; [introd. by Heywood Broun]. 199p il $3.50 Cape

791.4 Moving pictures—Censorship 30-7027

"Lively examination of the absurdities of cinema censorship. Censorship, Messrs. Ernst and Lorentz warn you, is, when practiced by the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kansas, Virginia and Ohio, silly, petty and harmful to the potentialities of the screen, but it is a small and insignificant thing compared to the censorship that is gradually being enforced by monopoly control."—Books

Am J Soc 36:344 S '30 80w
Booklist 27:56 O '30

Reviewed by Richard Watts, Jr.
Books p7 Mr 9 '30 700w

"The book brings together much information concerning the development of movie censorship and its workings that is necessary for the understanding of what has become a very dubious situation, and now and then, as in a short chapter concerning children and the movies, it offers sober and constructive discussion of the problem. But if the authors had not indulged in such extensive and indiscriminate nose-thumbing and profuse invective, they could have expected to be listened to with greater seriousness."
+ — N Y Times p19 Mr 9 '30 420w

"The authors prove their point that there is no standard in censorship; that the whole business is nonsense; that the personal factor often enters and causes members of boards to view films from a pet bias; that this system has brought about the Will Hays organization devoted to keeping censors and law-making bodies mollified by soft words and subterfuges." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p15 F 27 '30 900w

"Gives many amusing and inexplicable examples of cuts, and shows us the political appointees at their artistic tasks. But it would have been just as effective if the text had been entirely omitted and only the illustrations left. You need only look at the pictures of scenes that have been censored, and then at the pictures of the censors, to know the whole story." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 80w
St Louis 28:214 S '30

"Neither the producer, who sells, nor the public, which buys, have exhibited any deep concern [about the censorship of moving pictures], and the crusader is, in consequence, disarmed before he mounts. 'Censored' is a sprightly and earnest attack upon a Great Bogy. When its authors next unsheath their swords, one hopes that they will select an enemy who will stand up and fight." Randolph Bartlett
Sat R of Lit 6:819 Mr 15 '30 700w

"This study is superficial and light in style: it is not to be compared for depth and wisdom with the scholarly To The Pure. . . by Morris Ernst and William Seagle. The intent was doubtless to get the message to the people, in gay and readable form. But the main facts are here, and especially valuable are the final chapters on the growing power of interlocking economic and public utility interests over stage, cinema, radio, and even the press." Leon Whipple

+ — Survey 64:154 My 1 '30 350w

ERSKINE, HELEN, ed. To the gods of Hellas; lyrics of the Greek games at Barnard college. 139p il $2.50 Columbia univ. press [12s 6d Oxford]

811.08 College verse. Barnard college, New York. American poetry—Collections 30-12256

A volume of some of the lyrics composed for the annual Greek games festival at Barnard college. Edited by Helen Erskine, with a foreword by John Erskine.

"One is of course reminded, now and then, by some echo from Keats or Swinburne or by a worn poetic phrase of the 'feather'd choir' sort, that this is college verse. And there are touches of artificiality resulting from the effort to be Greek and mythologically accurate. But more often one is delighted by the clear, fresh quality of some emotion, conveyed through the traditional classical forms and legendary allusions." Dorothy Brewster
+ — Books p13 Jl 6 '30 550w

"The high level of the collected poems indicates what students can do with the assistance of a definite line of procedure laid down for them when to this is added the inspirational value of contact with a gloriously poetic past. Barnard's festival should be more generally adopted. It is communally spirited, beautiful, and fraught with an ennobling poetic idea."
+ N Y Times p14 Je 29 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 50w

"Aside from its authentic loveliness of word and rhythm, this unusual book of college verse is interesting because of the eagerness with which these young moderns have reached back to the Greek tradition and re-stated it in their own terms." Beulah Amidon
+ Survey 64:447 Ag 15 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p579 Jl 10 '30 180w

ERSKINE, JOHN. Cinderella's daughter, and other sequels and consequences. 305p il $2.50 Bobbs

30-31030

"Mr. Erskine, having dealt with heroic legend in long, homiletic dialogues, has, in his new volume, treated of the characters of fairy tales with the same formula. He takes up the stories where the old tale weavers left off and attempts to tell us in his now familiar style what really happened during the years which the older historians are content to describe as 'ever after.'" (Books) Contents: Cinderella's daughter; The afterthoughts of Lady Godiva; Beanstalk; The patience of Griselda; Beauty and the beast; Sleeping beauty; Conversion; Peter kills the bear.

"None of these parables is very startling, nor is the preachment ever more than mildly suggestive, nor does the irony ever seek to be more than homely and gentle. The precise significance of the allegory is elusive, but there remains the charming little sermon, a most unconventional sermon from the orthodox point of view, behind the foolery." F. T. Marsh
+ Books p5 N 9 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p5 N 19 '30 330w

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 8 '30 120w

"Mr Erskine's chief claim to fame is that he has made the imagination comfortable and the muse to feel perfectly at home. He has taken the wings from poetic legend as easily as he might help a visiting friend out of his overcoat, saying: Come now, who wants to be out flying in the rare, cold ether? It is so much nicer sitting by the radiator and sipping tea." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 200w

"Either these figures are sulky at being resuscitated and take a ghoulish delight in dragging their feet and emerging bored and sleepy, or else they respond more happily to the fastness of their own tradition than to clever improvised endings of their adventures. Anyhow, they behave half-heartedly; for the book is somewhat heavy. The machinery creaks, the wheels do not run smoothly. And the moral of that is that authors, especially poets, should evolve their satires on an entirely new foundation."
— N Y Times p8 N 16 '30 380w

"Mr. Erskine has made a mistake. These fairy stories, unlike the legend of Helen and the drama of Adam and Eve, are complete, they are finished, there was nothing more to be done with them. Luckily he added two tales to his volume which the publishers hint are not old tales but stories of his own invention and they are charming. Indeed, the last of all is so strangely moving that it indicates what the author ought to have been doing during the hours he spent with Cinderella, Beauty and the Beast, and Jack of the Beanstalk, trying to spoil them for us." Mary Borden
— + Sat R of Lit 7:453 D 13 '30 850w

ERSKINE, JOHN. Uncle Sam in the eyes of his family. 351p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Putnam]

30-9733

"An attempt at the novelization of our national temperament. It is the story of a modern family, in which Sam, Antoinette, John and the rest stand for America, France, England and the other members of the family of nations. The reactions and relationships between these individuals parallel the reactions and relationships among the various nations."—Outlook

"At best this might have been a bit of amiable pedantry; in fact it is a dolefully dull mistake. It shows the folly of trying to schematize anything so rich and diverse as character and opinion in a country such as ours."
— Atlantic Bookshelf p18 Je '30 200w

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

"Mr. Erskine writes with the smooth adequacy which we might expect and there are again and again flashes of delicious irony. But the keen wit and sustained satire which made some of his earlier books so fascinating are largely lacking, while as a novel Uncle Sam is rather dull." F. R. Dulles
— + Bookm 71:326 Je '30 500w

"The thread of story winds in and out, sometimes pretty faintly. The simple fact is that neither the story nor the characterization quite lives up to John Erskine's gorgeous idea. . . There are not enough of those nuggets which, strung upon an intellectual concept, made the chuckling glamour of 'Helen of Troy' and 'Galahad.' The vein has run thin. And yet here and there are pages in which the old, delicately malicious insight blossoms again." Lewis Gannett
— + Books p7 Ap 6 '30 750w

"As a narrative, 'Uncle Sam' is absorbing reading. Analogies are not carried too far and group characteristics are so cleverly incorporated in the individual that we are interested in the characters not only as personifications but as separate people." G. K.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 26 '30 800w

" 'Uncle Sam' is first of all an amusing novel—the best novel, per se, that Mr. Erskine has done, although not the funniest. That it is an excellent picture of the American spirit is undeniable." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 Ap 5 '30 300w

Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 14 '30 700w

"The allegory, which is not intended to be completely sustained, lends neither profundity nor wit, satire nor charm, to the story, but it does succeed in destroying any hope there might have been for that to stand on its own feet. One cannot escape the impression that Professor Erskine is writing down to his great army of readers in the same way that he gently patronizes all his emasculated characters. Certainly he has made no attempt to go beyond the A B C of national and racial characteristics."

ERSKINE, JOHN—Continued

— + Nation 130:604 My 21 '30 150w

"There is a freshness of outlook in 'Uncle Sam,' good and diverse character drawing, and so many pleasant incidents ably described that the book cannot fail to make pleasurable reading." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 48:413 D 20 '30 180w

New Repub 63:54 My 28 '30 200w

New Statesman 36:115 N 1 '30 240w

" 'Uncle Sam' is far more like an author's first book than his latest. There is the lack of selection, the eagerness to express views on practically everything that very often characterizes the beginner. The result is satire exasperatingly muddled."

— N Y Times p8 Ap 20 '30 420w

"A wittily realistic picture in which the European opinions of us are very freely and cogently given the air. It is an entertaining book by one of our most amusing writers, containing many fine passages, and much keen insight into the Western world of to-day. The dialogue is sparkling; some of it is brilliant. The grasp on present-day politics is firm, though used here for no purpose other than to amuse." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p10m My 4 '30 550w

"Just as a story, it is too long and rambling for our taste, and it lacks the sparkle of Helen of Troy. But it is a noble experiment." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:668 Ap 23 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 Je '30

Pratt p37 autumn '30

"The book must have been extraordinarily difficult to do, and there are chapters where if you could forget either the allegory or the story the reading would go better. Nevertheless it is successful, and particularly successful in the character of Uncle Sam—a Jeffersonian Uncle Sam (with a strain of Yankee added) who is a real personality, as typical as Babbitt was typical (though so different) and as convincing as a human being as Babbitt was convincing. Read this novel, not as an allegory, but as if it were a new 'Rise of Silas Lapham,' and the allegory, you will find, will very shrewdly take care of itself. Or better still, do as the author suggests and read it as a biography of our Uncle Sam. And then send it to an English friend. For this is a spiritual portrait of the real 100% American." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 6:943 Ap 19 '30 700w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 630w

ERSKINE, LAURIE YORK. Comrades of the
² clouds. 257p il $2 (7s 6d) Appleton
30-21415

The story of the daily life and dangers of a group of men in a crack flying squadron during the World war.

"The reader is confused by a series of unrelated instances. They fail to stand out and boredom results. Several of the accounts of combat work are patently twice told." D. C. Lunt

— Books p8 D 28 '30 100w

"Of this year's books about life and death in the air only one is outstanding, 'Comrades of the Clouds,' for its presentation of episodes in a flying squadron of the A. E. F. as believable incidents." E. O'Connor

+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. First Mrs Fraser; a comedy in three acts. 88p $1.25 Macmillan [3s 6d Chatto]
822 [30-1525]

A comedy, the scene of which is present-day England. Mr Fraser goes to his ex-wife, the first Mrs Fraser, for advice about the second Mrs Fraser's proposed divorce. From that moment the first Mrs Fraser, clever, canny woman that she is, dominates the situation.

Booklist 26:272 Ap '30

"Mrs. Fraser is surely a charming person, and the dialogue has sufficient humor and sparkle to give the play at least a passing distinction, if no novelty." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p13 Mr 9 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p73 My '30

"As amusing as a comedy completely devoid of any kind of originality can very well be. Take all the drawing-room pieces written since Pinero and Jones popularized the 'Mrs.' titles; cut them into strips; shake in a hat; draw out a sufficient number of fragments; paste them together; and you will have something very like the new play. Nevertheless the pasting has been smoothly done." J. W. Krutch

— + Nation 130:79 Ja 15 '30 100w

"Really, for Mr. Ervine it is rather stupid. . . If The First Mrs. Fraser were a devastating satire on certain people in society, we should not complain. But it is an uneven comedy in which Mr. Ervine occasionally preaches—and we are unable to believe in his presentation of human motives and psychology." F. R. Bellamy

— Outlook 154:112 Ja 15 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:30 Ap '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"Mr. Ervine's plot and people might conceivably be both dull and ordinary if they were not handled with such adroitness by their creator. Nor is this because Mr. Ervine is strictly non-naturalistic in his dialogue and plot-making. He is as artificial as, and no more so than, every expert craftsman, adjusting his dialogue to his characters and charging it with continuous currents of electricity for the greater diversion of the beholder. Mrs. Fraser is a skilful and discreet manipulator of destinies. We know from the first rise of the curtain that she will eventually disentangle her husband from Mrs. Fraser number two and probably take him back again, but thanks to Mr. Ervine's skilful handling and suave conversations we are willing to follow the process step by step." Rosamond Gilder

+ Sat R of Lit 6:846 Mr 22 '30 480w

"It is a crisp, witty, intelligent work, of no great profundity or social significance, yet pungently chastening manners with a smile, and an occasional frown of reproof. Meant for the stage, it can best be appreciated there."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 17 '30 40w

ESCHOLIER, RAYMOND. Paris; [tr. by Jessica Ware]. 157p il $5 Dial press [12s 6d Methuen]
914.436 Paris—Description 30-26957

A descriptive survey of the beauties of Paris, old and new—the houses and hotels of bygone days, the museums, palaces and monuments, the churches, and life of the people—with 185 illustrations in photogravure and six facsimiles of water-colors by M. Nicolas Markovitch.

Booklist 27:100 N '30

"It ought to blast anybody away from the fireside—or the electric fan—and send him dashing for the first steamship office. As for me, it merely breaks my heart, knowing that not for months will I see again all that beauty."

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p4 Ag 16 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

"No better illustrations have ever been seen in a book of this type. Their name is legion and they possess a vivid delicacy."

+ N Y Times p16 Je 29 '30 300w

"A delightful book, just the thing to give the departing traveler." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p19 Ag 22 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:190 Je 4 '30 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p871 O 23 '30 230w

ESCHOLIER, RAYMOND. Victor Hugo; tr. from the original French ed. by Lewis Galantière. 315p $5 Brewer

B or 92 Hugo, Victor Marie, comte 30-2523

In the technique of romanced biography, M. Escholier, curator of the Victor Hugo museum, has painted the legendary Hugo, idol of French romanticists. The chief interest of the author seems to lie in Hugo's two great love affairs—his early marriage with Adèle Foucher, and his later love for Juliette Drouet.

"When all is said, the spirit of the book is far more constructive and convincing than that of Biré's or Giese's. And under the painful obviousness of thought and style, there is a wealth of sound scholarship. M. Escholier is the custodian of the Victor Hugo museum—shall we say the priest of the Victor Hugo Temple?—and his hagiography is based on a solid mass of documents. Even when we are repelled by the cheap popular treatment, we cannot help realizing that the main thesis is right and that the information is both extensive and accurate." Albert Guerard

+ — Books p5 F 16 '30 580w

Cleveland Open Shelf p60 Ap '30

"The romantic aspect of French character has always struck foreigners as being the least fortunate one; and the way in which M. Escholier, ancient Hugolatre and pious curator of the poet's mausoleum, swallows the Hugo legend and beseeches us to swallow it, is further evidence of this unhappy condition. Despite his immense familiarity with every phase of Hugo's life and work, M. Escholier has written a biographie-romance which might appeal to a mentality of fourteen. . . His venture into the field of Maurois and Ludwig seems scarcely worth the translation." Matthew Josephson

— N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 900w

"The style is a little too staccato, cinematographic, to please us, but the book has authority, and some charm." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:188 Ja 29 '30 50w

Pratt p36 summer '30

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"A colorful retelling of a remarkably colorful career."

Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 9 '30 480w

"In this dramatic unfolding of a mind and of a soul lies the great interest of Victor Hugo's life. This interest is not, of course, entirely absent from a book that professes to give a complete panorama of Hugo's existence. But because he subordinated the literary aspects to the love story, M. Escholier has, it seems to me, failed to give us a book commensurate with the real magnitude of the greatest poet of France." Albert Feuillerat

— + Yale R n s 20:409 winter '31 1100w

ESKEW, GARNETT LAIDLAW. Pageant of the packets; a book of American steamboating. 314p il $3 Holt

656 Packets. Steamboats. Mississippi river 29-23077

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:145 Ja '30

"There is no other book quite like it. It has permanent value to any one interested in that typically American development of steamboating on Western waterways. The bibliography is brief, but for good reason: the author is using new material, material gathered at first hand and from the files of yellowing newspapers. It is the author's affection for the bygone boats which makes the book notable, for the writing is, nearly always, emotional." Lyle Saxon

+ Books p17 Ap 27 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p1 F 15 '30 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30

"Mr. Eskew's book will well repay reading by those who enjoy an interesting story, as well as by those who wish to trace the business growth of the United States." A. W. Tolman

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ja 22 '30 260w

Pratt p21 summer '30

Wis Lib Bul 25:408 D '29

ESSAYS in honor of John Dewey; on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, Oct. 20, 1929. 425p $5 Holt

104 Philosophy. Dewey, John 29-24486

Twenty-nine philosophical essays written by former or present colleagues and pupils of John Dewey, presented to him on the occasion of his seventieth birthday. Among the contributors are Felix Adler, Harold Chapman Brown, Irwin Edman, William H. Kilpatrick, John Herman Randall, Jr., James H. and Matilde C. Tufts, and Frederick J. E. Woodbridge.

Booklist 26:188 F '30

Books p15 Jl 13 '30 350w

"It is impossible even to mention here all the contributions to the volume, let alone to attempt an appraisal of each item. But the average level of achievement is high; and it must be apparent that the reach of topics is both broad and interesting. These essays succeed in accomplishing their aim: by their quality they do honor to John Dewey." Axton Clark

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 30 '30 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30

St Louis 28:91 Ap '30

ESSAYS in intellectual history; dedicated to James Harvey Robinson by his former seminar students. 359p $3.50 Harper

904 History—Addresses, essays, lectures. Robinson, James Harvey 30-1586

Contents: Toleration, by D. S. Muzzey; Philosophy of Anthony, third earl of Shaftesbury, by E. P. Smith; Occupational development of Roman society about the time of the elder Cato, by Ernest Brehaut; Spengler, by J. T. Shotwell; The three Arnolds and their Bible, by W. P. Hall; The conquest of Algeria—a case of historical inertia, by M. M. Knight; The inside of Germany's war politics, by C. A. Beard; American Christianity and the world of everyday, by H. U. Faulkner; Bayle's profanation of sacred history, by Howard Robinson; The Esquisse of Condorcet, by J. S. Schapiro; The philosopher turned patriot, by C. J. H. Hayes; The place of history among the sciences, by Preserved Smith; Henri de Saint-Simon, by L. H. Jenks; The fall of Constantinople symbolically considered, by L. R. Loomis; The economic determination of history, by H. E. Barnes; Baron Von Holstein, the dark force of the German foreign office, by M. A. Huttman; History and the science of society, by J. W. Swain; John Louis Vives, by Lynn Thorndike; A yardstick for civilization, by P. W. Slosson.

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

Books p13 My 18 '30 250w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p15 Ap 19 '30 800w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

ESTEVEN, JOHN, pseud. See Shellabarger, S.

EVANS, CARADOC. Nothing to pay. 286p $2.50 Norton [7s 6d Faber]

30-25816

With the Welsh countryside as a background and the Welsh idiom as a medium for expression, Mr Evans, in his first novel, tells the bleak and bitter story of Amos the miser. The man's greed for money dominates his every act from early youth to the grave; he dies clasping in his hands an old Bible, to the pages of which he has sewn the fortune accumulated during a lifetime of avarice.

EVANS, CARADOC—Continued

"'Nothing to Pay' is not a casual novel. It is harsh and sometimes crude; it has the merit of strong, convincing reality in its characterization. Evans has chosen a style to fit his central character—a bald, yet trenchant way of writing and never circuitous."

Books p18 N 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by P. E. Rising

Boston Transcript p2 N 29 '30 1300w

"The characters, though of our own day, have an aboriginal quality that makes one see human nature afresh, and the Welsh-English idiom in which the book is written, though unlike any speech used by human beings, gives to the book a strange mood and new manner. The quality of exposure in Mr. Caradoc Evans's writing has led him to scenes in which there is not a single dignity or decency to be so much as named. And he has an individuality that does not pander to his reader, who has to go all the way to adapt himself to an exceedingly concentrated style. A bitter, censorious, unconvincing book in which a spark of sympathy would be as strange as an iceberg in the Sahara, and as welcome."

— New Statesman 35:680 S 6 '30 180w

"Substantial and interesting novel. It is a work of intense and peculiar fidelity to the truth of life as humble people live it and think of it. This intensity gives Mr. Evans's writing its virtuosity. He has evidently drawn both the fire and praise of English critics. His writing deserves an audience." Eugene Lohrke

+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 320w

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger

N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 650w

"'Nothing to Pay,' the sardonic saga of a Welsh shop-assistant, is a queer and disconcerting novel. Its oddity is due largely to the fact that it is made up of such incongruous ingredients. There are snatches of dialogue in which Celtic idiom is so faithfully reproduced that to the English reader they are almost as unintelligible as if they were in Welsh. And then there are passages the melancholy cadence of which recalls what is probably a kindred quality in Ossian. The story itself is sometimes projected into the boisterous extravaganza of a medieval fabliau. The resulting flavour of myth rather takes the edge off the purely realistic scenes from life behind the draper's counter and in other bleak haunts of the shop-assistant."

+ — Sat R 150:288 S 6 '30 550w

Reviewed by E. T. Booth

Sat R of Lit 7:200 O 11 '30 550w

"There is a wild sardonic humour about Mr. Evans' hatred, something which whips the narrative off realism's earth; just as the device of rendering Welsh phrases by outlandish literal English translations gives it a loud, hectic colour. Nothing to Pay is a book which sharpens the eyes but narrows the spirit. A mood of revulsion and disgust is, after all, as monotonous to the palate as the sweets of sentimentality." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 145:503 O 11 '30 350w

"A piece of mordant realism which it needs a strong stomach to relish. A bitter disgust for his own people seems the chief emotion that animates these pages, which abound in characters and scenes terrible enough for any modern inferno. No gleam of mildness or beauty mitigates the picture. Even religion appears but as an incentive to hypocrisy or a mere outlet for repressed emotions: men and women are either weak or vile. The corrosive etching is done with remarkable power."

Times [London] Lit Sup p682 Ag 28 '30 480w

EVANS, EDWARD RADCLIFFE GARTH RUSSELL. Pirate's doom. 272p $2 Farrar

30-33970

A story of daring adventure, about pirates and sea battles and storms at sea, written especially for boys. The author, Admiral Evans, formerly commanded the H. M. S. Broke, and has a distinguished record as sailor and explorer.

"Not only good reading but unique in plot and solution of the mystery. Boys who like 'Black Buccaneer' and 'Treasure Island' will enjoy this book." A. L. S.

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 120w

"A rollicking yarn, full of the brave, reckless, briny smell of the ocean. It is frankly a theatrical melodrama, where the scuppers run with far from innocent blood, and men recover from wounds with astonishing ease. But the stage is gay with the gorgeous costumes of those swarthy villains, the gentlemen rovers, and the mystery which cloaks their sinister doings keeps up from beginning to end. Unlike most books, 'Pirate's Doom' improves as it goes on, and is most convincing in its final chapters." J. D. Whiting

+ Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 350w

EVANS, MARY. Costume throughout the ages. (Lippincott's home economics bks.) 358p il $3.50 (15s) Lippincott

391 Costume 30-26371

A textbook of costume, showing its development from the ancient Egyptians and Assyrians to the early twentieth century. Part one deals with the historic dress of the ancients, the French, the English, and the Americans; part two with national costume in Europe, northern Africa, Asia and the Americas. There are over 200 illustrations, reference lists, bibliography, topics for class discussion and an index.

Booklist 26:299 My '30

"This handbook covers its field with commendable thoroughness, although its necessary scope somewhat detracts from its possible fascination. The author has so much information to impart, so much of the globe to cover, so many nations to include, that she cannot let her pen wander off into the thousand byways which her subject presents. She must hew to the line—and to the silhouette. Her treatment is rather matter-of-fact and text-bookish; the result is an admirable work of reference, the charm of which lies chiefly in the illustrations."

+ Books p12 Mr 23 '30 170w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 320w

J Home Econ 22:409 My '30 120w

"Although the subject of costume seems to be particularly attractive to authors, since there are so many books about it, this new one by Mary Evans is sufficiently distinctive in viewpoint and treatment and is so capably and interestingly done that it deserves to take an important place among them. . . The background of her own extensive knowledge and of her own deep interest glows constantly through her pages."

+ N Y Times p27 Mr 9 '30 430w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

Pratt p13 summer '30

"Her material is well and interestingly put together, though in both cases the medieval period is too summarily dismissed, just as, on the other hand, the nineteenth century has appropriated distinctly more than its share of text and illustrations. This brings us to the one general criticism of her survey, which applies equally to the second part of the book, the need for still more frequent illustrations."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p629 Jl 31 '30 400w

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE. Shaggy legion. 307p $2 Little

30-7299

A narrative of the vanishing of the great herds of buffalo from the Western plains in the face of the advancing hordes of settlers. In particular it is the love story of Breck Coleman, a young plainsman, and Sue Carrolton, the daughter of an incoming settler.

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Mr 23 '30 80w

"This story of the West of the old days has real historic value. Mr. Evarts is a Kansas man born and bred, but he has spent much time in the Far West. His books can be depended on as faithful pictures of the country, of the men, both whites and Indians, and of the animals of the region at the time of which he writes." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '30 550w
N Y Times p24 Je 8 '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 11 '30 150w

EVE, ARTHUR STEWART, and KEYS, DAVID ARNOLD. Applied geophysics in the search for minerals. 253p il $4.50 Macmillan [12s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

622.1 Prospecting. Geophysics [29-30180]

"Practical and theoretical work by professors in McGill University, who, eschewing difficult mathematics, discuss the several scientific methods of mining exploration now available."—N Y New Tech Bks

"All in all this is the best exposition of the principles of applied geophysics which the reviewer has seen." M. K. H.
+ J Geol 38:191 F '30 170w

"Profs. Eve and Keys have attempted to produce a concise and reasonably detailed text-book on applied geophysics, suitable for physicists, geologists, and mining engineers—in short, for all who may in their practical work require a fairly complete knowledge of this subject. It may be said that they have most decidedly succeeded in their difficult task. They have carefully steered between the dubious imaginativeness of the 'popular' account, and the bleak inhospitality of the 'specialist' exposition, and have produced a sound, well-balanced treatise."
+ Nature 125:267 F 22 '30 950w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:7 Ja '30

"The methods here described of locating metalliferous minerals, oils, and other valuable subterranean deposits will be helpful to the geologists and mining men as well as to practising geophysicists' for whom the book is specially intended. A welcome feature is a course of laboratory experiments designed for the training of students in the new methods of prospecting. The book is well illustrated."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p655 Ag 22 '29 160w

EVERSON, FLORENCE MCCLURG. Puppet plays for children. 118p il $1 Beckley-Cardy

791.5 Puppet-plays 30-960

Five little plays in rhyme, written and presented by fourth and fifth grade children as an English project which they wished to carry out. Three are marionette plays, one a health play, and the last is a short Christmas shadow play. There are practical directions for the making and staging of puppets.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

"A most usable little book, giving directions for making [puppets] which are simple enough for even the youngest children to follow. There are also some plays included, but these are not of exceptional merit and the value of the book lies in the directions for making puppets rather than in the plays suggested." A. L. S.
+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p14 N 22 '30 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '30

"This book is easily adaptable to classroom or home use, as it presents the mechanical workings of puppets as well as giving five plays all ready to enact."
School Arts M 30:320-a Ja '31 100w

EVERSON, FLORENCE MCCLURG, and EVERSON, HOWARD. Secret cave. 101p il $2 Dutton

30-20163

Two small boys, Peter and Sammy Andy, explored a secret cave one day and got hopelessly lost. Rex, Sammy Andy's dog playmate, found them in time, and it was discovered that the cave was really an ancient quarry, full of interesting treasures.

Booklist 27:108 N '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30
St Louis 28:275 N '30

EVERTON, FRANCIS, pseud. See Stokes, F. W.

EWEN, CECIL HENRY L'ESTRANGE, ed. Witch hunting and witch trials; the indictments for witchcraft from the records of 1373 assizes held for the Home circuit A.D. 1559-1736; with an introd. 356p il $5 Dial press [21s Routledge]

133.4 Witchcraft. Criminal law—Great Britain [30-12056]

"The witch huntings and trials with which Mr. Ewen is concerned took place in England between 1559 to 1736, and he has investigated them as they are recorded in the Indictments for Witchcraft on the Home Circuit, collected from the records of 1,373 Assizes held during those years. The book is the result of prolonged research, which has revealed the fact that, in spite of the general opinion of historians that the reign of James I. and the Commonwealth covered the greatest periods of witch prosecution, it was really under Elizabeth that the Acts against witchcraft were most vigorously enforced. In an excellent introduction Mr. Ewen deals with the attitude of English law to witchcraft from Saxon times."—New Statesman

Reviewed by G. L. Burr
Am Hist R 35:844 Jl '30 550w
Am J Soc 36:509 N '30 100w

"Ewen's work is a monument of painstaking care and cautious conclusions and most valuable for its descriptions and authentic illustrations of professional witch finders and the tortures and ill-treatment used in the discovery of witches." Woodbridge Riley
+ Books p2 Ap 6 '30 330w
Boston Transcript p2 F 26 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30
Nation and Ath 46:262 N 16 '29 350w

"With regard to witchcraft itself, Mr. Ewen does not pretend to add to our knowledge, austerely confining himself to its juridical bearings in this country; and in this respect the book is a valuable addition to our knowledge of the law and its incidence as it fell upon the just and unjust with uncomfortable indiscrimination."
+ New Statesman 34:170 N 9 '29 200w
N Y Times p18 F 2 '30 340w
St Louis 28:127 My '30

"It is a painstaking and interesting work. But it is doubtful whether it is really of much importance in the study of demonology. For the abstracts of indictments, so carefully reproduced, contain no details of the evidence given in the trials. Mr. Ewen's book is excellent in its account of the successive laws relating to witchcraft, and gives admirably accessible statistics. It is well printed, and the illustrations are from original sources."
+ — Sat R 148:586 N 16 '29 500w

EX-PRIVATE X, pseud. War is war. 288p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Gollancz]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-17510

The author, an English short story writer, fought thruout the war as a private, and herein recounts his personal experiences. The narrative is enlivened with bits of humor and anecdote interspersed between the sufferings and horrors of life in the trenches.

EX-PRIVATE X, pseud.—Continued

Reviewed by Lambert Davis
Books p10 Je 22 '30 350w

"The sensitive young soldier-author is temperamentally similar to Remarque's hero. He is in some respects more outspoken and uncompromising, but there is a surprising lack of the strong language which has hitherto been considered an essential part of a Tommy's discourse. There is nothing finicky about the book. There is merely an elimination of the unnecessary, without consequent loss of emphasis."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 250w

"A book which is rather talked than written, and preserves in an uncommon degree the manner of those years." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 46:734 Mr 1 '30 130w

Reviewed by Lionel Trilling
New Repub 63:296 Jl 23 '30 100w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y Times p5 Ag 3 '30 550w

"When he is describing war-work he actually saw, he is capital—the best of the three privates in clear-cut narrative. He has also the gift of humor. Unfortunately, however, he is given to exercising that gift savagely on some of his pet antipathies. . . Faults aside, this book does bring us close to the actualities as opposed to the 'romance' and 'glory' of war." R. D. Townsend
+ — Outlook 155:268 Je 18 '30 180w

"One cannot deny that he has got the war into some sort of perspective. The book is exceedingly readable, individual and provocative. The author has a gift for incisive speech and a loathing of verbal compromise and qualification. He has taken advantage of his anonymity to tell the whole truth, as he sees it. His frankness is bracing, his good faith beyond question; but I wonder whether Truth yields readily to shock-tactics and if its connexion with frankness is as close as it seems." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 149:274 Mr 1 '30 480w

"Being a much better writer than he ever was a soldier, 'Ex-Private X' has been able to set down here an exceptionally true, vivid, and well-balanced account of what sort of an experience the war was from the point of view of the private soldier."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:75 Ag 23 '30 450w

"We cannot say much of Private X's effort. He gives us revolting details and staccato present-tenses, and a very tolerable imitation (unintentional, of course) of Herr Remarque's more hysterical passages. Yet the book has humor and kindliness."
— + Spec 144:442 Mr 15 '30 100w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 750w

"Ex-Private X's book in its merits and its faults is typical of a great number of its kind. Some of the most recent aroused the hope that a saner and better-balanced attitude was appearing in writers on the War; but this helps only to put back the clock, all the more so because of its ability."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p164 F 27 '30 550w

EYLES, LEONORA. See Eyles, M. L.

EYLES, MARGARET LEONORA (PITCAIRN) (MRS DAVID LESLIE MURRAY). Strength of the spirit. 350p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

"A tale of a sinister mummy, spiritualistic phenomena and dreams. The fable has to do with the efforts of an extremely ill-tempered spirit to wreak vengeance upon a newspaper proprietor for past injuries."—Books

---

Books p10 Je 1 '30 80w

"Whether or not one is convinced by her reasoning, the book makes fairly entertaining reading."
+ N Y Times p18 S 7 '30 220w

"Miss Eyles is entitled to her completely mechanized conception of life and death, but, as it is only half digested, it destroys the artist. The book is one long explanation and the artist should be content to portray and leave explanation to those who think they know." V. S. Pritchett
— Spec 144:399 Mr 8 '30 220w

"Taken as an exciting, moving story, told with remarkable verve and passionate intensity, this is unquestionably a book that will hold any reader's attention. But it will surely fail to convert him or her to the author's own admiration for the gifts of those who, after a thousand earlier lives, come again to visit these glimpses of the moon."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p140 F 20 '30 400w

F

FADÉEV, ALEKSANDR ALEKSANDROVICH. The nineteen; tr. from the Russian by R. D. Charques. 293p $2.50 Int. pub. [7s 6d Lawrence]
30-31805

"One aspect of the War's aftermath is shown in The 19. A company of Bolshevik soldiers is conducting a queer sort of guerrilla warfare against Koltchak and the Japanese: queer, because they are almost completely isolated from other Soviet forces, living a kind of family life under their company-commander. The story is in part an illustration of the revolutionary spirit in post-War Russia, with its abolition of barriers and its deepening of human contacts; in part a testimony that character remains much the same, with the same courage or cowardice displayed, the same distinctions of human fibre."—Spec

---

"Fadeyev, who served with a group of partisans in Siberia, has woven his story from his own experiences with fighting men in times when life was from minute to minute, a rough, uneven pattern often obliterated in sudden catastrophe. The writing is not smooth or polished, but these unfamiliar events are made to live with a poignancy which is proof of the book's strength and harsh beauty." Helen Black
Books p20 Ap 20 '30 700w

"Despite the tragic ending, this story is not at all depressing. Like all real tragedies it is cathartic. We close the book with strengthened faith in a new Russia and with a feeling of affectionate admiration for the heroic little Bolshevik leader who 'ceased crying' because he realized 'that it was necessary to live' and that 'a man had to do his duty.' " Joshua Kunitz
+ Nation 130:425 Ap 9 '30 600w

" 'The Nineteen' has been 'widely acclaimed in Russia as one of the best novels of the past decade and a significant artistic embodiment of revolutionary faith in new Russia.' The implication is that only translation is necessary to assure for these works a similar success in England. But both this book and 'Siberian Garrison' and many other translations already on the market are—to put it quite bluntly—barbarian. 'The Nineteen' could have no success in Soviet Russia if its readers knew their Tolstoy and Dostoevsky. The English novel of to-day, little as it may have of genuine inspiration, is centuries ahead of it in all the more important technical aspects." L. L. Irvine
— Nation and Ath 46:403 D 14 '29 100w

"The book is a cross-section of Soviet army life. The reader receives from it a vivid impression of variety and confusion and perhaps a shadowy intimation of the common purpose which animates these ragged casuals from the forests and factories and coal-mines of Siberia. . . The first two-thirds of the book has a mannered air which Fadeyev forgets at the end in the sheer sweep and interest of the events which he has to relate. The conclusion is more personal, somewhat more sentimental, more consecutive and coherent, and infinitely more moving than anything which precedes it." Margaret Wallace

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 600w

"Closing the book, one tries to draw a balance of its qualities and shortcomings. In Soviet Russia it was extolled as a 'masterpiece.' This, of course, is an exaggeration—one of those exaggerations at the bottom of which lies an unrelaxing desire of Moscow critics to find a 'truly great' proletarian writer. However, it hardly can be doubted that Mr. Fadeyev is capable, and that still more satisfactory work may be awaited from him in future."

+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 30 '30 600w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

N Y World p11m My 11 '30 400w

"Its outstanding quality, in spite of the raw flesh of which it seems superficially to be made, and its absence of sentimentality, and even for the most part, of conventional sentiment, is its compassion and rough tenderness; the human warmth of this gang of roughnecks; the dewy beauty of the natural world through which they go blundering and killing and being killed. . . It is a straight narrative of the day to day lives of the fighting 'partisans'—told with extreme brevity and simplicity, with beauty and tenderness." Arthur Ruhl

+ Sat R of Lit 6:917 Ap 12 '30 900w

"It is a good, informative, and notable piece of work; but it has by no means the width of canvas we find in Siberian Garrison." Alan Porter

+ Spec 143:882 D 7 '29 130w

"While capably written, more particularly in its closing chapters, it is notable chiefly for a 'frankness' in the dealing with sex intimacies which at times touches crudity. Its far departure from polite language may help it to accomplish stark reality but does so at the expense of artistic emotional effect."

+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 80w

"The Nineteen is the best account of the Russian Civil War, from the point of view of the individuals taking part in it, that we have yet had, and at the same time one of the best of recent war novels. M. Fadeyev seems to be a Soviet sympathizer, but there is no trace in his novel of bias or bitterness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p210 Mr 13 '30 400w

FAIRBANK, MRS JANET (AYER). Lions' den. 374p $2.50 Bobbs

30-33755

"The lions' den of Mrs. Fairbank's story is Washington, D. C., and its carnivora are the perils, material and moral, which beset a simple-minded, idealistic young bachelor Congressman, fresh from the cornbelt. . . He learns some of the difficulties of acting according to his own political conscience when it is so much less trouble to be a good fellow and play the trading and compromising game. And, most exciting of all, he meets and is partly devoured by that lovely man-eater, Corinne Miller."—Sat R of Lit

Books p16 D 7 '30 400w

"This is the most interesting political novel since Jonathan Brooks, of the Mellett brothers, wrote his 'High Ground' and 'Chained Lighting.' It is so full of clear humanity. It is so frankly open with its thinly veiled personalities." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 1850w

"Probably the most accurate picture of congress would be a half-tone rather than a woodcut. But this is a very vigorously written novel, the obvious merits of which make entirely credible the report that Mrs. Fairbank's former book was second choice for the Pulitzer prize for the years of its publication."

+ Christian Century 47:1627 D 31 '30 280w

"The real merit of the book lies quite as much in its style and viewpoint as it does in its plot. The drama it portrays is based, very soundly, on character, on human weakness and human indecision, and on the power of human beings to adapt themselves to changing situations. It is written with unusual humor and is thoroughly informed as to the atmosphere and content of political society."

+ N Y Times p9 D 7 '30 650w

"Mrs. Fairbank knows her lions, and the book gives you an excellent and true picture of how practical politics are worked out." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:628 D 17 '30 80w

"It is a good, solid, intelligent, workmanlike story. Mrs. Fairbank knows her way about in both politics and society; is at home in Washington as well as on the Chicago 'Gold Coast,' where she was born and resides. If she doesn't surprise the reader with any of those fourth-dimensional qualities which call for something more than intelligence, sympathy, sound workmanship, and good taste, her novel has, at any rate, these merits."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:424 D 6 '30 550w

FAIRCHILD, DAVID GRANDISON. Exploring for plants. 591p il $5 (21s) Macmillan

581.9 Plant introduction. Botany—Morocco. Botany—Dutch East Indies. Botany—Africa. Voyages and travels 30-16581

Dr Fairchild, botanist and president of the American genetic association, writes this book as the result of his numerous expeditions into many lands in the interests of his study of plants. The volume, which is based on notes of the Allison Vincent Armour expeditions for the United States Department of agriculture, 1925, 1926 and 1927, describes certain aspects of botanical life in the East Indies, the west coast of Africa, Morocco, Algiers, Sumatra, Ceylon, and Java. It is a story of travel and adventure as well, and illustrated with many half-tones from photographs taken by the author.

Booklist 27:96 N '30

"Unusually stimulating book. Dr. Fairchild reveals the excitement and satisfaction which attend a search for obscure, little-known plants and trees in remote corners of the world. . . The hunt did not prevent the members of his party from collecting an assortment of fascinating, fantastic facts which are woven into the narrative with skill. Many of the two hundred illustrations picture these facts. The book is eloquent evidence of the fact that Dr. Fairchild has an eye for the bizarre and the beautiful, as well as for the bountiful, in nature."

+ Bookm 71:iv Ag '30 150w

"In Dr. Fairchild's volume is to be found great wealth of excellent reading. Unlike some scientists, he sees the world broadly with no less accuracy than in its details, and his observations of men and customs in far places are unusually penetrating. He is essentially the observant traveler-scientist, acquisitive of mind and, in his contact with his lay reader, sufficiently free of purely technical outlook. As a result he has produced an intensely human book behind which lies a fascinating background of internationally important science." R. S. Lemmon

+ Books p17 Ag 17 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 30 '30 400w

J Home Econ 22:863 O '30 80w

Reviewed by F. A. Clement

Nation and Ath 48:sup344 D 6 '30 100w

"David Fairchild is an ideal guide through the flowery jungles of the earth. He is thrillingly interested in everything he sees, trees, flowers, men, cities, camels, tigers and all fascinating things. Therefore he carries you with him, as delighted as himself." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p5 Je 22 '30 1300w

FAIRCHILD, D. G.—Continued
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Je 17 '30 850w

"Pretending to no literary quality, the book achieves the ease of cultured conversation. It tells of no especially exciting adventures and contains little comment on matters outside the interests of the expeditions. Nevertheless, it is entertaining reading. There is something dazzling about scenes where the florist's most expensive exotics grow wild, and a Swiss Family Robinson sort of charm about the finding and eating of strange fruits." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:306 Je 25 '30 200w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

"It is no dull recitation of Latin nouns and adjectives. Unconsciously, you find yourself waxing enthusiastic over the discovery of some new grass for goats or lamenting the fact that Mussulmen won't eat rye. Many of his anecdotes of persons, too, are piquant and vivid. Indeed this is a book packed with interest."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1214 Je 19 '30 350w

Spec 145:467 O 4 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p8 D 30 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p871 O 23 '30 320w

FAIRCLOUGH, HENRY RUSHTON. Love of nature among the Greeks and Romans. (Our debt to Greece and Rome) 270p il $2.25 Longmans [5s Harrap]

880.9 Nature (esthetics). Nature in literature. Greek literature—History and criticism. Latin literature—History and criticism 30-5744

A discussion on the subject of the feeling for nature among the ancient Greeks and Romans, as expressed in their literature, mythology, religion and art. The book refutes the argument that the ancients had no feeling for nature, which idea was first brought into prominence by Schiller's essay on Naïve and sentimental poetry, written in 1795.

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '30 500w

"He has read widely both in the original texts and in the modern literature of the subject, has gathered a great deal of material, and has made an interesting as well as a useful book." Paul Shorey
+ Class Philol 25:211 Ap '30 300w

"Professor Fairclough has clearly been hampered by a distrust, often too great, of his readers' capacity. He was bound to quote in English, in spite of the unjustifiable conclusions into which this occasionally leads him, and perhaps he could not avoid a chronological arrangement; but it cannot have been necessary to abandon so often his own stimulating judgments in favour of text-book summaries and modern quotations, chosen without the discrimination that marks his selection from the ancients." N. M. Holley
+ — Nation and Ath 47:510 Jl 19 '30 400w

New Statesman 35:254 My 31 '30 150w

N Y Times p33 F 23 '30 380w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

"Before now Prof Fairclough has defended various classical authors against the charge that they were insensitive to the beauties of Nature. Here he summarizes his minute studies in an orderly and engaging book of 265 pages, the text of which, richly interspersed, as it is, with quotations, may be read for delight as well as for knowledge."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 27 '30 280w

FAIRLIE, GERARD. Muster of the vultures. 320p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder] 30-1566

The Sunday murders baffled Scotland Yard—until they discovered that a gang of international thieves and murderers, calling themselves the Vultures, were banded together in London. When the three chief investigators of Scotland Yard are captured, young Robin Murdock and his friend Deschamps, French detective, take charge of the pursuit of the Vultures. But it is the charming actress, Louella, to whom Robin is engaged, who saves her lover and brings the Vultures to justice.

"Medium excitement is aroused by the usual methods and lavish use of the expression, 'Good God!' Mr. Fairlie never misses a time-tried trick and seldom springs a new one." Will Cuppy
— Books p12 Mr 9 '30 120w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae
N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 150w

"This author has done considerably better in his preceding mystery tales." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p11m F 9 '30 50w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 80w

"Mr. Gerard Fairlie's new 'thriller,' while as well written as ever and giving even more than the promised number of thrills, lacks that air of plausibility which helped to make 'Scissors cut Paper' such an admirable yarn. Still, granted the initial improbability, Mr. Fairlie has done very well indeed."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1084 D 19 '29 200w

FALKBERGET, JOHAN. Lisbeth of Jarnfjeld; tr. by Rudolph Gjelsness. 239p $2.50 Norton [7s 6d Allen, G.] 30-6437

A stark tale of life on a Norwegian mountain farmstead, and the havoc wrought by a strong, ruthless woman. Lisbeth of Jarnfjeld loved the farm where her ancestors had lived for centuries, but she did not love her crafty husband, a man from the valley, and her son was not his child. Determined to keep the farm for her children Lisbeth stopped at nothing, and tragedy followed, until in bitter sorrow she learned to know that "the wages of sin is death."

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"A rugged tale in which both life and language are reduced to their simplest terms. Strong and dramatic in its conception, this novel nevertheless fails of the epic grasp which its author apparently designed. Lisbeth's portrait is statuesque but blurred, and never quite attains to complete credibility."
+ — Bookm 71:214 Ap '30 180w

"An inhuman grimness which by its monotony seems to lapse into night-marish unreality pervades these lives. The piling up of macabre detail and cruel crises overweighs the book. It cannot be life; it must surely be a terrible dream."
— Books p12 Mr 23 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

Reviewed by Jerome Mellquist
New Repub 63:240 Jl 16 '30 230w

"The author is said to be one of the better writers in Norway. His style is adequate, but not fine; his poetic touches are not very illuminating. The novel is a good popular novel, probably rather better than the general run, but it is not as glamourous or intense as its subject matter could make it."
+ N Y Times p18 Ap 20 '30 450w

"It was the author's obvious intention to show how the isolating mountains have bred strength and then turned that strength back upon itself; how forces frustrated have become morbid. . . This intention is blunted, however, by the dreamlike quality of the idealized characters, and the rather romantic and cloudy Fate that seems to hover over them. What does remain with the reader is the background: the slow passage of the seasons, the aspect of the mountains, in winter, in starlight, and in summer. Here Mr. Falkberget displays his not inconsiderable powers of description thoroughly and well."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1132 Je 14 '30 320w

FALKNER, LEONARD. Murder off Broadway. 236p $2 Holt [7s 6d Hamilton]
30-7102

The murder of Beverley Bancroft, Broadway actress, baffled Inspector Luff. But his friend John Ballinger, who knew enough about art to be able to tell a false painting, or copy, from an original, employed his art-detective methods to this murder case—in which, incidentally, a portrait was involved—and discovered the murderer.

Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 30w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 2 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 12 '30 480w

Reviewed by Marjorie Towers
Nation and Ath 47:598 Ag 9 '30 80w

"Ballinger works under cover, and the reader is not permitted to know what he is doing until he is ready to name the murderer. That is the chief flaw in this otherwise ingenious story."
+ — N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 100w

"You ought to be able to guess this one, for it's not complicated, and the author plays fair." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:351 F 26 '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 100w

FALLS, CHARLES BUCKLES. Modern A B C ^{2} book. unp il $2 Day
30-29346

" 'The Modern A B C Book' quite definitely belongs to the twentieth century with its A for airplane, J for jazz, S for skyscraper, and so on to Z for Zeppelin. All of the pictures belong to the machine age."—Books

Booklist 27:212 Ja '31

"For all it is rather stiffly contemporary, 'The Modern A B C Book' succeeds in being a good picture book for those children who will be more interested in T for tractor than T for tiger." Nancy Evans
+ — Books p9 N 16 '30 250w

"After 'The A, B, C Book' by the same author, 'The Modern A, B, C Book' is a disappointment. For the most part these illustrations are commonplace, with none of the beauty that illuminates 'How the Derrick Works,' by Wilfred Jones, to mention another picture book dealing with modern material. The pictures of 'J for Jazz' and 'K for Kodak' to cite two instances, have the quality of cheap advertisements, and the choice of 'Battleship for B' and 'U-Boat for U' seems unfortunate. The coloring lacks tone and depth." A. T. Eaton
— N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 100w

"Not so magnificent as the famous work with which [the author] rescued the alphabet for the contemporary child, for from Airplane to Zeppelin he is conditioned by the lines of machinery and can seldom use those first fine masses of color—though modern children will probably find it more fascinating." M. L. Becker
+ — Outlook 156:580 D 10 '30 80w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Irwin
Survey 65:340 D 15 '30 100w

FARGO, LUCILE FOSTER. Library in the school. (Lib. curriculum studies) 453p il $3 A.L.A.
027.8 School libraries. Library administration
30-8040

Written primarily as a textbook for library school students, this is a survey of present practice among school libraries in the United States covering the entire range of library service from elementary through high schools. Contents: Educational ideals and school library objectives; The school librarian and her staff; Socializing school library management; Reading as a school library project; Reference work in the school library; Teaching the use of the library; The basic book collection; Miscellaneous printed materials, visual aids, and additional book collections; Housing and equipping the school library; Business practice in the school library; Technical and mechanical processes; Attendance and circulation; The administrative program—general problems; The administrative program—special problems; List of accredited library schools.

Booklist 26:297 My '30

"Miss Fargo has a flair for writing which we seldom meet in textbooks; a spontaneous sense of humor bubbles to the surface at unexpected moments and adds much to the reader's pleasure. The lack of knowledge on the part of administrators, principals, and teachers of just such information as is contained in this book and the supplementary references given in its very valuable bibliographies, creates the chief stumbling block in the way of having successful school libraries in every school in the country." A. F. Whitcomb
+ Libraries 35:157 Ap '30 350w

Pratt p6 summer '30

"The writing is concise, and the discussion is reduced to a minimum. In spite of the brevity of treatment, however, the interest is maintained throughout by a lucid style and a humorous turn of phrase. . . This comprehensive study of the service of the school library will be found invaluable to the reader who can bring to it a background of library work." Hannah Logasa
+ School R 38:551 S '30 600w

FARIS, ELLSWORTH; LAUNE, FERRIS; and TODD, ARTHUR JAMES, eds. Intelligent philanthropy. 322p $4 Univ. of Chicago press [18s Cambridge univ. press]
361 Charities. Charity organization
30-27662

Twelve eminent educators have contributed to this volume, which "grew out of the desire of the directors of Wieboldt Foundation to get the advice of specialists with reference to fundamental principles involved in philanthropy." An introductory chapter by Professor Todd points out the relationship of each of the social sciences to the problems of philanthropy; and in a final chapter Professor Faris analyzes the various contributions to the main body of the symposium, and sums up the various points of view.

Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 180w

Reviewed by H. E. Jensen
Christian Century 48:27 Ja 7 '31 350w

"The book is rich in knowledge, thought and suggestion for all who are interested in either the subject of philanthropy, to which it makes a very interesting and valuable contribution, or in any one of the special viewpoints developed by the twelve contributors. For each of these discusses his own theme with such mastery that what he says is well worth reading."
+ N Y Times p34 S 28 '30 450w

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p947 N 13 '30 60w

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Roaming the Rockies; through national parks and national forests of the Rocky Mountain wonderland; with an introductory note by Horace M. Albright. 333p il $3 Farrar
917.8 Rocky mountains. National parks and reserves
30-11376

A book on the Rocky Mountain national parks: Yellowstone, Glacier, Bryce Canyon, Zion, the Kaibab Forest, and Rocky Mountain national park; and on the points of picturesque and historical interest in the West and Southwest, such as the mesas and pueblos of New

FARIS, J. T.—Continued
Mexico, the cliff-dwellings, the bad lands of Wyoming and the Black Hills. The author intersperses his description with bits of narrative interest and anecdote.

Booklist 27:22 S '30

"Mr. Faris's book, which is both historical and descriptive, covers the field admirably. He is not only an experienced traveler, but he knows how to marshal the fruits of observation into beguiling chapters. His advice is practical and his enthusiasm is contagious. The book is generously illustrated and carries an index."
+ Books p10 Je 8 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p3 My 17 '30 700w

"It is a book of superlatives, but then, it describes a superlative country. . . But it has an honorable purpose usefully performed: to sing the praises of the glories of our western wonderland, to fire readers with the desire to see it, and to tell them how."
+ Christian Century 47:759 Je 11 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

"The book is much more than a mere descriptive account of travels to and through national parks and forests and much more also than an ordinary guide book. Mr. Faris has collected a large and exceedingly varied amount of information about each region that he visits and in pleasant and graphic narrative he offers information about this and that, outstanding bits of history, description of scenery, quotations from famous writers who have been delighted by the same sights, anecdotes by the way, pioneer stories and whatever other interesting matter has come his way in the course of his 'roaming.' "
+ N Y Times p26 My 18 '30 350w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger
N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 300w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

FARJEON, ELEANOR. Perfect zoo. 31p il $2.50 McKay

29-22251

"For boys and girls who like pillow fights at bedtime and turn the house into a perfect Zoo. Peter and Betty and Pat were such children and suddenly found the house was a Zoo and they were part of it. Their experiences as animals with the rest of the nursery menagerie are exciting and of a nature to make them glad when they at last found the Green-Headed Beetle toasting cheese, and could resume their original shapes."—N Y World

---

"Miss Farjeon has a rich heritage. She is not only one of a distinguished English family, all of whose members have contributed to literature, art and music, but she is a granddaughter of America's own Joe Jefferson." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p11m N 17 '29 150w

"A lively, exceedingly polite story. You have only to look at the wrapper where five toy animals are voyaging in patchwork balloons. And when you discover that three of them are metamorphosed children condemned to search for the Green-headed Beetle; when you realize that the balloons were luckily growing on a neighboring cactus when king lion lost his temper, you will not be content until you can read the story from cover to cover."
+ Sat R 148:688 D 7 '29 100w

Springf'd Republican p12 D 20 '29 80w

FARJEON, ELEANOR. Tale of Tom Tiddler; with rhymes of London town. 244p il $2 Stokes

30-12299

A series of connected fairy stories relating the adventures of Tom Tiddler, a little boy of old London, who attempted to free his playmates from the giant Gogmagog. The stories give whimsical explanations of the origins of some of London's streets and byways: Shepherd's Bush, Threadneedle street, Haymarket, Moorgate, Bayswater, Lavender Hill, Limehouse, Oxford Circus, and many others.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"With a good scare at the beginning such as little children like, and real suspense as the plot thickens, we follow Tom's devious course amid fascinating difficulties as he struggles to get Gogmagog into the Leaden Hall. There is a delightful clutch for older readers at the very end." H. S. Wright
+ Books p8 Jl 27 '30 550w

"Here is a delightful story of a delightful little boy. . . His adventures in and about London afford equal entertainment to children of seven and seventy. Eleanor Farjeon has done much to delight children, but never more than in this, her Tale of Tom Tiddler."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 250w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ag 23 '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"A delightful, fanciful story, which may be read for its own sake by children and which will, at the same time, delight all lovers of London of any age, for whom the very names of the streets have a certain magic. Children will appreciate the humor and the dramatic quality and element of surprise which, without effort, runs through the book." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p15 Ag 17 '30 280w

Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 80w

"A charming story. She is so peculiarly fitted to write the history of London place names for children that it is a disappointment to find that she has come so near to doing it in this book and has not done it. A churlish criticism, no doubt, in view of the winning story that she has written." D .H. Withington
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:476 D 20 '30 320w

FARJEON, JOSEPH JEFFERSON. Appointed [2] date. 301p $2 Dial press

30-27753

One of those impossibly thick and wall-like English mists brings together a strangely assorted group of people in a house haunted by an unnamed fear. All sorts of mysterious and groping encounters take place in the mist as the story nears its climax—the "appointed" hour: midnight, August 31.

"A thoroughly entertaining story with an unusual setting that gives it the proper eerie touch."
+ Bookm 72:xxvi D '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 N 30 '30 100w

"Well contrived thriller." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:469 N 19 '30 120w

FARJEON, JOSEPH JEFFERSON. Following footsteps. 281p $2 Dial press

30-8261

John Trestle, a noble and virtuous young Englishman, took under his protection a girl named Mary, whose business was picking pockets for a gang of thieves. Unfortunately John was engaged to a young Englishwoman who was also noble and virtuous. But he fell in love with Mary, too—and fled with her all over Switzerland while pursued by her bad uncle and the gang. There could be only one solution to the triangle, as far as Mary was concerned—and, cornered by the pack, she made an heroic sacrifice at the top of the highest Swiss mountain.

Bookm 72:xxiii S '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 8 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 400w

"It is all pretty thin." Dashiell Hammett
— N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 70w

"In the hands of a less skillful writer the story would seem fantastically impossible, but Mr. Farjeon has invested it with a charm that makes it not only credible but entirely logical."
+ N Y Times p20 My 18 '30 280w

FARNHAM, MATEEL (HOWE) (MRS DWIGHT THOMPSON FARNHAM). Wild beauty. 316p $2 Dodd
30-22756

Conflict between David Frost's pretty young wife and his jealous, domineering mother governs this novel of marriage and family interference. Fanny, charming but irresponsible, makes certain mistakes which her husband (backed by his mother) finds hard to forgive. The situation reaches a climax following the birth of their daughter, and Fanny makes her gravest mistake in running off one evening with Bob Daniels. Divorce follows. For several years David's mother triumphs. Finally Sheila, the child, brings her unhappy, but wiser parents together again.

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

Reviewed by Esther Forbes
Bookm 72:76 S '30 280w

"Mateel Howe Farnham's 'Wild Beauty' is a workmanlike sort of novel. There is an old-fashioned tangibility to its situation, and one knows just where the characters stand. They wear their labels clearly and unashamedly; yet they are by no means wooden."
+ — Books p20 S 14 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p3 S 27 '30 350w

"Unfortunately, except for relationships of character, 'Wild Beauty' seldom quite attains conviction. It is frequently forced in dialogue, and breathlessly exaggerated in description." M. B.
— + N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 250w

"Throughout, the author's intentions are admirable; but it cannot be said that she has been successful in carrying them into effect."
— N Y Times p22 S 14 '30 480w

FARNOL, JEFFERY. Over the hills. 318p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Low]
30-30773

A romance in Mr Farnol's best fashion is this story of the foundling, named Adam Thursday, who (against a background of Jacobite Scotland) encounters many adventures and perils by land and by sea, and carries on a spirited love affair with beautiful Barbara MacGregor.

Bookm 72:x D '30 80w

"In Mr. Farnol's best manner, and a notable contribution to the literature of pretending." Will Cuppy
+ Books p36 D 7 '30 300w

"It is as good a story as Mr. Farnol has spun out of his prolific and colorful imagination in all the years, with their almost a score of novels, since he won his great success with his first romance, 'The Broad Highway.' "
+ N Y Times p32 N 16 '30 500w
Outlook 156:428 N 12 '30 70w

"The book is in general so naive and callow a performance that it should be correctly classified in the list of juvenile fiction for boys."
— Sat R of Lit 7:460 D 13 '30 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p944 N 13 '30 250w

FARRAR, JOHN CHIPMAN. Songs for Johnny-Jump-Up. 55p il $1.50 Smith, R.R.
811 30-28188

A volume of children's verse, much of it written at the request of the author's small son. A few of the poems have appeared elsewhere.

"The lines,
I want to escape all alone
With nobody spying about,
give a clue to the charm of this interpretative little volume, which reflects clear childhood memories and delight in a child's daily companionship. One feels the verses have not been done to a pattern." A. C. Moore
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p50 D '30 70w
Bookm 72:xxviii O '30 50w

"In the foreword the author explains that most of these poems were written at 'Johnny-Jump-Up's' special request on such subjects as 'Do Fishes Drink Up the Ocean' or phrases such as 'He's a Nice Boy But He Won't Stay Still.' This in part explains why these verses have a childlike quality and the rest of the explanation lies in the fact that the author can see what the child sees very much as the child sees it." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 130w

"Easy, whimsical, childlike, unforced, the small Songs of Wishing, and of Out-Doors, of the House, and of Circumstance follow each other across the pages of Mr. Farrar's book companioned by the equally simple and gay drawings of Rita Leach. The book is child-sized; easy to pick up; easy to enjoy; easy to carry away in one's memory."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:373 N 22 '30 120w

FARRELL, M. J. Taking chances. 303p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Mathews]
29-28508

Combining the themes of fox-hunting and modern love, the author introduces against a background of Irish country-house life a heroine, Mary Fuller, who is beautiful but thoroughly sensuous and reckless. Mary arrives as a bridesmaid to Maeve Sorrier who is about to marry Rowland Fountain; Mary falls in love with Rowland and immediately becomes his mistress. She succeeds in wrecking Maeve's life and the future of Rowland before marrying Roguey, Maeve's brother.

"The story gallops, like a mettlesome horse, nose into the wind and feet flying, not refusing hurdles, swiftly following the call of the hounds, careless of danger. It has a certain thunder and a certain gallantry. But it is only the story of a hunt."
+ — Books p10 F 23 '30 450w

"Since the passing of Donn Byrne there seems no living author to challenge Miss Farrell in her picturing of Irish country life." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 950w

"There is the stimulating freshness of the outdoors in this straightforwardly written novel of passionate hunting and no less passionate love on an Irish country estate. Miss Farrell's delight in the open fields, her enthusiasm for horses, dogs and the panoply of the hunt, of which she writes excitedly and well, give the story its distinctive qualities of color and movement. Yet the love story never quite carries the same degree of conviction as the hunting scenes." W. B.
+ — New Repub 62:107 Mr 12 '30 180w

"One fails to get the sense of human tragedy for a number of reasons. For one thing, the bare bones of the story are all that are presented, except for some admirable hunting scenes. English reviewers have found Miss Farrell's pictures of Irish country-house life drawn with fidelity. It is apparently a life without any artistic or intellectual interest; a life reduced to the simplest terms of sport and love; a sort of Pithecanthropus existence. It is no wonder that Mary and the rest of them indulge in hysterical eroticism—for there is nothing to distract them from themselves. And one cannot hunt twenty-four hours a day." Lillian Rogers
— + N Y Evening Post p9s F 22 '30 550w

"Occasionally there appears a book which disarms criticism. 'Taking Chances' is one of these, perhaps because Ireland gives enchantment always, and Miss Farrell had laid her scene there. . . It makes a very good story."

FARRELL, M. J.—Continued
+ N Y Times p6 F 16 '30 350w

"M. J. Farrell has built upon tried and true material which she nevertheless contrives to make freshly interesting and even charming. Taking Chances owes its sprightliness and élan in large measure to the delightfully flexible and free use of English—or is it Irish speech—which the characters employ most convincingly."
+ Outlook 154:425 Mr 12 '30 160w

"This is a disappointing successor to Young Entry. Conventionality of plot impedes the development of the characters. . . Throughout the story Miss Farrell strains after 'strong' drama, and does violence to the insight, humour, and charm of which she is obviously capable."
Spec 143:104 Jl 20 '29 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 330w

"The modern novel of sex and cocktails grafted on to the old-fashioned Irish tale of fox-hunting and country house life is a curious combination. That, however, is a not unfair description of Taking Chances. On the whole Miss Farrell has been successful. Her personages, with one exception, are perhaps only types, but they are true types. Her machinery is excellent, and the sporting and humorous accessories as good as before. Yet there is something unpleasant, not in her subject, but in her handling of it—a treatment of the sensual which becomes sickly after a while."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Jl 25 '29 450w

FARSON, NEGLEY. Black bread and red coffins (Eng title: Seeing red; to-day in Russia). 316p il $4 Century [15s Eyre]
914.7 Russia—Social conditions. Bolshevism—Russia 30-30111

In brief, descriptive chapters that resemble snapshots of the present Russian scene, Mr Farson reproduces his cursory impressions of the soviet workers themselves. He does not consider the life of the average Communist an unqualified utopia, nor is he entirely sympathetic with the soviet ideal. His pictures of these Russian peasants, industrial workers, their homes and their communities are realistic and un-retouched—certainly unbiassed. The book is illustrated with colored reproductions of soviet anti-church and anti-capital posters.

"Farson's book has none of the quiet quality of observation distilled that was to be found in Maurice Hindus's 'Broken Earth,' or Albert Rhys Williams's 'The Russian Land.' Farson is the reporter on the move, agile as a flea, dating his chapters from a dozen cities. He never has the time to do convincingly what the other two witnesses have done so well—contrast post and pre-revolutionary conditions which have changed the faces of persons and places." Ernestine Evans
— Books p4 N 2 '30 1050w
Boston Transcript p4 N 29 '30 270w

"Intellectually Mr. Farson is confused in regard to Russia, but he has sharp eyes, a swift pen: and his book can be highly recommended to those who are interested in the picturesque surface of Russian life."
+ — New Repub 65:120 D 10 '30 70w

"This is a bright book. It is a pity it is so bright, for Mr. Farson's style is out of accord with most of the things he has to relate; still, of his honesty, his powers of observation and his desire to show us what he can, there can be no question. Where he fails is in a sense of proportion, and in that quality that so renders a scene that we do not need to be told about it."
+ — New Statesman 35:424 Jl 5 '30 180w

"The author's interest is obviously in human beings rather than in abstract philosophy. He has not only traveled in Russia, but he has lived with the Russians. His book may be called sketchy; at any rate the sketching is vivid and realistic." W. B. Shaw
+ — R of Rs 82:19 N '30 200w

"A vivid presentation of the way the people live now in Russia, from Leningrad—Moscow to Nijni-Novgorod, Astrakhan, and the Caucasus. . . The collection of anti-religious and anti-capitalistic posters is interesting, but some effort at proof-reading should have been made —Vladimer, Vladikavka, Uppenski Cathedral, rubadhka, and other common words should not have been misspelt. Yet on the whole, a valuable light on the Russia of to-day."
+ — Sat R 150:462 O 11 '30 320w
Times [London] Lit Sup p687 Ag 28 '30 220w

FAULKNER, WILLIAM. As I lay dying. 254p $2.50 Cape
30-27682

Enclosing their dead mother, Addie Bundren, in a home-made coffin, Cash, Darl, Jewel, Dewey Dell and Vardaman—accompanied by the dazed father Anse—load her on a wagon and travel for several days across a rain-swept country to Jefferson, where Addie wants to be buried with her folks. Flooding rivers, a decaying corpse, buzzards, and a demented small boy are forced upon the reader's senses thru the subjective medium of the minds of this family of poor whites, and thru the more lucid, objective medium of the reflections of their acquaintances concerning their actions.

"The method Mr. Faulkner used in his last novel, 'The Sound and the Fury,' is here greatly modified, so that though something of that extraordinary madness hangs like a red mist over it, the lines of demarcation are mercifully clear. . . Parts of it are written with that tense, defiant obscureness, the self-sufficient dislocation of thought which withdraws itself from facile understanding; and other passages, clear in themselves, are absolutely unhinged from the point of view of the character whose mind they expose and whose impressionistic portrait they seem to contradict. Whatever Mr. Faulkner's next move is, he will not lack for audience any one who has followed his work thus far." M. C. Dawson
+ Books p6 O 5 '30 650w

"The whole affair is a psychological jig-saw puzzle, the pieces of which are represented by the distorted mentalities of half a dozen characters. The fascination of the story lies in the manner in which the phosphorescent rottenness of the family gradually reveals itself to the reader. But no one can doubt that the author of 'As I Lay Dying' has a really interesting mind, apparently untouched by the major intellectual platitudes of our day. His cosmos is awry; but it is his own, self-created. Genuine idiosyncrasy is rare among our younger novelists. For the most part they explain themselves too easily; they are conveniently ticketed. Mr. Faulkner cannot be so ticketed; that is one reason why he deserves attentive consideration." C. P. Fadiman
Nation 131:500 N 5 '30 550w

"The style, save for occasional passages of meaningless word juggling, is well adapted to the material; and the colloquial idiom these farmers speak is excellently handled. 'As I Lay Dying' does not offer a pleasant or inspiring view of humanity, but it is an uncommonly forceful book."
+ — New Repub 65:27 N 19 '30 180w

"The quality of Mr. Faulkner's own mind, even when it is latent, is of a high order; the quality of the minds of the people he chooses to set before you, in fluid Joycean terms, is, on the contrary, of a very low sort. The effect of the conjunction of the two qualities is to force the reader to call into question our prevalent assumption that the artist may never be quarreled with for his selection of material. We should be the last to deny the novelist the right to poke his nose into any human territory, but, faced with 'As I lay Dying,' the critic can hardly be blamed if some categorical imperative which persists in the human being (even at this late date) compels him to put this book in a high place in an inferior category."

— + N Y Times p6 O 19 '30 600w

"There is a disadvantage in this experimental method for a writer of Mr. Faulkner's remarkable imaginative power, which is that many of his characters would in fact be quite unable to find words for their deep and complex feelings; for Mr. Faulkner knows, as few poets do, that thoughts which lie too deep for tears are not the peculiar possession of those who can express them. In this difficulty, he cuts the knot, at times his people think in bad grammar and in dialect, as they would actually speak; at other times they think in sentences most skilfully constructed from a rich vocabulary to give as nearly as possible an impression of their incommunicable thoughts. The compromise cannot be called entirely successful, but the facing of the problem is another evidence of Mr. Faulkner's self-reliant experimentalism." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:362 N 22 '30 750w

FAURE, ELIE. Italian renaissance. (Great periods in art ser.) 55p pl $4 Boni [10s 6d Studio]

709.45 Art, Italian. Art, Renaissance [29-23066]

"Mr. Faure's thesis is that the Italian Renaissance, far from being a re-birth of ancient ideas, was the first flowering of the true Italian spirit, at last free from the restrictions of Church dogma." (Times [London] Lit Sup) The book is divided into three parts—on architecture, sculpture, and painting. The many illustrations are not, for the most part, of the best-known masterpieces.

"The publication by 'The Studio' of M. Faure's admirable handbook on the Italian Renaissance at a modest price is much to be commended. M. Faure is too well known as a writer on art to require introduction: in this book, short though it is, he has managed to convey, in an interesting manner always, an immense amount of information." Angus Davidson

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup372 D 7 '29 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30

"Mr. Faure argues his case with great subtlety and with acute references to examples of Italian art in illustration of his points, but he would have been more convincing had he not chosen 'so high and dark a style.' This does not necessarily render the book unreadable, but the reader is bound to nurse some resentment. However, we are grateful to Mr. Faure for giving us incidentally to his argument a vigorous picture of Italian life in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries free, on the one hand from the mawkish sentimentality of nineteenth-century historians and, on the other, from the lurid glare of Don Tarquinio."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p515 Je 27 '29 180w

FAUSSET, HUGH I'ANSON. Proving of psyche. 320p $3.50 Harcourt [12s 6d Cape, J.]

801 Romanticism. Humanism 30-13681

The author, the biographer of Tolstoy and Cowper, has written in these critical essays a defence of romanticism, and at the same time an attack upon the academic new humanism. In The disease of dualism he shows the discord between the two schools of thought, and puts in his plea for a creative individualism.

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '30 550w

"The whole book is closely reasoned and well written, but it is not easy reading; Mr. Fausset employs a terminology to express his ideas of which it is difficult to approve, and he indulges in references to a certain 'ideal' personality which arouse my suspicions of his whole program." C. H. Grattan

Nation 130:493 Ap 23 '30 900w

"Mr. Fausset, who has written a number of brilliant and thoughtful monographs on romantic poets, is here unusually troubled and obscure in his terminology. He argues with metaphors and hypostases, and is splendidly vague about such things as the chemistry of the soul. So far as he is concerned with the limitations of Mr. Babbitt's literary judgments, with his prejudices against the romantics and his misunderstanding of them, this part is quite admirable, and is very welcome: it should have been done long ago; as an argument for romanticism it is somewhat less effective." P. M. Jack

+ — New Repub 63:105 Je 11 '30 700w

New Statesman 34:272 N 30 '29 650w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

N Y Times p6 Je 8 '30 700w

"Perhaps the chief single tribute that Mr. Babbitt has received is this book by Mr. Fausset, the English critic, well known as a historian and apologist of romantic literature. Here he pays his respects to Mr. Babbitt as a humanist, a classicist, and an enemy. It is a formidable work which is worthy of the formidable system of thought that provoked it." J. C. Ransom

Sat R of Lit 6:868 Mr 29 '30 1100w

"This is the most important book that Mr Fausset has yet given us, for in it he leaves the study of the past to find his bearings in the present. About half the book is devoted to an examination of Prof Babbitt's critical philosophy, and this is perhaps the better half. Mr Fausset is 'up against' a very shrewd and very learned opponent, one of the most impressive of all living critics. But Mr Fausset is nothing daunted, and in some instances, as for example in his exposure of that critic's misrepresentation of Wordsworth, he scores heavily."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 16 '30 470w

Times [London] Lit Sup p856 O 31 '29 1400w

Reviewed by W. L. Sperry

Yale R n s 19:825 summer '30 450w

FEBVRE, LUCIEN PAUL VICTOR. Martin Luther: a destiny; tr. by Roberts Tapley. 320p $3.75 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Luther, Martin 29-29537

"Monsieur Febvre brushes aside as irrelevant and unimportant most of the familiar anecdotes connected with Luther. Some he declares are pure fabrications, and others have been distorted by exaggeration. All have been used either by the Catholic Church to discredit the Reformer, or by Protestant theologians to prove his greatness. But, true or false, they do not matter when Luther's mission is recognized, and his minor human inconsistencies fade in the light of his devotion to three doctrines . . . Monsieur Febvre makes out a plausible case for Luther's constant and passionate belief in his three doctrines from his cloistered youth to his death."—New Repub

---

"A biography in the modern style told with the verve of a scholar and the insight of a psychologist. This is a book of note and holds readers and students by its fascinating presentation." L. L. R.

+ Churchman p15 D 28 '29 70w

Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

"Here is an excellent book that deserves, but does not require, a long review, for it may be commended unqualifiedly as one of the best written and most interesting biographies of recent years, and it seems to have lost nothing

FEBVRE, L. P. V.—Continued
through the translation . . . Though popularized, this is a biography not lacking in keen psychological analysis or scholarship. In the opinion of the reviewer, the book is not inferior in quality or interest to the writings of such interpreters of character as Lytton Strachey or André Maurois." K. F. Geiser
+ Nation 130:191 F 12 '30 200w

"It is an interesting estimate of Luther's life which Monsieur Febvre endeavors to present, but the book is too episodic in form to make a convincing and connected narrative of what the author conceives to have been a self-evident destiny." Neilson Abeel
+ — New Repub 62:106 Mr 12 '30 320w
New Statesman 35:738 S 20 '30 850w

"A brilliant piece of analytical writing, the book is admirable for its intuitive subtlety and logical clarity." R. C. B. Brown
+ N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 400w

"Professor Febvre knows his Luther. That is what makes his work so well worth while. But he is a man who has to tell the story in his own way, and the colors on his palette are so varied and so ample that sometimes they are splashed on the canvas with a bewildering profusion." P. W. Wilson
+ N Y Times p11 N 24 '29 1600w
St Louis 28:52 F '30
Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 12 '30 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p947 N 13 '30 250w

"Do not attempt this as a first book on Luther. But if you have the moderate background Professor Febvre presupposes, you will find here a fascinating interpretation of a religious genius who was carried along by social forces he could not nor cared to control. A clear-eyed and friendly critic steers a well-planned course between eulogizing and debunking."
+ World Tomorrow 13:91 F '30 60w

FEDERN, KARL. Baron Fritz; tr. from the German by Donald Douglas. 296p $2.50 Farrar
30-22438

The romantic side of war receives attention thru this study of the character of Baron Fritz Latour, a gay young officer in command of an artillery regiment in eastern Germany. The Baron (whose mother was Irish) has nothing in his makeup of the stolid, war-machine Hun. He laughs his way thru many military difficulties, he blithely conquers many hearts, and he wins the love of his men.

Bookm 72:74 S '30 320w

"It owes its authentic note, undoubtedly, to the fact that it is a novelized version of the diary records of the cheerful young Fritz himself and also to Mr. Federn's skill in melting the fragments into a very picturesque and colorful whole. If its point of view and half-humorous philosophy throughout is not wholly new in the records of recent war writing, it is distinctly an innovation coming from a German source." Eugene Lohrke
+ Books p18 S 21 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 250w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton
Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 80w

"The book gives an admirable sense of having been cut out of life rather than composed. The incidents which are recounted are true to life and true to war and there is no reason to believe that the picture is a false one."
+ N Y Times p6 S 7 '30 520w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:18 O '30 180w

"A gallery of often satirical character drawings, and countless snapshots of life in and just behind the German battle lines, all vigorous, all high in color, all executed with dash and spirit, full of atmosphere." E. G. Taylor
+ Sat R of Lit 7:200 O 11 '30 420w

FEILER, ARTHUR. Russian experiment; tr.
2 by H. J. Stenning (Eng title: Experiment of bolshevism). 272p $2 Harcourt [10s 6d Allen, G.]

947.084 Russia—Economic conditions. Bolshevism—Russia 30-33673

The author, a German economist who has made a careful and impartial study of Russia today, presents in these chapters the economic, political, social and cultural aims of Bolshevism, with its keynote of proletarianism. Herr Feiler believes that the Soviets, in developing industrialism at the expense of agriculture, which latter they propose to socialize by instituting collective farms, endanger the existence of the Soviet state because of the bitter opposition of the peasants to this plan. His conclusion is that collectivism is a challenge and a menace to the individualistic doctrines of Western civilization.

"Feiler is a German who studied Russia on the ground. He is open-minded without being a bolshevist. He brings his story down to March, 1930. The story of Russia needs revising every month, but this is good as far as it goes." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 D 31 '30 680w

"It was perhaps inevitable that a study envisaging every aspect of Bolshevism—social, industrial and political, in past, present and future—should at times take on the appearance of journalistic snapshots. If this defect should be found in Herr Feiler's book, however, it will be counterbalanced by the manner in which he has approached his task. He takes no Bolshevist statement on trust. He is critical in serious enough fashion to assess Bolshevist conditions against those of Tsarist Russia and not against those of Western Europe. And if the allowances he makes for revolutionary failure seem sometimes over-charitable, compensation may be found in the absence of those comprehensive judgments, favorable and unfavourable, which provide the keynote of most books on Bolshevist Russia."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p880 O 30 '30 1150w

FEILING, KEITH GRAHAME. Sketches in nineteenth century biography. 181p $3 (7s 6d) Longmans

920 Great Britain—Biography 30-20125

Biographical sketches, reprinted for the most part from the London Times, of Pitt, Canning, Croker, Southey, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Newman, Lytton Bagehot, Disraeli, Curzon, and Lord Liverpool.

"Though these sketches illuminate the political background of England, they equally insist on the need of linking the future to what is best in the past. As an aid to much that is now taking place in the Conservative ranks in England, Mr. Feiling's book is one not to be missed." Leslie Brayshaw
+ N Y Times p5 Ja 4 '31 800w
St Louis 28:300 D '30

"This volume of biographical sketches shows Mr. Feiling at his best. It contains a dozen portraits of statemen and thinkers, from Pitt to Curzon, of widely different temperaments, and the connecting link between them is the Tory faith which all professed. In short, Mr. Feiling has successfully performed the difficult task of writing a history of Toryism, since its reincarnation in the days of George III, in the form of a series of studies of its leading exponents."
+ Sat R 150:320 S 13 '30 700w

"Mr. Feiling is one of the most interesting political writers of the day, and people who like reading and thinking about politics will welcome another volume from him. The title Mr. Feiling has given his essays is a misnomer. People who come to the book looking for biography will not find it: what it contains is a series not of biographical sketches but of argumentative studies of political thoughts and actions. And of course a book of arguments will scarcely fail to exhibit, for many at least of its readers, some extremely disputable assertions and opinions."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p753 S 25 '30 2400w

FEIS, HERBERT. Europe, the world's banker, 1870-1914; an account of European foreign investment and the connection of world finance with diplomacy before the war; with an introd. by Charles P. Howland. (Publications of the Council on foreign relations) 469p $5 Yale univ. press

332 Finance. Investments. World politics

30-29459

Tracing the outward flow of surplus European capital from 1870 to the years of the war, 1914-1918, and the financial rivalry between the leading European powers during this period of empire-building, the author shows the relation of this economic competition to other causes of the World war. Professor Feis first discusses the accumulation of capital, areas of investment, and the lending policies of various powers. Part three of the volume consists of studies in lending and borrowing.

"Recent years have brought forth a prodigious literature upon the origins of the World War. Most of this literature has consisted of a microscopic examination of diplomatic intriguing that was the occasion rather than the cause of that war. So far as I know, Mr. Feis is the first author to pry into the financial rivalries of governments, and to show how these rivalries, indirectly at least, led nations finally to jump at each other's throats. . . No student of world finance or politics can afford to neglect this important work." R. L. Buell

+ Books p6 O 26 '30 1450w

"Mr. Feis has written a most interesting book crammed with facts about the system of politics and money which so much affected the Europe of yesterday, and still affects it. He has been most temperate in drawing conclusions and in expressing his opinion. . . The work is really a valuable handbook of international politics." J. H. S.

+ Christian Science Monitor p12 N 29 '30 700w

"The interlacings of finance and diplomacy are beautifully illustrated throughout this narrative, making one realize very definitely that the pre-war European alignments and crises can be understood only by taking account of the existing borrowing-lending relationships. The account given by Professor Feis is strictly factual throughout, with no attempt at moralizing." Walter Langsam

+ Current Hist 33:x D '30 900w

"So far as the reviewer can see, Feis has not missed anything of importance. He not only knows the material, but he knows how to use it; he understands the political motives and considerations which lay behind these financial transactions. . . In many instances Feis's treatment is the only adequate one in existence, but even in the larger sense the book is a reliable and thoroughly readable piece of research, one that no student of international relations can afford to overlook."

+ Foreign Affairs 9:355 Ja '31 230w

"A painstaking, scholarly and altogether admirable account of the international financial operations which, from about 1870 to 1914, overlaced a large part of the world with loans and investments from few of which the political motive was absent. Where others have searched the diplomatic documents for light on the political origins of the war, Mr. Feis has turned to the records of treasuries, banks and industrial or commercial undertakings. His book thus supplements all that has been said about the background of the war by adding an important chapter which has too long remained unwritten." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p3 N 23 '30 1600w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 83:8 Ja '31 100w

FERBER, EDNA. Cimarron. 388p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-8609

The background is Oklahoma from the days of the Run in 1889, while it was still Indian territory, thru all its vicissitudes of pioneer statehood days, Indians, the discovery of oil, down to the present. The protagonists of the tale are Yancey Cravat, a picturesque figure, part dreamer and part gunman, always looking for new frontiers, and his wife Sabra, descended from languid and gently bred Southern ancestors, yet who was called upon to do a man's work and did it.

Reviewed by E. W. Hawkins

Atlantic Bookshelf p22 My '30 220w

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"Although the central story of Sabra Cravat lacks something of the charm of Show Boat and So Big, still Cimarron is certainly Edna Ferber at her best."

+ Bookm 71:440 Jl '30 700w

"While Miss Ferber knows a great deal, at first hand, about life in Chicago flats, she knows little at first hand about life in a wild country. Her immense mass of material is never sufficiently fused and molded by any emotion. The characters are often buried under piles of facts and seldom attain to a convincing reality. This book contains a fine intention, a conscientious effort, a good deal of dullness and not a little absurdity. In spots it shows powers of observation and imagination which do not get much exercise, chiefly, I believe, because Miss Ferber has chosen a remote and unfamiliar subject." Harvey Fergusson

— + Books p7 Mr 23 '30 1100w

"It is obvious that Miss Ferber must have drawn upon her imagination as well as upon the printed records that she doubtless made the starting point of her story, but her imagination blends so well with the fact that we seem to be reading the accounts of an eye witness. If we want to read about life in Oklahoma in the not so very long ago, we may seek it in Miss Ferber's latest novel, and we shall find it there in much greater abundance and with more truth than in many books that yet are fiction even though they do not wear its label." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 29 '30 1400w

"Miss Ferber has distilled from the heady, strong mash of those days a draught that gives the reader such an intoxication as those days were themselves. There is such a sense of the gaudy life as no minute or meticulous statement of the facts could ever give one. All of the melodramatic quality of that life is in 'Cimarron.' The book is a powerful novel and not at all mere sensation. It certainly is the most thrilling thing that ever has come from the pen of Miss Ferber, and just as certainly the most memorable." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 Mr 22 '30 570w

"Besides the rush and the zest of the narrative, and the dramatic contrasts of the two chief figures, there are other reasons why this is a book to be remembered. It is a superb example of massing, of selecting and arranging the most effective details out of the great number that must have caught the author's fancy. The style fits the material. It is fluid, in the vernacular; not beautiful or distinguished, but picturesque, and almost as impetuous as Yancey Cravat's own."

+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30

"It is the Fairy Story of the Pioneer and the Indian. It delights my eye but, like most fairy stories, it does nothing to my heart. Yancey, dying with a broken chest, will play Hamlet tomorrow night, or if not Hamlet then Buffalo Bill. And if Yancey is a stage hero, the Osages in 'Cimarron' are stage Indians. Only in the incredible hour of their triumph, when they wear blankets over beaded Paris frocks, when the miserable spot of earth that they had been last exiled to bursts with oily wealth beyond any dreams, are they real. They will help make 'Cimarron' a successful musical comedy, a super-feature movie. Even they, even the Wild West, cannot make it into the great book it ought to be." Dorothy Van Doren

FERBER, EDNA—Continued
Nation 130:494 Ap 23 '30 650w
Nation and Ath 47:447 Jl 5 '30 50w

"Miss Ferber makes no effort to conceal her admiration for her characters; her glamor is ladled out in large buckets, but it makes entertaining reading. Whether she has succeeded in conveying the actual spirit of the place and period is doubtful." G. T. H.
New Repub 62:308 Ap 30 '30 230w

"It is very long since I have read any book with such enjoyment as I found in the reading of Cimarron. Its pace, its colour, its panache, its gallant and defiant courage, its admirable, unapologetic Americanism are all delightful."
+ New Statesman 35:217 My 24 '30 400w

"Those who like their novels to be unerring in their psychology will find Miss Ferber unsatisfying time and again. She is frequently illogical, free in her use of coincidence, and unsure in her handling of deep emotion. But a book like 'Cimarron' is to be read for other reasons. Read it for its vivid re-creation of the scenes through which Yancey and Sabra lived, for its splendidly kaleidoscopic view of a young American city coming into existence, with its shifting social patterns and its broad diversity of types, with its background of disinherited Indians coming at last, by an ironic turn of fate, into that bewildering wealth which oil brought to them. 'Cimarron' is not the sort of book one reads again and again for beauties newly discovered; it is a book which one reads once with avidity, for a picture that remains indelible."
+ N Y Times p4 Mr 23 '30 1000w

" 'Cimarron' proves again Miss Ferber's unerring sense of news values. The Oklahoma land rush of 1889 has long been awaiting the imaginative historian. The whole story of Oklahoma, with the parceling out of lands, the clash of the sooners and the boomers, the drilling for oil and the rise of cities of great wealth, has all the elements of an American rhapsody. It reveals the ability to shape an enormous amount of detail into a flowing narrative. It reveals what dramatists so often lack—the skilful developing of two or three major characters. True, Miss Ferber rarely deals with more than one protagonist at a time. But she does full justice to both Yancey and Sabra Cravat." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p13 Mr 20 '30 900w

"The same qualities which made Show Boat popular appear in Cimarron. And the same defects mar it. Such stories of American life have not only an entertainment value but also a certain historic worth because they give a picture, unquestionably authentic, of a phase of American development. To be sure it is a crude picture, a chromo, a piece of sympathetic and lively illustration rather than a work of art."
+ Outlook 154:588 Ap 9 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30
Pratt p39 summer '30

"It must be admitted that the business of the novel is not plot, nor setting, nor incident, but the notation of the human heart. Since Miss Ferber's triumphant journalism has rather neglected this important business, she can scarcely blame those who concentrate upon the things which she has placed in the foreground and who criticize her work accordingly. In a volume wherein the tourist's notebook and photograph album so constantly obtrude, it is natural that readers who have notebooks and albums more extensive and reliable should compare notes and raise objections. The later chapters, which deal with matters observed by the author for herself, are more acceptable, but even here the feeling which underlies them has escaped her. She has done excellent reporting, has constructed a ripping yarn, has given us novel incidents, novel characters, a fresh setting, and for this we should be grateful. Her book is a fantasy. Judged as fantasy, it is a gorgeous piece of work." Stanley Vestal
— + Sat R of Lit 6:841 Mr 22 '30 850w

Reviewed by I. M. Parsons
Spec 144:913 My 31 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 1350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p368 My 1 '30 600w

FERBER, NAT JOSEPH. New York. 345p $2.50 Covici
29-19524

"Although Mr. Ferber's book is rather comprehensively entitled 'New York,' it confines itself exclusively to the activities of Russian and Polish Jews who emigrated to America in the eighteen-eighties. Julius Midas, the central figure, is symbolical of the money-grubbing type who after making his millions (in this case from real estate) can think of nothing more sensible to do than to give away large sums to charity."—Sat R of Lit

---

"Without being in the least pretentious or 'literary', Mr. Ferber has written an altogether interesting addition to the list of New York novels. His book is fiction with a definite historical value." Herschel Brickell
+ Bookm 70:317 N '29 370w

"Sprinkling 400 names of prominent realtors, builders, Broadway characters and Manhattan lights over such significant facts as one may glean from a City Hall guide or the reference rooms of any branch library, Nat J. Ferber has accomplished the feat of projecting this material through 345 pages. With admirable courage he sums up the results as a novel in the title 'New York.' "
— N Y Times p30 O 6 '29 300w

"At times almost a catalog of Jewish names. But from its special point of view, fascinating story of growth of metropolis." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 153:350 O 30 '29 30w

" 'New York' has no literary value; Mr. Ferber fails on the few occasions when he deserts business coups for emotional or philosophical flights, but as a reflection of a period of feverish building and land development by individuals who never stop to think why they are doing what they are doing, his book may be of some interest." G. T. Hellman
— + Sat R of Lit 6:635 Ja 11 '30 200w

FERBER, NAT JOSEPH. Spawn; a novel of degeneration. 371p $2 Farrar
30-30577

To Pike Hollow, an isolated farming community in the Catskills, came Heinrich Reimer, in 1844, to establish himself as an autocratic land owner with many tenant farmers in his fealty. Inbreeding, illegitimacy, and all the evils of indiscriminate mating prevail from one generation to another in this isolated settlement. The interest of the story centers about Madge Chilvers, who, in spite of her grandmother's admonitions that she must be properly married, is not quite strong enough to live otherwise than her environment and the traditions of the valley dictate.

Bookm 72:x D '30 80w

"The history ('Spawn' is based on fact) needs the Hamsun of 'Women at the Pump' or a Rölvaag—or a Melville if it is to be expanded beyond the case history or the sociologist's report. But Mr. Ferber is no Hamsun. He has written his novel with a full realization of its sensational qualities; he has dwelt on the details of amorous dalliance repetitiously; the genealogical trees of illegitimacy and incest are important for his purpose, but we do not need them so frequently as he gives them. Mr. Ferber's prose is heavy and sober. It is frequently sensational in metaphor and simile, attempting clumsily a symbolism that at best would be far-fetched and in doubtful taste; the narrative smirks and leers. With so many people in a book one does not perhaps expect subtle and careful characterization of all the figures; one does, however, demand far more than Mr. Ferber gives. Here is no Rabelaisian narrative, healthy in its vigor and gusto; instead, a woolly account of an obscene society crudely written, cumbersome and pretentious." Coley Taylor

— Books p16 O 19 '30 800w

Nation 131:630 D 3 '30 280w

"The author has projected his sympathies zealously into the characters of this story, and has refrained from overcapitalizing the lurid and melodramatic features inherent in the tale. . . Except for occasional moments in the portrayal of Madge, however, the story is likely to remain of more lasting interest to the sociologist seeking case histories than to the reader demanding a substantial nourishment in serious literature."

N Y Times p6 O 26 '30 650w

"Ferber has written an ambitious book, in which he exhibits the consequences of illicit relationships in a small community. His honesty of purpose is never in doubt. . . Ferber deals with so many characters that his story lacks the cohesion achieved by Zola in 'Germinal.' It would have been fortunate if the author had appreciated the lighter aspects of human character, a faculty well developed in Ladislas Reymont. But Ferber is so taken with the seriousness of his message that he never smiles." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p11 O 17 '30 650w

"As sturdy a piece of naturalism as we have had in a long time, Nat Ferber's novel follows the slice-of-life theory in fine fashion and down to the last detail. Reimer is a typical Catskill patriarch, and the speech and manners of all the characters is true to the région. The author has an appreciation of local color and the picturesque, and his style, though plain, is often quite beautiful."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:314 N 8 '30 380w

FERGUSON, JOHN ALEXANDER. Murder on the marsh. 303p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

30-8605

A particularly clever murder is committed on Romney Marsh. There are clues but they seem to lead nowhere. When the young policeman who has several good ideas about the case is also killed, the investigators redouble their efforts and finally discover this man who commits murder while busy with the apparently harmless occupation of casting a fish line.

Booklist 27:31 S '30

Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 Ap 6 '30 120w

"This story offers what is, so far as the reviewer is aware, an entirely new method of committing a murder. It is a highly ingenious method, but one which would have about one chance in a million of being successful. Several difficulties will at once be apparent to the reader, among them that of accurate timing. Just how this timing was accomplished the author fails to explain."

N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 120w

"More exciting and pretentious thrillers are to be met with in the current crop, but none which contains a solider novelty in plot or a display of detection superior to that which solves the enigma." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 120w

"There are several likely suspects, but too much stress is laid on the mystery of the marsh and what it hides, and the one thrill came at the end of the book, when we were too weary with rather involved sleuthing to react." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 100w

FERGUSON, WILLIAM J. I saw Booth shoot Lincoln. ltd ed 63p il $2.50 Houghton

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham—Assassination. Booth, John Wilkes 30-5059

"W. J. Ferguson was a call-boy in the Ford Theater in Washington on the night when Booth shot Lincoln. His position at the Prompter's desk enabled him to look directly into the President's box and to see what occurred there. After sixty-five years he records his memories of that night and its events."—Books

Booklist 26:354 Je '30

"There are interesting descriptions of the old theater and the early actors. There is some new evidence that seems to still further clear the other actors of that night from any connection with the plot and there are a few details regarding Lincoln's actions and about the assassination that are added to our store."

Books p19 Mr 23 '30 180w

"His recollections correct some mistakes that have crept into general accounts of the event and illuminate some points in its history. He says that interviews with him have misquoted him and he has written this exact and detailed account in order to make his contribution to the story of that night just and accurate. It is a contribution well worth putting into book form."

+ N Y Times p32 F 16 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30

FERGUSSON, HARVEY. Footloose McGarnigal. 274p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-847

"Relates the adventures of a foot-loose youth who wanders from New York to New Mexico and back again. He sees life in the artist colonies of Santa Fé and Taos and incidentally there is some amusing comment on the thinly veiled personalities of those communities. McGarnigal soon wearies alike of the exotic and arty and the great open spaces and he accordingly wires a girl in New York for a dinner date and the novel ends thus with none too subtle implications."—Outlook

Booklist 26:234 Mr '30

"This is a very readable and pleasant narrative: its general effect is ironic but curiously inconclusive." T. S. Matthews

+ — Bookm 71:99 Mr '30 370w

"This is an altogether delightful and entertaining book which will be enjoyed not only because of the substance, but because Mr. Fergusson writes with color and zest. . . Blest with the leisurely manner of an artist who is sure of himself and the honesty of what he is doing, Mr. Fergusson has written a book—not a novel—which lives and breathes." Thayer Hobson

+ Books p2 Ja 5 '30 580w

"More a succession of sketches than a fully dimensioned novel, it is molded to a frail unity by vivid characterization and an accomplished style. Mr. Fergusson knows the background of his tale intimately, he has constituted his hero a full-sized though not overly complex person, and the result is a book always entertaining."

+ N Y Times p8 F 2 '30 380w

"Some very good writing has gone into the making of this book which is entertaining although unimportant."

+ — Outlook 154:71 Ja 8 '30 80w

"Mr. Fergusson writes extremely well. He describes the Southwest without the slightest trace of sentimentalism or conventionality. His observation is notably acute. . . 'Footloose McGarnigal' is not a genuine novel, but rather a travel narrative, a variety of the picaresque romance. It has a beginning and a middle, but it lacks an end. We notice the absence of plot only rarely, however, for the pictorial quality of the narrative is almost always absorbing, and our acquaintance with McGarnigal is constantly stimulating and refreshing."

Sat R of Lit 6:682 Ja 25 '30 280w

FERGUSSON, HARVEY—Continued

"It is as an amiable and often amusing chronicle of life in the modern West that this novel must primarily be commended."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p557 Jl 3 '30 150w

FERM, VERGILIUS TURE ANSELM, ed. What is Lutheranism? a symposium in interpretation. 307p $2.50 Macmillan

284.1 Lutheran church 30-13517

A symposium of essays by twelve professors and ministers in interpretation of the broad features of Lutheranism.

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 30 '30 220w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:785 Je 18 '30 350w

"Perhaps no denomination in America is more divided, organically, theologically, and racially, than is the Lutheran. And it is very difficult for a non-Lutheran to appreciate the fine distinctions that separate in some instances. Doctor Ferm has therefore rendered a service of inestimable worth in presenting this 'Symposium in Interpretation.' Twelve men, ministers and professors, all leaders within the Lutheran body, have collaborated to give this interpretation of that one faith to which they all in general adhere. Within the group may be found all shades of opinion from that which may be termed the most orthodox to that which is most liberal and free. The book in its arrangement as well as in the scholarly treatment of its subject is a most worthy contribution to the study of the American Church." R. E. E. Harkness

+ Crozer Q 7:412 Jl '30 150w

Reviewed by Wayne Leys

Int J Ethics 41:138 O '30 650w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 12 '30 100w

FERRARA, ORESTES. Private correspondence of Nicolo Machiavelli. 130p il $2.25 Johns Hopkins

B or 92 Machiavelli, Niccolò 29-17118

A summary of Machiavelli's life, his letters to his friends and theirs to him, and a critical analysis of the letters. Dr Ferrara's purpose is to prove that the modern conception of the character of Machiavelli is erroneous, and that his real personality was made up of amiable and noble qualities.

"It would have been advisable to make the title read: Machiavelli as Mirrored in his Private Correspondence. For that is precisely what results, a still certainly incomplete but none the less breathing and vivacious sketch of Machiavelli as father, husband, friend, official, and boon companion. . . The sinister picture of his personal traits and private activities manufactured after his death may be now cheerfully consigned to oblivion. Not the least service rendered by Dr. Ferrara in this competent piece of reconstruction is his explanation of how caricature came to replace the reality." Ferdinand Schevill

+ Am Hist R 35:393 Ja '30 380w

"The little volume not only gives us a vivid and entertaining picture of Machiavelli's 'human' side, it also clarifies our conception of his general outlook on politics." F. W. Coker

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:478 My '30 130w

Boston Transcript p5 D 7 '29 500w

"The value of this essay by such a distinguished scholar and diplomat as Dr, Ferrara lies in the fact that it corrects the traditional view of Machiavelli which his famous work, The Prince, has impressed upon the world. There was a very interesting side to the statesman whose name has become associated with political double-dealing, and it is that human side we begin to appreciate by studying the private correspondence which is so far not generally known, even to scholars."

+ Current Hist 31:230 N '29 120w

"The letters show, the author concludes, that the idea prevalent for so long that Machiavelli was the very incarnation of evil is a myth, and that his faults were only those of his time. The Renaissance was a period of intense realism and in the political field Machiavelli was its most conspicuous representative. This idea is not new, but the letters which Dr. Ferrara makes accessible in English add confirmation of it. The reader can only regret that the letters are not given in full and that they are not left a little more to tell their own story." Eloise Ellery

+ — Nation 130:20 Ja 1 '30 260w

St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO. Unity of the world; with a foreword by Charles A. Beard; [tr. by Howard Coxe]. 196p $2.50 Boni

341 International cooperation. Political science. World politics. Nationalism and nationality. Language, Universal 30-11534

"Signor Ferrero here attempts to analyze the present state of the world and to sort out the tendencies favoring or working against unity. The book begins with a summary of the history of the last four centuries, beginning with the voyages of Columbus, as the effort of European races to conquer and unify the world."—Books

"The book is a pleasantly written essay setting forth some fresh generalizations which, although original and suggestive, hardly impress one as convincing or significant. Ferrero discusses the present trends and the probable developments in international affairs against the rich background of historical reference. Whether or not one agrees with the author's sweeping statements or confident analysis, his theories are challenging and his style of presentation piquant." E. P. H.

+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:787 Ag '30 320w

Booklist 27:12 S '30

"He is as fond of a conceit and as careless of its application, as any poet bursting with poetic license. His book, consequently, is full of a vast amount of pet ideas; ideas pampered far beyond their importance." Isidor Schneider

— Books p10 Je 15 '30 750w

"Mr. Ferrero writes brilliant and lucid prose, upon subjects that might well be dull and sodden. . . He should be the first to admit that he has written merely a large scale view of the whole disordered scene, has not attempted to annotate and fasten down. But he has nevertheless written a genuinely exciting book."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 320w

Reviewed by P. W. Slosson

Current Hist 32:636 Jl '30 950w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin

Nation 130:738 Je 25 '30 600w

"Dr. Ferrero plays with the facts of our time. Hither and thither he tosses them, always with an applied rotation that leaves us guessing what after all is to be the final objective to a trajectory thus wayward. . . Over and over again he uses language that, unqualified, overstates what he wants to say." P. W. Wilson

— N Y Times p11 My 4 '30 1800w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 150w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

Sat R of Lit 6:932 Ap 12 '30 300w

FERRIER, WILLIAM WARREN. Origin and development of the University of California. 710p $5 Sather gate bk. shop, 2271 Telegraph st., Berkeley, Cal.

378.73 California. University—History. Education—California 30-10384

"This is a statistical account of a young, sprouting, ultimately hustling Western university that had small beginnings and little money, but was backed generously by its State. Chapter after chapter describes in detail the grants of land and money accorded the college year by year, the progression of its buildings, its growing importance in the lives of the youth of California, its various presidents, its final era of expansion."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 700w

"As a book this is not likely to be of general interest, it is such a severe adherent of fact and such an encyclopedia of useful knowledge! Only heads of other universities or graduates of the one it describes will hold it in proper esteem. Possibly its sale would have been enhanced by a slightly different and more pictorial and charming method of description."
— N Y Times p18 Je 29 '30 130w

FERRIS, HELEN JOSEPHINE (MRS ALBERT B. TIBBETS), ed. When I was a girl; the stories of five famous women as told by themselves. 301p il $2.50 Macmillan

920.7 Woman—Biography. Schumann-Heink, Ernestine. Scudder, Janet. Curie, Mme Marie (Sklodowska). Addams, Jane. Sugimoto, Etsu (Inagaki) 30-18882

The life stories of five famous women—Ernestine Schumann-Heink, Janet Scudder, Marie Curie, Jane Addams, and Etsu Sugimoto—told from their autobiographical works by Miss Ferris, who supplies an introductory sketch to each of the five accounts.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"Miss Ferris has an uncanny way of knowing what girls like to read and what they find most interesting. Perhaps no girl under fourteen will be prepared to get the most from them, but after that age there is no reader who would not follow them with absorption."
+ Bookm 71:vii Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by Barbara Nolen
Books p8 N 9 '30 100w

"Miss Ferris has written an introductory article to each of these stories. Her biographic summaries are splendid and will act as a very good introduction to the characters for the girl reader. It is a book of great interest." S. S. G.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 9 '30 750w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p8 S 6 '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

J Home Econ 22:927 N '30 50w

Nation 131:560 N 19 '30 100w

"Young people enjoy biography, but seldom read it of their own accord and without an introduction of some sort made by an older person. The well-chosen chapters in this book will serve as such an introduction and encourage its readers to make further excursions into the field of biographies and autobiographies on their own initiative." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p15 Ag 17 '30 200w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"To the autobiographical chapters Miss Ferris has prefixed brief introductions summarizing the careers of the chosen group and adding some general comment upon its members. We cannot but feel that Miss Ferris is too condescending in these notes, that she has infused too much of an 'up-lift' intention into them and has thereby written down to a public which if it is old enough to read her volume with appreciation is old enough to draw its own conclusions from its narrations. Nevertheless, her book is one which should, and is sure to command attention." John Bird
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1178 Jl 5 '30 250w

"The selection is excellent, the autobiographical sketches of girlhood of absorbing interest, and Miss Ferris' introduction of exactly the right tone and brevity. No finer book could possibly be placed in the hands of a young girl." A. D. Marvin
+ Survey 65:342 D 15 '30 80w

FERRIS, WALTER. Death takes a holiday; a comedy in three acts; based on a play of the same title by Alberto Casella. 151p $2 French

812 30-14220

A play in which Death takes the form of a mortal and for a period of three days lives and loves and suffers as a mortal. When he departs to his own realms he takes with him the beautiful girl with whom he has fallen in love, and who does not fear him, even in his own aspect.

Booklist 27:20 S '30

"It is a clever and interesting, and at times moving, theatrical work, but its basic idea is capable of far deeper development than its authors have given it. It is a play to see rather than to read." W. P. Eaton
+ — Books p11 Jl 6 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

"'Death Takes a Holiday' is far above the worth-while. It seems to be briefer and less lagging than most of the current plays, because your mind is at least engaged; it seems less adolescent and more mature; it rises and intensifies as it goes, instead of exploding its theme into mere little tricks long before the last curtain; and it stays afterwards in the thoughts as both a sort of stage game that was played and as something that moved toward the poetic." Stark Young
+ — New Repub 61:275 Ja 29 '30 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

Pratt p28 autumn '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

FERRISS, HUGH. Metropolis of tomorrow. 140p il $7.50 Washburn

725 City planning. Architecture—United States 30-698

"Mr. Ferriss's city of the future is not very different in general plan from that envisaged by the Frenchman Le Corbusier. It will resemble 'a wide plain, not lacking in vegetation, from which rise at considerable intervals towering mountain peaks.' Its monumental edifices will rest on foundations covering three or four city blocks, but they will be half a mile apart, and past them will run avenues at least two hundred feet wide. Unlike Le Corbusier, Mr. Ferriss does not suggest razing the lower buildings, say six stories high, which stand between them. But he would cover these buildings with earth and plant flowers, shrubs and even trees on their roofs. The ground plan of the city of the future would be significant. One of its great mountain towers would be the principal structure of the business centre, another of the science centre, another of the art centre."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:303 My '30

"The metropolis of the future, as visioned by Hugh Ferriss, curiously resembles that of Le Corbusier. Both architects concentrate whole cities into a few enormous buildings, with large areas of comparatively low structures in between. Practically and esthetically the solution is unimpeachable. Such a solution requires, however, men of large vision and steady purpose at the head of municipal affairs. . . [and] a long campaign of education will be needed. For such a campaign, I know of no better textbook than the present one: wise and generous in vision, cogent in thought, clear and strong in literary style, appealing as a work of art, magically stirring as a prophecy." Albert Guerard
+ Books p1 Ja 19 '30 1550w

"Hugh Ferriss can draw skyscrapers like mountains. He has compiled a book of them called 'The Metropolis of Tomorrow.' While he has at least learned that between mountains there must be plains, his procedure of pictures first is wrong end to; and the buttery text always becomes vague and evasive at the precise point where the author might be held responsible. The tall building remains a first-rate American invention; for studies of its proper use we need not always go abroad to such as Le Corbusier; but at home instead of Hugh Ferriss one might consult Henry Wright."

FERRISS, HUGH—Continued
— Nation 131:208 Ag 20 '30 180w

"Mr. Ferriss' text and pictures embody the common megalopolitan dream: they represent a sort of elephantiasis of the imagination. A close inspection of Mr. Ferriss' draughtsmanship, charming and effective though it often is, will point out the fundamental dishonesty of his picture of the metropolis of tomorrow. Almost every skyscraper that Mr. Ferriss renders is under false illumination: the top of the structure is dark; the bottom of the building is swept by a great gust of light." Lewis Mumford
— New Repub 61:332 F 12 '30 600w

"Cities must have patterns or they will fall to pieces of their own weight. Architects must stop thinking in terms of individual buildings. They must begin to think in terms of whole communities. And this is what Hugh Ferriss, already known to laymen for the beauty of his architectural drawings, has tried to do in 'The Metropolis of Tomorrow.' In this vastly appealing book he has assembled, in text and illustrations, his conceptions of what the builders have done and may do." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p10 D 8 '29 1300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30
St Louis 28:72 Mr '30

" 'The Metropolis of Tomorrow' is not a textbook on city planning. It is a picture book with illustrations that clarify the task of modern architecture. Hugh Ferriss is probably excelled by no draughtsman practising today in indication, a sense of three dimensions, and monumental imagination. He deals with composition in mass and line, free from the preconceived dogmas of esthetics. He shows us the mountain, not each tree, stone, or waterfall on its slopes. Thus his designs are inspiring and awesome, perhaps too grand for immediate realization, but surely pointing the direction for our striving." F. J. Woodbridge
+ Sat R of Lit 6:752 F 22 '30 480w

"Here is a book which is certainly beautiful and is probably vicious—beautiful because of the charm and imagination which Mr. Ferriss has put into his drawings of skyscrapers, vicious because to glorify the American skyscraper is to confirm the thoughtless in a perilous fallacy. As a creative entity, as a symbol of the American spirit, it is superb. As a reckless exploitation of immediate profit at the sacrifice of present human values and of future economic values, it is sinister." Geddes Smith
+ — Survey 63:727 Mr 15 '30 300w

FEUCHTWANGER, LION. Success; tr. from the German by Willa and Edwin Muir. 781p $3 Viking press [10s Secker]
30-30575

The unjust trial and imprisonment of Martin Kruger, Munich art critic, the unavailing efforts of a former mistress, Johanna Krain, to free him and finally his death in prison, is the framework of the plot upon which rests Mr Feuchtwanger's long novel of social injustice in post-war Germany. Against the background of the story moves a gallery of figures of contemporary importance or renown, and in panoramic detail the author indicts many aspects of corrupt modern life.

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

"Searching for the kernel of this novel is about as exasperating an experience as peeling an onion. One strips off innumerable layers of fact and purpose without appearing to strike a center. Feuchtwanger's book is at once amorphous as a whole and without beauty in its parts. Its artlessness, I think, and not its bogus philosophizing, is the main issue against it." Frederick Dupee
— Bookm 72:416 D '30 800w

" 'Success' has not quite the appeal of 'Power.' The perspectives are too close-up. The light is harsher; the haunting, powerful charm that the past lays over the present is gone. It is, however, for those who have time and patience for it, a moving and powerful novel." Eugene Lohrke
+ — Books p3 N 2 '30 600w

"Magnificently ambitious the book undoubtedly is, and in a sense remarkably successful, for Feuchtwanger, as readers of 'Power' know, works well on a large scale. But he has not solved the great problem of such a book; he has found no principle of selection, no basic unity. He has employed three different devices in the attempt to secure unity, and not one of them works." Granville Hicks
— + Nation 131:620 D 3 '30 450w

" 'Success' is a solid and ponderable achievement, but it is not really a novel. It may not even be history—that remains to be seen. All that one may say with safety is that it is a lengthy cinematic record of society as it existed on the Bavarian plateau at the beginning of the third decade of the twentieth century, projected by an exceptionally accurate and painstaking intelligence. But even as a cinematic record, formidable in scope and proportion, it must necessarily be incomplete." Howard Coxe
+ — New Repub 65:197 D 31 '30 900w

"Herr Feuchtwanger has gone very near the mark of overstepping his professional etiquette and doing something vital, but his very capacity for being as great as he is always seems to stop him from being any greater. If sheer bulk, or sustained verbal power, or consistency in a mass could do the trick, then Success would indeed be a fine novel. Though no book with such an intricacy of pattern and such an absence of loose ends can fail to be memorable, its very consistency in such bulk is a menace."
+ — New Statesman 36:240 N 29 '30 550w

"Intellectually firm and resilient though it is, purely as a novel 'Success' breaks down under the burden. This immense brilliant book contains history, document, moral essays, psychographs, panoramas; it is almost encyclopedic; but it is not life. The people in it are too static and literary; its world is not created but fitted together like a picture puzzle; it has not the movement, the undercurrents, the overtones, the personal flavor of real existence; things do not happen, they are set in motion. The hero, Society, is not an organism; and what is not organic is not alive." Louis Kronenberger
— + N Y Times p2 N 9 '30 1400w

"Masterly in style and really huge in conception, it is probably too weighty to capture the imagination of readers as Power and The Ugly Duchess do; but it cannot but add a brighter, and perhaps a more enduring lustre to Feuchtwanger's name." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 156:387 N 5 '30 280w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 83:8 Ja '31 220w

"Though, by classroom standards, 'Success' is a novel sadly lacking in concentration and plan, there can be no doubt of its distinction as a social document. . . It is a book of incidents rather than of people, and although some of the incidents are moving and vivid and some of the people take on a kind of flickering life, the reader has always an uneasy feeling that he is studying the times, not living them."
+ — Sat R 150:676 N 22 '30 300w

"No one who is interested in the history of our time can fail to be caught by the sweep of its narrative or to be moved by the breadth of its scope. Artistically and perhaps historically too, it is full of faults. But in such an attempt faults were inevitable. The point is, something bold and inspiring has been attempted. The picture of a whole society has been put down and infused with meaning." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 7:414 D 6 '30 900w

"Herr Feuchtwanger's passion for justice, his withering satire at the expense of Bavarian politicians and judges, are smothered by a maze of episodes and characters which add nothing to his case except a fog of picturesque pretentiousness. The essential story might have been written in half the space. For all the detailed physical descriptions of the judges, jury, ministers and populace, the encyclopaedic lumps of European history, he achieves little intimacy with his characters, and only spasmodic dramatic contact with his scene. All he says may be true, but one is not made to believe a word of it." V. S. Pritchett

— Spec 145:737 N 15 '30 450w

"Herr Feuchtwanger flits from character to character and scene to scene with a bustling, satirical liveliness, maintaining a bland appearance of neutrality for the most part, though in actual fact he scores some fairly hard knocks. His huge canvas proves a little unwieldy at times, but, generally speaking, he marshals his puppets with ingenuity and conspicuous adroitness."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p912 N 6 '30 600w

FEVAL, PAUL. Comrades at arms; the further adventures of D'Artagnan and Cyrano; tr. and adapted by Cleveland B. Chase. 302p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans

Artagnan, Charles de Baatz de Castelmore, styling himself comte d'—Fiction. Cyrano de Bergerac, Savinien—Fiction 30-26897

Another romance wherein Cyrano de Bergerac and D'Artagnan perform marvelous feats of valor as bodyguard to George Villiers and his wife, Claire de Cernay, whom Anne of Austria, George's mother, confided to the care of the two swordsmen for safe conduct to Paris.

Booklist 27:104 N '30

Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Books p7 Ag 10 '30 550w

N Y Evening Post p5s S 6 '30 40w

N Y Times p7 Ag 10 '30 500w

"The spirit-rapping of M. Feval is a bit obvious. Here are the historical names, here are secret errands, here are the antagonism to Mazarin and the devotion to Anne of Austria, here are night rides, sword fights against odds, and Aramis and Bazin, as of old. But all that, we see all too sadly, doesn't bring back the intrepid marquis. Here is no character building, merely putting puppets in action—puppets found in an old theatrical lumber room. No wonder their joints move stiffly. I can read Comrades at Arms most enjoyably, but only when I have shut off all memory of the great pages of The Three Musketeers, Twenty Years After and Cyrano de Bergerac." Harry Hansen

— + N Y World p9 Ag 6 '30 1000w

FIASCHETTI, MICHAEL. You gotta be rough; as told to Prosper Buranelli (Eng title: Man they couldn't escape). 308p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [18s Selwyn]

364 Detectives. Crime and criminals 30-4824

Mike Fiaschetti, for sixteen years a New York detective and head of the Italian squad, narrates in his own vernacular incidents and anecdotes connected with his most adventurous exploits. He tells of police methods, how a detective really gets his man, and describes the part he played in the rounding up of Black Hand criminals and some spectacular murderers.

"He is a good story-teller, and relates countless trips into danger in this country and abroad. His experiences among Italian criminals, from pickpockets to bomb-throwers, were they not recorded on the police blotter would seem fanciful and unreal in this highly civilized and well-protected city."

+ Bookm 71:xxx Mr '30 80w

Boston Transcript p1 F 8 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '30

"Salty and vigorous, and as human as they are dramatic and intriguing, are these tales of experiences as a policeman and detective that Mr. Buranelli, a newspaper man, has written out as told to him by Detective Fiaschetti, who for sixteen years did battle with New York's underworld. . . He is a good story teller and Mr. Buranelli has, apparently, caught the very sound and feel of his conversation."

+ N Y Times p21 F 2 '30 230w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 F 5 '30 800w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:227 F 5 '30 120w

St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

"The Cavaliere Fiaschetti, Chevalier of the Crown of Italy, otherwise Big Mike of the New York Police Department, found the right collaborator when he narrated his memoirs to Prosper Buranelli. Between them they have put together a grand book." Christopher Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 6:694 F 1 '30 500w

FIELD, GUY CROMWELL. Plato and his contemporaries; a study in fourth-century life and thought. 253p $4 Dutton [12s 6d Methuen]

184.1 Plato. Philosophy, Ancient [30-19602]

"Plato and His Contemporaries is described by the author as 'a preliminary or supplementary essay to a study of the philosophy of Plato.' Not only does it 'place' Plato in the history of Greek philosophy and in the world of the Greek people, but it sets out the facts of such Platonic problems as the chronology of the dialogues, and the extent to which Plato was writing for himself or recording the teachings of Socrates, and it gives the various views of their solutions."—Spec

Reviewed by S. P. Lamprecht
Books p25 N 16 '30 1150w

Int J Ethics 41:125 O '30 180w

New Statesman 35:sup xviii My 10 '30 500w

"Philosophy begins with Plato and it is not a huge exaggeration to say that the quick understanding of Plato begins with G. C. Field. Professor Field has enabled us to see not merely Plato but Platonism."

+ Outlook 155:548 Ag 6 '30 300w

"For those who know their Plato the book is of great value. Professor Field is too modest when he disclaims any originality for his work. As well might an artist say that, because some poet provided him with his theme and some merchant with his tubes of paint, his picture was not original. The author has given students of Platonism everything that they want apart from the reading of the dialogues."

+ Spec 144:838 My 17 '30 150w

"Professor Field has had the acuteness of perception to study some of the most interesting questions bearing upon the personality of Plato from a somewhat unwonted angle. It is greatly to the author's credit that he should have presented in the actual text of his work so plain and unvarnished a tale, and should have relegated so sternly to the appendices points which he is preeminently fitted to discuss, but which, from the standpoint of the tale itself, it is most fitting, in Gibbon's phrase, to 'veil in the obscurity of a learned language.' It may be difficult for some who are guided solely by the warmth of his tribute to Professor Taylor and to the late Professor Burnet to realize the true independence of his thought in all its fullness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p163 F 27 '30 1550w

FIELD, RACHEL LYMAN. Patchwork plays. 139p il $1.25 Doubleday, Doran
812 Children's plays 30-27065

Five plays for children. Contents: Polly Patchwork; "Little Square-toes" (has only girls' parts); Miss Ant, Miss Grasshopper, and Mr Cricket; Chimney sweeps' holiday (has only boys' parts); The sentimental scarecrow. Numbers 2, 3 and 5 may be played outdoors.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Ap 18 '30.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

"Chimney-sweeps in all their pathos and romantic appeal, a sentimental scarecrow, the grasshopper treated as the improvident and lovable artist at the expense of the smug capitalist ant—these are some of the themes in which Miss Field's special gifts of gentle satire and original characterization find scope. Her experience in the limitations and requirements of amateur dramatics makes the book as practical as it is interesting, which is not often true of collections of this nature."
+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 120w

"It is a pleasure to welcome a book of plays for children so truly childlike and spontaneous, so well-written and with so much real atmosphere." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 150w

"Without resort to sprites or witches, these little plays have a fairy-book ring that will prove enticing to the child actor. Moreover, children will enjoy reading the plays, or hearing them read." Jane Dransfield
+ Sat R of Lit 7:334 N 15 '30 550w

FIELD, RACHEL LYMAN. Points east; narratives of New England. 126p il $2 Brewer
811 30-11753

Narrative poems which recreate some of the legends and atmosphere of old-time New England. The illustrations are taken from early American and English chap books.

Booklist 26:387 Jl '30

"The use of blank verse as a medium seems dubious. Almost any narrative can be arranged in unrhymed iambic pentameters of one sort or another. The dry New England speech makes for a brisk spare story, which does not pause for adornment or meditation. We have easy reading here, and the monotony of cadence fosters a sense of matter-of-fact talk. But lacking the presence of high imagination or deep emotion, why not set an interesting story in its native prose?"
— + Bookm 71:viii Je '30 130w

"Miss Field's talent stands quite in a class by itself because of the singular freshness and fascination of the story telling. Each tale shines like a rubbed and burnished bit of old silver, and while hearing village occurrences we learn all about souls." Laura Benét
Books p16 Je 15 '30 600w

Reviewed by A. C. Moore
Books p8 Ag 10 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh
N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 20w

"While it must be admitted that Rachel Field has not done notable narrative verse in her little book, the very simplicity and artlessness of her method render her stories engaging and, in the main, effective. The stories which make the volume 'Points East' would have gained from a critical working over at the author's hands. Miss Field has done good work; but not such good work as she might have done."
+ — N Y Times p11 Je 1 '30 380w

"The stories have a certain flavor, but Miss Field is not a particularly gifted story-teller, and her blank verse is consistently undistinguished. It is unfortunate that she does not make more of her material, for it is obvious that she knows the kind of persons she writes about." Granville Hicks
+ — N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 70w

"It is a fine, sturdy book, the four narratives bound together with lyrics and illustrated by woodcuts, from early American and English chap-books." L. T. Nicholl
+ Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 130w

"Rachel Field's narratives of New England have, among other pleasant qualities, one outstanding virtue: they are her own; they are not the usual unhappy attempt to recapture the understated undertones of Robert Frost nor, contrariwise, the overdramatized bizarrerie of Amy Lowell. The stories are strange but not strained to achieve strangeness. . . Miss Field's more formal compositions—the rhymed verses, the sonnets, the little lyrics—are less distinguished. They have a vague charm, a neatness with none of those small, unaccented differences by which we recognize the poet." Louis Untermeyer
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1207 Jl 19 '30 320w

FIELD, RACHEL LYMAN, comp. American folk and fairy tales. 302p il $3 Scribner
398 Folklore—United States 29-25017

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:207 F '30

Books p8 F 9 '30 380w

Christian Century 47:337 Mr 12 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Je '30

"For children's enjoyment a better collection could be made and looking at this volume from the point of view of folk-lore one is left with a certain feeling of disappointment. To some, for instance, it may seem that a more characteristic selection of Uncle Remus stories might have been made and that there are Indian stories with a better reading quality than those included."
— + N Y Times p19 F 2 '30 300w

Pratt p13 autumn '30

"Disregarding the basis of selection, the results should provide interesting material for reading aloud to children. There is a good deal of dialect which might be an obstacle in a child's own reading, but which is very readily understood when actually spoken and usually adds to the story." Catherine Woodbridge
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:681 Ja 25 '30 460w

Wis Lib Bul 25:414 D '29

FIGGIS, DARRELL. Return of the hero; with an introd. by James Stephens. (Bonibooks) 221p pa 50c Boni, C.
30-15105

"Old Irish legends of the Fionn Cycle which center around the heroic figure of Finn Maccumhal. This book was published in England in 1923 under the pseudonym, Michael Ireland." —Publishers' Weekly

"A book which is remarkable for its poetry and wit, and remarkable, too, for its execution. What makes it remarkable in its execution is that a single idea is firmly held and illustrated with power." Padraic Colum
+ Books p3 Je 8 '30 1400w

"The book is written in a prose style that is all too rare nowadays among Irish writers. It is more like the prose of the old Gaelic romances than the prose of modern Irish literature. In other words, the style is in keeping with the actual story. It is one of the great books in contemporary Irish letters." H. G. K.
+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 2 '30 750w

"Aside from its historical and philological interest, the story is a delightful creation in itself. The flashes of keen insight and the bits of humor, philosophy, and description are what give the book its special value and charm."
+ Nation 131:103 Jl 23 '30 200w

"The author has given immediate pertinence to an ancient theme and he has done it magnificently." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 380w

"Though the dice be loaded, the subtle intellectual game played out in these pages between the churchmen and the old pagan hero Oisin affords more exercise for lively minds than a dozen books one could name from the more pretentious part of the list of modern works. Its great value is that it brings to the modern reader with magic clarity a sense of the old Gaelic pagan virtue—to speak truth always, to fear nothing, to love love, and battle, and feasting, and all natural things." Shaemas O'Sheel

+ N Y World p7m Jl 13 '30 630w

"It is a satire upon modern Ireland, subtle and blistering. You can laugh and cry over it, and be glad that there are people in the world who can write like that." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 155:269 Je 18 '30 150w

FINEMAN, IRVING. This pure young man. 368p $2 Longmans

30-27770

"Irving Fineman's prize novel is a well-built novel of adolescent development, for which Longmans, Green & Co. made an award of $7,500. The story is the straightaway record of how a young man with a desire to remain decent (rather than pure) meets the temptations of young manhood."—N Y World

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"I find it empty of interest and almost void of merit. Mr. Fineman is observant: he furnishes his readers with good factual reports of a number of incidents, and he writes with fluency if without grace. But in not one of his three hundred and sixty-eight pages do I find any clue to the essential character of Roger Bendrow or acquire any conviction of his existence." Guy Holt

— Bookm 72:205 O '30 500w

"The author gives life to his hero; so that Roger, who might have been irritating, is on the whole, very appealing. And if this is a triumph of mood over material, the smooth and unpretentious style is a victory for discretion and good taste. This is apparently Mr. Fineman's first novel, and he has attempted nothing beyond his power. In fact, he has probably given himself a pretty comfortable margin for future development. There are other characters in the book which, while lacking Roger's simple, almost sentimental charm, show the author's ability to tackle more complex and mature personalities." M. C. Dawson

Books p2 S 28 '30 600w

"Taken as a whole, there are innumerable examples of writing in the pages of 'This Pure Young Man' which clearly denote in the author an ability far beyond the average and an understanding of human nature that is admirable. Mr. Fineman has written a clever and an absorbing novel, one that in its utter sincerity, if not in its enduring powers, misses greatness only through an immaturity that will, no doubt, be remedied by time and experience." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 1600w

"While he betrays an occasional amateurish touch in the handling of his material and now and again bludgeons his point home with a sledgehammer, he has written with real power. The note of irony on which the book closes produces a genuine reaction of pity and self-searching on the part of the reader. It is not enough to say that such a book shows promise; it is one of the best novels of the current season."

+ — Christian Century 47:1596 D 24 '30 140w

"Here is the old theme of an idealistic youth at odds with his environment, made new again with gracefulness and skill and sincerity. Granting in the beginning that this is not a book which will make its way to the first ranks of fiction one may yet praise with enthusiasm the fine subtlety and unaffected sympathy of the portraiture of 'this pure young man.'" Leslie Marchand

+ N Y Times p7 O 5 '30 750w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 S 27 '30 300w

"This story is conscientious in workmanship rather than brilliant. The experiences of the youth whose passion for pure beauty damned him in the eyes of the world arouse the reader's anger and pity, but the young man himself remains a lay figure. . . The style of the book is smooth and capable." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 156:187 O 1 '30 200w

"The trouble with the book is that its hero's qualities are all excellent, and all negative. He flies from temptation or resists it, and that is all He has none of the arrogant and pugnacious virtues, or the redeeming vices, that make a character live." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:240 O 18 '30 350w

Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 400w

FINGER, CHARLES JOSEPH. Seven horizons. 457p il $5 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 30-11604

A romantic autobiography in which the author describes his adventures, actual and spiritual, in the seven most important phases of his amazing life and career. These seven horizons are as follows: his boyhood in Victorian Mayfair, in which he tells of his early school days and the development of his love for reading; his odd jobs earning a living in London as a young man and his friends there; his contact with some of the leading socialists and radicals of the time, such as William Morris and Bernard Shaw; a thirst for adventure that leads him to ship aboard a sailing vessel in search of self-reliance; the fifth horizon, which finds him in Patagonia, where he sees life in its most uncivilized aspects; his coming to America, where he eventually gets control of a southwestern railroad, but the unethical behavior of men in business makes him turn from this type of civilized livelihood. So the final horizon emerges when he buys a ranch in the Ozarks, settles down to live leisurely, and to write from his past experiences.

Booklist 26:355 Je '30

"Seven Horizons is a colorful and convincing narrative, written by a man capable of reflection and analysis. Without striving for either drama or strangeness, without lurid decorations of any kind, it is safe to say that Seven Horizons is the most thrilling adventure-tale Charles Finger has ever told." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 71:346 Je '30 500w

"I like this book and the man revealed in it, but I am bound to say that from a literary viewpoint it leaves much to be desired. It is very uneven, and the first half is not nearly so good as the last. The author has more material than he can possibly use and he never quite decides what to put in and what to leave out. He has no clear perception of what is relevant to the theme of this particular book and what is not. The result is sometimes confusion and sometimes dullness. But the book is a good book, nevertheless, and worth any one's reading. It is one of the few books that contain a man and a chunk of human experience, transcended and understood." Harvey Fergusson

+ Books p3 Ap 13 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 1150w

Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 12 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

"There is sufficient zest in the telling of these many unusual tales. The fault is the lack of an eighth horizon to which one might give the name perspective. . . There are vivid vistas here and there throughout this very curious work. They are smothered, flattened out now and then under the heavy weight of platitudes. It is one thing to be a plain and simple person. It is another thing to trumpet it out as a challenge to the fates." Eugene Löhrke

FINGER, C. J.—Continued
— + Nation 131:249 S 3 '30 380w
New Repub 64:187 O 1 '30 180w

"One reads his book with a growing feeling of envy and admiration. Nor is this all. In revealing himself he succeeds in revealing to his readers his own yearning for a fuller and more spirited life which an existence of mediocrity may have succeeded in covering." R. C. Feld
+ N Y Times p3 My 18 '30 1650w

"It is a colorful book of a stout-thewed man who has led a manysided life all over the better part of two continents, and who seems at last to have found the home port and to be rather glad to put into it and tie up for a well earned rest." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p10m My 11 '30 400w

"It is a spirited and colorful chronicle, shot through with description of places and persons, and always zestful and animated."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:983 Ap 26 '30 240w

FINLEY, MRS RUTH (EBRIGHT). Old patch work quilts, and the women who made them. 202p il $5 (21s) Lippincott
746 Coverlets. Needlework—Patterns
29-27520

An historical record of an American folk art interpreted in relation to the life of the times during which it most widely flourished. Mrs. Finley studies especially the basic design principles represented in these patchwork and appliqué quilts, giving photographic illustrations and descriptions of the more important and recurrent designs, the origin of the names, the materials used, and sketches of the women who created them.

Booklist 26:108 D '29

"Ruth Finley's book is a worthy record of a worthy art." Lettie Gay
+ Books p10 Mr 16 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '29
Pratt p25 spring '30
St Louis 28:73 Mr '30

"Mrs. Finley, herself a collector, illustrates her book with wonderful examples of old quilts in delightful designs. The names in themselves of these designs are quite lovely. . . Mrs. Finley devotes an all too short chapter to the origin of quilt names. She has much that is interesting to say about the old materials and dyes, the stitches used, the methods of quilting—spider-web, eagle, pineapple, mill-net, and so forth—and the social significance of quilting parties."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 9 '30 480w
Wis Lib Bul 26:101 Mr '30

FISCHER, LOUIS. Soviets in world affairs; a history of relations between the Soviet union and the rest of the world. 2v $10 (36s) Cape
327.47 Russia—Foreign relations. World politics [30-27947]

"The relations of the Soviet Union with the rest of the civilized world from the treaty of Brest-Litovsk, signed under German duress in 1917, down to the second resumption of diplomatic relations with Great Britain in 1929, form the subject matter of Mr. Louis Fischer's two volumes, 'The Soviets in World Affairs.' "—N Y Evening Post

Booklist 27:139 D '30

"Mr. Fischer has done a massive work of investigation, co-ordination and documentation. . . This is but a detail, however. As a whole Mr. Fischer's book is a work of major importance. He has had access to materials not hitherto opened to any other writer in English and, so far as this reviewer knows, there is no other work in English which has similar scope and thoroughness." Nathaniel Peffer
+ Books p1 O 5 '30 1150w

"Only those who believe that no man of radical sympathies can tell the truth and that nothing that has the tacit imprimatur of Moscow is worth knowing, can afford to ignore Mr. Fischer's book on Russia. It is a tremendous piece of work and represents years of research and first-hand investigation. Mr. Fischer makes no secret of his sympathies with the Communist régime but has used those sympathies intelligently, as a means of acquiring and of expressing points of view which would be inaccessible to a hostile historian." Adrian Berry
+ Current Hist 33:x N '30 1050w

"In the field of post-war politics this is one of the most important books that has appeared during the past quarter. It is the most extensive treatment of Bolshevik foreign policy in existence and its intrinsic value is enhanced by the fact that it is based in large measure on Russian sources. The author has had the advantage of using Russian documents and of talking with many leading Russian diplomats. Nevertheless, he does not make any effort to conceal the mistakes and failures of Bolshevik policy. His judgment on this or that question may be debated, but taken in the large this is a notable and much-needed contribution to the history of world politics."
+ Foreign Affairs 9:362 Ja '31 150w

"Not only the first complete history of the foreign relations of the first successful proletarian dictatorship, but a work which is brilliant and fascinating drama as well, handled as its theme deserves. It combines authoritative historical narration, based in large part on hitherto unpublished sources, with maps, documents, and photographs of absorbing interest and a racy, staccato style which makes the volumes as readable as a novel. The professional historian may demand more footnote references and bibliographical paraphernalia and less emotional enthusiasm for the subject matter, but for the academician and layman alike Mr. Fischer's work constitutes a definitive and indispensable account of an aspect of world politics of enormous import for the future." F. L. Schuman
+ — Nation 131:449 O 22 '30 1050w

"There is no doubt that the 'authoritative' nature of Mr. Fischer's information makes his book of great interest and real value. It suffers, of course, from being partisan. There is no criticism of those whom Bolshevism loves, but plenty of those whom it does not love: on one side of a line all is darkness, on the other all light. History, we know, and Mr. Fischer probably knows too, may be written like that, but it did not happen like that. Historical truth is always grey and twilit, and the writer who makes it all too black and too white will find that he has written 'propagandist' after his name in letters much blacker than he would desire." Leonard Woolf
— + Nation and Ath 48:109 O 18 '30 600w

"It is to be regretted that Mr. Fischer, with his unrivaled opportunities for research and observation, was either unwilling or unable to hold himself aloof sufficiently long to give an impartial account of his inquiry. The time is probably not yet ripe for a definitive history of Soviet foreign relations. Meanwhile, Mr. Fischer's work remains a unique and valuable record of international events as the Soviets see them." V. M. Dean
+ — New Repub 64:355 N 12 '30 1200w

"This is the best documented account of the Russian revolution that has yet appeared; provided that it is regarded as a one-sided account, written from the Bolshevik angle, it will be invaluable to the future historian."
+ New Statesman 36:sup xviii N 8 '30 950w

"In view of the special privileges which he has enjoyed in collecting his material, the carelessness and clumsiness which mark so much of this book are especially regrettable. Mr. Fischer had a story to tell which no one else could tell, but he bungled it badly—so badly that any one seriously interested in world affairs will find the book a sad disappointment." John Bakeless

— N Y Evening Post p5d O 4 '30 850w

"In dedicating himself to a task of such large dimensions Mr. Fischer has not found it necessary to assume the conventional grand manner. He is frankly journalistic and partisan, without thereby prejudicing himself before the reader. He does go to some trouble to meet the requirements of austere scholarship by quoting from the documents, but the documents are nearly always on one side. He makes no attempt at pretending that the book is written from other than the Bolshevist point of view. Because of this frankness of approach it is possible to speak of a partisan history as essentially an honest piece of work. I am not aware of any conscious distortion of fact in Mr. Fischer's story." Simeon Strunsky
+ N Y Times p9 O 26 '30 1500w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith
N Y World p3e D 28 '30 800w

"With a great historical apparatus and the advantage of wide and sympathetic contacts with the Russian leaders, Mr. Fischer has told the complete story of the international political aspects of the Bolshevik revolution. It is a tremendous achievement. The chief errors are not errors of fact but of interpretation and of emphasis. The chief value is that here is a complete, well-rounded and well-written account of a world-event. No students of public affairs can afford to ignore it; many will find points of disagreement or of criticism; the way of the contemporary historian of the greatest modern controversy is thorny. Yet few will quarrel with Mr. Fischer's thoughtful conclusion." John Carter
+ — Outlook 156:390 N 5 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:16 D '30 250w

Reviewed by Maurice Dobb
Spec 145:sup481 N 8 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p742 S 25 '30 900w

World Tomorrow 14:29 Ja '31 80w

FISHER, ARTHUR O. Exmoor and other days; hunting and shooting memories. 231p $3 Smith, R.R. [10s 6d Constable]

799.2 Hunting—England

A collection of sketches devoted to hunting and the people who love the sport. Some of the sketches have had previous publication in English periodicals. The experiences range from deer hunting in England to pig sticking in Morocco.

"These breezy pages reveal some very nice people and animals, all of whom, thanks to Mr. Fisher's easy and unlaboured gift of portrayal, become intimate acquaintances at first sight. So with events; we share fully all the fun and excitement of many and various sporting experiences. . . A delightful and very readable little book."
+ Sat R 150:92 Jl 19 '30 250w

"To make the everyday occurrences of British sport live again on the sportsman's bookshelf calls for no common degree of literary ability. Mr. Fisher writes with a careful attention to style, as rare in works of this class as it is refreshing. . . The author's descriptions have a vividness which cannot fail to recall to any sportsman the best of his own happy experiences."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p772 O 2 '30 500w

FISHER, MRS DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD). Deepening stream. 393p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape, J.]

30-28175

The story of Matey Gilbert, which opens when she is four years old and takes her thru the early years of her married life. Her father is a professor of French and some of her life is spent abroad. Everybody considers the Gilbert's a beautifully cultured home, but the sensitive and honest Matey realizes that all is not well in that home. Her honesty and power of love and understanding help her to make of her own marriage something beautiful and permanent.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"Despite an imperfect mastery of the art of compression and terseness, Dorothy Canfield is foremost today among those novelists who stand for sane perspective rather than sensationalism, for verity rather than realism, for selection of facts focused upon an indwelling universal law rather than a chaos of facts-for-facts'-sake, for limited free will rather than complete determinism. Thus, amidst the stultifying and stale conventions of naturalism, Dorothy Canfield is radiantly and dynamically unconventional. Her present novel [is] the peer of any she has written." H. H. Clark
+ Bookm 72:300 N '30 620w

"Dorothy Canfield's novels have always been forthright and courageous, but in none, I think, has she achieved the sustained intensity that she pours into this story of a hurt child and stifled young girl and the quiet victory of love and honesty."
+ Books p7 O 12 '30 1150w

"It represents a deep probing and a richer finding than anything in all Dorothy Canfield's past." D. L. Mann
+ Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 1750w

"It is a fine novel without being a great novel; but real greatness, we feel that we must continue to explain, is a quality which shines in perhaps one book in three years. Fineness is not so rare, but rare enough, withal, to make readers mistake it for greatness. 'The Deepening Stream' lacks that something which makes books great. It has every quality which makes them fine." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 D 20 '30 350w

"It is a great novel, full of human warmth and understanding. Its humor is never trivial, its earnestness never strident. Dorothy Canfield's own stream has here deepened to a full flowing river."
+ Christian Century 47:1417 N 19 '30 300w

Christian Science Monitor p7 N 1 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

Nation and Ath 48:352 D 6 '30 150w

"Miss Canfield's admirable novels have a quality that is more genuinely explanatory of America, or at least of the great body of serious, middle-aged Americans, than the books of any other author. [The] consciousness that 'life means intensely and means good' can most easily slip (and frequently does, as so many American novels prove) into sentimentality of a peculiarly sickly kind. Miss Canfield is saved from this by her passion for truth, her intelligence and her powers of observation, which show her how hardly this good is won, how painfully kept."
+ New Statesman 36:sup xxii D 6 '30 700w

"No one can question Dorothy Canfield's ability as a novelist. She knows her characters in every detail of their lives—for their backgrounds, tastes, opinions and spiritual struggles vary scarcely at all from book to book. She writes smoothly and colorfully and her command of form is masterful. However complex her stories may be, however crowded with characters, they never digress from the main current of their conception. They proceed logically and dramatically to a rounded conclusion, which is both mechanically and artistically justifiable."
+ — N Y Times p6 O 19 '30 650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 O 11 '30 80w

"Once in a lifetime comes a novel like this one, and for the reason that it has been a lifetime in the making. It is a completely satisfactory book. Mrs. Fisher is too wise to hurry; her maturity and wisdom are fully exempli-

FISHER, D. F.—Continued
fied, and the result is an amazingly fine piece of work." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p3e O 26 '30 500w

"To any one who loves and admires the French, Mrs. Fisher's fine interpretation of French life and character is welcome. But the novel seems to this reviewer chiefly noteworthy because, in the midst of 'realistic' writing, it presents fairly and simply the picture of people who are brave and kind and good, and makes them real." F. L. R.
+ Outlook 156:267 O 15 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

" 'The Deepening Stream' is one of her major works. And if the reader has the patience to study it with unflagging attention, he will be rewarded by many observations of human life and character, and by an acquaintance with real people." W. L. Phelps
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:199 O 11 '30 1050w
Times [London] Lit Sup p912 N 6 '30 500w

FISHER, MRS DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD). Learn or perish. (Kappa delta pi lecture ser.) 43p $1 Liveright [2s 6d Oxford]
374 Teachers. Education of adults 30-25900

From her long contact with and observation of the educational field, Mrs Fisher exhorts teachers to raise the standards of their profession by keeping constantly in touch, intellectually and culturally, with new methods and modern ideas.

Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '30 400w
St Louis 28:291 D '30

"Mrs. Fisher's genial appeal resembles a sermon only in that it is largely addressed to those not present. It is a wise plea for intellectual stimulation, especially the need of it on the part of those who respond least enthusiastically to its call and need it most, the teachers."
Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 170w

FISHER, ERNEST MCKINLEY. Advanced principles of real estate practice. (Land economics ser.) 522p il $3.50 Macmillan
333 Real estate business. Forms (law) 30-14894

"Points out the general principles governing successful real-estate activities so far as they are known and calls attention to unsolved problems, further study of which may be fruitful in uncovering new principles."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

---

Booklist 27:50 O '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30
St Louis 28:236 O '30

FISHER, HERBERT ALBERT LAURENS. Our new religion. 201p $2.50 Cape [6s Benn]
289.5 Christian science. Eddy, Mrs Mary (Baker) 30-7005

A critical examination of Christian science by an English educator and statesman, minister of education in Lloyd George's cabinet and at present (1930) warden of New College, Oxford. The volume is divided into three parts, which deal unsparingly with Mrs Eddy, her creed and her church.

"The whole book is written as a careful study, not in the spirit of controversy, but as an inquiry and analysis. We consider it one of the best of the many which have been written about this curious faith." M. P. Ravenel
+ Am J Pub Health 20:911 Ag '30 180w
Booklist 27:48 O '30
Reviewed by Woodbridge Riley
Books p2 Mr 23 '30 1700w

"Mr. Fisher's critique is motivated as little by animosity against the new system of healing and salvation as was Mr. Dakin's. His work will perhaps provoke less resentment because it deals more definitely with Christian Science and less extensively and embarrassingly with the career and personality of its founder, for devotees are often less sensitive to criticisms of their creed than to disrespectful treatment of their priests and prophets. . . Thousands of persons in the United States are, as the phrase goes, 'studying Christian Science.' They owe it to themselves to give Mr. Fisher's book a place in the curriculum." W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:401 Mr 26 '30 750w
Reviewed by E. F. Dakin
Nation 130:330 Mr 19 '30 1450w
Reviewed by Haslam Mills
Nation and Ath 46:736 Mr 1 '30 600w

"Mr. Dakin's study of Mrs. Eddy was able and impartial, but altogether too bulky for many readers; Mr. Fisher, writing quite independently, comes to corroborate all its conclusions, yet manages to say in a sixth the number of words all that is necessary, with the weight of a much more considerable authority. He is always good-humoured, temperate—and relentless. The Prophetess herself he exhibits as a religious and philosophical 'amateur of mediocre intelligence,' her creed as a farrago of nonsense, implicitly and explicitly contradictory, and the Church as an absolute autocracy lacking in any spiritual inspiration and preaching a kind of genteel eupepticism appealing to the semi-intelligent and neurasthenic."
+ New Statesman 34:276 N 30 '29 170w

"As the first formal critique of Christian Science from the pen of an eminent scholar to reach American publication, this monograph is of first importance, if only because of its authorship. . . It is to be hoped that this book will be permitted to stay upon the market. Honest and intelligent criticism, even if wholly unsympathetic, can serve only to lop off the false, and will never obscure that 'central core which is true.' " E. F. Dakin
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 700w
Reviewed by Laura Benet
N Y Times p9 Je 29 '30 400w

"Prof. Fisher brings to the intricate and befuddling subject he has selected an orderly and trained mind, a clarity of expression and an honestly inquisitive, though somewhat satirical, point of view. . . Prof. Fisher examines the creed from every possible point. He finds in it bad logic, bad theology, disordered psychology, poor philosophy and, as if these were not enough, he finds it utterly lacking in science and containing not much of Christianity." C. F. Thompson
N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 750w

"A scholarly treatment of the origin and teachings of Christian Science." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 154:592 Ap 9 '30 230w
Pratt p8 summer '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:14 Ap '30 220w
St Louis 28:93 Ap '30

"Mr. Fisher's portrait of Mrs. Eddy, flippant and derisive, seems to draw its information entirely from hostile sources. . . The intellectual rationalism of Mr. Fisher is inimical both to the literary style and the inspirational appeal of Mrs. Eddy's writing. . . For so meticulous a man of letters, unsparing in his severity for what he regards as the slovenliness of others, Mr. Fisher has fallen into some strange inaccuracies. These are slight matters, however, compared with the fact that never even as a remote contingency does it occur to him that what on another occasion was hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed to babes might be so again." E. F. Heywood
— Sat R 148:757 D 21 '29 700w

"He writes with wit and clarity, and his study is most excellent reading. At times he may be charged with being unfair to Christian Science and to its founder; not so much in his selection of facts as in the neat way in which he contrives to make the facts seem a little ridiculous. The question, however, is one of proportion; for Mr. Fisher also accords to Christian Science its measure of validity and truth."

+ — Spec 143:879 D 7 '29 1100w

"In general Mrs. Eddy appears in these pages as a woman of inadequate education but dominating personality, who finding in empty but elevated religious generalizations a relief from the pains of her body and the bareness of her soul, triumphed because her limitations never permitted her to doubt herself and because she had an acute business and executive instinct. It must be evident that there can be no possible ground of compromise between Mr. Fisher and the declared Christian Scientist, who will not be able to regard this book, written in a spirit not of attack but of simple inquiry, save as the hardest blow his faith has yet sustained. . . Whatever the ultimate decision, this essay should survive if only as a little masterpiece in its kind, wholly classical in its manner, admirable in its prose, delightful in its wit and economy of statement."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p991 N 28 '29 1200w

FISHER, IRVING. Stock market crash—and after. 286p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

332.6 Stocks. Stock exchange. United States—Economic conditions. Panics 30-5703

The swiftest and sharpest decline of stock prices in the history of American security tradings began on September 6, 1929, and continued, with only minor recoveries, until November 13. Between these two dates, the shrinkage in the value of stocks listed on the New York stock exchange has been estimated at twenty-six billion dollars. Professor Fisher discusses the extent of this decline, the reasons for the unusual activity and high price level of stocks during the seven years preceding the crash and the causes of the panic.

"While many economists will feel, to paraphrase the title of one of the author's well known books in another field, that this volume does not represent Irving Fisher at his best, it does contain considerable information which is valuable as well as interesting." C. S. Tippetts
+ — Am Econ R 20:509 S '30 800w
Booklist 26:299 My '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30
Pratt p11 summer '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:20 Ap '30 160w
St Louis 28:131 My '30
Reviewed by S. W. Anderson
Sat R of Lit 6:896 Ap 5 '30 1100w

"As a record Prof Fisher's account of the crash is excellent, but it is not very convincing in its conclusions as to the causes."
+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 19 '30 320w

FISHER, IRVING. Theory of interest; as determined by impatience to spend income and opportunity to invest it. 566p il $6 (25s) Macmillan

332.8 Interest and usury. Economics, Mathematical 30-8152

Begun as a revision of the author's The Rate of Interest, published in 1907, the present volume is a complete rewriting of the former book, with additional new material. In a significant section Professor Fisher explains his theory of interest in terms of mathematics.

"The sympathetic and the unsympathetic reader will both add to their store of economic knowledge by a careful study of The Theory of Interest." W. W. Hewett
+ Am Econ R 20:696 D '30 1550w
Booklist 26:406 Jl '30
Pratt p10 autumn '30
Special Lib 21:264 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p736 S 18 '30 320w

FISHER, IRVING, and BROUGHAM, HERBERT BRUCE. The "noble experiment." 492p il $2 Alcohol information com., 150 5th av., N.Y.

178.5 Prohibition. Liquor problem 30-12686

"In this new book Professor Fisher follows the plan of his previous work, 'Prohibition Still at Its Worst,' and gives both sides of each element of the question. Apparently he has used again some of the material in that book but has rewritten it, brought it up to date, and has added several new chapters as well as many tables and graphs, an index and references. The book is especially rich in the number and variety of its statistical tables and graphs. The wet view [is] stated first, the dry view following and each consisting of concise statements of contentions and arguments and much direct quotation."—N Y Times

"The book is noteworthy for its many pages of graphs and its many columns of statistical information. The reader is not asked to take things for granted. He is shown where the facts come from, and what they mean. And not the least of the services rendered by the book is a comparison of wet statistics with one another. The statistical wets are so very, very far apart that it is apparent that somebody has been venturing a wild guess and calling it statistical information." O. F. Jordan
+ Christian Century 47:1347 N 5 '30 1150w

"Professor Fisher's name has become synonymous with penetrating and fair-minded discussion of American prohibition; and in his latest book he makes another calm and dispassionate contribution to a subject which has too long been dominated by polemics and prejudice."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 21 '30 230w
N Y Times p26 Je 1 '30 220w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30
Pratt p9 autumn '30
St Louis 28:202 S '30

FISHMAN, JOSEPH FULLING. It's still boloney. 73p il $1 Doubleday, Doran

817 30-17099

In which the author makes mock of some well-known Americanisms, including selling the technique of success, the fifteen-minutes-a-day road to culture, correspondence courses, intelligence tests, etc.

Bookm 72:x S '30 80w
Books p11 Jl 6 '30 130w

"Purpose is to burlesque typical personality—improvement schemes. The method and vehicle are a series of vaudeville smart-cracks that miss fire more often than grandmother's blunderbuss."
— Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 80w
Reviewed by M. M. Waterman
N Y Times p14 Jl 27 '30 320w

FISKE, CHARLES, and EASTON, BURTON SCOTT. Real Jesus; what He taught: what He did: who He was. 261p $2.50 Harper

232 Jesus Christ 29-19208

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:144 Ja '30

"In this dual authorship the lion and the lamb have lain down together, but the reader will see at a glance that one animal has not devoured the other. There is an undigested style about the writing that sets one against the other." J. B. Langstaff
— Books p16 F 23 '30 400w

FISKE, C., and EASTON, B. S.—Continued

"The chief criticism one might be tempted to make of The Real Jesus is that it tries to contribute too much. . . And yet the book helps us because, whatever be the nature of our approach to Jesus, somewhere in its pages there lies a comment or fact that strengthens and illuminates. There is deep sympathy on the part of both the authors, as one would reasonably expect, towards the spiritual meaning of the life of Jesus, and everywhere this sympathy shines through. It is not too much to say that, where the expression of it is most clear and simple, there one finds the most valuable portion of the volume." H. A. Prichard

+ — Churchman p16 D 7 '29 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '29

"The book is not intended for experts, and will not be noticed by them. It does, however, tell in interesting and readable form the Gospel story, and, without a parade of scholarship, attempts very gently to make use of the 'reasonably assured results of historic criticism.' While frankness and unevasiveness characterize the writing, an extreme degree of skill is manifested in discussing—or sidestepping—such problems as the miracles, resurrection, and virgin birth. You can usually discover what the authors themselves believe, but you have to hunt to do it. Whether it does portray the Real Jesus is open to some question, but the book is vastly better than most that attempt this task, and will and should be acceptable to a large circle of readers." M. S. Enslin

+ Crozer Q 7:246 Ap '30 360w

J Religion 10:459 Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 D 22 '29 180w

St Louis 28:36 F '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:99 Mr '30

FITE, WARNER. Living mind; essays on the significance of consciousness. 317p $3.50 Dial press

126 Consciousness 30-5608

An introductory chapter on the nature of consciousness opens this book of philosophical essays. Among the subjects treated in these essays are: Eucken's philosophy of life; The philosophy of Bertrand Russell; Pragmatism and science; Intellectualism; The psychology of advertising; Moral valuations and economic laws; Psycho-analysis and sex psychology; Birth-control.

Booklist 26:340 Je '30

"Fundamentally, the essays collected by Warner Fite in this book are events in the warfare of metaphysics against science. Commanding an English style as rare among his peers as it is lucid and pointed, Mr. Fite stands out in the small company of really masterly champions of 'the inner life.'" H. M. Kallen

+ — Books p10 Jl 27 '30 1200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '30

Reviewed by E. W. Hall

Int J Ethics 40:558 Jl '30 330w

"The book is well written and shows a fine insight into many problems. . . With nothing but praise for the present volume, the reviewer looks forward with eagerness to the more rounded statement." W. B. Mahan

+ J Philos 27:642 N 6 '30 500w

"Whether it is worth while to reproduce an essay on Eucken's philosophy of life, or on the pre-war philosophy of Bertrand Russell, may be questioned. But the discussion is so dignified, rational, and urbane as to disarm criticism. This applies especially to his essay in advocacy of birth control." E. T. Devine

+ — Outlook 154:630 Ap 16 '30 80w

St Louis 28:201 S '30

"Most of the essays are not very recent and the coherence of the volume is hardly increased by including papers on advertising and birth control, discerning and pungent though they be. But the various essays are all worthy of republication. They will interest the common reader as well as the philosopher."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 11 '30 650w

"I advise the reader with an alert living mind to accept the invitation extended by Professor Fite to accompany him on one of his favorite philosophical excursions. It will prove a stimulating, fresh, and clarifying adventure. Fellow-philosophers, lay or expert, committed to a creed or cult may well beware; for they will not get by with any set formulae persuasive to the populace." Joseph Jastrow

+ Survey 64:102 Ap 15 '30 320w

"Professor Fite's essays are stimulating and entertaining. Taken too literally some of them might lead to injustice towards legitimate phases of mental life, but they need not be taken too literally." W. W. Spencer

Yale R n s 20:183 autumn '30 320w

FITLER, MRS MARY BIDDLE. Reddy. 218p il $2 Harper

29-17824

Reddy, a blue-eyed, freckle-faced boy, is the head of the Red Lions clan, which under his able leadership defeats the Gray Grizzlies gang in the town across the river. Reddy and his friends have many adventures, which include an exciting motor race, a turkey-hunting expedition and fishing during a storm.

"A charming story somewhat of the genre of 'Mrs. Wiggs.' The value of the tale lies in the appeal of homely happenings contrived or remembered with a loving skill."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:609 D 28 '29 280w

"The hero is a loveable, adventure-loving boy whom all children from 10 to 14 will enjoy meeting. 'Reddy' can stand on its own merits as an entertaining story about real boys."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 80w

FITZGERALD, PITT L. Trail of the Ragged Fox. 318p il $2.50 Macrae Smith co.

30-10604

An account of the exciting adventures of Gregory Neil, who ventured too far into the Pennsylvania forests in the days just before the French and Indian wars, and was captured by Indians. In the course of his wanderings he made friends with a young half-breed, rendered him a service, and emerged safely from captivity. For older boys and girls.

"An unusually good Indian story. It is a good picture of frontier days, showing the loyalty as well as the savagery of the Indians. is well told, and is superior to the average story of this type." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 My 3 '30 70w

Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 180w

"The style is a trifle too modern really to suggest a journal of the period, but one hesitates to raise objections, for the book is unusually well written. The illustrations are poor. The book will interest readers from 12 to 16." A. T. Eaton

+ — N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 200w

St Louis 28:150 My '30

Sat R of Lit 6:1132 Je 14 '30 220w

FITZGERALD, WILLIAM F., jr. Gentlemen all. 314p $2 Longmans

30-27067

"Mr. Fitzgerald has taken as subject a true Southern gentleman of today, and has given us without sentimentality or satire, the tragedy of his defeat by a sweet foeman, the South itself, in particular Southern womanhood. . . Colfax Pendleton had to choose between ambition—a simple preference for the law in Baltimore, as against stagnation in Whitechapel—and Miss Ethel Taylor's black eyes. His struggle, his losing fight to retrieve himself from the mire of loveliness, indolence and conformity that laps him through the years—these are the links of Mr. Fitzgerald's narrative which he brings, at last, into a moving clash between the middle-aged and pathetic Colfax and the new South of money and muckers."—N Y Evening Post

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"In William Fitzgerald, Jr., I have encountered for the first time this season a young man who knows what the novel is about, what people are about, and who knows how to put the latter on paper winningly and accurately and select from their lives the events which best illuminate their characters, forming the whole into a narrative that is authentic and well-proportioned and extraordinarily alive." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 72:205 O '30 350w

"In the inevitable shifting of periods that brings 'Gentlemen All' down to the present Mr. Fitzgerald has introduced some newly rich invaders and has done them well against the background of the old aristocracy, keeping an admirable fairness toward both. There is satire in the title of the book and in its implications, but no bitterness. And for a story of its kind it has an impressive emotional unity that goes part of the way toward making up for the slenderness of its theme." Herschel Brickell

+ — Books p20 S 14 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 450w

"The book is extraordinary in its grasp of the old and the new. Here are beauty and charm such as the South had and still has; here, too, is the dry rot under the glamour. Mr. Fitzgerald unpartisanly depicts both. And without gush for one or venom for the other." Ward Greene

+ N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 600w

N Y Times p7 O 5 '30 500w

"The novel is brilliant with the brilliance of a cold stone. It is a cold tracing of the marks of death on a dead civilization. . . Mr. Fitzgerald has made an experiment in style with ability but not always with complete success. He writes a lucid, precise prose, but he has attempted to give to his style in the actual rhythm of the words something of the spirit of the pictures they make. . . There is a surer touch along with the steadier prose which makes the book grow to greater excellence in the last than in the first half of it." Jonathan Daniels

Sat R of Lit 7:241 O 18 '30 650w

FITZPATRICK, BENEDICT. Donjon of demons; a hero's tale from the Jesuit relations. 306p $3 Holt

970.3 Jesuits—Missions. Huron Indians. Brébeuf, Jean de 30-12280

Based on the life of Father Brébeuf, a seventeenth century Jesuit missionary, this story tells of his mission to the savage Huron Indians. He succeeded, thru the power of his personality, in winning the Hurons to his faith —only to die at the hands of their enemies, the Iroquois.

Bookm 71:viii Jl '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

N Y Times p8 My 18 '30 450w

"Such a story cannot be dull, but Fitzpatrick has no great narrative gift. His style is professorial, and after reading his book this reviewer is more than ever firmly convinced that these stories of the Jesuit Fathers are better reading in their original form. However, for readers who have not the courage to undertake the reading of the excerpts from the Jesuit Relations so admirably prepared by Edna Kenton a few years ago, Donjon of Demons may serve as a tempting introduction."

+ — Outlook 154:708 Ap 30 '30 200w

St Louis 28:230 O '30

FITZSIMMONS, CORTLAND. Bainbridge murder. 270p $2 McBride [5s Eyre]

30-5405

"In which Arthur Martinson, an amateur private investigator, and Detective Kopff display enviable deductive powers in reasoning out the murder of Simon Bainbridge, a Long Island millionaire and philanderer found dead at the Roslyn Inn with a bullet hole in his shoulder and a glass of aromatic spirits of ammonia on the washstand."—Books

"A keen and logical story, excitingly set forth."

+ Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p18 Ja 26 '30 100w

"The plot is ingenious, but the story is not particularly well told."

+ — N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 120w

"Plausible originality of plot, restrained handling, the strong likeness to conceivable realities of its people and incidents render 'The Bainbridge Murder,' in our opinion, a story of fuller excellence and more solid craftsmanship than others. . . Detective novel readers should by no means overlook this one." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 170w

Reviewed by W: R. Brooks

Outlook 154:109 Ja 15 '30 50w

"We definitely class it as dull, though it contains its murder and two suicides in addition."

— Sat R of Lit 6:761 F 22 '30 40w

Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 250w

FITZSIMMONS, CORTLAND. Manville murders. 252p $2 McBride

30-29342

"The Manvilles were a land-poor family living on the south shore of Long Island and local tradition conferred on them the title of 'The mad Manvilles'. Any approaching marriage in this family presaged a disaster of some sort. Four brothers are killed, each on the eve of his wedding, and the police are unable to stop the wholesale slaughter. With the arrival of Arthur Martinson, private investigator, the mystery is cleared up, but not until the family is entirely wiped out."—Bookm

Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 N 9 '30 180w

"The Manville Murders is a well written thriller, and if the solution were only a little more ingenious and plausible it would move up pretty close to the head of the class. As it is, after building up tremendous suspense through the violent deaths on the eve of their weddings of four of the 'mad Manvilles,' it is a letdown to find the explanation so unconvincing." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 156:349 O 29 '30 80w

FLACCUS, pseud. See Levy, N.

FLACK, MARJORIE. Angus and the ducks. unp il $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-26829

Angus was a nosey little Scotch terrier. One day in an off moment he chased two white ducks. After the ducks had reversed the tables and chased Angus he was a much chastened little dog.

Booklist 27:32 S '30

"Among the many indigenous picture books of this season, 'Angus and the Ducks' stands out for good and sufficient reasons. It is good to look at, it is delightful to read aloud, it is a convenient size for small hands to hold, and above all it has an inner and outer harmony.

FLACK, MARJORIE—Continued
Any two of the qualities would suffice to raise the book above mediocrity. . . There is every prospect that 'Angus and the Ducks' can lay claim to a kind of permanence." Margaret Jones
+ Books p12 N 16 '30 350w

"Both Angus and the ducks have comicality." Padraic Colum
+ New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 50w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 156:580 D 10 '30 50w

FLAMENT, ALBERT. Private life of Lady Hamilton; tr. by Louis Arthur Cunningham. (Love lives of the great) 195p $2-$5 Carrier
B or 92 Hamilton, Emma, lady 30-18887

Emma Lyon, born and reared in obscurity, took the first step in her famous career by her marriage to Sir William Hamilton. As the mistress of Lord Nelson she achieved renown, and today is remembered equally as the subject of the artist Romney's paintings. M. Flament's biography gives to her amazing career the dramatic interest of a novel.

"In spite of its flashy title, this miniature biography has genuine merit. The author, very cunningly and with few Gallic leers, keeps one most interested in Lady Hamilton's career from kitchen slut to the confidante of queens and back again to obscurity. It is all done with a sympathy and poise rarely found in the scandalous informal biographies that cater to the present demand for sensationalism."
+ Bookm 71:vi Mr '30 140w

"M. Flament, whose book is now for the first time available to those who do not read French, has all the qualities of thoroughness, sympathy and lightness which his subject requires at the same time that he contrives to give to his narrative just the tone of sadness which a frivolous and all but unprincipled life that reaches great heights and ends in gloom rarely fails to sound."
+ Books p29 Ap 13 '30 400w

"M. Flament's well told story with its brilliant high lights and careful shading will doubtless find its place on the shelf of biographies of other noted women less frail—and less fascinating."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 15 '30 400w

"Here in translation is a saccharine, romantic story which is far less concerned with facts than with dramatic chiaroscuro. . . Lady Hamilton—the daughter of a blacksmith; and Lord Nelson—the son of a country clergyman. The known facts in the life of each are in themselves fascinating. If Mr. Forester had contributed his accuracy and M. Flament his imagination, a great duo-biography might well have resulted." L. H. Titterton
— N Y Evening Post p11m D 28 '29 370w

"He has added nothing new to the already well-known story, but he has told it very well, in vivid, dignified style—if one excepts an occasional brief relapse into purplish sentiment."
+ — N Y Times p20 Ja 19 '30 300w

"The book is composed of scenes and episodes sketched well enough, but making no very vital or significant portrait of one of the world's most famous courtesans."
— Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 26 '30 300w

FLANNAGAN, ROY. The whipping. 256p $2 Cape
30-18553

Marigold was young, beautiful and therefore a potential sinner in the eyes of Timkenville, a small town in Virginia. So the Knights of the Red Circle, egged on by outraged wives, took it upon themselves to give the girl a whipping. Under such notoriety Marigold's fame grew—and more than one worthy citizen became her enamoured champion. John Toombs, the young banker, qualified as her lover, until a nice girl in the village married him. Defeated, but unvanquished, Marigold left town for new hunting grounds, just as the last bruise from the famous whipping faded from her fair flesh.

"A book which teeters between being a sociological study and a novel without achieving success in either rôle. . . Perhaps if Mr. Flannagan had been less preoccupied with proving his point and more interested in the people about whom he wrote he might have achieved a more satisfying novel—and possibly proved his point." Lambert Davis
— Books p10 Jl 20 '30 720w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 380w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews
New Repub 64:213 O 8 '30 180w

"The author is a young Virginia newspaper man and this is his first novel. The style is undecorated and direct. In freedom from word taboos his book is somewhat unusual even at this time. About one-third of the profanities and obscenities that his characters would use in life are here in print."
N Y Times p16 Ag 24 '30 250w

" 'The Whipping' is one of those synthetic yarns that grows out of the new psychology, and hence interests every writer of books. Flannagan's idea is followed through consistently and at the end he shows himself a logical story-teller by letting Marigold depart with her drummer lover, who is exactly her peer." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 Jl 16 '30 730w

FLAVIN, MARTIN. Criminal code. 200p il $2 Liveright
812 29-30203

"In a prologue and twelve scenes, a boy is seen crushed slowly but with a dread certainty between those laws of society and the equally ruthless code of the underworld, until, forced by a crisis to choose between them, he accepts the latter and is destroyed completely. The conflict is made greater and more terrifying by the helplessness of an intelligent, human district attorney, later the warden of the prison in which the boy is confined. Apparently on his way to a parole after seven years, the prisoner is given a tantalizing breath of freedom, only to be made a witness to a murder in a penitentiary. Deprived then of his parole, threatened with the charge of murder and tortured to give evidence, he adopts the silence of the underworld, only to be goaded at last to the killing of a prison official, and the play ends in the sinister screaming of sirens on the walls."—Theatre Arts Mo

Booklist 26:272 Ap '30

"The style of this drama is bare and bleak. Its logic may be questioned at points. It makes a curious concession to romantic sentiment. Still, the fact remains that it has something to say, and says it with obvious sincerity. So few American dramas do that any more that we have almost forgotten how to take it. In fact, the danger is that we will leave it." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p10 Ja 19 '30 80w

"Beginning with the Prologue one's expectations are always being aroused only to be disappointed. The love element is meager, unconvincing, and not essentially part of the plot. The play does not come to a natural conclusion but to a sudden end which leaves most of the audience asking, 'Is that all?' Finally, one's sympathies are never deeply engaged and are often confused—an infallible sign that the playwright has faltered in conception or in execution. Mr. Flavin falters in both." J. J. R.
— Cath World 130:331 D '29 380w

Cath World 131:214 My '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p41 Mr '30

"It is undoubtedly extremely effective theatre; it is undoubtedly 'a bitter comment on our criminal laws.' But drama it is not, if we care to distinguish between two traditions, that of the theatre and that of the drama. . . Mr. Flavin's play is theatre, a bitter-coated pill, to be sure, but give the pill a sweet coat and you have most of nineteenth-century theatrics. As literature, it is about as readable as a scenario, consisting of a series of gasps and starts and sputters." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 270w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

"In thirteen scenes stripped to the bare bones of action and dialogue, moving, swift, and convincing, 'Criminal Code' presents an unforgettable picture of certain phases of the human problem involved. The playwright can strike blow on blow without a moment's loss of time in description or explanation. . . The play has an irresistible force, building from scene to scene to a taut level of intensity, leaving the reader convinced, as no tract or sermon could, of the truth of Graham's cry in his last bitter agony of spirit—'No one has the right to make another human being suffer as I did. . . .' " Rosamond Gilder

+ Sat R of Lit 6:846 Mr 22 '30 580w

"This fine, austere, uncompromising tragedy of society is sound in psychology and penology: also a poignant and human drama—the very thing for which the true theater exists. The scene is any prison; the theme is justice. . . To those who wonder whether modern social ideas can be presented on the stage, here is the answer, yes. Some of the reasons for the outbreaks at Auburn and in Colorado are given here, and as clear as ice. Yet this plea for prison reform, law reform, is no tract, but a moving tragedy of men and women." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 63:301 D 1 '29 700w

"Into The Criminal Code Mr. Flavin has written a fierceness, burning and direct, such that his play is now stark and alone on Broadway for the passionate intensity of its resolution. . . This structure, into which the taint of propaganda might so easily have crept, he has evolved with finely controlled emotionalism." John Hutchens

+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:875 D '29 450w

FLEG, EDMOND. Life of Solomon; tr. from the French by Viola Gerard Garvin. 239p $3 Dutton [12s 6d Gollancz]

220.9 Solomon, king of Israel 30-6074

A poetical and biblical narrative style distinguishes this dramatic biography of the man Solomon, derived from the Bible and from history and legend.

Booklist 26:380 Jl '30

"The outstanding defect of 'The Life of Solomon' is the one already foreshadowed in the preface—the author's pretensions far outweigh his achievement. If M. Fleg has discovered 'a genuine psychological development' in the polyglot legends about Solomon, he does not succeed in making clear that development to the reader. M. Fleg's real service is that he has brought together a wide collection of Solomon legends which might otherwise be unknown to the general reader. To claim for his presentation of these legends any profundity or any unusual literary merit is to over-rate his book grossly." Ruth Sapin

— + Books p14 My 11 '30 900w

"Fleg approaches the Solomonic material with neither the critical mind of the historian nor the scholarly interest of the scientific student of folklore, but with a poet's sensitiveness to beauty and significance and a poet's indifference to historicity and fact. The reader will learn little about the life of Solomon, but much about the minds of the men of many generations and many lands who have made of Solomon the symbol of their own desires a nucleus about which to crystalize their own imaginings."

Christian Century 47:309 Mr 5 '30 160w

Nation 131:104 Jl 23 '30 220w

"M. Fleg would have been well-advised to have stripped his Solomon of much of the ornate folk-lore that has covered him beyond recognition, and given us something more impressive than this over-decorated essay."

— New Statesman 34:420 Ja 4 '30 320w

Reviewed by R. C. B. Brown

N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 450w

"He takes the biblical record, plus all the clustering legend that some millenniums have added to his subject and, by passing it through his own mind, makes a poem, half chronicle, half fairy tale, rich as an Oriental tapestry, full of strange figures and designs. . . No brief review can convey adequately any idea of the richness of the texture, the wealth of color of this singular picture. M. Fleg, moreover, is no less happy in his translator than in his own work." H. J. Forman

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 16 '30 650w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson

N Y World p10m Mr 16 '30 340w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"With all his scope and his embroidery, M. Fleg keeps the essential quality. Or, if he strays, his translator has wisely called him to order. . . He has shaped his story finely and with a craftsman's touch. . . Solomon was the savage called to be noble and choosing barbarism. 'He went down. He went down.' M. Fleg and Miss Garvin guide him vividly as he climbs and vividly as he falls. This is a book which echoes in the memory as well as in the ear."

+ Sat R 148:615 N 23 '29 550w

"In this day of biographers, Mr. Fleg writes in the high tradition of the poet chronicler and his work is chronicle and poetry of genius and power. . . The book is written in a heavily but beautifully decorated prose. Many undoubtedly will find it too rich in verbal diet but for such as like long poems, decorated not only with adjective and metaphor, but with poetic story and fable and incident, the book will be a happy discovery for, prose though it is, it sings throughout." Jonathan Daniels

+ Sat R of Lit 7:3 Jl 26 '30 800w

"The book for all its lusciousness is naïve and childlike, the straightforward story of a man beguiled by power finding himself again through pain and weakness."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p941 N 21 '29 500w

FLEMING, BERRY. Visa to France. 305p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-14189

A handful of Englishmen, Americans, Frenchmen, Italians and Germans at the little seaside resort, Les Planches-sur-Mer, supplies the author with a variety of characters for this novel that wittily reflects upon differences in national customs and temperament. Clement Train, American literary man, who has come to Les Planches-sur-Mer to write another novel, is seeking the perfect French heroine. He finds, instead, a mysteriously unhappy American girl in a red berét, an equally mysterious, urbane Italian gentleman with a black beard, a snobbishly correct Englishman, an American lady who wants to be correct, and certain local legends that lend mystery and charm to the little French resort.

"The book is always engagingly written. Here and there it spurts with amusement, then falls back into longueurs. There is some really clever and cultivated discussion of America and Europe, and there are flash-backs into the past lives of the characters, which reveal that once upon a time they were mildly animated human beings. Cut to the pattern of facile sophistication, Visa to France is less good than similar books like Whatever We Do or Charles Brackett's American Colony because it lacks their characterizations, their insight into manners, their ability to make the world, during intervals between drinks, seem gay. Mr. Fleming preaches boredom; and practises what he preaches." Louis Kronenberger

— + Bookm 71:442 Jl '30 230w

FLEMING, BERRY—Continued

"This engaging book is one that can be put aside and picked up again at any hour for an entertaining chapter. Yet few will close the covers until Train turns over in the sand and mumbles drowsily, 'Ah, well! For God's sake quit worrying about the world!'"

+ N Y Times p8 My 25 '30 340w

"It is a gay book, a regularly gay book, without at all being another of the numerous and depressing 'funny' books that appear each year as surely as the vacation season does. . . 'Visa to France' doesn't take itself too hard but it should be very gratefully received by a public which does not often get a book of such gay intent so beautifully turned out." Gladys Graham

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1140 Je 21 '30 500w

FLEMING, DANIEL JOHNSON. Ways of sharing with other faiths. 268p $2.50 Assn. press

290 Christianity and other religions. Missions, Foreign 29-25934

"Daniel J. Fleming writes of the problems presented by the efforts of the various religions to convert one another. Out of a rich experience on the foreign mission field and many years of hard study of the problems presented he points out by 'chapter and verse' illustrations the kinds of attempts being made by adherents of one faith to win over the adherents of another. These range all the way from merely going one's way, trusting that the life itself will speak, to the use of armed might and political pressure."—Outlook

"Significant things are happening in the field of Christian missions these days, and few that are more significant than the thinking being done by a small group of university and theological college professors both in this country and in Great Britain. Of this group which is leading in the re-thinking of the missionary enterprise, Dr. Fleming, professor of missions at Union theological seminary, is the most articulate, and so in many ways the most influential." Paul Hutchinson

Christian Century 47:756 Je 11 '30 800w

"What is the gist of the missionary motive, and what is the most characteristic act of a missionary? . . . The answer that Professor Fleming gives has the following rare combination of qualities: It offers, not a generalized sentiment deduced from the concept of Christianity but an analysis of typical practices of particular missions and missionaries; it exhibits, with psychological insight and with sympathy, the missionaries' own reasons for these practices, but it tests each of them by its known effects; it makes room for variations of personal approach because the persons to be approached are not all alike; and withal it is so open-minded and genial that any really friendly missionary might use it as a letter of introduction to any cultivated non-Christian." G. A. Coe

+ J Religion 10:452 Jl '30 1750w

"Professor Fleming's book deserves the most careful study by those who direct the missionary strategy of all missionary religions. It might well be required as a text book for the mission boards of our churches." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 153:638 D 18 '29 180w

FLEMING, DENNA FRANK. Treaty veto of the American Senate. 325p $3 (9s) Putnam

328.73 United States. Congress. Senate. United States—Foreign relations—Treaties 30-3960

The author, assistant professor of political science in Vanderbilt university, examines the treaties sponsored by the President which the United States Senate has rejected or accepted conditionally. Professor Fleming strongly condemns the practice of the Senate in proposing binding reservations or amendments to important treaties, especially those designed to secure the peaceable settlement of international disputes. It is his belief that the negative action of the Senate on such treaties has placed the United States in a highly equivocal position.

Reviewed by H. B. Learned

Am Hist R 36:168 O '30 750w

"This excellent study is concluded with a consideration of the various alternatives offered as a means of reducing the Senate's treaty veto power. The author presents an interesting and convincing case for lessening the Senate's authority in the ratification of treaties." E. P. H.

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:509 My '30 320w

Books p16 Ap 6 '30 150w

"Dr. Fleming seems to weaken his work somewhat by this special pleading. He would have done better to present the historical data and left action to others. For he has not outlined with sufficient force or clarity any alternative policy to be incorporated into our administrative or diplomatic procedure." R. K. M.

— Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 750w

Reviewed by N. McL. Rogers

Canadian Hist R 11:273 S '30 450w

Current Hist 32:1030 Ag '30 220w

"This scientific study of the handling of treaties of the Senate has long been needed, and should be of considerable aid to the student of American foreign relations."

+ Foreign Affairs 8:671 Jl '30 30w

"In all the phases of this controversy—the struggle over the League of Nations, the reservations demanded by the Senate to the Treaty of Versailles, the long drawn out discussions over entrance into the World Court, the Senate's reservations, the Paris Peace Pact—Mr. Fleming reviews and discusses events and Senatorial action with a just and impartial pen, although he sometimes cannot resist using the sarcastic note which the situation invites. In view of recent developments and others yet likely to come his survey of the entire matter is valuable. The final chapter discusses the whole question of the legislative control of treaties in equable temper and with wide information of usages in other governments."

+ N Y Times p32 F 16 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 Ag '30 250w

"There is nowhere else in the world such a political power over treaty-making as is vested in the American Senate. Whether it will be permanently preserved we do not know, but the book before us by Dr. Fleming is a very able criticism of it."

+ Spec 144:980 Je 14 '30 850w

"It is to be feared that in the United States Professor Fleming's book is not likely to have much practical effect. To the world outside it will be of great interest and value, if only as discounting the extravagant hopes which have been based on American idealism."

Times [London] Lit Sup p423 My 22 '30 2050w

FLEMING, ETHEL. New York. 139p il $6.50 Macmillan

917.471 New York (city)—Description 30-6281

New York's skyscrapers, famous streets, parks, museums, bridges, foreign sections, and amusements described in a general, informal style; a book designed chiefly for out-of-town visitors who are seeing the city for the first time.

"The margins of this book are very wide and the text is thin, but it has one quality that distinguishes it from all other books about New York, fictional or descriptive—it was written by one who really loves our fantastic metropolis, loves it with the warmth and graciousness which Europeans are in the habit of lavishing on their capitals."

+ Books p5 D 29 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p2 D 28 '29 220w
N Y Times p5 Ja 12 '30 380w
St Louis 28:110 Ap '30

"There is something misleading about New York by Miss Ethel Fleming. New York is of such extraordinary interest, sociologically, architecturally, commercially, historically, that no book about it can fail to have good things in it. There are some to be found in this volume."
— + Spec 143:856 D 7 '29 160w

FLETCHER, GUY. Frankincense. 317p $2 Clode
30-17095

Story of the Evans-Winsloe family thru three generations. Beginning with the unhappy marriage of Emily and George, the story continues with the girlhood of their child, Fanny, follows her thru her marriage to Jimmy Dreen, and ends with the fortunes of their son, Geoffrey, during the World war.

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 330w

"In writing of Emily, of Margaret's care of the child and of Geoffrey after he leaves school, Mr. Fletcher is at his best and his work here approaches both sincerity and simplicity. The remainder is crudely done and overburdened with English idioms and schoolboy slang."
— + N Y Times p7 Ag 17 '30 230w

FLETCHER, JOHN GOULD. Two frontiers; a study in historical psychology (Eng title: Europe's two frontiers). 377p $3 Coward-McCann [15s Eyre]

901 United States—History. United States—Civilization. Russia—History. Russia—Civilization 30-4952

A series of historical parallels between Russia and the United States: social, political and literary. The Russian and American temperaments, Mr Fletcher states, are both non-European; but in the fundamental divergences between them he foresees conflict and possible disaster—unless something radical happens to counteract the battle-ground atmosphere of these two opposing creeds of federal democracy and federated bolshevism.

Booklist 26:307 My '30

"If we read the book quickly, we glide from statement to statement without noticing the inconsistencies between and among them, but once we stop to analyze we discover that his vast historical synthesis is founded on questionable and contradictory beliefs. . . Many of the ideas that he offers are, as the publishers say, 'provocative and suggestive.' Many of them are original and even true. But his dream of a great war between America and Russia, in which modern civilization will be destroyed, is a prophecy that must be dismissed for want of evidence—and for the additional reason that history refuses to follow such perfect patterns." Malcolm Cowley
— Books p7 F 9 '30 1100w
Boston Transcript p3 Mr 15 '30 950w

"The resumé of Russian and American history is replete with misstatements, incorrect dates and, naturally, inferences that are ill based. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that this historical survey was written on a desert island, for the simplest works of reference would have corrected many a slip. . . Of much greater value is the contrast that follows between the Russian and American minds. Yet here, too, Mr. Fletcher treads the most treacherous ground with an assurance that makes his reader apprehensive. . . The book is full of suggestiveness, often sensitive, even brilliant, but the author is not content with intimating; he must force all his data into the scheme he has prepared." Alexander Baltzly
— + Current Hist 32:604 Je '30 700w
Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
Nation 130:462 Ap 16 '30 1000w

"This book is closely allied to a type of historical essay popular among French writers since Montesquieu or even the earlier 'Discours sur l'Histoire Universelle.' It is not formally documented history, and it should not be criticized as such. Within its limits it is provocative, and at times profound. There is a good deal of valuable criticism of American culture thrown off by the way, apart from an imaginative framework of ideas in which one cannot quite believe." Allen Tate
+ — New Repub 62:132 Mr 19 '30 600w

"Without being an extraordinarily profound or in all ways entirely accurate book, 'The Two Frontiers' is nevertheless an exceedingly intelligent analysis both of the Russian and the American temperaments and of the present trend of the world." John Bakeless
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m F 15 '30 950w
Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky
N Y Times p2 Mr 9 '30 900w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:352 F 26 '30 350w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 80w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 50w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Behind the monocle, and other stories. 312p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-18664

Twenty-one tales of mystery, adventure and romance.

"Lively and interesting short stories in the dean's best manner, which is very good—and most of the tales appear to be of recent vintage, with the proper Fletcherian flavor of countryside and town, high and low, thrills and quiet fun." Will Cuppy
+ Books p10 Jl 6 '30 150w

"Mr. Fletcher opens his stories well, speeds them along nicely and then when one is all primed for the proper sort of finish the author appears to run out of ideas."
— + N Y Times p18 Jl 13 '30 180w

"Those who like their detective stories short and snappy will find plenty of good fare in this book."
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 150w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Borgia cabinet. 259p $2 Knopf
30-848

"All about the poisoning of Sir Charles Stanmore at Aldersyke Manor, in Hertfordshire; the disappearance of the Countess of Verringham's diamond necklace, certain scandals in the past of the gentry concerned and a most astonishing will, the whole ending in as neat a hanging as you could well desire."—Books

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"A first-class Fletcher, with the vintage flavor and readable quality generally found in the dean's more mature efforts." Will Cuppy
+ Books p18 Ja 19 '30 150w

"The story is absorbing and sufficiently baffling."
+ N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 150w

"Out of somewhat stale materials Mr. Fletcher has constructed a tale that reads briskly, a plot that unfolds naturally and a piece of detective fiction that belongs easily in the forefront of the last dozen thrillers from his pen."
+ N Y World p10m F 2 '30 120w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Heaven-sent witness, and other stories. 305p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-14880

Twenty-one short stories dealing with mystery, brilliant detective work, crimes and their solution, and romance.

FLETCHER, J. S.—Continued
Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 50w

"Here is a likable collection in Mr. Fletcher's most engaging manner—bread and cheese for the faithful." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 My 25 '30 150w

"Only a few of the tales in this book deal with crime, mystery or detection. The other stories are of various sorts and, many of them, rather thin in quality. Even the detective stories are not up to Mr. Fletcher's usual standard."
— N Y Times p17 Je 15 '30 100w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Perris of the Cherry-trees. 305p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-8795

A tale of murder, love and loyalty which took place in a Yorkshire country district.

Books p13 My 11 '30 100w

"Events follow each other with the irrevocability of fate, while the author never obtrudes himself or in the tragic dénouement implies the slightest blame. . . The dialogue is simple but pungent; the book has humor and wistfulness, but never deviates from its restrained and logical purpose."
+ N Y Times p24 F 16 '30 320w

"Though the prevailing atmosphere is dreary and sourly old-fashioned, there are some really fine bits of characterization, and a grasp of elemental emotions in conflict which is vigorous and unerring."
+ — N Y World p11m F 9 '30 180w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Queen of a day. 305p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-24389

Late one night Dr Henry Fordyce was called to attend a dying man in lodgings in that part of London known as Bloomsbury. Moved with pity for the man's beautiful daughter, Dr Fordyce insisted on taking the friendless girl to live with his mother. This act of human kindness plunged the doctor into all kinds of intrigue having to do with small European kingdoms and lost heirs to thrones, but the adventures ended happily.

Bookm 71:xxv Mr '30 60w
Books p8 D 29 '29 120w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. South Foreland murder. 253p $2 Knopf
30-24622

"The scene of this latest Fletcher mystery is laid on the coast of England in a bungalow near Dover. A retired jewel merchant is murdered and valuable jewels belonging to a Russian princess are stolen. The investigation discloses an unfaithful wife, an illicit love affair, and a single clue that betrays the murderer." —Bookm

Bookm 72:xxv O '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p24 S 28 '30 100w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w

"The story is indifferent, but the treatment is excellent."
— + N Y Times p18 N 2 '30 120w

"It is good Fletcher, with an extremely grim ending." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 7:230 O 11 '30 110w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Yorkshire moorland murder. 279p $2 Knopf [7s 6d Jenkins]
30-12991

"Body of Charles Essenheim, famous American book collector, discovered at the bottom of Harlesden Scar, near Kirkenmore, with a copy of the first edition of 'Pilgrim's Progress' in his pocket and another valuable tome missing. Had he been meeting a beautiful woman on the Moor to discuss literature, or was it a gang? Mr. Fletcher's fairly slow but sure method admirably suits the tangle of events."—Books

Booklist 27:31 S '30
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 8 '30 150w

"This is not so good as some of Mr. Fletcher's previous stories, but there is nothing in it to disappoint his more faithful followers." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 120w

FLEXNER, ABRAHAM. Universities; American, English, German. 381p $3.50 Oxford
378 Colleges and universities 30-32829

Dr Flexner first discusses the idea of a university that would answer the intellectual needs of this modern age and follows with a survey of the university systems of America, England and Germany. The longest section is an unsparing criticism of American university practice—in particular the dilution of the curriculum, the sacrifice of everything to the idol of mass production, the transformation of the university into a "service institution."

"Oxford appeals to us because it is so thoroughly British; the Sorbonne, under a cosmopolitan veneer, is unmistakably French; Berlin is German to the bone; therein lie their power and their charm. But for Mr. Flexner, American universities have one damning fault: they are American. They mirror to perfection the national ideals; they apply with brilliant success the national methods. . . The book is a searching discussion of Americanism: the other parts, although not negligible, seem a little out of place. The treatment of the English and German systems is not merely far briefer: it is totally different in spirit. In his last two chapters, Mr. Flexner is an investigator: friendly, judicial, informative. In the main part of the work, he is a fierce satirist." Albert Guerard
Books p1 D 7 '30 2150w

"Dr. Flexner's study of universities was first hand and extended over years. He has done a scholarly job, particularly in view of the fact that he is a product of such an unscholarly atmosphere as he has found America to be." Philip Kinsley
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 29 '30 420w

"When he objects to some of the university schools of business administration, for instance, he is not on too solid ground. That sort of criticism belongs to the passing generation; the present has come to recognize the value of such institutions. On the other hand, few will disagree with Dr. Flexner's assertion that the universities are cluttered up with too many courses which are far removed from anything but vocational training, and that these courses however valuable in themselves, should never be counted toward an academic degree. But the tone of Dr. Flexner's study is too strident, too carping; it is not so much what he says but how he says it that arouses antagonism." E. F. Brown
— + Current Hist 33:iv Ja '31 680w

"Abraham Flexner's analysis of universities is a scholarly and intelligent definition of what a modern university should be. In the largest section, that devoted to America, it is a sensational exposure of practices on the part of our best universities and of conditions within them that should arouse indignation and bring about something more like revolution than reform. . . The chief fault of Mr. Flexner's books is disproportion. He elaborates evidence of defects in curricula more than is necessary to prove his point, and neglects other matters that require thorough examination. It is scarcely justifiable to condemn an institute on the evidence of one thesis, or an extension system on titles of courses and nature of advertising." G. H. Code

+ — New Repub 65:143 D 17 '30 1650w

"The danger is that this volume, written with clarity and conviction by a distinguished student of education, will be accepted as proving all its case when, in fact, it proves only half. Dr. Flexner has hit hard. One hopes that progressive educators will be brave enough to hit back." R. L. Duffus
+ — N Y Times pl D 7 '30 1550w

"Flexner is a doughty warrior and maybe the punishment was deserved. . . The book is packed with serious observations on educational methods, both here and abroad." Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 N 20 '30 850w

"This book is no Rashdall, no Paulsen, no standard text on an all-important subject. Change the title to 'University Foibles, 1930 Edition,' and you will not be bewildered when you enter and find not a scientific lecture but an up-to-the-minute 'Revue.' Not that a revue is not interesting, not that the mirrors which it holds up to nature are not well polished, not that it is not full of fun and full of exposure, but you must come in the proper mood. . . The book says some things that needed to be said and which required courage for the saying. It weakens its effect by saying too much. It comes dangerously near doing what Burke says cannot be done, indicting an entire nation. It is full of nuggets of wisdom. It will furnish endless discussion for university circles and sophisticated enjoyment for the few. As a study of the functions of universities in a democracy it is too narrow to be sound. . . Taken in the irresponsible mood of the revue its laughter will help to clear the educational air and the general effect be wholesome." J. H. MacCracken
— + Sat R of Lit 7:383 N 29 '30 1200w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 80w

FLEXNER, HORTENSE (MRS WYNCIE KING). This stubborn root, and other poems. 78p $1.25 Macmillan
811 30-23241

The sense of life reaching forth, but never quite achieving the ultimate aim of beauty, dominates the lyric utterance of Miss Flexner. Many of the poems in this first volume are reprinted from current magazines.

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

"There is a rare modesty of spirit here, which one respects. It is made partly of courage that has been tested by pain; such pain as one is able to guess only from the delicacy of perception apparent all through the lyrics. It is also the humbleness before life that comes from the sight of frontiers one cannot reach, with a serenity that accepts them. From such poise we properly expect grace; what surprises is the occasional flash of an inspired phrase."
+ Bookm 72:viii O '30 100w

"Those who come upon these poems must be aware they are reading something a little out of the ordinary. Not often does one happen on a book of verse the quality of which is kept so constantly at a high level of achievement. The lines move with dignity always. . . One gathers that she could be sharply ironical if she chose. But she chooses well in holding her powers of irony in check."
+ N Y Times p25 S 28 '30 100w

"Hortense Flexner's new volume is of her usual high quality, although a kind of defiant indifference seems to have allowed a little superfluous light verse to be included where it doesn't belong. Her deep seriousness is sometimes on the brink of bitterness. Some revelation might occur, and make her poetry more luminous and complete. Or it might sink into futility. The next book should tell. She is a good poet, but someway yet without the victory, though few of the good but still unfamous poets are so close to it."
+ — Outlook 156:146 S 24 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

FLICK, ALEXANDER CLARENCE. Decline of the mediaeval church. (Hist. of civilization) 2v $12.50 Knopf [32s Routledge]
270.5 Church history—Middle ages [30-25096]

"Dr. Flick's two volumes provide material to enable the student to make up his mind with some degree of certainty on the question whether the Reformation was inevitable. He carries us from the close of the thirteenth to the close of the fifteenth century, and presents the history of the Church during that period as a gradual decline punctuated from time to time with sincere attempts at internal reform which were in different degrees abortive."—Sat R

"On certain features of this work we have our reservations, ranging from English style to historical judgments. Nevertheless it is an impressive presentation of a majestic subject. It is loaded with facts, many of them hard to find elsewhere. It tries to be fair, the most conspicuous instance of this quality being a caution not to censure too severely the miserable murderers of Huss. And finally it combines large outlines with small details in the manner of a man who has mastered his field with the mind and lived in it with imagination." W. L. Sullivan
+ — Books p2 Je 22 '30 1250w

"Much of what Dr. Flick has done is not new, but he has done it better than any one of his predecessors. He has made available for English readers the results of the investigations of many Continental, particularly German, scholars. His book contains more information on the political, intellectual, economic and social forces weakening the Papacy than any other book in English. Perhaps his most valuable contribution is his thorough study of economic conditions. He has excellent chapters, for example, on the financial system of the Papacy and the abuses connected therewith." J. F. Scott
+ Current Hist 33:vi O '30 380w

Reviewed by A. W. Harrison
Nation and Ath 47:476 Jl 12 '30 930w

"It is possible, even probable, that the State historian of New York has produced the most comprehensive, well-balanced, and best documented work ever written on the subject. His documents reveal with conspicuous lucidity the political, social and economic, as well as the executive, judicial and legislative aspects of the administration of the Church, both at Rome and at Avignon. His masterly method of coordination, demonstration and argument is well connotated by the scheme of his tables of contents." Walter Littlefield
+ N Y Times p13 Ag 17 '30 650w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

"This book is remarkably interesting, and throughout conveys the impression of being not propaganda but history." J. C. Hardwick
+ Sat R 149:486 Ap 19 '30 950w

"Some few of his pages are discolored by an undesirable and unnecessary anti-Roman bias. The proof-reading is faulty, especially in the case of the Latin quotations; but the index is fairly complete, the bibliography is adequate, and the documentation is excellent. All in all, it is a very scholarly work, well worthy of a place on the shelves of every student of the days when our modern civilization was being born." C. F. Ronayne
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:86 Ag 30 '30 850w

"Dr. Flick's monumental work on the decline of the Mediaeval Church is a mine of information and, what is more, it indicates how disastrous for the unity of Christendom and for the general prestige of religion the Papal theories of the Church have been."
+ Spec 145:315 S 6 '30 700w

FLICK, A. C.—Continued
Times [London] Lit Sup p748 S 25 '30 2150w

FLORENCE, PHILIP SARGANT. Sociology and sin; a plea for the exclusion of uplift from economics and the political sciences. (New science ser.) 98p $1 Norton
301 Social sciences. Social ethics 29-28358

An essay on the effect of moral bias and moral criticism on the social sciences. "There should at least be some economists, political scientists and sociologists who will devote themselves to research . . . and who, however keen to improve the lot of man, correct his sins, and lift him upward, will be content to confine their conclusions within the scientific stage of that process of uplift."

Reviewed by C. D. Clark
Am J Soc 36:166 Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by C. M. Perry
Int J Ethics 40:459 Ap '30 130w

Reviewed by Paul Jones
World Tomorrow 13:343 Ag '30 420w

FLORENCE, PHILIP SARGANT. Statistical method in economics and political science; a treatise on the quantitative and institutional approach to social and industrial problems. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 521p $7.50 Harcourt [25s Routledge]
311 Statistics. Economics. Political science 29-24613

A study of the nature, use and limitations of statistics in the field of economics and political science. Part one deals with the mood and matter of statistical enquiry; part two, with statistical measurement of data; part three, with statistical field work; and part four with the application of statistics to economics and politics.

"The book is a model of documentations and cross-referencing, but it is in no sense a text-book or manual of statistics. The exposition is clear and precise, and so effectively illustrated as to provide delight for even a non-statistically minded reader." S. A. Rice
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:471 My '30 850w

"This is a contribution of the first rank to the structural philosophy of realistic social science. First announced by the publishers in nineteen twenty-three or four, its tardy appearance has been amply justified if the delay has contributed to the maturity of thought, the brilliance of insight and the pleasing literary exposition which characterize it." S. A. Rice
+ Ann Am Acad 147:217 Ja '30 700w
Boston Transcript p8 F 1 '30 750w

"Let no one be deterred from the study of Professor Sargant Florence's treatise by the fear that it is merely an addition to the numerous books on statistical technique. The emphasis is on the sub-title; the subject of discussion is the scope rather than the method of statistics, and new ground is broken in many directions." A. L. Bowley
+ Nation and Ath 46:206 N 9 '29 1000w

"It is the supreme merit of Prof. Sargant Florence, when planning his great work, that he has co-ordinated and correlated in a wonderfully skilful manner, the highly complex data of economics and political science, and used the statistical approach for his purpose in such a way that the result is a triumph in homogeneity, a noble architectural pile, deeply impressing the observer with its massive strength, completeness, well-balanced proportions, and unity. The expert statistician may not always agree with the author in certain details of technique, some of which he himself admits may be heretical: but for the general reader, for the general student of economics and political science, the work is invaluable as a veritable storehouse of the latest research in statistical method as applied to these particular social sciences."
+ Nature 125:39 Ja 11 '30 1550w

"The book is too long, and contains a good deal that is superfluous. The author cannot quite make up his mind whether he means it to be a text-book of statistics as well as a treatise on the importance of the subject; and consequently he explains either too much or too little—too much for readers who know it already, and too little to make some parts of his treatment clear to readers who do not. He suffers moreover, from an unfortunate style; and some parts of his book read more like the report of a lecture than like a manuscript adequately prepared for publication. What he has written is, on many points, both interesting and important; but it could have been written better in less than five hundred closely-printed pages."
— + New Statesman 34:98 O 26 '29 250w

"Professor Florence has written a technical book for students of politics and economics; he has, however, by his method of presentation, done all that is humanly possible to allure the general reader to so forbidding a subject. It is a book which every scholar in these fields will wish to possess." G. E. G. Catlin
+ Pol Sci Q 45:442 S '30 1050w

"That it is essential for the economist and the political scientist to base all their generalizations on assembled data is the theme of this large, detailed, but essentially readable volume, and the author shows how the task has to be tackled. . . The importance of the statistical method of Professor Sargant Florence is that it enables one to formulate not only sound generalizations but also practical ideals."
+ Sat R 148:784 D 28 '29 620w

FLORES, ANGEL. Lope de Vega, monster of nature. 214p il $3.50 Brentano's 30-8395

"Brief account of the life of Spain's great dramatist of the Golden Age. Mr. Flores has chosen the impressionistic method of telling his tale; his portrait of Lope is done in a series of sketches, some of which are no more than quotations from virtually untouched documents."—Books

Bookm 72:vii S '30 50w

"The last thing Mr. Flores had in mind was a scholarly life of Lope, of which there are a good many, including the fine study made by Rennert, and his book has the advantage of originality of approach and treatment, and, in the latter part particularly, of bringing the monster of nature sharply to life." Herschel Brickell
+ — Books p7 Ap 20 '30 650w

"In the midst of brilliant and pointed chapters splashed with color, Lope as a dynamic, creative genius is utterly lost sight of. Thus the chief reason for the book's existence vanishes." J. J. R.
— + Cath World 132:122 O '30 100w
Nation 131:75 Jl 16 '30 230w

"This book on Lope, because of its occasional lapses into lurid and excessive imagery, will no doubt serve its purpose of appealing to the modern taste for 'jazzed-up' biography." W. L. Fichter
— + New Repub 63:240 Jl 16 '30 450w

"This book is free extravaganza on the life of a man whom Cervantes named 'monster of nature,' executed with pizzicati and punctuated by a slow rain of verbal flowers. . . Flores knows the tradition; but his work, designed for reading at express speed, sacrifices its excellent images to a talent for the theatrically and falsely poetic. From the perversity of its style it escapes in the end even the character of the man whose life it chronicles. Flores has been too busy erecting a prodigy to reconstruct a human being." V. McH.
— + N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 550w
N Y Times p10 My 11 '30 350w

"The author seemed to lack sufficient material even for an imaginary biography, and so we have such padding as tavern scenes, night club dancing, the story of the Invincible Armada, and a description taken from that happiest of hunting grounds by all those who wish to give us thick local color, the Spanish Inquisition."

— Sat R of Lit 6:1211 Jl 19 '30 450w

FLOURNOY, RICHARD W., jr., and HUDSON, MANLEY OTTMER, eds. Collection of nationality laws of various countries, as contained in constitutions, statutes and treaties. (Publications of the Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of int. law) 776p $4 (20s) Oxford

323.1 Nationalism and nationality. Citizenship. Naturalization. Treaties 30-9008

"The laws of 86 states, dominions, colonies and dependencies are included and in each case an attempt is made to reproduce the texts of the laws (in English) which were in force at the time of publication,—1929. The second part of the volume is devoted to a compilation of treaties and other international agreements, both multi-partite and bi-partite, which contain regulations for the national status of individuals. The book is intended as a reference work and it is well indexed for this purpose. In addition, there is for most countries an introductory Editors' Note giving a brief history of the nationality laws of the country involved and a bibliography of comments and sources. These special bibliographies are supplementary to a selected general bibliography."—Columbia Law R

"This volume was unquestionably of great value in the work of the Codification Conference at The Hague and in view of the fact that that Conference was unable to reach final agreement for the regulation of difficulties in this field, the volume will continue to be useful for the same purpose. In addition, it is of constant use to students, officials and lawyers who may be called upon to deal with nationality problems. The editors' preface indicates that a further edition is a possibility, and it may be hoped that in any case supplementary volumes will be issued when necessary in order to keep so valuable a reference book up to date." P. C. Jessup
+ Columbia Law R 30:1081 N '30 480w
Times [London] Lit Sup p643 Ag 7 '30 80w

FLOYD, WILLIAM. People vs. Wall street; a mock trial. 272p $2.50 Vanguard press

332.6 Wall street. Speculation. Business 30-4823

"Mr. William Floyd gets a deal of fun out of the panic's exposure of Big Business. Out of the mouths of men like Henry Ford, Charles M. Schwab, and Owen D. Young he convicts the financial leaders of ignorance and worse. His People vs. Wall Street is an account of a mock trial in which current financial absurdities are mercilessly shown up."—R of Rs

---

Reviewed by E. H. Collins
Books p12 Je 29 '30 600w

"Though the development of the argument is not very logical, some of the points are telling. The ironic nature of the book is pointed out at the end, when the jury brings in a verdict that the defendant is not guilty and the people is insane." George Soule
N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 180w

"This is a thoroughly documented satire on the rôle of Big Business in American life. It is able, it is moderate, it makes so many bull's eyes that one tires of totting them up, and it leads nowhere." John Carter
+ — Outlook 154:352 F 26 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:20 Ap '30 50w

"No more successful exposé of the huge shell-game of 'New Capitalism' has thus far appeared among post-panic volumes, most of which are little more than bound tipster-sheets —vulgar, visionless, and superficial. Which is not to say, by long odds, that here is literature. Even Mr. Floyd seldom rises above the jargon of his subject. The merit of People vs. Wall Street lies in its being an intelligent and uncompromising indictment of the whole system of public exploitation centering about the two large New York stock exchanges. . . Mr. Floyd is, of course, pleading a case, and he selects his evidence with the end in view of obtaining a conviction. One cannot always follow him the whole way. But it is none the less worth knowing a little of whither we are heading. People vs. Wall Street is an entertaining satire upon the most dangerous racket of them all—attuning the world to the ticker." H. T. Volkening
+ — World Tomorrow 13:315 Jl '30 550w

FLUGEL, FELIX, and FAULKNER, HAROLD UNDERWOOD, comps. Readings in the economic and social history of the United States. (Harper's hist. ser.) 978p $3.75 Harper

330.973 United States—Social conditions. United States—Economic conditions 29-20221

A textbook of source readings which are so arranged as to trace the course of American social and economic history since the beginning of the Revolutionary war.

"In view of the mass of material which exists on the economic and social history of the United States—descriptive, statistical, analytical, controversial, some good but more bad or indifferent —it must be said that the editors have chosen with careful discrimination. Their selections are not only historically accurate to a high degree but also generally very readable. . . The organization of the book is clear and effective." Henrietta Larson
+ Am Econ R 20:91 Mr '30 400w

"The book is a well conceived and well executed piece of apparatus for the teacher of economic history. The student will find the volume rather hard going because there is a considerable amount of technical matter in it. But American economic development in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries is not to be grasped without an effort. In the opinion of the reviewer the book is deficient in its treatment of the fisheries and of agriculture. The latter defect is of no small importance. The editors by their somewhat unbalanced treatment of American economic development have missed a real opportunity." R. H. Gabriel
+ — Am Hist R 35:684 Ap '30 650w

"The general organization of this large volume is a bit stereotyped, but the selections are made with insight and are given continuity by introductory passages. The book's distinctive contribution in its field is its emphasis on contemporary economy. The automobile, for example, although not indexed, is discussed at length. One of the best sections is the final chapter of forty-two pages on economic imperialism." Witt Bowden
+ Ann Am Acad 148:309 Mr '30 60w
Booklist 26:145 Ja '30
St Louis 28:94 Ap '30

FLYNN, BRIAN. Murders near Mapleton. 287p $2 Macrae Smith co.
[29-8542]

On Christmas Eve Sir Eustace Vernon was entertaining guests at dinner. Suddenly he was called away. Several hours later his murdered body was found on a nearby railroad track. Purvis, the butler at Sir Eustace's had been poisoned, and was discovered to be a woman. Thru the intricate mass of evidence and clues Anthony Bathurst worked his way with little apparent difficulty and discovered the truth.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Ap 13 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 350w

"Another mystery story of real interest. Mr Flynn's third offering is not only well filled with action but follows in interesting detail the unraveling of a most baffling double murder."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 100w

FLYNN, BRIAN. Mystery of the peacock's eye. 318p $2 Macrae Smith co.
[28-29929]

Miss Sheila Delaney, belle of the Westhampton Hunt ball, who possessed a magnificent emerald, was murdered. Anthony Bathurst investigated the murder and the actions of the man who stole the emerald from a temple in Afghanistan.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 N 2 '30 100w

"This tale, according to Mr. S. S. Van Dine's mystery writers' decalogue, takes an unfair advantage of the reader, but it is undeniably interesting."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:252 O 18 '30 80w

FOERSTER, NORMAN. American scholar; a study in litterae inhumaniores. 66p $1 Univ. of N.C. press [4s 6d Milford]
814 Learning and scholarship. Literature and science 29-21086

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

Reviewed by Austin Warren
Bookm 70:681 F '30 1200w

Cath World 131:114 Ap '30 400w

Pratt p31 spring '30

St Louis 28:201 S '30

"While we find his style somewhat heavy, discursive, and at times confusing, we cannot help feeling that there is much justification for his main charge against the higher literary education in America—namely, that it tends to exclusive specialization and to the neglect of a really fruitful and 'rich' study of literature itself."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p72 Ja 30 '30 850w

FOERSTER, NORMAN. Toward standards; a study of the present critical movement in American letters. 224p $2.50 Farrar
801 Humanism. Literary criticism. American literature—History and criticism 30-29023

Since naturalism has failed to provide standards in art and criticism, Mr Foerster, on behalf of the new humanism, makes a plea for "judgment in terms of permanently human values." His book presents a survey of the development of humanistic principles in criticism.

"If Shakespeare had spent his time resolving his confusions instead of writing poetry he might have turned out to be a Confucius or a Thomas Aquinas, or he might have been an abbot of the Benedictines, and if he had no confusions at all to resolve, he might have written books like Mr. Foerster's. Before any writer unburthens himself in print of a system of esthetics, it would be well if he had read it to some practicing artists who are scholars with some knowledge of the literature of criticism. At the same time, I should like to reiterate my admiration for the scholarly quality of the mind of the author of 'Towards Standards.' In his own field he has few equals in America, but a literary critic or an expounder of esthetics he certainly is not." Mary Colum
— +Books p1 D 28 '30 1700w

"I began this book under a misapprehension. I thought I was really about to read something definite concerning those Standards in criticism about which humanist critics always talk with such impressive vagueness. I found, alas, just another rehash of the new humanism. . . The new humanism does not advance a step in the present volume, and only reveals its weaknesses and real affiliations more glaringly." Henry Hazlitt
— Nation 131:499 N 5 '30 900w

"Mr. Foerster has a program at once sensibly presented and sane in argument. He writes well, with ease and concision. He thinks clearly. He is not the editor of a literary section or a magazine, who must consider the source of the income that maintains him. From the quiet of his study, where his wants are cared for by the emolument he receives as director of the School of Letters, he can [plead], with force and eloquence, for Standards in literature." Burton Rascoe
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 250w

"Mr. Foerster gives a compelling enough coup de grâce to Impressionism as a critical creed, but he also steps out into the field that is being explored by T. S. Eliot, Ramon Fernandez, Herbert Read and others, the field of philosophical criticism. This field has its own pitfalls, but it is far more exciting, and promises far more clarification of the nature and possibilities of literature than the little plots cultivated by critics like Huneker. And because Mr. Foerster says almost nothing at all on the interrelated subjects of economics and politics, he doesn't exhibit the usual weakness of his Humanist colleagues in discussing these thorny matters." John Chamberlain
N Y Times p5 O 26 '30 550w

FOERSTER, NORMAN, ed. Humanism and America: essays on the outlook of modern civilisation. 294p $3.50 Farrar
814 Humanism. United States—Intellectual life 30-6560

Essays by disciples of the new humanism in which their philosophy is applied to various aspects of the intellectual life of America. Contents: The pretensions of science, by L. T. More; Humanism: an essay at definition, by Irving Babbitt; The humility of common sense, by P. E. More; The pride of modernity, by G. R. Elliott; Religion without humanism, by T. S. Eliot; The plight of our arts, by F. J. Mather, Jr.; The dilemma of modern tragedy, by A. R. Thompson; An American tragedy, by Robert Shafer; Pandora's box in American fiction, by H. H. Clark; Dionysus in dismay, by S. F. Chase; Our critical spokesmen, by G. B. Munson; Behaviour and continuity, by Bernard Bandler II; The well of discipline, by S. B. Gass; Courage and education, by R. L. Brown.

"With the exception of T. S. Eliot's characteristically clear and light little essay there is throughout the book a general sloppiness of writing, mushiness of logic and innocence of a genuinely philosophical technique of tradition ill calculated 'to challenge the anarchy of our time.' Space does not permit quotation of all the bad prose, the woman's-club thinking and unctuous gentility in the volume." Irwin Edman
— Books p3 F 23 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Karl Schriftgiesser
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 1 '30 2250w

"The book is a strikingly important one for the hour. It is one of the signs that our American world is not wholly lost in the murky atmosphere of disillusion, that man as an animal need not wholly lose himself in the animal, that a feeling for measure, proportion, sanity, and beauty has somehow become a part of his being, is discoverable in his ancestors of thousands of years ago, and that it will probably not be either smiled or clubbed out of existence now. To read the book is to experience a kind of exaltation of spirit, a strengthening of courage in the face of doubts and hesitations." L. W. Smith
+ Christian Century 47:592 My 7 '30 950w

Reviewed by Paul Kaufman
Christian Science Monitor p7 Ag 30 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

Reviewed by J. T. Farrell
Int J Ethics 41:125 O '30 550w

"The present symposium is surely not lacking in value, and many of its contributors are men of high ability. Much of what they have to say about tradition, knowledge, discipline, completeness, is worth at least a respectful hearing. . . They are trying to revive an outworn and discredited metaphysics. They fancy they have solved problems when they have merely distributed labels and catchwords. Most of them seem to imagine that complex literary questions can be settled by the crude methods of practical politics, and they see the literary scene naively as a bi-party struggle for power between the Humanists and the Naturalists." Henry Hazlitt

— + Nation 130:272 Mr 5 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Lewis Mumford
New Repub 62:162 Mr 26 '30 400w

"'Humanism and America' is unquestionably the most interesting literary document which has appeared in recent years. It at once lets the public know what the New Humanism really is and what it has to say about contemporary literature. . . It will give every reader who can do more than puzzle out sentences knowledge of the fact that Humanism is based on faulty assumptions; that it is a proscriptive doctrine without a tradition to give it respectability; and that it seeks to bring about what must inevitably be a sterile experimental departure in literary technique under the guise of a recovery of absolute Truth." C. H. Grattan
N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 1850w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p2 F 23 '30 1850w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 F 22 '30 900w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30
St Louis 28:143 My '30

Reviewed by H. S. Canby
Sat R of Lit 6:749 F 22 '30 4150w

"The educated American public is aware that its standards are dissolving, and it is in the mood to listen attentively to those who might reconstruct an ordered view of life. It is the ambition of these new humanists to do just that, and they will be heard. I warn them that they will not be heard long if this volume of essays is a sample of their genius and their quality. For while these essays are full of insistence that man shall exercise self-control in accordance with civilized standards, Mr. Babbitt is so much concerned with the metaphysics of his strict doctrine and with excommunicating heretics that neither he nor anyone else gets around to the crucial question of how standards are to be discovered." Walter Lippmann
— Sat R of Lit 6:817 Mr 15 '30 3400w
Springf'd Republican p8 F 22 '30 1250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p638 Ag 7 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Norman Studer
World Tomorrow 14:26 Ja '31 420w

"Professor Babbitt alone hews to the line. The others are busy lopping off excrescences, with considerable flourish of axes and boisterous high spirits. Much of the book lacks that literary austerity which Professor Babbitt gives to his own chapter. Much of it, given the classical tradition, is over-written and seems to betray some want of final immunity against the virus of romanticism. The book is significant in that it pillories the inadequate dogmatism of much of the careless thinking of the time, and discovers the scarlet letter on the person of those who have had too intimate an affair with nature." W. L. Sperry
— + Yale R n s 19:823 summer '30 900w

FOLEY, PEARL. Octagon crystal. 273p $2 Carrier [7s 6d Brentano's]

"The hero of this mystery tale is Chief Red Hawk, the last of the Narragansetts. It is he who makes clear the secret of the octagon crystal and tells why certain persons were so determined to gain possession of it. He tells, too, the secret of Forrest Selwyn's birth (Forrest, by the way, is a girl) and shows the way to a happy ending for her and the man who loves her."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p25 O 27 '29 100w

"There is no superhuman detective, either private or on the police force, and though the style is a little crude at first, as the narrative gains in interest the crudity becomes less noticeable and the story marches rapidly to its happy conclusion."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 D 31 '29 180w
N Y Times p22 N 3 '29 100w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Anybody's pearls. 325p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]
30-6436

A priceless string of pearls which had belonged to the Princess Alla Anastasia of Bulomania was stolen and passed from crook to crook until it landed in London. Dick Shemwell, a young American, happened to be in London at the time and very much in need of money. Dick stole the pearls and after a string of exciting adventures, sold them, and lived to tell the story.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Mr 9 '30 80w

"The story is interesting and the characters fair, though not at all unique. There is enough suspense to give this a place among mystery stories and it certainly is a much better type than many of that category."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 13 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p941 N 29 '28 150w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Mystery of the folded paper. 350p $2 Harper [7s 6d Collins]
30-25155

A murder in Hoboken, a folded paper in an emerald locket, the discovery of a beautiful young girl (who is given a part in Christopher Morley's production, "After Dark"), and a go-getting young newspaper reporter are the prime ingredients of this sophisticated mystery.

"A clever mystery with all the essential trappings and a few extra ones."
+ Bookm 72:xxii N '30 80w

"No useful purpose would be served by subjecting this thriller to the bleak winds of higher criticism." Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 19 '30 150w

"The author does not make the most of his opportunity. Hackneyed incidents abound and the author even uses a shop-worn fairy tale in the solution of his plot." R. I. Center
— Sat R of Lit 7:379 N 22 '30 120w

"There are more thrills than detection in this volume."
Times [London] Lit Sup p760 S 25 '30 220w

FOR Joan of Arc; an act of homage from
2 nine members of the French academy. 131p il $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Sheed]

B or 92 Jeanne d'Arc, Saint

"The present essays have been written by nine members of the French Academy, to demonstrate to Englishmen what Joan now means to France. The writers of this act of homage to the Maid are all men of distinction in different walks of life. The late Maréchal Foch explains the military and political significance of Joan's relief of Orleans. . . M. Louis Bertrand, in a wholly delightful chapter on the girlhood of the Maid and its environment, describes the countryside of Lorraine about Domrémy. . . For the rest, M. Georges Goyau writes of her mission; H. Henry Lavedan on Orleans; M. Louis Madelin on the coronation at Reims; Maître Henri-Robert sketches, briefly and rhetorically, the trial at Rouen; Monseigneur Brillart describes the Sainthood of the national and Christian heroine.

FOR Joan of Arc—Continued
Some notes by Maurice Barrès indicate that it was his intention to treat her as the incarnation of democracy; and an epilogue by M. Gabriel Hanotaux hails her as the pioneer of universal peace and brotherhood."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Bookm 72:x N '30 80w
Cath World 132:370 D '30 50w
N Y Times p16 D 21 '30 200w

"If one notices, here and there, a tendency to be over-rhetorical or a straining to point a moral, that, one recognizes, is the natural outcome of the emotion which must be stirred in the breast of every one, be he Frenchman or be he Englishman, who reads those most poignant of all human documents, the letters and the records of the trial of this Saint of Patriotism. . . The illustrations, from well-known miniatures, tapestries and wood-cuts are admirably reproduced."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p601 Jl 24 '30 1050w

FORBES, HELEN CADY. Apple Pie hill. 154p il $1.75 Macmillan
30-10707

"Deals with an old New England house, an impoverished old family, and a modern young heroine who sets out to solve the mystery of its lost silver and restore its fortunes."—Chicago Daily Tribune

Booklist 27:32 S '30

"The note of the treasure, though plausible enough, does not ring entirely true. It follows too closely on the heels of the hidden picture in 'Mario's Castle,' and Miss Forbes might have given her new mystery a more varied turn or twist with corresponding advantage. But 'Apple Pie Hill' is naturally and skilfully done, and the reader lays it down with a feeling of genuine friendship for all concerned." Laura Benet
+ — Books p8 My 25 '30 470w

"It is not easy to invent a new plot for children, so we suppose Miss Forbes has done the best she can. Nevertheless, we admit to preferring the days of faerie. No doubt, however, the children for whom the story is intended will much delight in the parlor-maid and the treasure."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 31 '30 150w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 My 3 '30 40w

"A wholesome and well-written story." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 100w
Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 180w

"This story for young girls is fresh, unsentimental, spirited. The young heroine is a delightful girl, and she and her cousin are the centre of swift and interesting action. The book is wholesome without being dull, and expresses sentiment without sentimentality. Good reading." C. H. Baker
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1119 Je 7 '30 120w

FORBES, ROSITA (TORR) (MRS A. T. McGRATH). Cavaliers of death. 320p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d T. Butterworth]
30-17942

Exciting adventures of a young English girl who all unconsciously becomes the central figure in a struggle to the death between a sect of Syrian devil worshippers and the Cavaliers of death, a secret organization of Europeans.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Ag 17 '30 100w

"Miss Forbes has one advantage over most fiction writers, as her extensive travels through the strange regions of the world give her all the local color an author could desire. 'Cavaliers of Death' is her latest and most fantastic book. It is not worked out as smoothly as 'Account Rendered,' published a few months ago, but it is certainly more exciting."
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 270w
N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 100w
N Y Times p18 Ag 31 '30 180w

"An exciting story, if sometimes overburdened with incident."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p397 My 8 '30 280w

FORBES, ROSITA (TORR) (MRS A. T. McGRATH). One flesh; being a comedy with a prologue. 327p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Cassell]

Zara married Christopher-Carlyon and loved him because marriage meant to them, not one flesh, but one spirit. Christopher, being esthetic by nature and extremely impractical financially, worshipped Zara as a beautiful idealization, not as a woman to be cherished and protected. Unhappy and thwarted, Zara sought in other men what Christopher had not given her; but the tenderness and pity that she invariably felt for him was a bond, she knew, that could never be broken.

"Miss Forbes gives certain of her characters an unusual sort of distinction by labeling them modestly—for they are more than types—as a Well Known Woman, a Genius, a Faun, a Cricket Blue, a Peer and so forth. The author proves herself a skillful worker in the field of analytical research."
+ Books p20 S 28 '30 180w
Boston Transcript p2 N 1 '30 350w

FORBES, RUSSELL. Governmental purchasing. 370p il $5 Harper
351 Buying 29-13322

"The author is secretary of the National Municipal League. The volume describes the methods followed in the procurement of supplies, materials and equipment, the expenditure for which constitutes from 20 to 30 per cent of the government's operating budget. Centralized purchasing greatly reduces the cost. Five years' study has been devoted to the functioning of purchasing systems in the federal, state, county and municipal governments of the United States and Canada. Successive chapters discuss standardization, purchase requirements and negotiation, contracts, inspection, storage and accounting control. Forms in actual use are reproduced. A seven-page bibliography is appended."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 19:463 S '29 100w

"This volume is a brief statement of the advantages of centralized purchasing of supplies, materials, and equipment by governments, with an extended, but straightforward, discussion of the most desirable procedures in operation in American communities. There is no philosophical consideration of purchasing or of the vexing problems that scientific purchasing raises. Mention of these numerous problems is not omitted, but always they are discussed in the light of the actual experiences. It is this practical approach that makes the book much worth while to everyone directly or indirectly in contact with public buying." L. D.
+ Am Pol Sci R 23:1051 N '29 350w
Booklist 26:102 D '29
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:74 N '29

FORBES-MOSSE, FRAU IRENE (FLEMMING). Don Juan's daughters; together with Dream children and The burden; tr. from the German by Oakley Williams; with an introd. by Vernon Lee. 330p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

Three short novels make up the book. Don Juan's Daughters is a burlesque sequel to the libretto of Mozart's opera, Don Giovanni, in which Donna Anna and Donna Elvira have grown older and Don Ottavio is devoted to the collection of coins. The second story, Dream Children, is a fragile and gentle account of a childless woman. The Burden is a study of two German households in the years following the war.

"Mrs. Forbes-Mosse is a superb writer, and Oakley Williams an extraordinarily gifted translator." Coley Taylor
+ Bookm 71:328 Je '30 450w

Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 250w

"For those who can appreciate its delicacy, its wit, and its charm it will be a genuine discovery." Frank Swinnerton
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 F 15 '30 470w

"Miss Forbes-Mosse has that delightful, sentimental, finicking, meandering and spinsterly fussiness that immediately evokes dreams of gently purring kettles, failing drawing-room fires, a sleep-sodden cat, the rustle of fastidious skirts, talk that is at once sly, sentimental, caustic and guilefully inconsequent, in the declining light of late afternoons in spring. Her hand has the blessed touch of the fine artist. She has a sensibility that takes the breath away, and these three novellen are something like literature." V. S. Pritchett
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 480w

"What we gather from the stories is nothing save minutiae upon minutiae—descriptions of scenery, bits of character, events in the stories, all jumbled together with no sense of value and no logical order. The details are colorless in themselves. Containing, as they do, a Katherine Mansfield quality in their selection, they resemble an inferior imitation of her work. They are murky where Katherine Mansfield's are clear as crystal, and uneven, where hers are clearly etched."
— N Y Times p22 My 25 '30 590w

" 'Don Juan's Doughters' is a fine and original book. Vernon Lee is not in the least mistaken about this altogether delightful volume; her preface, in which she touches lightly upon the ancestry, earthly and spiritual, of the Hilaria of the title-story, is a just and felicitous piece of appreciation."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 23 '30 800w

FORD, COREY (JOHN RIDDELL, pseud.). John Riddell murder case; a Philo Vance parody; il. by Miguel Covarrubias. 323p $2 Scribner
817 30-26991

John Riddell, book reviewer, is found bored to death in his library, surrounded by best-sellers. Philo Vance arrives, lights a Régie cigarette, and declares that this devastatin' affair is not yet over. Sure enough, one by one all the popular authors are reported dead —stabbed thru the heart by a sharp instrument, and wearing John Riddell's left tennis shoe. Among those whose books Philo Vance reads, in search of clues, are Jim Tully, Will Rogers, Calvin Coolidge, Peggy Joyce, Theodore Dreiser, Will Durant and Rudy Vallée.

Booklist 27:104 N '30

"The story is called to the attention of those who are exasperated by Philo Vance."
+ Bookm 72:xxii N '30 180w

"Herewith the funniest murder in this department's long and checkered career—and, believe us, we have laughed heartily and sadistically at quite a lot of murders. The twelve Covarrubias canvases are perfect." Will Cuppy
+ Books p12 S 21 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '30

"Mr. Ford is only at his best when at his most savage, and there is certainly a refreshingly malicious pleasure in reading such biting gibes as these at the various literary stuffed shirts. And there are some few chapters where the burlesque reaches up toward an inspired ingenuity." R. M. Coates
+ — New Repub 64:328 N 5 '30 550w

" 'The John Riddell Murder Case' is so entertaining that it is difficult to lay it down without finishing it, once it has been begun. It is so amusing that one feels impelled to read choice bits aloud and share one's enjoyment with others. And the choice bits occur on almost every page." Isaac Anderson
+ N Y Times p2 O 12 '30 420w

"Some of the authors parodied may join in the laugh on themselves, others may, with justice, ask why the punishment is so severe. Ford practices the art of parody with a cleaver. If he wrote with less facility, if he had to stop to erase and polish and stop again, after the hard and toilsome manner confessed by Max Beerbohm, he would, I am sure, rise above the humorists whose sole trick is wisecracking. He often falls victim to the very trait of doing the obvious, which makes Will Rogers a financial success and an artistic washout. Ford could boil this book down by one-half and double its effectiveness." Harry Hansen
— N Y World p11 S 23 '30 900w

"These parodies are some of them very good, some of them uproariously funny. But the book is about three times too long. No parody can stand such extended treatment. Compressed into a hundred pages it would be a magnificent piece of spoofing. The caricatures by Covarrubias are delightful." W. R. Brooks
— + Outlook 156:312 O 22 '30 200w

" 'The John Riddell Murder Case' is recommended for the indulgence of anyone's lighter moods, and incidentally it contains fine drastic criticism of certain contemporaries."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:184 O 4 '30 300w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 250w

FORD, HENRY, and CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Edison as I know him (Eng title: My friend, Mr Edison). 123p il $1.50 Cosmopolitan bk. [6s Benn]
B or 92 Edison, Thomas Alva 30-23790

An appreciation of Thomas Edison, which records his friendship with Henry Ford from their first meeting in 1896 to the present.

"It is all extremely interesting but the romance of his career, the personality of the man are disappointingly absent. Edison as friend and companion would have lent color to this appreciation of Edison the scientific genius."
+ — Bookm 72:xiv O '30 100w

"The automobile manufacturer is a discerning interpreter of the inventor; he understands the type of mind of which Edison's is so perfect an expression. . . Whether one accepts [Ford's] broad conclusion or not, one finds in this character sketch a thoughtful and discerning piece of reporting. Mr. Ford not only testifies to his admiration; he gives reasons why."
+ Books p18 O 26 '30 250w

"In the first place Mr. Ford should be congratulated on his 'ghosting' collaborator, for Samuel Crowther reproduces what he has said with such apparent accuracy and naturalness that to read a book in which he has been the medium for putting Henry Ford's opinions before the world makes the reader feel as if he had been listening to a monologue by the father of the automobile. And so this little book is particularly rich in its revelations of great men, for in his talk Mr. Ford has unconsciously, and therefore all the more effectively, left a good deal of himself while devoting all his efforts to the portrayal of his friend and hero."
+ N Y Times p25 S 14 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30

St Louis 28:301 D '30

Spec 145:810 N 22 '30 180w

FORD, HENRY, and CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Moving forward. 310p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

338 United States—Industries. Machinery in industry 30-28071

In the opening chapters of this book, Mr Ford (in collaboration with Samuel Crowther) expounds his general views on production, wages, unemployment and other contemporary economic problems. In the body of the volume he describes what has been done within the Ford plant itself with regard to the solution of these problems.

Booklist 27:139 D '30

Books p15 D 28 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 N 15 '30 600w

"The book may be accepted as an authoritative exposition of Ford theory and practice—the untempered, marvelously egoistic expression of a man of genius who had better be listened to even when he appears to be talking self-contradictory nonsense." James Rorty

Nation 131:681 D 17 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Murray Godwin

N Y Evening Post p5d D 6 '30 700w

"The concrete exhibit is, as usual, fascinating; the general philosophy dogmatic, highly stimulating, frequently dubious and occasionally compounded of downright nonsense. The intelligent reader alternates between enthusiasm and a pain in the pit of the stomach. The man is at once shrewd, so inspired by genuine human sympathy, and so devastatingly unaware of great areas in life. . . Mr. Ford on the River Rouge holds our unflagging attention. When poverty in America is at last routed he will have contributed more to the victory than perhaps any other individual living or dead. But Mr. Ford in the mantle of a philosopher, speculating upon human institutions and human destiny, is all too often a pathetic and transient figure." Stuart Chase

N Y Times p1 O 26 '30 2100w

Reviewed by F. A. Fall

Outlook 156:344 O 29 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:18 D '30 180w

St Louis 28:289 D '30

"When the largest employer in the world speaks, we are naturally curious to listen. Henry Ford is at his best when discussing, in a vigorous and informal way, the problems of his factory. His story of changing over from Model T to Model A, the scrapping of 199 wartime ships, the use of tools that must cut to a millionth of an inch, is a fascinating account that will appeal to anyone who is interested in industrial affairs. When Ford leaves his chosen field, the words of factory wisdom melt into meaningless platitudes. He thinks, for instance, that to make employment regular is to invite industrial decay. Here is a boggling of ideas and a general fogginess of conception that is as naive as it is amazing." E. G. Draper

+ — Survey 65:229 N 15 '30 600w

FORD, JULIA ELLSWORTH (SHAW) (MRS SIMEON FORD). Consequences; introd. by John Haynes Holmes. 342p $1.50 Dutton 29-27935

Taking the evils of opium as her theme, Mrs Ford tells the story of the fortunes of young Lord Ramondi, who quarrels with his wealthy parent concerning a choice of career, goes to travel in India and China, falls in love with a Chinese girl, discovers by accident that the source of his father's wealth is the opium trade —and himself becomes a victim to the drug.

"Those who are not frightened to face a novel of serious discussion will discover much to ponder in these pages."

+ — Books p24 F 16 '30 230w

Boston Transcript p2 D 7 '29 250w

"Mrs. Ford has chosen the novel as her vehicle for a powerful exposé and excoriation of the traffic in opium. In an exciting story which holds the interest to its very end she lays bare the great sin of the West against the East. 'Consequences' points a moral which every one who prates of the 'white man's burden' should take to heart."

+ Nation 130:277 Mr 5 '30 300w

"The book is essentially timely in view of the whirlwind which Great Britain is now reaping in India." R. M. L.

New Repub 62:308 Ap 30 '30 160w

N Y Times p24 S 21 '30 200w

"An unusual book. It is a good story that grips one from first to last. But more than that it is quite frankly, though not blatantly, a story with a purpose—a high purpose shot through with side-lights on many of the important questions of our time." G. G. Mills

+ World Tomorrow 13:230 My '30 250w

FORD, PERCY. Economics of modern industry; an introd. for business students. 248p $1.50 (4s 6d) Longmans

331 Industry. Economics

Economics based on the problems of the individual business is the main concern of the author of this text book. Included among the topics of special import to these particular problems are factors of industrial and commercial efficiency, prices, marketing, labour, and the economic activities of the state.

"There is a healthy tendency nowadays to attempt the rewriting of economics from a more realistic standpoint, and to begin its study, not with the old familiar theoretical divisions of the subject, but with a positive analysis of the main forces actually in operation in the industrial and commercial system. Mr. Ford's book is the best elementary work written on these lines that we have yet seen."

+ New Statesman 35:628 Ag 23 '30 150w

St Louis 28:231 O '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p642 Ag 7 '30 350w

FOREMAN, GRANT. Indians and pioneers; the story of the American Southwest before 1830. (Henry L. Johnson memorial fund) 348p pl $4 Yale univ. press [18s Oxford]

976 Southwest—History. Indians of North America—Wars 30-23874

A history of the American Southwest before 1830—the territory between the Mississippi river and New Spain, contemporary records of which have been long ignored by historians. The text, which naturally deals largely with the Indian life of the region and early attempts at settlement by pioneers, contains many quotations and excerpts from manuscripts and diaries of the period.

Booklist 27:199 Ja '31

"Only those who have tried to collect unpublished facts of history can have any conception of the stupendous task this author set for himself, and accomplished. The story is written apparently without prejudice of any sort, as we are told history should be written, though a little favoritism might make for a more entertaining and more connected tale." J. W. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 700w

"A straightforward story of these warring tribes, their chiefs in council, their relations with each other and with the United States Government, is sufficiently colorful. It is no doubt safe to say that the average modern American idea of the Indian does not include aborigines 'of fixed and domestic habits.' It may be added that this fixity and domesticity did not exclude taking the warpath. Mr. Foreman, in short, has composed a book of much interest for thoughtful readers."

+ Christian Science Monitor p6 O 14 '30 450w

"Mr. Foreman's book is not written primarily as a popular history. It is amply documented and well provided with footnotes. That this should be so is natural, since many statements are made which need to be substantiated. One wishes, however, that the author might have felt and expressed more vividly the sweep and drive of his narrative and that he might have made us more keenly aware of its precise place in the great story of the westward movement. . . There is no doubt that Mr. Foreman has opened up a rich field which may well be explored under his able guidance by novelists and possibly even scenario writers."

+ — N Y Times p11 S 28 '30 1000w
Outlook 155:668 Ag 27 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30
St Louis 28:303 D '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p708 S 11 '30 1450w
Reviewed by M. M. Quaife
Yale R n s 20:398 winter '31 320w

FORESTER, CECIL SCOTT. Lord Nelson. 353p il $4 Bobbs [12s 6d Lane]
B or 92 Nelson, Horatio Nelson, viscount
29-23709

"Mr. Forester's book has not been written to establish new facts about Nelson's life and character, but to remind those who are interested in naval history and leadership of the qualities which raised Nelson to such eminence, and of how he used them. The book is a contribution to literature rather than to history." —Times [London] Lit Sup

"A well-rounded, interesting portrait of the hero of Trafalgar. The book is also, in a manner, the naval history of England and the Continent at that period."
+ Bookm 70:vi F '30 60w

"Mr. Forester's experience as a novelist stands him in good stead in reconstructing the thoroughly human episodes. The accounts of the decisive battles which affected the destinies of two empires, the Nile, Copenhagen and Trafalgar, are vivid, fast moving and unusually stirring. . . If there is any criticism to make of this study it is the overabundant emphasis on naval strategy. The volume includes what amounts to a concise history of the navy in the Nelson epoch."
+ — Books p10 Je 22 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p4 Ja 18 '30 480w

"The author displays a considerable knowledge of naval strategy and tactics. He writes without a trace of the pedantry which sometimes makes the professional historian—even the naval historian—rather difficult reading."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 28 '30 400w

"Mr. Forester's Nelson rarely glows with life. A judicial attitude has most unfortunately stripped Mr. Forester's prose of almost all interest." L. H. Titterton
— N Y Evening Post p11m D 28 '29 100w
Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn
N Y Times p11 Je 8 '30 1150w
St Louis 28:52 F '30

"It is written in admirable narrative prose, and the author rarely intervenes to comment upon the facts. . . The method has given excellent results. The book contains no word of hero-worship, and no syllable of rhapsody upon British victories; the facts of the Hamilton episode are, it is true, stated with slight irony, but the facts were in themselves ironical."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p942 N 21 '29 400w
Wis Lib Bul 26:41 Ja '30

FORESTER, CECIL SCOTT. Single-handed (Eng title: Brown on Resolution). 273p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Lane]
29-14147

The son born to Agatha Brown, spinster, from her romance with a handsome naval officer, was brought up to be a sailor. The rest of the story concerns the heroic career of Albert Brown, whose chief exploit was the defeat of the German cruiser Ziethen, on which he had been a prisoner. Armed only with a rifle, and alone, the young sailor held up the ship for twenty four hours at Resolution in the Galapagos islands.

"Unusual adventure simply and effectively told." Will Cuppy
+ Books p11 D 29 '29 100w

"The author writes a vivid and thrilling tale of the sea and gives us one of the best naval pictures of the World War."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 25 '29 180w

"The story is brilliantly written. Mr. Forester may draw the long bow but his skill in the use of it is sure. His book is excellent both as a character study and a thriller—a notable combination."
+ Spec 142:397 Mr 9 '29 220w

"Mr. Forester has weeded out sentimentality so carefully as to leave his story bare even of sentiment. It is an ingenious piece of might-be-true naval history in which the unit of interest is the ship, not the man."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p143 F 21 '29 270w

FORREST, CHARLES E. Defendant soul. 239p $2.50 Harper
[29-14304]

Arabella Cole, an English farmer woman, has killed Cissie Rouse, her husband's mistress. He is charged with the murder and is awaiting trial. The sombre story traces the struggle in the soul of Arabella, defending itself at the bar of conscience.

"Not a pleasing tale but a stark and sordid story of tragedy, its characters standing out in almost painful distinctness, it is nevertheless full of power and of an uncanny insight into the mind and soul of a woman of great resolution, and fortitude, capable of a terrible crime, yet possessing a conscience which refused to be silenced and which uncompromisingly pronounced her guilty." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 900w

"It is when one has finished the book that one discovers how superbly Mr. Forrest has accomplished what so many novelists have attempted, that is to say, the unfolding of a story and the understanding of the actors in it as these things happen in life. . . There is one, but that a very serious, criticism to be made. Mr. Forrest makes no use of dialect, not even of racy local turns of speech, which is in keeping with the austerity required to dispense with the obvious effect of a background of landscape. . . Arabella's bookish language, though perhaps useful for the swift explanation of what has to be explained, produces a positively ugly effect. This does not, however, even cripple a book which, in all its main aspects, is extraordinarily fresh, hard, and astringent, full of delicate exposition of human passion, full of ascetic beauty and of uncompromising truth." E. S.
+ — New Statesman 33:307 Je 15 '29 1400w

"The tight, airless cavern of warped emotions is superbly conveyed through Mr. Forrest's method of writing. He brings one into direct contact with Arabella's mind. There is no standing off; the reader is not required to be objective; Arabella's judgments are final and absolutely convincing." C. G. Poore
+ N Y Times p7 Mr 23 '30 430w

"Mr. Forrest puts subtleties and coherencies of feeling and reflection into Arabella's mind that we refuse to believe in. Arabella was no Mrs. Dalloway. . . Not one to indulge in the particular kind of introspection that Mr. Forrest ascribes to her. By so much, the novel gives the impression of artificiality. What Mr. Forrest has done well, however, is to tell his story with a maximum of effective indirection and inference; he is often skillful in creating suspense. Furthermore, his countryfolk—gossips, tradesmen, and petty gentlemen—are vivid and appealing."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 400w

FORREST, C. E.—Continued

"The development of the story represents an unusually effective piece of creative writing."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p475 Je 13 '29 250w

FORREST, EARLE ROBERT. Missions and pueblos of the old Southwest; their myths, legends, fiestas, and ceremonies; with some accounts of the Indian tribes and their dances; and of the Penitentes. ltd ed 386p il $6 Clark, A.H.

978.9 Southwest. Spanish missions of New Mexico. Spanish missions of Arizona. Indians of North America. Hopi Indians. Indians of North America—Dances A30-1216

"The volume represents a quarter of a century of personal investigation and research. During this time the author has traced the history of each of the Old Southwest missions. Up to July 6, 1769, the date of the founding of the first California mission, forty-eight missions had been established in New Mexico and sixteen in Arizona, and it is with these missions that Mr. Forrest is concerned. The last two chapters of the volume are especially worthwhile to those who are interested in the feasts and dances of the Southwest aborigines. . . The bibliography and the thirty-odd illustrations, all reproduced from original photographs, add to the value of the book."—Hist Outlook

"There is much to praise in the book. It is well written and beautifully illustrated. The Spanish names are correctly spelled in most cases, which cannot be said of some books by better known authors. The Indian dances are described with the touch of one who has seen them. Some of the outstanding episodes of history are well told. Considered as history, there are many things to criticize in the volume. An introductory survey, presenting in sequence the outstanding episodes of New Mexico and Arizona history, would have given unity to these detached local histories and greatly enhanced their interest. Though Mr. Forrest's historical information may be sufficiently accurate for his purpose, in many spots it is far from reliable. Equally serious is the lack of historical perspective." H. E. Bolton

— + Am Hist R 35:681 Ap '30 650w

"Here is an opening up of the old Southwest which is sure to fascinate alike the experts who have studied it at close range and those general readers and tourists to whom folk lore is always congenial. Mr. Forrest's researches enabled him to obtain a unique knowledge of the historic ruins, the pueblos and the tribes of the Southwest. One thing he does is to give the first complete and authentic account of all the Spanish missions and pueblos in New Mexico and Arizona during both the Franciscan and Jesuit periods." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '29 330w

Hist Outlook 21:83 F '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:12 F '30

R of Rs 81:22 Ja '30 150w

St Louis 28:54 F '30

FOSTER, CORAM. Rear Admiral Byrd and the polar expeditions; with an account of his life and achievements. 256p il 75c Burt

B or 92 Byrd, Richard Evelyn. Antarctic regions 30-17388

An appreciative biography of Richard Byrd and a record of his achievements, with a vivid account of the explorer's last journey to the Antarctic and flight over the South pole.

Books p9 Jl 13 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 250w

"As timely as an extra edition of an afternoon paper, this account of the life and labors of Admiral Byrd tells what many people want to know just now. It is good routine journalism, rather than great biography, but that also is doubtless the thing that meets the need of the moment. It is an exciting story, and one that gives full emphasis to the inner quality of the man who could master such hardships in spite of a physical defect which caused him to be twice retired from the navy."

+ Christian Century 47:872 Jl 9 '30 100w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

FOSTER, HARRY LA TOURETTE. Vagabond in Barbary. 308p il $3 Dodd

916.1 Africa, North—Description and travel 30-28207

Mr Foster describes his journey thru Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia. He is interested in natives, native customs, and native markets as well as the more cosmopolitan aspects of the cafés and boulevards along the "African Riviera," now rapidly opening to tourist trade.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 72:xviii N '30 450w

Books p25 N 23 '30 130w

"He is more interested in people than in scenery and, for one who does not profess to be much more than a casual traveler, he gathers a great quantity of interesting and apparently authentic information about the common life, about the French colonial administration, about Mohammedanism as it is practiced in North Africa, and about the nervous frontier where French and Italian ambitions face each other among peoples who only sullenly submit to either one of them."

+ Christian Century 47:1355 N 5 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:22 N '30 50w

St Louis 28:300 D '30

"Mr. Foster is a practised writer, and he sets about the job of describing what he saw in Touristia with the complaisance of Nanki-Poo rendering patriotic ballads when patriotic sentiment was wanted. . . He is not only curious but critical, in the sense that he likes to understand what underlies the sights—their historical, social, political and religious associations; and the tourist will do well to include his book in his baggage, for it answers and provokes questions with which the formal guide-book does not concern itself."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1054 D 11 '30 650w

FOSTER, MRS JOSEPHINE (CURTIS), and MATTSON, MARION LOUISE. Nursery school procedure. (Appleton ser. in special methods) 220p il $2.25 (8s 6d) Appleton

372 Nursery schools 29-25179

A practical handbook giving the facts about aims, procedure and methods in American nursery schools. The book is devoted mainly to a discussion of the equipment of the school, the program, play, music and language activities, habits of cleanliness and order, food, sleep, clothing, social training, and nursery school records. The last two chapters deal with the relation of the nursery school to the home and to the kindergarten.

Booklist 26:299 My '30

"In general, the material in the main part of the book is adequate, well organized, and clearly presented and should prove useful in the training of the nursery-school teacher if studied in connection with supplementary material dealing with the educational principles which control nursery-school procedure." Alice Temple

+ El School J 30:547 Mr '30 550w

"As a whole the book is well organized, easily read, and adequate. The authors have attempted to refrain from giving a direct estimate of the various procedures in use. Occasionally their lack of comment gives one the impression that generally disapproved practices are sanctioned." Christine Heinig

+ J Home Econ 22:317 Ap '30 350w

Wis Lib Bul 26:100 Mr '30

FOSTER, ORLINE D. Making money in the stock market. 225p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

332.6 Stocks. Speculation. Stock exchange
30-10576

An explanation, for laymen, of the machinery of the stock market, and practical advice on investment. The author writes from twenty years' personal experience in the market and observation of market prices.

Booklist 26:341 Je '30

Reviewed by P. W. Garrett
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 100w

N Y Times p20 Je 22 '30 120w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

FOSTER, REGINALD FRANCIS. Moat House mystery. 316p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Nash]

The activities of a well-organized gang under the leadership of a country rector furnish the background for this story. And Anthony Ravenhill, reporter, who had been responsible for their arrest, becomes the target of a new outbreak in gang manoeuvers. Two deaths at Moat House, a sinister and isolated spot, start Ravenhill upon his dangerous game of investigation. The chief actor in the gang, he discovers, is a very good actor indeed—but not quite good enough to make a complete coup.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p17 F 23 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 280w

"The book is roughly written and makes free use of antique devices, but its grip on the interest never slackens, which, after all, is the main requirement in a mystery story." E. C. Beckwith
+ — N Y World p11m F 9 '30 150w

"Too many people turn out to be other people to suit us." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 154:351 F 26 '30 50w

"The adventures of the newspaper reporter in pursuit of the gang are somewhat extravagant."
— Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 80w

"Mr. Foster sets a rapid pace in his story; a character barely has time to recover from being chloroformed, kidnapped, and imprisoned before he is gassed and stunned."
Times [London] Lit Sup p940 N 29 '28 150w

FOTH, JOSEPH HENRY. Trade associations, their services to industry. 338p $4.50 Ronald press

658.06 Trade and professional associations
30-12883

"Beginning with the historical developments of trade associations in two periods—1853-1917 and 1917 to present time—the author gives a chapter to each of the various phases and aspects of trade association practice and procedure, including organization, administration, legislative activities, research methods, accounting methods and statistical activities, concluding with the legal aspect and 'summary and conclusion,' the latter being argumentative in tenor."—Boston Transcript

"The rapidly increasing importance of the part played in our American industrial and business life by the trade associations of the country make Dr. Foth's book a timely and interesting addition to the rather scant literature on the subject. It is of especial value in that it does not confine itself to the legal aspects of the subject. While Dr. Foth does give, as part of his well rounded discussion, an excellent summary of the bearing of legal decisions upon trade association work, the grasp of the book as a whole is much wider." Leona Powell
+ Am Econ R 20:735 D '30 420w

Booklist 27:53 O '30

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 6 '30 150w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

FOULKE, WILLIAM DUDLEY (ROBERT BARCLAY DILLINGHAM, pseud.). Earth's generations pass; to which is added an anthology from Lyrics of war and peace, Some love songs of Petrarch, To-day and yesterday, and Songs of eventide. 133p $1.75 (7s 6d) Oxford

811 30-17437

Selections from the author's earlier lyrics and sonnets, and the new title poem.

Bookm 72:viii O '30 80w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 250w

"There are other translations and paraphrases, from the Greek, from the Hindu, a number of beautifully done sonnets, and over and through all the volume a tone of mellow gentleness, scholarship, and urbanity, which give this book a true distinction."
+ Cath World 131:763 S '30 120w

St Louis 28:298 D '30

Reviewed by W. R. Benet
Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 10w

"Age has not dulled his faith in humanity and experience has only enriched his idealism. And the same may be said of the more intimately personal lyrics and sonnets which he has selected from earlier volumes. The whole book is redolent of a gracious, high-minded and warm-hearted personality."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p655 Ag 14 '30 180w

FOWLER, GENE. Trumpet in the dust. 357p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Jarrolds]
30-8908

" 'Trumpet in the Dust', because it deals with newspapers and their makers, will probably be labeled a newspaper story. It is much more than that. Gordon Dale, the leading character, is a perplexed human being who searches underneath the pile of news he must serve out every day for some answer to the riddle that is called life. Through the book runs the conflict of his love for Nada, the actress, who represents the unattainable, and his wife, Margery. It is finally through his son that he attains a partial answer to his problems."—N Y World

"The tale is told so vigorously, is tricked out with such excellent bits of reporting, and is on the whole so honest, even in the author's obvious sympathy with his soul-thumping hero, that one is caught and held by the sheer momentum of the story. There are moments when the book has a very real dignity of its own, there are others when it is the merest fustian. But even its weakest scenes do not rob the book of its interest or of a certain obvious if unidentifiable authenticity." Guy Holt
+ — Bookm 71:474 Jl '30 200w

"The character of Gordon is a masterpiece. Here is a morbid man drawn without morbidity. Though he is a weakling and a rotter, the reader understands his tragedy because that tragedy is never emphasized. Long training in newspaper style, which teaches that ideas must be expressed as action rather than action as ideas, has given Mr. Fowler's writing the power of restraint. His lesser crises are finely done, but sometimes when he comes to a moment of real emotion he is afraid to meet it and closes the chapter hurriedly or leaps into allegory." J. T. Flexner
+ — Books p23 Ap 13 '30 500w

"The portrait of Gordon Dole, the central character in 'Trumpet in the Dust,' is always credible, always fascinating, at times even terrifying. The book's limitations are in the other figures that people it, shadowy and unreal creations for the most part."
+ — N Y Times p8 My 11 '30 480w

"Gene Fowler has been a newspaper man most of his working days. Although his finished product is not 'great' in a literary sense, he has written a competent novel, true to its subject and aglow with a disarming and burning sincerity. Gene Fowler's book cannot be classed as just another first novel. There is in it power and purpose, feverish intensity and the wonder of a man whose curiosity about himself will always make it possible for him to write with fervor about others." George Joel

FOWLER, GENE—Continued
+ N Y World p11m My 4 '30 380w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p944 N 13 '30 200w

FOWLER, HAROLD NORTH, and FOWLER, MRS MARY ZAY (BLACKFORD). Picture book of sculpture. 100p il $2.50 Macmillan

730 Sculpture—Juvenile literature 29-20800

Full page photographic plates of the world's most famous pieces of sculpture from ancient times to the present, with a descriptive note on each, and an introduction describing in terms that can easily be understood by children the process of making a statue.

Booklist 26:207 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '30

"This book is intended to interest children in sculpture and give them some understanding of it. There are illustrations representative of the work of different countries and periods, accompanied by clear, interesting, and undogmatic descriptions of the pieces and schools. The only fault is an inadequate representation of modern work."
+ — Nation 130:158 F 5 '30 50w

"Boys and girls interested in sculpture will find in this a pleasing listing of those objects of art about which they have studied; and the one whose knowledge is sparse but who wants a bit of information will like the directness with which it is done. The photographic illustrations are adequate." M. G. Bonner
+ N Y Times p12 D 15 '29 100w
St Louis 28:248 O '30

FOX, HENRY WATSON. Child's approach to religion; with an introd. by the Bishop of Liverpool. 95p $1 Smith, R.R. [3s 6d Williams & N.]

377 Religious education 30-28338

Of value to Sunday School teachers and parents, this book takes up the methods by which children can be given an understanding of the Christian religion.

"Here is a book which may be put into the hands of parents to be used somewhat as a guide. Teachers in our Church schools will find much in it. It is written so that nobody can fail to understand, which is to say, technical terms are avoided. The point of view of the author is modern but not fanatical." J. H. R.
+ Living Church 83:476 Ag 2 '30 420w

"There inevitably arises in the heart of every religious parent the question, 'What shall I teach my child about Religion?' The Child's Approach to Religion is one of the best answers to the what and the how, from the Christian standpoint, which we have seen. It assumes modern science and modern psychology but a science and a psychology which have not lost the deepest religious insights. It abounds in practical suggestions to the parents who face this problem." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:31 S 3 '30 130w
Pratt p9 autumn '30
St Louis 28:208 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p31 Ja 9 '30 280w

FOX, JESSIE DOUGLAS. What mad pursuit. 299p $2 Brewer

30-25903

Nora, the emotional and impetuous young daughter of a vagabond artist, longs for love and the security of a home, having lived so long with poverty and her father's mad plans. After a series of disillusionments and emotional upsets, Nora finally achieves the security she is seeking.

"A pleasant little love story told rather sentimentally and sweetly."
N Y Times p24 N 9 '30 150w

"On the promising merits of her first novel, 'Rain before Seven,' one had reason to anticipate a more auspicious second effort from its author than the mediocre tale she herein presents. The tale is at its best in its delineation of indigent middle-class types, embodied in Nora's paternal aunt and cousins, but is severely handicapped by a banal triteness of design."
— Sat R of Lit 7:294 N 1 '30 200w

FRANCK, HARRY ALVERSON. Scandinavian summer; impressions of five months in Denmark, Finland, Sweden, Norway, and Iceland. 397p il $4 Century

914.8 Scandinavia—Description and travel 30-14613

A travelogue in the usual Harry Franck manner on Europe's Far North: Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Lapland and Iceland. With numerous illustrations from photographs by the author.

Booklist 27:22 S '30

" 'A Scandinavian Summer' does not possess the vagabond note which has characterized most of Mr. Franck's travel volumes, but it is comprehensive, informative and readable."
+ Books p15 Ag 17 '30 150w
Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 30w

"The whole book is provocative to any one who has a germ of wanderlust in his system, in spite of the fact that it is not a book of vagabondage. Franck no longer is the tramp, care-free and irresponsible, wandering over the surface of the globe with no better equipment than his own sturdy pair of legs. Vagabonds grow older, as the whole world does, and Franck today points the way to those with milder and less ravenous appetites." R. C. Feld
+ N Y Times p7 Je 22 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:228 Je 11 '30 40w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30
Pratt p30 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 150w
St Louis 28:216 S '30
Spec 145:415 S 27 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 630w

Reviewed by Janet Sabloff
Survey 64:326 Jl 1 '30 350w

FRANK, ARTHUR DE WITT. Development of the federal program of flood control on the Mississippi River. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 269p $4.25 Columbia univ. press

386 Mississippi river—Floods 30-19868

The agitation for federal control of the disastrous floods to which the Mississippi river is periodically subject began more than a century ago. This study traces the development of the ever broadening program of the federal government, describes the various proposed plans for flood control and the forces that have aided or hindered the carrying out of this great program of internal improvement.

"The treatment in this study is historical; the engineering and economic aspects are only briefly sketched. A fault common to many other Ph.D. theses is the according of undue respect to opinions demonstrably incorrect. The author is wary of stepping on anybody's toes. The index is far too brief. None of the various comprehensive plans for flood control are reproduced in the appendix or even summarized in detail." H. B. Davis
Am Econ R 20:723 D '30 280w

"The study is thoroughly documented, and an appendix contains a well arranged bibliography."

Am Pol Sci R 24:1066 N '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 180w

N Y Times p17 Jl 20 '30 150w

FRANK, JEROME. Law and the modern 2 mind; with an introd. by Julian W. Mack. 362p $4 Brentano's

340.1 Jurisprudence. Law—Philosophy
30-31282

"A psychoanalysis of the law by one who has come quite completely under the influence of pragmatism and 'the new psychology.' . . 'It is the very nature of law, its rôle as a father-substitute, that stirs up unconscious attitudes, concealed desires, illusory ideals, which get in the way of realistic observation of the workings and significance of law. For law appears to arouse these emotional deterrents to clear thinking in almost all men whenever they direct their attention to legal problems.' This 'childishness,' according to Mr. Frank, is responsible for 'the basic myth' that the law is certain and predictable and for numerous 'sub-myths,' the most important being that judges do not 'make' law but merely, in a sort of phonographic-oracular manner, 'enunciate' it."—N Y Times

---

"The book is warmly to be recommended. It will irritate every lawyer who reads it. And that is a good thing. It is by irritating the oyster, I understand, that it is made to secrete pearls under its shell or wherever it secretes them. The Frank-irritated jurist may find himself creating pearls." Max Radin

+ Books p5 D 21 '30 1250w

"The writing of the book was prompted by the author's desire to explain why the mental processes of lawyers are less mature and realistic than those of the physical scientists. Whatever the provocation, the result is a stimulating, scholarly discussion of the basic problems of legal philosophy written in a simple, forceful style well calculated to hold the interest even of the non-professional reader. . . With all due regard to the possibilities of the psychoanalytic approach to law, it seems that the book's greatest value lies not in its major theme but in its fearless and continuous reiteration of old truths, truths more widely accepted than the author recognizes. Overemphasis—at times deliberate and avowed—is the work's chief weakness." Chester Rohrlich

+ — N Y Times p22 D 7 '30 800w

"Though this book may deal much with law, its reading is not circumscribed in narrow limits. It is a book for the inquiring layman as much as for the lawyer; it will give the former a better understanding of the underlying theories of the law and it will take the lawyer away from his briefs and his law reports and set him thinking about the ultimate object of his chicanery. A great deal of pleasure awaits the reader of 'Law and the Modern Mind.'" Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 D 8 '30 900w

FRANK, LEONHARD. Brother and sister; tr. by Cyrus Brooks. 264p $2.50 Cape

The theme of unconscious incest between brother and sister is the subject of this psychological novel translated from the German. Children of parents divorced. Constantine and Lydia grow up in totally different environments. Later, unaware of their relationship, they meet in Berlin and fall romantically in love. It is not until after their marriage that they learn the truth: and the story thenceforth is devoted to a study of the psychological effect upon each.

Reviewed by M. C. Dawson

Books p16 N 9 '30 600w

New Statesman 35:370 Je 28 '30 300w

"'Brother and Sister' is a good enough skyrocket, but it is an aimless one. It goes off in thin air and rhetorical stars." Eugene Lohrke

— + N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 200w

"There is hardly another writer that could have written this tale without spiritual offense. Incest is not a pleasant subject either in fiction or in the laboratory, but Frank brings to it a hovering beauty that lifts the story from the plane of the sordid and the morbid and places it on a high peak of human suffering and poignancy. His characters can no more escape their fate than Oedipus could have escaped his; it was not of their choosing or knowing. Frank has written a powerful book that took great courage to see to its significant close and many, doubtless, will condemn him for not giving it the conventional ending, but, as in his former masterpiece, one feels that it is not he who is guiding the course of the lives of his characters but it is they who are guiding him." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p9 N 16 '30 550w

"Circumstances of this type are too unusual to serve as a groundwork for general experience, in the place of which Herr Frank substitutes a high degree of emotional intensity and poetic feeling. What gives his story its validity as a work of art is the delicacy of his insight into romantic love, which is invested here with the same magic and mystery Herr Frank discovered in a previous novel, 'Carl and Anna.' . . The dilemma, which might easily have been made to appear gruesome or fantastic by a few false touches, is handled with an impressive restraint."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p610 Jl 24 '30 600w

FRANK, LEONHARD. Carl and Anna; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks. 149p il $2.50 Putnam [3s 6d Davies]

Carl and Richard, prisoners of war, spend four years together in an Eastern prison camp. Richard describes his wife Anna and their home life in such detail to Carl that the latter feels he knows her too, and grows to love her. When he escapes from prison he goes to find her, and tells her he is her husband; while Anna cannot believe this, the quality of the love she and Carl come to have for each other overcomes her scruples of conscience. But finally Richard, the true husband, is released and makes his way home, to find Carl and Anna together. Anna explains what has happened, how she now loves only Carl. They pity Richard's misery, but nothing can separate them, and together they leave his house.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson Bulletin 4:367 Ap '30.

Booklist 26:272 Ap '30

"Mr. Frank does not depend altogether on externals. His writing is strong with spiritual self-confidence, and the emotion which he transmits is unchallengeable and invigorating. It is also free from all affectations, even the affectation of over-simplicity, and to feel its warmth you do not need to work up a strained appreciation of 'peasant psychology' or an intellectual enthusiasm for modern German literature. You can sit still and let Mr. Frank do the work. In the brief time which is all you need to read these 149 pages, he is able to convey to you a more definite understanding of his characters than most authors achieve through volumes of meticulous analysis." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p7 F 23 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 26 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p73 My '30

"Carl and Anna is nearly a very good book indeed. The descriptions of the steppe, of the courtyard of workmen's flats, the conversation between the two men at the beginning of the book, and many of the scenes between Carl and Anna, are excellent." G. W. S.

+ — New Statesman 33:15 Ap 13 '29 370w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 250w

FRANK, LEONHARD—Continued

"The story is convincing because the protagonists are members of the working class. No glib philosophizing, no self-justifying phrases of the varying facets of morality pass their lips. They are concerned with the truth of a situation and they respond to it with simplicity and with honesty. The suffering it imposes upon all of them they accept as part of their destiny. There are passages in the book that may offend the squeamish, but Herr Frank is not concerned with sparing the feelings of such readers. The book is a fine and powerful one and does not require the gratuitous paragraph given in the translator's preface that it is a clean one." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p7 F 23 '30 420w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p15 O 12 '29 100w

"It is a simple, powerful story, well worth your attention." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 50w

"A splendid situation, but Herr Frank is not quite equal to it, and leaves us with the impression that something has slipped through his fingers." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:412 Mr 23 '29 150w

"It is a pity that the American publisher has thought it well, because the book is as straightforward as 'And Adam knew his wife,' to allow the translator to append an assurance that it is clean; it would be a greater pity if any one were kept from reading it by the belief that is is a far-fetched tale of a deceived husband. 'Carl and Anna' stands almost alone among modern books as the expression of a belief in the supernatural power of love."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1008 My 3 '30 700w

"This is a little masterpiece of burning simplicity which explains Leonhard Frank's reputation much better than the obscure Robbers." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 142:485 Mr 23 '29 200w

"It is a remarkable and moving tale, in which experience which has been deeply felt is rendered with strength and delicacy. Mr. Cyrus Brooks's translation is very good indeed."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p452 Je 6 '29 550w

FRANK, LEONHARD. Clamoring self; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks. 375p $2.50 Putnam

30-28635

The conflict between young Jürgen Kolbenreiher's awakened realization of the social injustice in the world, and the clamoring desires of his own flesh and spirit for individual recognition, is the theme of Leonhard Frank's new novel. The tragedy of Jürgen is that he can find his niche in life neither with the smugly prosperous bourgeois capitalists nor with the underworld pariahs of the social system. His conflict takes vital form in his relations with two girls, Katharina, of the proletariat, and Elizabeth, a banker's daughter.

"It is a powerful portrayal of conflict. The story has been excellently translated by Cyrus Brooks."

+ Bookm 72:ix N '30 80w

"Mr. Frank has written not only a graphic, colorful, moving story, filled with pictures and episodes that catch the mind and characters that are memorable, but he has written a powerful novel. For it is a novel, not a preachment. It is only Jürgen, so far as we know, who preaches the gospel according to Tolstoy." F. T. Marsh

+ Books p24 N 16 '30 600w

Reviewed by Eugene Lohrke

N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 200w

"Herr Frank can write; there is no doubt about that. His vivisection of the mind of the adolescent Jürgen and later the man who sees the walls of his life crumbling in the ruins of a false existence is excellent, but so greatly concerned is he with the picture of suffering that his characters are forgotten. Whenever he needs a man or woman to illustrate his point or to carry Jürgen on to a new experience he brings them in, but they are cardboard people, possessing none of the living dimensions of the hero."

— + N Y Times p34 D 7 '30 650w

"Long-winded but withal powerful and absorbing story of an ill-balanced, high-strung personality." E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p3e D 21 '30 250w

FRANK, WALDO DAVID. New Year's eve. 156p $2 Scribner

812 29-24219

A play in the modernistic manner in seven scenes, designed for presentation on three stage levels. The action starts on New Year's Eve of the year 1901 with a scene in which Laura MacShane, one of the main characters, refuses to tell her lover whether the child she is about to give birth to is her husband's or his. The consequences of this are far-reaching, causing much misunderstanding and real tragedy. In scene five Laura, eighteen years later, confesses. But the story and theme are incidental to the dramatist's experiments with staging and the time element, and the employment of a chorus at the close of the scenes.

Booklist 26:306 My '30

"We suspect that the whole work is very meaningful and modern, but with the best intentions in the world, we cannot get excited about it." W. P. Eaton

Books p22 Ja 26 '30 100w

"The quality of feeling in 'New Year's Eve' is exaltation. It explains and justifies the use of its solemn and sometimes Biblical speech. It gives the play's characters a dimension they might otherwise lack. It saves the play from a dryness and a deadness that ordinarily would result from the formality of its structure and the Q. E. D.-ness of its dénouement. It makes of what might have been a mere mechanism for the projection of an idea a stirring artistic organism. . . Like the old moralities, 'New Year's Eve' is crude, naïve, gauche, passionate and impressive withal. For the theater, its general importance is that it adds to the new tradition of plays on themes suggested by contemporary life which attempts to create a modern ethos in a kind of myth form. For literature, the play is important as one of its author's most successful efforts outside the field of critical writing." Harold Clurman

+ New Repub 62:80 Mr 5 '30 550w

"The playgoer who is surfeited with the naturalistic achievements of the modern theatre will cry welcome to Mr. Waldo Frank's play in seven scenes, because with all its awkward faults 'New Year's Eve' is definitely imaginative and not reportorial in character. Mr. Frank is a good writer for the theatre, and the theatre today needs writing more than ever." G. B. Munson

+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 23 '29 430w

Wis Lib Bul 26:39 Ja '30

FRANK, WALDO DAVID, ed. Tales from the Argentine; with a foreword by [the ed.]; tr. from the Spanish by Anita Brenner; il. by Mordecai Gorelik. 268p $3.50 Farrar

30-24042

These seven stories, translated from the Spanish, are by the most important writers of Argentina. Contents: Laucha's marriage, by R. J. Payró; Death of a gaucho, by Leopoldo Lugones; Holiday in Buenos Aires, by L. V. Lopez; The private life of Facundo, by D. F. Sarmiento; The devil in Pago Chico, by R. J. Payró; Rosaura, by Ricardo Güiraldes; The return of Anaconda, by Horacio Quiroga.

"What one misses is any real penetration into human character and, consequently, the 'rounded sense' which Mr. Frank wishes to convey. The lack of contact is increased by the translator's often clumsy attempts to render slangy dialogue, and because, in spite of the elaborate emphasis upon local color and the indigenous elements employed in the tales, their manner is obviously derived to a wide extent from European models. Particularly noticeable is the over-figured style of the regional writers of nineteenth-century Spain. But the literary derivation itself is a minor consideration. What seems to be at fault is the authors' approach to their subject matter and their mode of attention. For the stories, with a single exception, reduce themselves to mere superficial glimpses of Argentine life." Eugene Armfield

— + Bookm 72:311 N '30 300w

"Anita Brenner has put all the vigor and talent into her translation that we would expect from the author of 'Idols Behind Altars.' The entire collaboration, including the lively and appropriate illustrations by Mordecai Gorelik, is to be congratulated, and I hope that Waldo Frank's promise that this volume is only serving 'as an appetizer for more ample knowledge' is true." Jenny Ballou

+ Books p6 S 7 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '30 650w

"The difficult job of translation is beautifully managed by Anita Brenner; and Mr. Frank's notes and introduction are highly informing. Anyone interested in the intense, important life of the Argentine will hasten to peruse this book."

+ Nation 131:421 O 15 '30 220w

"The judgment and insight which Mr. Waldo Frank, the editor of the series, has displayed in this first volume augurs well for the volumes to follow. The collection is not a haphazard choice of interesting stories, but a small anthology of Argentine literature, and through these selections one acquires a sense of that nation's personality." Harriet de Onis

+ N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 950w

"None of these stories, by itself, is worthy of more than passing attention. Together, however, they fulfill magnificently Mr. Frank's purpose. It has been no light undertaking to present, in the range of seven stories, the physical background and the emotional history of a nation. Yet this is what Mr. Frank has contrived to do. It is safe to say that this collection will leave with the reader a pictorial impression which will remain fresh and vivid long after the outlines of the single stories have slipped from memory." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Times p5 S 7 '30 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

Reviewed by Arthur Ruhl

Sat R of Lit 7:242 O 18 '30 450w

FRANKAU, GILBERT. Dance, little gentleman! 320p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Hutchinson] 30-2371

Being the chronicle of a gigolo, Henry St Aubin. He started his career as a chorus-man in the Pink Pelican company, from which he graduated to the more subtle art of dancing partner to love-lorn ladies. Henry never lets his various affairs of the heart stand in the way of financial advancement. His lucrative career leads him from one sweet episode to another, till he finally settles down near Wimbledon to lead the life of a gentleman of leisure.

"Mr. Frankau's satire is sharp and his character portrayals diabolically accurate."

+ Bookm 71:xxvi Mr '30 100w

Books p21 Mr 2 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 480w

"This memoir of Henry St. Aubin is witty—but not unbearably so. In fact, the reader may find it slightly dull, unless he happens to recognize all the hoary, old jokes which Mr. Frankau has subtly and allusively imbedded in the narrative—in which case, he may find it somewhat malodorous as well." Margaret Wallace

— + N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 400w

"Both Henry St. Aubin and the various ladies to whom his dancing recommends him are violently overdrawn. That the book is brutal and obvious and offensive to taste is no argument against it for much excellent satire is the same. Mr. Frankau deserves credit for having simplified the modern world and made a target of it, and for the vigour, if not the accuracy, of his attack. The trouble is he runs his few ideas to death." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 148:277 S 7 '29 80w

"Mr. Frankau is a good scoffer and a good fighter, but there is an unpleasant savour about his latest book."

— Spec 143:285 Ag 31 '29 250w

"The defect of the book, however indulgently the reader takes it, is that this kind of humour, unless far more delicately used, very soon palls. St. Aubin was only one thing—a thing for which there is no polite word—and his particular functions, though they took him to Nice, the Lido and all the night clubs of London, admit of no variety."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p705 S 12 '29 180w

FRANKFURTER, FELIX, and GREENE, NATHAN. Labor injunction. 343p $5 (21s) Macmillan

338.9 Injunctions. Labor laws and legislation —United States 30-2892

An historical survey of the legal aspects of the labor injunction which enjoins workers from strikes, boycotts and picketing. The authors begin with the earliest appearance of labor organizations in law, the origin of the injunction and its validity in labor disputes. A discussion of the revised Shipstead bill is one of the important topics in the book.

"While this book leaves some fields open for further investigation, it is a most timely study. And not only is this book timely, but it is of unusual merit. Every statement made is documented. The footnotes and appendices are longer than the text, and there is a conclusiveness in the treatment of the subject that is seldom approached. Besides, it is clear and readable, with many sentences which are certain to be quoted again and again. Altogether, it is likely to prove one of the most influential studies ever made of any socio-legal question." E. E. Witte

+ Am Econ R 20:522 S '30 850w

"Professor Frankfurter and Mr. Nathan Greene of the New York Bar have put into 228 pages the most comprehensive history of the Labor Injunction that has yet been written. . . The temper of this book is admirable. It intervenes in a highly contentious field but is not discolored by the heat of partisans at either extreme. Indeed, these authors seem to have given us a fine model for what is just on the eve of becoming a new technic in the study of law from the social point of view." N. D. Baker

+ Am Hist R 35:897 Jl '30 1000w

Reviewed by F. N. House

Am J Soc 36:146 Jl '30 450w

Reviewed by A. T. Mason

Am Pol Sci R 24:490 My '30 1350w

"The volume shows not only a thorough acquaintance with the legal and procedural aspects of the problem, but also an understanding of the social and economic implications of the injunction as it has been used in labor disputes." F. S. Deibler

+ Ann Am Acad 150:310 Jl '30 420w

Booklist 26:299 My '30

Reviewed by H. L. McBain

Books p4 Mr 16 '30 1600w

FRANKFURTER, F., and GREENE, N.—Cont.
"That issue which came into especial prominence two years ago regarding the right of the equity courts to issue labor injunctions is here called up for masterly discussion by two experts in the field of administrative law. . . Informing footnotes abound in the book, and its subject is further dealt with in a series of appendices." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '30 800w

"In this volume on the labor injunction. Professor Frankfurter and Mr. Greene have made a careful and objective study of the significant facts and have thereby suggested certain very practical conclusions. It is particularly refreshing, in a field where most of the discussion is colored by class consciousness, to have before us an analytical survey of the realities of the case. Here we find no a priori inferences with respect to the scope and effect of the judicial decree in a labor struggle, but rather a compilation of available statistical data which speaks its own conclusions. . . Professor Frankfurter and Mr. Greene have given us in this book a brilliant and absorbing study of a crucial aspect of the law. It combines at once a faithful portrayal of the facts with a keen vision and philosophic outlook." Maurice Finkelstein

+ Columbia Law R 30:425 Mr '30 1550w

Current Hist 32:613 Je '30 180w

"This book is provocative of thought; it points out many abuses that today exist; and it proposes remedies, most of which seem wise and practical. It merits careful study by everyone interested in the subject." W. S. Andrews

+ Harvard Law R 43:974 Ap '30 1300w

Reviewed by Daniel Tenrosen
Hist Outlook 21:290 O '30 1050w

"The labor injunction has usually been discussed with a great deal of passion. The great merit of the present work is that the subject is discussed with objectivity and restraint. If there is little in the material that is unfamiliar, it is at least presented with great order and clarity. The book is of the type called by scholars a systematization." William Seagle

+ — Nation 130:574 My 14 '30 1750w

"This is a book of unusual character and value—a scholarly but interesting discussion of a legal issue of vital and imminent importance. This trenchant volume will exert a cumulative influence in strengthening and enforcing this enlightened public opinion. Its purpose—to create a full understanding of the uses and abuses of the labor injunction, within and outside the legal profession—has been wisely conceived and admirably fulfilled." D. R. Richberg

+ New Repub 63:79 Je 4 '30 850w

"Liberal lawyers will certainly relish this book. Thoughtful laymen will find it an exercise in reform and need not be frightened by the mileage of the footnotes, which contain inter alia spicy quotations from Holmes and Brandeis." Alfred Lief

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ja 25 '30 550w

"Being both comprehensive and authoritative, the volume will be very valuable for all students of labor legislation and for those engaged in the conduct of public affairs. It is amply documented, its thirty-page analytical index makes it easy to use for reference and appendices contain charts and tables of cases and statutes."

+ N Y Times p20 F 2 '30 380w

St Louis 28:132 My '30

"The book is splendidly documented by footnotes, tables of cases and statutes, analytical subject index, and statistical and other appendices. The appendices are particularly valuable as throwing illustrative light upon the discussion in the text. . . In the neck-and-neck race between the book and its foot-notes the latter win by a hair. But it is an empty victory—by mileage only: in the body of this book this reviewer thinks that students and statesmen have far and away the most useful discussion of the labor injunction so far in print." P. F. Brissenden

+ Survey 65:239 N 15 '30 900w

Wis Lib Bul 26:100 Mr '30

Reviewed by Nathan Fine
World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 700w

FRANKL, PAUL THEODORE. Form and reform; a practical handbook of modern interiors. 203p il $5 (15s) Harper

747 House decoration. Decoration and ornament 30-2624

"A successful designer of modernistic interior decorations and furniture has here assembled over a hundred striking illustrations of buildings, decorations, furniture, textiles, and ornaments which exemplify this style of applied art, and accompanies them with a discussion of its development, fundamental principles and applications in various lines, including a list of references to magazine articles and books. The book design itself is a striking example of modernistic art which helps the reader to understand the character of the movement."—J Home Econ

Booklist 26:303 My '30

"This is the first exhaustive book on a vast and controversial subject. Mr. Frankl, a decorator of note, is the logical man to write it. His foreword is reassuring to the conservative. 'Good forms,' he says, 'are but few; and they are eternal.' "

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 15 '30 380w

J Home Econ 22:318 Ap '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

St Louis 28:139 My '30

"We could better sympathize with Mr. Frankl if he did not shout so. The book itself, with its designs of black lines on the pages and heavy black masses in the margins, is intended for a demonstration of the modern spirit. It is surely, however, not blind convention in us to prefer a less tiring fount of type and the plate numbers on a more accessible part of the page than the inner margin. Such eccentricities as these give rise to a suspicion that is strengthened by an examination of the text and the photographs. All his arguments are true at bottom, but in developing them he often contradicts himself and sometimes pushes his conclusions to an absurd length with untimely logic."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Mr 20 '30 320w

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

FRANKLIN, WILLIAM SUDDARDS, and DAWES, LYMAN MINER. Fundamentals of electrical engineering (theory and practice). 512p il $4 Franklin & Charles

621.3 Electric engineering 29-20270

"Up-to-date introductory text for students of electrical engineering and suitable for other engineering students not specializing in the subject. Theory is presented directly and simply on a physical basis and illustrated with a wealth of practical material. Numerous questions and problems. Authors are associated with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology."—N Y New Tech Bks

N Y New Tech Bks 15:5 Ja '30

Pratt p17 spring '30

FRANZEN, RAYMOND HUGH. Physical measures of growth and nutrition. (School health research monographs) 138p $1.25; pa $1 Am. child health assn.

136.71 Child study. Children—Nutrition. Growth 29-20905

"Discusses the 'anthropometric qualities included in the School Health Study and the derivation of measures in the field of nutrition and growth; the agreement of physicians' judgments of nutritional status, the relation of these judgments to weight and to various physical measurements; the influence of skeletal build on weight; the shortcomings of weight as an index of nutrition; the development of new measures more closely indicative of nutrition, and finally provides tables of these newer measures for eleven-year-old boys for experimental use.' "—J Home Econ

J Home Econ 22:131 F '30 120w

"The methods used and the results obtained are presented in great detail; the work is an important contribution to the determination of the characteristics of the 'normal' boy or girl and to the value of different methods of estimating this normal and the deviations from it."

Nature 126:53 Jl 12 '30 170w

FRASER, FERRIN L. Passionate angel. 240p $2
² Sears

30-1698

"A modern tragedy of enormous wealth and too much leisure. It shows the struggle between a man's loyalty to his friend and his love for the friend's wife. His degradation is followed by the ultimate triumph of character."—Bookm

Bookm 71:ix Ag '30 60w

"On the theory that sophisticated sayings are the hallmark of sophisticated people, Mr. Fraser has turned his novel into an album of epigrams. He has filled the mouths of his characters with semi-Wilde witticisms and their heads with nothing. You cannot judge of the merits of the theme, the very existence of which you are unable to discern. There is nothing to look forward to but talking sequences with unsound effects."

— Books p21 Ap 6 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 230w

"This triangle story must appeal to all those who go to books for a slice of life pretty much as they go to the refrigerator for a slice of melon. Which must be trying at times, because, after all, we do demand that the melon be real." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 130w

FRASER, GEORGIA. White Captain. 319p $2
² Little

Smith, John, 1580-1631—Fiction 30-25620

A fictionized account of the life of Captain John Smith, written for older boys and girls. Side by side with the story of John Smith is the story of the Indian Princess Matoka, better known to history as Pocahontas.

"The story, with its large number of characters and profusion of historic detail is rather definitely for readers who have reached at least their middle teens. To these and to those who are older it is to be highly recommended." Cornelia Meigs

+ Books p8 Ja 4 '31 600w

"It is a sentimental as well as redoubtable warrior that stalks his way through Miss Fraser's pages, and hence a warrior whom girls may admire more than their brothers will. . . The tale has humor—humor of conversation and humor of incident."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:252 O 18 '30 230w

FRAUDET, RENE. See Frondaie, P., pseud.

FRAZER, SIR JAMES GEORGE. Myths of the origin of fire. 238p $4.50 (12s 6d) Macmillan

398.31 Fire (mythology) [30-19148]

A collection of narratives concerning the most important and far-reaching of human discoveries—the origin and method of kindling fire. The book is a preliminary survey of these traditions and takes them up in geographical or ethnical order, beginning with the lowest savages known to us, the Tasmanians.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 8 '30.

Booklist 27:50 O '30

"There are good tales among these stories, and yet, as a whole, the impression is one of extraordinary harping upon single strings. They are told in each case in complete isolation from the rest of the life and ideas of the people, whereas their only individuality is in the closeness with which they are tied up with that life and those ideas. . . Divorced from all this they have lost the breath of life that makes each tale in its own setting a living thing. They are cut at the roots from the culture in which they rooted." Ruth Benedict

— + Books p4 Je 29 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 380w

"Wholesome and yet vastly interesting reading." James Thornton

+ Nation and Ath 47:88 Ap 19 '30 260w

"To the tracers of culture-affinities and culture-diffusion the data collected and presented in so masterly a manner, with the wealth of references to sources of information, will prove a valuable mine. Sir James Frazer has, indeed, by launching this new addition to his already powerful fleet of 'classics,' increased materially the indebtedness of all those who study the problems of human culture." Henry Balfour

+ Nature 125:920 Je 21 '30 900w

New Statesman 34:814 Mr 29 '30 450w

"The volume is a mine of curious lore, tales usually quaint and often very amusing." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p11 Je 8 '30 900w

"The final chapter is, of course, by far the most interesting and will be most widely read; for those who are only amateurs of the subject will hardly have patience to wade through the hundreds of different stories told by savage tribes as to the origin of fire. . . This book, on the whole, raises more questions than it answers, and it is up to Sir James Frazer, with his vast accumulated store of knowledge, to answer them." A. W. Tilby

+ — Sat R 149:331 Mr 15 '30 670w

Reviewed by J. H. Driberg

Spec 144:535 Mr 29 '30 1000w

"In the commodious bookcase which it is necessary to reserve for the works displaying [Frazer's] name there is not a volume that betrays the slightest touch of carelessness in respect to accuracy of research or literary finish. This perfection of workmanship holds good even when, as in the present case, the primary object is but to offer a digest of the evidence relating to some selected topic of importance. Here, for instance, we have duly laid before us in an eminently readable form all that is known, or at any rate is worth knowing, about what primitive fire-makers all over the world believe about the origin of this supreme art."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p155 F 27 '30 650w

FRAZER, SAMUEL WILSON, and STINE, GEORGE F. Treatise on the air brush; with progressive lessons. 203p il $2.50 Am. photographic pub. [12s 6d Chapman]

771 Artists' materials. Photography—Apparatus and supplies. Photographs—Coloring
30-16016

The mechanics of the air brush, a device used by commercial artists for special effects, as applied to photo-retouching, show cards, stencils, etc.

Booklist 27:18 S '30

N Y New Tech Bks 15:15 Ap '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p685 Ag 28 '30 180w

FREDENBURGH, THEODORE. Soldiers march! 314p $2 Harcourt

30-24850

At twenty, Zorn receives the rank of corporal and embarks for France with American troops. At twenty-one, a sergeant, he has experienced all the hardships, horrors, and disillusions of war. He is a hardened and embittered man. The author, who served eighteen months in France, presents an authentic picture of the American soldier in the war.

FREDENBURGH, THEODORE—Continued

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

Reviewed by James Rorty
Books p13 O 19 '30 550w

"Mr. Fredenburgh has written, if not the most brilliant novel of the war, one of the best-balanced and the sanest." C. K. Hillman
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 4 '30 1400w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton
Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 80w

"As far as war books go 'Soldiers March' will be read with interest. What Mr. Fredenburgh lacks is sufficient detachment from the immediate scene to give his writing balance and rhythm and make his work something more than a tour de force." Eugene Lohrke
+ — N Y Times p10 N 2 '30 180w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e N 30 '30 220w

"Not one of the many books about the American fighting-man in France, which have come to the notice of this reviewer, can even approach 'Soldiers March' in truth, just appraisal, unforced dramatic interest, or skilful characterization. Bared clean are the virtues and weaknesses, the oddities, enthusiasms, and prejudices of the A. E. F.'s seasoned combat troops. . . To read Mr. Fredenburgh's pages is to talk over old times with a former comrade-in-arms. His book is a valuable study of the men who composed a representative fighting regiment of the American Expeditionary Force." Emerson Taylor
+ Sat R of Lit 7:155 S 27 '30 700w

FREDERICK, SIR CHARLES EDWARD ST
2 JOHN. 8th bart, and others. Fox-hunting. (Lonsdale lib.) 367p il $7.50 Lippincott [25s Seeley]

799.27 Fox-hunting

A symposium on fox-hunting to which several masters of the sport have contributed. There are special chapters on hounds, fox coverts and their care, game-preserving, horses, and other aspects of the sport, such as shows and meets, fox-hunting in the various English counties, in Ireland and in Scotland.

"No more authoritative compendium has ever appeared and highly interesting withal."
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 300w

Reviewed by Adrian Bell
Nation and Ath 48:sup343 D 6 '30 80w

"Without exaggeration or equivocation this is a superb volume; a complete vade-mecum for the follower of the sport of kings. . . It will become the modern classic of fox-hunting."
+ Spec 145:948 D 13 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1057 D 11 '30 1400w

FREDERICK, JUSTUS GEORGE. Common stocks and the average man. (Future Am. ser.) 377p $4 Business bourse, 80 W. 40th st, N.Y.

332.6 Stocks. Investments. Speculation
30-4359

A sensible book on the place of the average outright investor in common stocks which, since the recent panic, is shown to be more important than ever. The author sums up the lessons taught by the panic, and gives practical advice to the small investor, providing a simple method of analyzing stocks and a list of those which he holds are sound investments.

Booklist 27:12 S '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

N Y Times p20 Je 22 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30

"We can think of only one type of investor who might not be helped by Mr. Frederick's suggestions and comments. That is the man who always knows exactly when to buy and when to sell every stock on the ticker tape. For all mortals who lack such omniscience Mr. Frederick's 'Measuring Stick for Common Stocks' seems a sensible and worthwhile guide." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 81:18 Ap '30 220w

St Louis 28:131 My '30

"The distilled common sense of an extremely shrewd, widely experienced, and well informed practical economist. It would be hard to imagine anyone who has anything to do with investments reading it without interest and profit, and, if the reader does not make investment his regular occupation and study, it is probable that the profit will be of the most tangible and realizable sort." M. M. Strain
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1062 My 24 '30 750w

FREEMAN, HAROLD WEBBER. Down in the valley. 321p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Chatto & W.]
30-26269

Everard Mulliver's mother had been dead a month when the thought that he was free at last finally pierced his consciousness. He decided to get very drunk. In grim mood he drove along the Stour, thru the little Suffolk towns, until he came suddenly upon the valley. Charmed by the quiet beauty of the little village, he stopped, but not to get drunk. That was the beginning of an adventure in contentment, an adventure which led to marriage and a permanent home down in the valley.

"Mr. Freeman's humorous moments are not as a rule his happiest. The quiet satire of the opening pages rouses a hope that later is disappointed, for his comic rustics do not—or so I think—quite 'come off.' Nor is the transformation of the cool Mr. Mulliver to an agitated, amorous boy the real accomplishment of the novel, nor yet the desperate drama next door, in which he takes a hand to his own peril, but the soil's conquest of a heart not born to the soil. This is recounted with authority and beauty." E. W. Hawkins
+ — Atlantic Bookshelf p22 My '30 220w

Booklist 26:280 Ap '30

"We are not wholly convinced that Everard Mulliver would have deserted his business interests and his carefully tended estate to live in a cottage in the valley. We are more than ever unconvinced when Mulliver marries a farmer's daughter and settles down to a life permanently bounded by the necessities of sowing and reaping. But the persuasive qualities of Mr. Freeman's style are sufficient to lull into quiescence our more active suspicions. Mr. Freeman is perhaps the ablest modern propagandist to arise in defence of the simple country life. For the vivid, sensuous enthusiasm which Mr. Freeman manages to convey to us, we can forgive the faint improbability of the plot and the book's ridiculous climax."
+ — Bookm 71:99 Mr '30 320w

"It has the qualities which are to be counted upon in such novels—a smooth and lucid if not specially distinguished style; sensitivity to nature; some charming description of place, and an idyllic love affair with a simple daughter of the soil." Ruth Suckow
+ Books p7 F 16 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 1 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:774 Mr 8 '30 200w

"Mr. Freeman's first book, Joseph and His Brethren, won him considerable and deserved success. Down in the Valley is, on the whole, less interesting, though still a book which can be recommended. It is written with a practised eye to all the finest examples of English prose. Its effect is soothing rather than stimulating—Mr. Freeman's landscape is usually more real than his characters—and, since every book seems especially designed to please one particular class of human beings, here is a novel which no member of the gardening public ought on any account to pass by."

+ — New Statesman 34:637 F 22 '30 200w

"Whatever implausibility it contains—and there appears at a glance to be a good deal—is offset by the gusto of Mr. Freeman's style. He writes very engagingly of the picturesque side of country life."

+ — N Y Times p6 F 16 '30 600w

"The best parts of this book make a complete poem. The worst parts, the dark element of Quainton, Everard's fight with him, are like an unrelated melodrama. Perhaps Quainton is the dark element in nature that spreads its blight, but nothing in the book is marred with even faint symbolism." Margery Latimer

+ N Y World p11m Mr 23 '30 450w

"Down in the Valley does not want for warm rural feeling, nice descriptive passages, fine full characterization and dialogue. But it wants the deeply moving solidity of the earlier novel. Its simple plot offers no great opportunity for the development of such conflicts or such characters as enriched and made memorable Joseph and His Brethren. It lacks spontaneity and it lacks heart."

+ — Outlook 154:387 Mr 5 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

Sat R of Lit 6:773 Mr 1 '30 380w

"One's difficulty with Mr. Freeman's book is that its characterization is poor and the manipulation of the plot too jerky. The whole business is just a little too good to be true. The merit of the book lies in the pages which describe the young man's awakening zest for physical labour, his ploughing, digging and scything; and the deep, sober tranquillity of the rural vales." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 144:244 F 15 '30 260w

"Mr Freeman's fine pictures of labor in the fields are never purely objective, clearly as his men and horses are etched against wide skies and rolling landscapes. In spite of technical details of farming methods and instruments his descriptions are subtly charged with a mystic sense of the kinship between man and nature. The peculiar delight of 'Down in the Valley' is its idyllic charm—a charm that is shadowed but not quite broken by the tragedy of Laura Quainton, the most dramatic figure in the narrative." C. M. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 800w

"Down in the Valley is very pleasant reading, and in its way as true a picture as its predecessor. . . If Mr. Freeman's first book may be said to be a bleak landscape by J. J. Lankes, his second is a sun-lit village street and green drawn by Childe Hassam." Coley Taylor

+ Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 450w

"Those who feel with Everard Mulliver that the earth holds within her the springs of life, and that the closer man is to her the more truly he seems to be alive, will welcome this addition to our not despicable heritage of farming novels."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p98 F 6 '30 470w

FREEMAN, JOSEPH; KUNITZ, JOSHUA; and LOZOWICK, LOUIS. Voices of October; art and literature in soviet Russia. 317p il $4 Vanguard press

891.7 Russian literature—History and criticism. Art—Russia. Theater—Russia. Music—Russia 30-13369

"In 'Voices of October' the authors outline the history of Soviet art and letters from the time of the revolution to the present. They describe the principal achievements, analyze the various schools which have held sway from time to time and catalogue the more prominent personalities on the 'cultural front.' Both the history and the criticism are presented sociologically, set in a background of political and economic phenomena and consequently integrated with the material development of the nation. The whole constitutes an illuminating study of the intellectual revolution which has accompanied the shift of political power."—N Y Evening Post

---

Booklist 27:148 D '30

"In a finely made volume of over 300 pages and with a particularly valuable index, a journalist, a professor of Russian literature, and an artist have furnished a discussion and basis for days and nights of further discussion of the fate of the arts in the Soviet Republic. . . Mr. Kunitz, whose long chapter on 'Men and Women in Soviet Literature' amounts in itself to one of the best and most illuminating short books on Russia that I have read conveys most directly the sense of Russian life and the artists' part both in reflecting and in providing the visions for that life." Ernestine Evans

+ Books p5 My 25 '30 1100w

"The editors of 'Voices of October' may merely have intended to give information about the art and literature of Soviet Russia, but they have written a very vivid account of the whole country. It is vivid because it appears to be without benefit of propaganda. . . Through its frequent quotations, the book gives an appealing picture of the mind and thought of the revolutionary leaders." Walter Gutman

+ Nation 131:276 S 10 '30 500w

"Although this volume is by far the best and most comprehensive survey of the Soviet arts that has yet appeared in English, many previously published essays have to some extent covered the same field. Its treatment of the place of the artist in the political and social life of the U. S. S. R. is, however, unique in a book intended for the general public." Bernard Smith

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 17 '30 900w

"Most of the attention is devoted to the Soviet literature: two chapters dealing with it, one by Mr. Freeman and the other by Mr. Kunitz, take up more than half the volume and form its most substantial and interesting part. Soviet music, on the contrary, is described in a very brief and—from the viewpoint of its contents—decidedly weak chapter by Mr. Freeman. . . On the whole, the volume is written smoothly, clearly and pleasingly; most of it reads with interest. . . An interesting and very informative chapter is devoted by Mr. Freeman to the Soviet cinema, its organization, working and productions." Alexander Nazaroff

+ — N Y Times p16 Je 1 '30 1600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

Reviewed by Nicholas Sergievsky

Sat R of Lit 6:1175 Jl 5 '30 750w

"This is a greatly needed work, and although it becomes a little cataloguish at times, it is informing where all but universal ignorance exists."

+ World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 50w

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. Mystery of 31, New Inn. 311p $2 Dodd 30-17097

Young Dr Jervis was taken, in a closed cab, on a mysterious journey to treat a mysterious patient, a Mr Graves, who had all the symptoms of opium-poisoning. Dr Jervis having become suspicious of the patient's attendants, tells his colleague, Dr Thorndyke, all about it. Thorndyke, who is working on a case concerning the will of Jeffrey Blackmore, puts two and two together, and in commendable Sherlock Holmes fashion solves the mystery.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p18 Ja 19 '30 130w

"This is a story for those who like to see a puzzle worked out by pure reasoning. It is not for those who demand startling adventures and hair-breadth escapes."

N Y Times p24 F 9 '30 150w

"The solution is as closely reasoned as one could want. Mr. Freeman uses the device of reserving the actual details of the crime

FREEMAN, R. A.—Continued
until the last. He leads you step by step through a series of episodes described in tri-syllabic phrases, only to discover in the end that all was just as you had imagined from the opening chapters." Eugene Reynal
Sat R of Lit 6:716 F 8 '30 200w

FREESTON, CHARLES LINCOLN. Roads of Spain; a 5000 miles' journey in the new touring paradise; with a foreword by Marquess de Merry del Val. 270p il $3.75 Scribner [10s 6d Cayme press]
914.6 Spain—Description and travel [30-30011]

A description of Spanish roads and guide for motorists in Spain, with 75 illustrations from photographs by the author, and a key map; foreword by the Spanish ambassador to the Court of St James.

Reviewed by Frank Swinnerton
Chicago Daily Tribune Jl 26 '30 100w
New Statesman 35:158 My 10 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p387 My 8 '30 100w

FREMANTLE, ALAN FREDERICK. England in the nineteenth century, 1801-1805. 555p $5.50 Macmillan [16s Allen, G.]
942.07 Great Britain—History—Nineteenth century. Great Britain—Politics and government 30-6644

This study of Great Britain at the beginning of the nineteenth century is given a background history of the Empire in the eighteenth century, with emphasis placed upon military, diplomatic and economic affairs.

Reviewed by A. L. Cross
Am Hist R 35:596 Ap '30 800w

"The account of the government of the country is very fascinating, and contains vivid sketches of the British principals of the early Napoleonic wars. If hereabouts Mr. Fremantle's prejudices are fairly apparent, they are therefore the more easily discountable. His present work encourages the hope that he will speedily publish the second volume." Harold Hobson
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 25 '30 470w

"It is too early to try to 'place' Mr. Fremantle's history, as it will presumably run into many volumes, but this first instalment represents work of distinction." Gerald Hurst
+ Eng Hist R 45:493 Jl '30 850w

"What Mr. Fremantle has projected, it would appear, is a gigantic one-man history of the nineteenth century—at least, if the present volume is a fair indication of the scale to which he is working the final result will certainly be gigantic."
New Statesman 34:421 Ja 4 '30 650w

"Mr. Fremantle has read and used the novels of the time, he has gone to the newspapers not a little, and he has depended much upon an excellent kind of sources, the accounts of English life by foreign travelers in England. His picture is interesting, fresh, and decidedly readable. . . Mr. Fremantle asks his reader as to whether he should continue his volumes. The reviewer would say, by all means give us more chapters about life and times." Wallace Notestein
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1207 Jl 19 '30 700w

"Mr. Fremantle has the historic temper, but he has not planned his book with sufficient care, and planning counts for much in such an ambitious enterprise as this. Yet the volume shows real promise, and the next instalment will be awaited with interest."
— + Spec 143:911 D 14 '29 160w

"Mr. Fremantle's work gains from the fact that he has not only the instinct of an historical scholar but also the experience of a man of affairs. It is elaborately documented; but the writer is not, as so often happens, overweighted by the load of his materials. . . It would be possible to criticize his style here and there; but the general quality of his work may perhaps be best commended by the fact that, though it deals with a period familiar enough, one can read it from cover to cover with unflagging interest and enjoyment."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p775 O 10 '29 1400w

FRENSSEN, GUSTAV. The anvil; tr. by Huntley Paterson (Eng title: Otto Babendiek). 553p $2.50 Houghton [10s Harrap]
30-24353

A long autobiographical novel, translated from the German, in which Otto Babendiek describes his early childhood, the loss of his parents, and his adoption by kindly Auntie Lena. He grows up and becomes a journalist and author, marries, loses his wife, and fights in the World war. The last chapter pictures him married again and settled down to his writing.

"It is a very long novel, crowded with characters, but there is no jostling or confusion. For Frenssen is a peasant of Low Saxon origin, writing about Low Saxon peasantry and near-peasantry, and his novel is informed with that peculiar rhythm, closely related to the movements of days and seasons, which seems to be inseparable from genuine peasant life. Frenssen's presentation, again, is not unlike that of Charles Dickens, because, like Dickens, he is a caricaturist. He begins by unfolding a great story and ends by offering an ordinarily good one, because he cannot resist making a virtue of his weakness—and his weakness is something not unlike garrulity." George Dangerfield
+ Bookm 71:551 Ag '30 350w

"If 'The Anvil' were not the work of an important German writer, one might pass it over lightly. As it is, it is not a book that will carry any very general appeal, nor does it deserve it. Some measure of the piognancy that makes autobiographical writing endurable, and in some cases masterful, is entirely absent here. One can only wonder just why it was written." Eugene Lohrke
— + Books p7 Je 15 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 580w

Reviewed by H. J. B. Lintott
Nation and Ath 47:58 Ap 12 '30 220w

"The atmosphere, especially at the beginning of the volume, is a shade too mediæval, considering that the action takes place in North Germany during our own time. Altogether, one feels a little of that particular weariness, after reading the book, that comes from too much worthiness. Too much heavy, sensible food and too little wine. In conclusion, however, it does contain one or two people who are interesting, and alive, if in rather a one-sided way."
— + New Statesman 34:809 Mr 29 '30 350w

"Coming from the man who once, in 'Jorn Uhl,' wrote a strong and memorable book, 'The Anvil' is deeply disappointing. Its old-fashioned technique, its dawdling style, its deadening excess of incident and description, are fifty years behind the times and yet lacking in the authentic flavor that gives glamour to our yesterdays."
— N Y Times p6 Jl 6 '30 550w

"Those who like a story that is a story and that contains other stories within it will be grateful to the teller of this very long tale and to the interpreter who has preserved its fairy-tale atmosphere. It is a really excellent translation." B. E. Todd
+ Spec 144:675 Ap 19 '30 70w

"It is an honest, painstaking narrative, possibly a shade too artless for English tastes, but an attractive example of its kind, sober, truthful and—particularly in the War passages—genuinely moving. A generation ago it would have seemed a much better book than some people may think it to-day."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Ap 10 '30 400w

FREUD, SIGMUND. Civilization and its discontents; auth. tr. by Joan Riviere. (Int. psycho-analytical lib.) 144p $2.25 Cape [8s 6d Hogarth press]

131 Civilization. Psychoanalysis. Social psychology 30-23433

Freud cites, as three main barriers to happiness in human civilization, the limitations of the body, the natural forces of the outside world, and our relations with our fellowmen. As a result, we are driven to the following remedies: diversions of interest, such as science offers; substitutive gratifications, such as the illusions of art; and intoxicating substances, such as drink, which make us forget. Freud concludes that, altho the attainment of happiness is an impossibility, the struggle toward it results in the growth of civilization and culture.

Booklist 27:137 D '30

Reviewed by Stringfellow Barr
Books p5 S 14 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 850w

"The book is written for the most part with remarkable lucidity, and we are indebted to the translator for carrying the original over into an English prose highly attractive on its own account. . . If Mr. Freud's is not a thoroughly trustworthy mind, it is none the less, one need hardly add, an immensely interesting one, and surely one of the most seminal of our era. 'Civilization and Its Discontents,' in spite of its few vagaries, must be set down an impressive and absorbing contribution to the great problem of happiness under our civilization." Henry Hazlitt
+ — Nation 131:299 S 17 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Bernard Causton
Nation and Ath 48:271 N 22 '30 750w

Reviewed by Newton Arvin
New Repub 64:264 O 22 '30 1900w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
N Y Times p5 S 28 '30 1150w

St Louis 28:287 D '30

"This is a small volume and, even so, it is wordy. The fault is not the translator's. It is nevertheless clearly the authentic handiwork of a master, not so much by what it says as by the importance of the trains of thought which it suggests. Although in one or two footnotes the old Freudian recklessness flares up fantastically, this book marks a revolution in Dr. Freud's thought which is of singular interest to those of us who have based our psychology on Adler's doctrine of self-assertion and of the instinctive pursuit of power. The line of criticism which this extremely suggestive book is likely to evoke will probably be that of objection to Freud's mystic entities, his Eros and his Destructive Force, for which, as operative in human nature, no sufficient cause is vouchsafed." E. G. Catlin
+ — Sat R 150:378 S 27 '30 500w

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow
Sat R of Lit 7:426 D 6 '30 700w

"After a life-time devoted to the most elaborate investigations, to the scrupulous application of scientific method, with its cautious, narrow, limited, step-by-step approach, this man, who, in fact, introduced the possibility of science, instead of unlimited doubt and speculation, into a great new field of human destiny, has permitted himself to stand back from his particular instances, his meticulous and superbly honest collection of evidence, and to sum up for us in calm, economical, and noble prose the general impressions which his immense knowledge of numerous individual human psyches has given him. . . The theme is developed with the greatest richness of content." John Strachey
+ Spec 145:136 Jl 26 '30 1300w

FREY, ALEXANDER MORIZ. Cross bearers; [tr. by Herbert Palmer and Leslie W. Charley]. 306p $2.50 Viking press 30-27681

Herr Frey, who served four years in the German medical corps, describes in this novel—thru the experiences of his hero, Funk—the life of stretcher bearers, surgeons and clerical workers in such a medical unit.

"No other novel of the war has amassed a record of purely physical horror which surpasses this one. But several have stated that horror more successfully. Frey has heaped up a mass of grim and unflinching details which are terrifying in themselves, but which the mind almost refuses to digest." Margaret Wallace
— Bookm 72:312 N '30 230w

"'The Cross Bearers' rises so infrequently above the material plane that it gives little more than a suggestion of the impact of physical horror on the human soul." Lambert Davis
— Books p13 O 19 '30 500w

"As literature, its effect is blurred, discontinuous and jerky. The cumulative effect is, however, powerful. It deals, moreover, with a side of war experiences which has not very often been told." Eugene Lohrke
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 350w

"'The Cross Bearers' carries the realistic reaction from the field to the medical service and the hospital units. It is not the first book to be written from this point of view, but it is on many counts the strongest." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Times p8 D 7 '30 250w

"One feels there might be humor in the original of this book. There is always humor where there are soldiers,—the very young are humorous in their attitude toward life, humorous in their profanity, humorous in their habitual turns of speech. There are laughs in wartime, even in the worst situations. But humor evaporates in translations. One feels an unreality, a stiltedness all the way through. One knows all the time that this isn't the way these soldiers really said it,—that they were more profane, that they were more amusing. It is like looking at a photograph of a painting, in which color is the all important thing." Mary Lee
Sat R of Lit 7:470 D 20 '30 1200w

FRIEDELL, EGON. Cultural history of the modern age: the crisis of the European soul from the Black death to the World war; tr. from the German by Charles Francis Atkinson. 3v v 1, Renaissance and reformation. 360p $5 (21s) Knopf

940.2 Europe—Civilization—History (30-1796)

"Friedell conceives of history, so far as its events are concerned, as falling into certain well-defined periods, in each of which appears one of a few dominating personalities who both embody the spirit of the age and also set its tone. Such a personality is the creature of his age, because he could not possibly have been found in any other; but he is also its embodiment, because in him the qualities of the age appear in greatest perfection. The periods overlap and may themselves be subdivided. The present volume, the first of a projected three, of which two have appeared in the original German, is devoted to the Renaissance and the Reformation, the former dating from the Black Death and the latter ending with the Thirty Years' War."—N Y Times

FRIEDELL, EGON—Continued
Booklist 26:274 Ap '30

"Herr Friedell, for all his theatricalism and sentimentality, has made himself something important and some one to be read as a matter of course by people who pretend to think." Thomas Beer
+ — Books p3 F 16 '30 1500w
Boston Transcript p3 Ja 29 '30 700w

"In spite of contradictions and absurdities, the final result is a book extremely readable and stimulating. I do not mean to imply that Friedell is a writer of Spengler's dimensions; he lacks the latter's force and originality and immense erudition. But he is intelligent, penetrating, and widely informed, and never obscure or heavy. His manner and tone, his capacity to portray an age compactly and vividly, often suggest Taine, and his prose has the vivacity, clarity, and lightness that we are accustomed to think of as French." Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 130:126 Ja 29 '30 900w

"Herr Friedell's good qualities make one regret all the pretentious paraphernalia of sensationalism with which he thinks it necessary to obscure them. One hopes that in the subsequent volumes his obvious and natural interest in history and in historical truth will completely gain the upper hand, and he will forget altogether to be paradoxical and mystical. But one hopes rather desperately, for, like all his school, whenever he mentions eighteenth-century rationalism or nineteenth-century liberalism, he becomes doubly cosmic and trebly mystic." Leonard Woolf
— + Nation and Ath 47:322 Je 7 '30 1050w

"The 'Cultural History of the Modern Age' is unquestionably a superb attempt to interpret the past five and a half centuries of European history in Spengler's terms of rise, maturity and decay, but in a manner less abstruse than that which Spengler sometimes employs, and with an emphasis upon personality which he, on the whole, disdains. Its learning is great, its thought penetrating and wholly unconventional, and its style moving and often brilliant." William MacDonald
+ N Y Times p1 F 9 '30 2050w

"Herr Friedell paints the most attractive canvases of a bygone day, and we are thrilled with their human intimacy and their vivid brush strokes, and likewise their sharp and shrewd penetration. If he isn't quite an historical novelist himself, he does, surely, provide rich material for that inspired fantast who knows how to subdue the truth and the false, the rational and the absurd and sow the ground with happy seed. But there can be no doubt that history of this character is thrilling and never tiresome." Pierre Loving
+ — N Y World p10m F 2 '30 1500w

"Friedell's book is at once absorbing and irritating. He has sought to provide a pattern for an amorphous period in the history of European humanity. If the lines of his design seem painfully expressionistic, by their very eccentricity they invite attention. But the eye of most readers will be drawn more to the odd, bright-colored threads which Friedell has woven into his fabric." David Owen
Sat R of Lit 6:1159 Je 28 '30 1050w
Times [London] Lit Sup p461 My 29 '30 250w

FRIEDLANDER, MAX J. Genuine and counterfeit: experiences of a connoisseur; tr. by Carl Von Honstett and Lenore Pelham. 109p $1.75 Boni

750 Forgery of works of art. Painting. Art —Collectors and collecting 30-14815

Eight essays by a German expert and authority on works of art, offering advice to the novice on the restoring of old pictures, how to detect the forgery of old pictures, and other matters, which will enable him to discern the genuine from the counterfeit.

Bookm 72:xxiv O '30 80w
N Y Times p27 My 25 '30 180w
St Louis 28:213 S '30

FRIEND, MATA ROMAN. Earning and spending the family income; a textbook in home economics. 415p il $2 (6s) Appleton

640 Home economics 30-10509

A textbook for high school students of home economics. The book, in eight units, takes up kinds of homes and changes in the home; American standards of living; methods of managing the family living; method of manufacturing and marketing; how to purchase food; how to purchase clothing; how to purchase shelter; and expenditure for advancement.

Booklist 27:15 S '30

"In this book the author has brought together skillfully material that has been somewhat scattered and unorganized. Our material on family finances has in the past dealt largely with how to select articles for the family, but has touched only lightly here and there on why to select, and very lightly indeed on how to purchase and to fit purchases into the total amount a family has to spend. All three points of view are interwoven here in a way that should be helpful to teachers and students of home economics and also to homemakers. Noteworthy features of the book are the soundness of the subject matter and avoidance of extremes, the practicable approach to family finances through plans rather than through records." E. V. Lacey
+ J Home Econ 22:688 Ag '30 480w
St Louis 28:211 S '30

FRIPP, EDGAR INNES. Shakespeare studies, ² biographical and literary. 176p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Oxford

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Friends and associates. Shakespeare, William—Homes and haunts. Stratford-upon-Avon [30-25862]

"Mr. Fripp is concerned less with Shakespeare himself than with Shakespeare's birthplace and with various characters believed to have been associated with that birthplace. Accordingly, we have chapters on 'A Friend of Shakespeare's Grandfather,' on 'Henry Samuel of Stratford,' on 'The Minister who Baptized Shakespeare,' and on 'John Brownsword: Poet and Schoolmaster at Stratford.' Only once or twice does the author venture into anything resembling criticism."—N Y Times

"Everything that Mr. Fripp says is stated with conviction and evidently with a profound knowledge of his subject-matter; but the rather trivial and gossipy nature of some of the chapters gives evidence that the vein of unused Shakespearean material must be wearing rather thin." S. A. Coblentz
+ — N Y Times p16 O 12 '30 180w
St Louis 28:269 N '30

"Mr. Edgar I. Fripp, who has patiently edited the Corporation minutes and accounts of Stratford-upon-Avon in Shakespeare's day, seems to know all the burgesses and their houses intimately. This mastery of local detail lends interest and value to his new volume of Shakespeare Studies. Mr. Fripp's modest and useful book is to be commended. It is well illustrated with photographs of old houses, MSS. and the like."
+ Spec 145:141 Jl 26 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p922 N 6 '30 180w

FROISLAND, FROIS. Man with the X-ray eyes, & other stories from the front; tr. from the Norwegian by Nils Flaten. 276p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper

30-8616

The author, who was a Norwegian war correspondent from the outbreak of the World war to the signing of the Armistice, includes in this volume several sketches, impressions and stories of his experiences in that capacity. The title story, as well as others in the book, contains certain elements of the miraculous, or at least the extremely unusual: something had happened to the eyes of a wounded American corporal that gave him not only X-ray vision, but, before his death, the ability to see things that were happening many miles away.

Books p10 Je 1 '30 120w

"There is a good deal of the macabre and the unusual, some dots and '(Here a paragraph has been cut out by the censor.)' The translator has some queer mannerisms, including an overfondness for the word 'gotten,' and the book is luridly illustrated." J. P.

Nation and Ath 47:sup192 My 10 '30 100w

"These stories are typical of the old-fashioned journalism. They are well spun yarns gathered by the author from his experiences as correspondent on the Allied fronts. But in spite of their rather stereotyped mechanics, these tales are worth while." C. A. C.

+ — New Repub 62:215 Jl 9 '30 200w

"This is good journalism, and where the sketches develop into stories there is a keen sense of the startling and the unusual."

+ New Statesman 35:120 My 3 '30 80w

"As a war correspondent Mr. Froisland visited the front-line trenches and many of his sketches bear the unmistakable stamp of first-hand experience. He writes a vivid, journalistic style and has a distinct flair for the color of every situation. But, really, now that the conflict is twelve years over, to what end factual accounts of trench warfare?"

N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 150w

"Fröis Fröisland, without any particular command of style in its artistic sense, has, nevertheless, the journalist's perfectly adequate prose. And he has a tremendous understanding of human nature. The stories developed in chronological order, have in themselves sufficient interest to hold suspense and to be definitely dramatic. Their value lies, indeed, in the reporter-like manner in which they are given us by the author." E. L. Walton

+ N Y Times p7 My 18 '30 500w

Reviewed by Stanley Went

Sat R of Lit 6:1105 Je 7 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p685 Ag 28 '30 350w

FROME, DAVID, pseud. See Brown, Z.

FRONDAIE, PIERRE, pseud. (RENE FRAUDET). Love at forty; tr. from the French by Madeleine Boyd. 287p $2 Sears

30-24950

"The author unfolds a triangle in which Emma Baita, the woman of forty, helps a married friend carry on an affair, and herself plays the rôle of mistress in order to shield her friend. But he lets the reader down considerably, and certainly not convincingly, by having Emma decide that to be forty is to be old, past the age of romance, ready to settle down with the middle aged of both sexes. So she lets Ruppert go his way, valiantly trying to make herself believe that life is 'ended' at the conclusion of the fourth decade."—Books

"This exercise in intrigue builds up to a climax which is contrived in the best French style, and then passes on to an anti-climax which may be true but lacks the authentic French attitude. It is quite likely that the delicacy which this story may have possessed in the original has been lost in the translation, which is heavy and labored, like an exercise."

— Books p10 N 23 '30 150w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p5d O 18 '30 50w

"Pierre Frondaie handles the delicate situation with infinite tact, and, strangely enough for such light fare, leaves the reader satisfied. Madeline Boyd's translation is sympathetic and craftsmanlike."

+ N Y Times p34 N 16 '30 300w

FROST, FRANCES M. Hemlock wall. (Yale ser. of younger poets) 36p $1.25 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Oxford]

811 29-25955

"This first book of verse, one of the Yale series of younger poets, has the quality of a northern winter landscape, rigorous, firmly etched, austere. Emphasis is finely placed on the climbing will, the patient labor, the slow difficult achievement. Miss Frost prefers a short line and a leisurely movement."—Bookm

"She speaks a plain language, but a richly suggestive one."

+ Bookm 71:x Je '30 50w

"Frances M. Frost's slender book of lyrics shows conventional uniformity of merit. Her subject matter in general employs the nature background of New England's stone and spruce, and she has caught successfully something of the dry, idiomatic whimsicality that characterizes the work of Robert Frost—notably in 'White Woods,' and in 'Walk Before Storm.' " Ruth Lechlitner

Books p17 Mr 23 '30 150w

"Writing with a rare combination of conciseness and color, Frances Frost suceeds in packing much thought and significance into a small space and at the same time leaving the reader with the sense of having been in the presence of something exquisitely refined and delicately beautiful." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 17 '30 220w

"Again and again she prefers the bare hill or tree to the lush valley or the ladened bough, the 'harsh and flinty grief' of winter to the blush of spring or the smile of summer. The style of her verse reflects the starkness of her inclinations. It is hard and succinct, but it is too often rather brittle and sterile."

Times [London] Lit Sup p146 F 20 '30 100w

FROST, LESLEY, ed. Come Christmas. 430p il $2.50 Coward-McCann

808.8 Christmas 29-29947

A selection from the poetry, songs, and prose in English, French and Spanish concerning Christmas. The anthology contains also some brief miracle plays, and selections from the old plays of York, Wakefield and Coventry.

Booklist 26:230 Mr '30

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

Books p12 Ja 12 '30 30w

"An excellent anthology of Christmas poetry. . . It is not a mere gathering together of a large number of verses on the subject of Christmas, but a carefully and critically selected anthology." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 129:753 D 18 '29 260w

N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 80w

St Louis 28:76 Mr '30

"Miss Frost prints some old favorites but gives much more that is unfamiliar to the reader who has not browsed about in Christmas literature. There is much excellent reading here put in convenient and attractive form. She is to be commended for the early English carols she prints and for her very interesting selections from the French."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:570 D 14 '29 130w

FROST, ROBERT. Collected poems. 349p $5 Holt [15s Longmans]

811 30-30191

Contains the previously published books by Robert Frost: North of Boston, A boy's will, Mountain interval, New Hampshire, and West-running brook, together with six new and hitherto unpublished poems.

FROST, ROBERT—Continued
Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

"In this collected edition of his poems we may study, with especial profit, the prevailing meditation which runs, from the first poem written thirty years ago, on and on, in and out and through and under the facts and faiths of our contemporary life, down to the last poems written yesterday. Here is a mind that grows but never changes, that understands, with each poem accomplished, more and more about the mastery of form, storing much observation and illustration from experience, handling actualities with assurance, but a mind, nevertheless, that does not change, because it gives to experience something more spiritual, more creative than the things it takes away." Genevieve Taggard
Books p1 D 21 '30 2100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

" 'Collected poems' shows and shows clearly that Frost has written as fine poetry as any living American and that the proportion of first-rate poetry to the whole is greater than that in the work of any other contemporary. This last point is important, not because quantity matters, but because so many American poets, after a brief productive period, have slipped into silence or mediocrity." Granville Hicks
+ New Repub 65:77 D 3 '30 1250w

"The mature personality of Robert Frost represented in these collected poems is arrestingly attractive. There is no other poet to whom he can be compared. Even his English disciple, Edward Thomas, is different. Frost's humour is superb; a dignified, subtle force, probing its ways into life and finding a form of self-expression that has to be known to be believed. Ordinary praise misses the mark."
+ New Statesman 36:365 D 27 '30 650w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl
Outlook 156:590 D 10 '30 100w

FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS GODDARD. Washington, commander in chief. 405p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Washington, George. United States—History—Revolution—Campaigns and battles 30-24708

"The object of this book," as stated in the foreword, "is to set forth in its true light, and with its right perspective, the military record of George Washington, Commander in Chief throughout the Revolution." The author believes that in a true statement of the military events a clear picture of the character of Washington will be reflected. His boyhood and development to manhood are briefly treated. The first two chapters bring him to the age of twenty-two when he was already regarded as a "person of distinction" and of proved ability and judgment.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"It was a job that needed doing and has been well done. Mr. Frothingham sticks to facts and replaces guess work with reasoned analysis." Hoffman Nickerson
+ Bookm 72:426 D '30 800w
Books p21 N 2 '30 850w

"Captain Frothingham has done his work admirably. He set out to give a statement of military events which is tinged by neither an undue desire to exalt his subject nor by the more popular and recent desire to make a novel, an original, or a somewhat different Washington." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 1550w

"For many years there has been no new book devoted exclusively to appraising the part played by Washington as the military chief of the American Revolution. Yet there has been no little variance in the estimate of Washington's generalship, and Captain Frothingham's study makes a valuable contribution to our knowledge of his performance in the field. It is well written, the author's style is clear and non-technical, and the material is of intense interest to any one who is interested at all in one of the still obscure periods in the history of our country." C. C. Clendenen
+ N Y Times p20 N 16 '30 1100w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 D '30 100w
St Louis 28:301 D '30

FRY, CHARLES LUTHER. U. S. looks at its churches. 183p $2.50 Inst. of social & religious research

277.3 Churches—United States. United States—Religion
30-15638

"Assuming the general reliability of the Federal Census of Religious Bodies, Dr. Fry and his trained helpers developed thirty-five comparative charts and forty statistical tables, that support the conclusions of the nine chapters, that discuss the state of religious education, values of church properties, the educational standards of the ministry and the growth of the churches in respect to population and geographical distribution."—Churchman

Reviewed by Clifford Kirkpatrick
Ann Am Acad 152:422 N '30 180w

"The graphs, tables and statistics are full of suggestions. The work has been scientifically and impartially done. One can really look at the churches, their work, their numbers and their holding, in an impartial and unbiased fashion."
+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '30 480w

"The tabulations and conclusions are of much practical value." A. L. Murray
Churchman p5 Ag 30 '30 80w

"Mr. Fry, who has done this work in a very clear, interesting and readable way, is the author of several studies of rural religious and village life. Each one of the eight chapters takes up a single one of these matters and brings together from the census tables the figures that throw light upon it, comparing, elucidating and combining in a narrative that is interestingly written a very great amount of information."
+ N Y Times p25 S 14 '30 350w

"The first publication of the Institute of Social and Religious Research is an exceedingly valuable reference volume, indispensable for those who need facts about the religious bodies in America. It boils down the exceedingly voluminous census reports, adds corrective information of various sorts, and presents the results in a manner as attractive and well-written as can be expected." B. I. Bell
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1207 Jl 19 '30 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p643 Ag 7 '30 70w

FRY, WALTER, and WHITE, JOHN ROBERTS. Big trees. 114p il $2 Stanford univ. press [9s Oxford]

634.9758 Trees—California. Sequoia 30-13127

Interesting information about the big trees of California, the giant sequoias, and the efforts made to preserve them.

Booklist 27:15 S '30
Books p19 S 7 '30 160w

Reviewed by Nicholas Roosevelt
N Y Times p14 Je 8 '30 480w
St Louis 28:210 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p786 O 2 '30 200w

FUESS, CLAUDE MOORE. Daniel Webster. 2v il $10 Little

B or 92 Webster, Daniel 30-29651

"The biographer of a statesman has two courses open to him. He may write a history of the times with the great man as a central figure, or he may assume that his readers know the history and spend himself in detailing the events of his subject's life with only enough historical background or accompaniment to enable the reader to keep things straight. Mr. Fuess follows the second of these courses, although not with entire consistency. Apparently, his own conception of his task grew as he proceeded with it, for there is considerably more history in his second volume than in the first. . . The critical reader will probably be most interested in the appraisal of Webster's character, his position in the politics of his time, and the permanent significance of the many important moments in his long career."

—Nation

"Mr. Fuess has written what will probably be considered for years to come the standard biography of Daniel Webster. His two well documented volumes cover every phase of the great New Englander's career and throw light on many disputed points. The approach is always favorable, though balance is maintained, and no effort made to gloss over the many weaknesses of a very human person. Yet one learns of dissipation and indebtedness without quite catching the living, breathing Webster, who remains to the end as 'godlike' as he seemingly appeared to the 'awe-struck' of his own day. That is, perhaps, as it should be, indicating a skill rather rare in these 'debunking days.' It is a monumental work; one of the outstanding biographies of a decade." Avery Craven
+ Books p3 N 23 '30 1150w

"One of the few really profound biographies to which a busy reviewer may hope to give his time in any one year. To say that this puts Dr. Claude Moore Fuess in the front rank of New England biographers would be to speak too slightingly of his previous works. Still, one can say that it will introduce him as a biographer rather than merely as a distinguished name to a wider circle than that to which he has heretofore appealed. . . His style, never that of a pedant, has ease, clarity and good manners, both toward the man of whom he writes and those for whom he writes, which produce a book of the first water." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p1 O 25 '30 1900w

"There have been many books about 'the divine Webster' and there are many published documents and unpublished traditions, but there is nowhere quite as good a biography as the one now before us." W. E. Dodd
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 D 20 '30 550w

"A biographer of Webster should not attempt to explain away things which to his contemporaries seemed peccadillos. He should deal with him in the light of the standards of his time. Mr. Fuess does this for the most part. It is a pity that 'for the most part' cannot be written 'always.'" L. R.
+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 280w

"Without much question Fuess's Daniel Webster becomes for the time being the standard life of this New England son and may put a stop to the flood of superficial, sensational biographies which have clogged the market in the last few years. For it is a sane life which succeeds in portraying Daniel Webster as he was, a hero of the ante-bellum America. . . With all its wealth of scholarship, the biography has escaped the curse of being 'dry as dust'; it is intensely readable." E. F. Brown
+ Current Hist 33:xiv D '30 1100w

"In the main Mr. Fuess subordinates the general movement of events to Webster's personal career, and within those limits has produced far and away the best biography of Webster that has yet been written." William MacDonald
+ Nation 131:554 N 19 '30 950w

"Both biographers [Fuess and Adams] give us honest unlegendary portraits, but their standpoints, styles, methods and approaches are basically different. One might say, perhaps, that Samuel Adams's biography will appeal more to those Americans who happen to have been born little liberals, while those who saw the light as little conservatives will gravitate more naturally to Mr. Fuess's. The ideal thing for either would be to read both." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 420w

"Mr. Fuess, in one of the most thorough-going biographies yet written in this country, shows his usual nice sense of proportion. . . He demonstrates again, as he has done before, that a strong impression of a man's character can be made by restraint of touch. . . The beauty of Mr. Fuess's artistry is this, that it is so delicate and apparently unconscious that it does not seem like artistry." C. W. Thompson
+ N Y Times p3 O 26 '30 620w

Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p3e N 30 '30 480w

"Claude Fuess has gathered up all the loose and sometimes tangled threads and woven them into a brilliant fabric. The individual who cannot get a better, because more sensible, idea of the United States by reading this book might just as well spend the rest of his life at garden golf. . . It would be four-thirds as good as it is if it were only three-fourths as long: there is some padding. . . The one real defect of the book is the number of times that Fuess says that such and such an incident is wrapped in mystery, or here the curtains are drawn, or this will never be known." A. W. Porterfield
+ — Outlook 156:345 O 29 '30 2100w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:6 D '30 220w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

"At last we have a biography of Webster which ranks with the very best lives of American statesmen yet written—with Schurz's Clay, with William Cabell Bruce's Benjamin Franklin, and with Beveridge's Marshall. . . Mr. Fuess has been fortunate in his subject, and he writes with the gusto of a man who appreciates the fact. . . Has this admirable work a weakness? If it has, it lies simply in this—that it contains little, either as biography or history, which is essentially new. But this is not really a weakness; it is simply a limitation inherent in the subject. So industrious and conscientious is Mr. Fuess in his search for material of all kinds, that he comes nearer to producing a new portrait than anyone would have believed possible. It is such a biography as we seldom see, and for at least our generation it may safely be pronounced definitive." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 7:451 D 13 '30 1450w

FULCHER, PAUL MILTON. Guests of summer. 420p $2.50 Macmillan
30-9248

Jack, born out of wedlock to Ellen Trey, a New York artist, runs away from the custody of his religious Aunt Matilda, and is taken in by the kindly Amory household. At the outbreak of the war Jack joins the ambulance service in France, leaving Mary, the girl he loves—who later marries his friend Tom Amory. On leave in Paris, Jack meets the woman who, unknown to him, is his mother; but she does not disclose her identity to him. Jack falls in love with a French girl, Céleste Chatellerault, whom he returns to marry, after a visit to America at the close of the war.

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

Reviewed by Guy Holt
Bookm 71:475 Jl '30 20w

"Mr. Fulcher hates without measure the little town west of the Alleghenies founded by 'serious-minded Massachusetts families.' He hates what he believes to be its ignorant piety and its pious cruelty and its fear of beauty and of life. And he tries to evolve a story that will show us this ignorance and piety and cruelty and fear at their deadly work on the human spirit. And here he stumbles; for it isn't as easy to show those petty characteristics in action as it is to feel them, and the story he evolves is melodramatic and impossible. . . There are no real characterizations in the book; there are people the author hates and people he loves." A. B. Parsons

FULCHER, P. M.—Continued

— Books p7 My 4 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '30

"Mr. Fulcher conveys with much understanding the thoughts and emotions of a sensitive child exploring life and trying to make some sense of the curious explanations offered by its elders. . . No less true is the record of the ineffaceable impression made by the war and the search for some purpose which shall make life a coherent thing rather than a futile succession of unrelated incidents. It is a book to be read slowly and with appreciation, giving as it does so much of the distilled essence of emotional experience."

+ N Y Times p22 Ap 27 '30 400w

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1095 My 31 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 100w

FULLER, HENRY BLAKE. Not on the screen. 276p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-4860

"What Mr. Fuller has done in 'Not on the Screen' is to take a typical movie story and hold it up to laughter. Embert Howell, fresh from the country, gets to know Evelyn Trent, the daughter of a dowager none too well off. He gradually gains in poise and worldliness, little by little dissipating Mrs. Trent's objection to him. But there is Robert Sherill, suave and city-bred, who handles Mrs. Trent's finances and would also, like Embert, marry Evelyn; and before long Sherill has revealed himself as the perfect villain. And there is Sherill's mistress, Claire Basquin, who complicates matters the more; and old Mr. Janes, an aristocratic lawyer who befriends Embert and finally discomfits the rascally Sherill, so that the villain goes to prison at about the same time that the hero leads Evelyn to the altar."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"Mr. Fuller wavers, at times, between a desire to render this plot completely ridiculous—as, indeed, it is—and a contrary desire to establish, against odds, its plausibility. Between the two impulses, the clarity of purpose necessary to successful satire escapes him. Nevertheless, Mr. Fuller has taken many shrewd and amusing thrusts at the foibles of a social world with which he is undeniably familiar."

+ — Bookm 71:100 Mr '30 250w

"The last of Henry B. Fuller's many novels, finished only a week before its author's death, is pale and tenuous when set beside his antepenultimate volume, 'Gardens of This World.' Less rich in reflection and fancy than that delightful work, it gives a faintly smiling glance at society, as it appeared to Fuller and as it represents itself upon the screen. In deft precise prose it lightly opposes the ambitions and satisfactions of men and women in life to those in the cinema, and finds in their romances less passion, more calculation—all for love, but the world, nevertheless, very much with them." Garreta Busey

Books p14 Mr 9 '30 500w

"There is nothing remarkable about it—the style is not Mr. Fuller's best, the matter of little moment. It sounds rather as if Mr. Fuller had determined to try his hand at something different from its skilled wont. It is written, at times, with great beauty, but that is because Mr. Fuller naturally wrote with great beauty, and even uncongenial matter could not entirely dim that beauty." F. B.

— + Chicago Daily Tribune p16 Mr 29 '30 100w

"In phrasing and atmosphere 'Not on the Screen' falls a little short of his best works, 'The Chevalier of Pensieri-Vani,' 'The Last Refuge,' and 'Gardens of This World'; but the reason lies more in the subject than in any loss of power. The special characteristic of this satire is that the story itself is almost as interesting as the satirical overtone; those who like motion pictures will be almost as much amused as those who do not."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 12 '30 400w

"Holding his narrative tight in a classic mold, Mr. Fuller permits himself the freedom of an unceasing classic irony which plays over the action in every sentence. That irony, being fully conscious, somehow warms the story as by reflected light. Even where it is prim it is bright and shrewd. Even where it is most reticent it always pierces in its quiet way. It demands that the reader meet the writer on the common ground of a critical intelligence which can smile over the drama here presented, but it can be counted on to please any reader who occupies that ground, slyly beguiling him from page to page, through episodes that are humorous because they are so actual, to a conclusion that is convincing because it is so unemphatic." Carl Van Doren

+ Nation 130:188 F 12 '30 650w

"The book is a much better satire on the Wharton novel of snobs and dowagers than a burlesque on the hackneyed movie plot about the modern generation. Mr. Fuller seems to date only the more through trying to bring himself up-to-the-minute. The social absurdities of his own age he can puncture wittily; the manners of today elude his grasp and ruffle his poise. The flavor of the man is here; but it is in his earlier books, where the story is less trivial and the author less self-conscious, that it will prove most lasting."

+ — N Y Times p8 F 2 '30 420w

"It is almost perfect writing. Precious? If you think so, read Ronald Firbank, read Norman Douglas, read Mr. Fuller's great admirer, the good Van Vechten. Then turn back to the man who could run rings around them at their own game and no fuss about it; and whose soul, besides, was stored with rich life and with beauty of which they never dreamed. No relation to life? Read what Mr. Fuller has to say about the Middle West, about love in Chicago." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 154:225 F 5 '30 520w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p338 Ap 17 '30 220w

FULLER, JOHN FREDERICK CHARLES. Generalship of Ulysses S. Grant. 452p $5 Dodd [21s J. Murray]

B or 92 Grant, Ulysses Simpson. United States—History—Civil war—Campaigns and battles 29-27666

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The comments on individuals are often trenchant and dogmatic. The author has used the conventional sources and secondary works. For some reason, frequently secondary works are cited when primary sources could have been given. Too often important statements have no citation at all. The maps are entirely adequate and there is a bibliography of works consulted. In spite of its faults in emphasis and its one-sided treatment of Grant and his military career, this is a stimulating book." T. R. Hay

+ — Am Hist R 35:891 Jl '30 950w

Booklist 26:310 My '30

"It is a positive work that will satisfy those who already agree with its contentions, but which will stir to bitterness those who chance to think otherwise." Avery Craven

Books p7 Ja 12 '30 1500w

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 31:836 F '30 130w

"While every sane reader will give due heed to Colonel Fuller's estimate of Grant as a military man, the reviewer very much doubts whether they will accept without many reservations his opinions regarding the place war and internationalism had in civilization. But these opinions, some of which are expressed in the preface of the volume, should not blind us to the fact that they are the convictions of a fearless and honest man, who in this volume on Grant makes a distinct contribution to our knowledge of military history."

+ — Hist Outlook 21:186 Ap '30 100w

"Colonel Fuller's arrangement—slabs of philosophical disquisition sandwiched between longer slabs of narrative and technical criticism—is not good, and his style can be both flat and turgid. His cocksureness is such as we usually associate with shallower thinkers. On the question of Grant's generalship, he makes out a very strong case. His analysis of Grant's strategy is masterly, and his defense of the final campaigns in Virginia against the charge of being mere brutal 'bludgeon-work' is temperate, closely reasoned, and convincing." C. E. Fayle

— + Nation and Ath 46:516 Ja 11 '30 580w

Reviewed by Allen Tate
New Repub 62:277 Ap 23 '30 230w

Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 480w

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"It is not likely that the general reader will find the book of engaging interest, but students of military history are almost certain to enjoy it and profit by it, even though they may not agree with some of Colonel Fuller's judgments and conclusions. He has not delved as widely into the source materials of the period as has Liddell-Hart, but he has made generous use of the most important sources. Grant himself is occasionally almost obscured from view in the maze of strategy, tactics, marches, flank movements and attacks. This is one of the deficiencies of the book. It would have lightened the narrative considerably, and in no wise have detracted from it." A. H. Meneely

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:922 Ap 12 '30 1000w

Reviewed by R. H. Gabriel
Yale R n s 19:590 spring '30 1000w

FULLER, MARGARET WITTER. Golden roof. 278p $2.50 Morrow

30-24249

The story of Nikolé, who in every crisis of her life gave herself unstintingly. In childhood on the little island in the Baltic Sea she took care of her old grandmother; later in Paris with her young husband she endured poverty; when the war came she nursed the wounded; and when her husband died she went on courageously and cared for her young son. Finally in America there came a promise of lasting happiness.

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

Bookm 72:viii S '30 100w

"Nikolé is one of those heroines whose charm decreases by an unnaturally cruel progression. She is most attractive as an adolescent nymph on her native island of Möen in the Baltic sea. Thereafter she becomes the victim of her creator's nervous. fluttery and frequently silly mannerisms, so that the pathos of her young husband's death and her bravery in carrying on with her little son have hardly a chance to register any dignified effect."

— Books p28 S 28 '30 100w

"Miss Fuller's purpose has been to write the romance of a loving life, and to that end she has ordered her scene and her characters. Her style, like her story, is swift and impressionistic, and even glamorous when its tone does not condescend to be artificial. For originality of character drawing the novel is not quite the equal of 'Alma.'"

+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 O 18 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

N Y Times p38 D 7 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

FULOP-MILLER, RENE. Power and secret of the Jesuits; tr. by F. S. Flint and D. F. Tait. 523p il $5 Viking press [21s Putnam]

271.5 Jesuits 30-11530

Fülöp-Miller has written a book of broad scope which covers both the history of the order and an examination of its philosophy. It is an impartial exposition of the Jesuit policy, its relation to great events, and the influence of Jesuit philosophy upon thought and conduct, with an account of Jesuit missions and proselytism and portraits of its leaders. There are 142 illustrations, a bibliography and an index.

Reviewed by C. D. Clark
Am J Soc 36:500 N '30 320w

Booklist 26:380 Jl '30

"Fülöp-Miller has produced a useful and readable book but not a great one. It shows signs of the haste that is so likely to injure a prolific writer. . . The portraits of Ignatius and Francis Xavier are admirably drawn. The account of the Chinese missionaries, their brilliant talents and their splendid success, is excellent. The sketch of the Paraguay missions is lit up with beauty. And the story of the Jesuit missionaries among the American Indians, one of the most sublime pages in human heroism, receives the recognition it deserves. . . The book, however, suffers, from a reticence or total silence on some of the greatest episodes in Jesuit history, although it lengthens out other episodes less important." W. L. Sullivan

+ — Books p3 Ap 27 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p5 My 31 '30 700w

"Fülöp-Miller's admiration of his aspect of the Society of Jesus is perfectly sincere. He rises to enthusiasm when in the last four chapters he depicts it in action. But his blind spots are the penalty of his theory and his philosophy. . . The essential defect of the book, which every intelligent Catholic will immediately sense and make allowances for, is precisely this, that attention is focused on the human aspect of the work of a body of men laboring side by side with thousands of heroic workers in God's Kingdom, and that this one-sidedness is accounted for by attributing to them a theological error of which they were free. The book itself is splendidly produced: the paper, the 142 illustrations, the printing and binding, are excellent." W. P.

— + Cath World 131:624 Ag '30 900w

"This is the one best book in English on the Jesuit order." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 48:21 Ja 7 '31 950w

"Whatever one may think of the Jesuits after reading this remarkable book there will hardly be differences of opinion regarding the excellence of René Fülöp-Miller's monumental book. The book is neither an apology for nor an attack upon the Society of Jesus. It is, so far as a non-Catholic can judge of its accuracy and point of view, fairminded. With its material, drawn largely from controversial writings of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the author has achieved a degree of detachment which lifts his study wholly out of the class of propagandist literature." E. D. Martin

+ Current Hist 32:628 Jl '30 1750w

Reviewed by M. H. Moore
Int J Ethics 41:277 Ja '31 220w

"This reviewer feels that Mr. René Fülöp-Miller has failed to cast any light upon the ultimate source of Jesuit power—its secret, namely—for he had not the means of approaching its hiding place. That hiding place is in the form and spirit of the routine life, religious and social, of the ordinary Jesuit community." E. B. Barrett

— Nation 130:737 Je 25 '30 800w

"Herr Fülöp-Miller makes a good job of his account of this diverting controversy. Indeed the absence of generalization, the veritable impartiality of his book, does credit to an historian who evidently respects himself and his subject." Cuthbert Wright

FULOP-MILLER, RENE—Continued
+ New Repub 63:296 Jl 23 '30 900w

"The author of The Mind and Face of Bolshevism finds in this new topic a theme which suits him well, and he has written a first-rate piece of journalism about it. He tells the good stories, and wonderfully good stories they are, with spirit and humour. . . Cleverly sandwiched in, too, between the anecdotes and the episodes, is much solid meat, almost as daintily served."
+ New Statesman 35:654 Ag 30 '30 1050w

"Fülöp-Miller's book cannot in fairness be called a well-rounded performance. He tells us a great deal that is important about the Jesuit order as it has been, but much less that is significant about the order as it is today, especially in the United States. There is more about the 'influence' of the society than about its 'secret,' and next to nothing about such matters as the education and discipline of the Jesuit, the Jesuit system of education and the ever-present personal espionage. With those limitations, the book is a treasury of well-chosen information about a unique religious organization." William MacDonald
+ — N Y Times p3 My 4 '30 2550w

"A remarkable book, in which the author has surveyed the whole history of the order and studied its enterprises, from what is apparently an honest and unprejudiced point of view. Here we have the finest example of Rene Fulop-Miller's expository ability. He stands outside the order and passes judgment on its acts from the vantage point of a scholar who does not accept all its teachings. But I doubt that the Jesuits have ever had fairer treatment in a secular chronicle." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p13 My 15 '30 950w

"Extremely interesting, it has also a solidity which should recommend it to you if you are surfeited with the jazzed-up journalism of so many of the current re-hashes of serious subjects." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 80w

"Mr. Fülöp-Miller has given us a book which contains an immense amount of interesting material."
+ Sat R 150:208 Ag 16 '30 650w

Reviewed by C. C. Clifford
Sat R of Lit 7:35 Ag 9 '30 1600w

"Rene Fulop-Miller's contribution to the rapidly growing library of popularly written histories, 'The Power and Secret of the Jesuits' offers a readable and unbiased outline of religious, scientific, artistic and political impulses in the last four centuries. Without attempting to be a detailed and analytical history of the Jesuit order itself, the book presents dramatic and significant episodes in world development, since Ignatius Loyola forsook the life of a soldier and noble to become a 'soldier of Christ.' "
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 1400w

"It would be hard to praise too highly the historical part of the book. The subject is vast; we are taken all over the world, up and down four centuries, and into every kind of human society, high or low, savage or civilized. But everything is clear and orderly. Often the subject is wildly romantic, sometimes it is dry as only the bones of theology can be dry; but the romanticism of this history is never excessive and the peculiar vices of picturesque historians are absent, while Mr. Fülöp-Miller dissipates the boredom of theological discussion by clarity, good sense and wit. His learning is prodigious, yet he manages this mass of material with so much ease that until one comes to the bibliography of twenty-four closely printed pages one scarcely realizes what an immense task has been accomplished."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p795 O 9 '30 1200w
World Tomorrow 13:379 S '30 50w

FULOP-MILLER, RENE, and GREGOR, JOSEPH. Russian theater, its character and history, with especial reference to the revolutionary period; tr. by Paul England. ltd ed il $25 Lippincott [£5 5s Harrap]
792 Theater—Russia 30-16694

"A superb book, translated from the German of Rene Fülöp-Miller and Joseph Gregor (the latter keeper of the famous theatrical collection in the National Library in Vienna). The former contributes a brief history of the Russian theater, the latter a more philosophical and documented study, with special reference to theories of acting, production and scenic design. The book is illustrated with forty-eight plates in full color and 357 halftones, which not only show pictorially the story of this stage, but illustrate the unconscious connection between the symbolism of the early icons and the latest revolutionary attempts toward a new method of production."—Books

---

"Careful research, first-hand knowledge and a thorough understanding of the theater in Europe, as well as Russia, have gone into the preparation of this book, and it is, in light of the importance and interest of its subject, indispensable to every theatrical library. Unfortunately, it is ponderous and expensive, inevitably, and but 350 copies of the English translation (very well made by Paul England) are available for the United States. It is greatly to be hoped that they will be distributed where they can be consulted by our critics and still more by our experimental producers." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p5 My 4 '30 700w

"It is the art of the producer and the designer which is the most vital thing in the Soviet theater, and for the student of this aspect of Soviet art the handsome volume before us is invaluable." E. H. C.
+ Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 19 '30 450w

Reviewed by Lydia Lopokova
Nation and Ath 47:sup196 My 10 '30 350w

"No more attractive evidence of the breadth, variety and dynamic aliveness of the Russian theater is now available in English than this book. There is about this large and heavy volume with its more than four hundred handsome illustrations a kind of children's picture-book gaiety, an exuberance and excitement which not only give pleasure in themselves, but make us reflect on the precise nature of the Russian theatrical genius. . . Now turn from the concrete image of the book's illustrations to the short text that prefaces them, and its inadequacy as critical comment on so rich an achievement becomes painfully obvious." Harold Clurman
+ — New Repub 63:324 Jl 30 '30 450w
New Statesman 34:844 Ap 5 '30 340w

"It is a collection of sketches and photographs which in its own visual way makes an ample, indeed a magnificent, chronicle-history of the Russian stage. Not that it is as well arranged as it should be, because it is not. Or that many of its numerous inclusions are well selected. Because the simple truth is that, full as the record is that 'The Russian Theatre' makes, and handsome as is the book which J. B. Lippincott has published, Herr Fülöp-Miller's and Herr Gregor's volume is a messy-minded sample of editing. It is, however, invaluable—in spite of itself." J. M. Brown
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:422 D 6 '30 350w

"This is primarily a picture-book. And its 48 colour plates and 357 halftones give us, in a swift inspection, a better understanding of tendencies, ways and means in the Russian theatre than could be conveyed by thousands of words in carefully written description. One looks and learns, and one is amazed by the fertility of scenic invention displayed here." Richard Jennings
+ Spec 144:744 My 3 '30 550w

"As a historical guide the volume on the Russian theatre is disappointing. Herr Joseph Gregor contributes an analysis of the various styles and methods of presentation in the Russian theatre—a scholarly piece of research; but Herr Fülöp-Miller's historical summary is distinctly sketchy and is marked by serious omissions."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p341 Ap 24 '30 1800w

FUNCK-BRENTANO, FRANTZ. Old regime in France; tr. by Herbert Wilson. 376p $6 Longmans [16s Arnold, E. & co.]

914.4 France—Civilization. France—Social life and customs. France—Politics and government 30-6206

A social history of France from the close of the Hundred years war to the Revolution, a period during which state and society were founded upon an intensive family life. The reign of Louis XV is considered by the author as most truly representative of L'Ancien régime.

"M. Funck-Brentano's book appeared in French a few years ago as a part of a series which also numbers M. Bertrand's Louis XIV. and M. Gaxotte's Révolution Française, and, like its fellows, has an obvious conservative, not to say royalist, bias. Yet [it] is a useful book. Like other bad books, it is useful in the training of the critical instincts. But M. Funck-Brentano sees a part of the truth not distinguishable in many good books of the last century." Crane Brinton
— + Am Hist R 35:595 Ap '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p58 Ap '30

"Although this book appeared in French in the popular Les Grandes Etudes Historiques series, it has a scholarly atmosphere about it. It has up-to-date bibliographies, presents material in an unimpassioned way, and, except for occasional indications of a royalist bent, is quite impartial. It will go far in supplanting Taine's Ancien régime and should prove of great value to the American college instructor." S. B. Clough
+ Hist Outlook 21:189 Ap '30 140w

"A big, untidy, delightful book. . . M. Funck-Brentano's strong enthusiasm for the period is conveyed to the reader by means of a flood of facts, figures, and quotations, drawn from an enormous number of sources, and displayed with Gallic passion."
+ Nation and Ath 46:463 D 28 '29 170w

"In this review of the Old Regime, which he sees in its full maturity in the reign of Louis XV, M. Funck-Brentano has recovered for us not only its brilliance but its meaning. It is a book that has been needed for a long time past in England as an introduction to the works of the great French memoirists. . . The facts are related with a sparkle of narrative and illustrated with a wealth of contemporary quotation."
+ New Statesman 34:422 Ja 4 '30 600w
N Y Times p13 N 24 '29 260w
St Louis 28:79 Mr '30

"He has his incorrigible predilections, and other historians must be consulted to restore a balance; but unquestionably he has written an erudite book, in many respects notable; and, as the publisher states in a Foreword, he gives much that will be new to English readers."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1017 D 5 '29 900w

FURFEY, PAUL HANLY. Growing boy; case studies of developmental age. 192p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

136.77 Boys. Adolescence. Growth. Child study 30-13431

The book, which is based upon intensive case studies, is concerned with the development of personality in boys between their sixth and sixteenth years. The subjects studied were a group of 168 boys living in one section of a large eastern city.

"It seems that the materials, while presenting an interesting cross-section picture of the recreational and social interests of boys at various age levels, inadequately depict the process of personality change. To the extent that the materials contribute to this end, however, situational factors appear to be of considerable importance. The material is presented interestingly and is accompanied by a good bibliography." F. M. Zorbaugh
+ — Am J Soc 36:339 S '30 220w
Booklist 26:380 Jl '30
J Home Econ 22:597 Jl '30 80w

"Mr. Furfey is deeply absorbed in his subject and has not much bothered as to whether or not readers will understand him. He is not writing for the purpose of popularizing knowledge but to let fellow-workers in this science know what he has been doing during the four years he has been studying the growing boy, and the conclusions to which he has come. Nevertheless, parents and teachers who have a fairly good grounding in this department of psychological science will find his book of much practical value."
+ N Y Times p5 Ap 27 '30 300w

"Here is valuable information for parents and teachers but presented in the formal manner of a laboratory report it is likely to alarm the general reader." F. G. Seabury
+ Outlook 154:710 Ap 30 '30 50w
St Louis 28:202 S '30

"Solid, informational, a bit didactic, not exciting, somewhat overestimating the value of findings obtained by measurements and case studies. It tells little that is new, but provides a handy record of what happens between the fateful ages of six and sixteen, and how modern psychology plots the course and interprets the process."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:974 Ap 19 '30 80w

FYFE, HENRY HAMILTON. Northcliffe, an intimate biography. 357p il $4 Macmillan [16s Allen, G.]

B or 92 Northcliffe, Alfred Charles William Harmsworth, 1st viscount 30-27698

Writing as a devotee and, for many years, intimate associate of the great English journalist, Hamilton Fyfe gives not only an interesting portrayal of Northcliffe's dynamic personality, but shows also the effect his powerful Fleet Street influence had upon British policies during the war. Northcliffe's mistakes and personal eccentricities in the years following the war are explained by the biographer as the result of loss of balance because of a mind affected by disease.

Booklist 27:155 D '30
Bookm 72:320 N '30 400w

"Fyfe has written a book that makes fascinating reading. He has drawn what most persons who knew him will regard as a remarkably true picture of the Northcliffe who was a genius in appealing to the reading public through the columns of newspapers and magazines, and of Northcliffe, the man, who was finally convinced that he was capable of sitting in the War Council and in the peace delegation at Paris." A. S. Draper
+ Books p1 O 12 '30 1150w

"The book is by far the best biography of Northcliffe which has yet been written, though it would have been a still more useful one if the author had conceived his rôle much less as a defender of his subject's character and more as an exposition of the source of its power."
+ — Nation and Ath 47:503 Jl 19 '30 1550w

Reviewed by Silas Bent
New Repub 64:328 N 5 '30 1300w

"A tribute is due to Mr. Hamilton Fyfe's work. Not only, of course, is he a vivid writer and experienced craftsman, but he knew Lord

FYFE, H. H.—Continued
Northcliffe for a score of years, both as a prominent member of his writing staff and as a personal and much-valued friend. He has here made a heroic effort to show within moderate compass the many moods and facets of a puzzling, scintillating, chameleon-like character. It is a friend's biography, frankly affectionate and admiring, but as such a very valuable document. As no official biography exists, it may very well hold the field for a considerable time. But naturally one cannot ask from it the quality of a critical appraisement. The atmosphere is rose-coloured. Bad traits are not given much prominence." R. C. K. Ensor

+ New Statesman 35:370 Je 28 '30 1800w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p5 O 26 '30 1050w

"This is truly an 'intimate' biography. No other book about Northcliffe begins to equal it in giving all sides of the extraordinary man. And as sheer entertainment it is notable." R. D. T.

+ Outlook 156:268 O 15 '30 230w
St Louis 28:301 D '30
Sat R 149:810 Je 28 '30 1650w

"The volume will be deservedly popular not only among journalists but in the wider circle of those who like biography told in up-to-date fashion with plenty of anecdotes and much sprightly narrative. It will serve, too, for considerable basic material when some future author is inspired to analyze the creative power and unique journalistic sense of originality which Northcliffe displayed up to the time he took to diplomacy and politics and waded beyond his depth." J. W. T. Mason

+ Sat R of Lit 7:383 N 29 '30 2000w

"As a picture of Northcliffe the consummate popular journalist, the creator of a great newspaper concern; of the kind of things he did and the way he did them; of Northcliffe the man, the genius, the magnetic friend and inspiring chief, the book could not be improved upon. Perhaps when it comes to weighing up Northcliffe as part of the social force of his generation his influence upon the public mind and temper and character of his countrymen, Mr. Fyfe may have allowed the many years of work together, of comradeship and affection, to stand in the way of certain condemnations, which in the public interest should be pronounced."

+ — Spec 144:1058 Je 28 '30 1300w

"A workmanlike and reasonably objective account of the British newspaper magnate's career. Though the reader may question occasional judgments and bits of color he will hardly question the authenticity of the portrayal."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 1600w

"The book is long-winded and repetitive; and so much of it is written in the present tense that this affectation of a graphic manner becomes very tiresome. This would matter less if the author had added considerably to accurate knowledge of the facts or had presented a juster and more balanced portrait of his subject. But he has made very much too much of Lord Northcliffe's importance and merits as a statesman during the War, and very much too little of his real achievement, which was journalistic."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 17 '30 200w

FYFE, HENRY HAMILTON. Sir Arthur Pinero's plays and players. 311p pl $5 Macmillan [15s Benn]

B or 92 Pinero, Sir Arthur Wing. Actors and actresses [30-28111]

A study of Sir Arthur Pinero's early stage career, his beginnings as a dramatist, his theories of drama, his great and most successful plays, and some of the actors and actresses who helped make them famous.

Booklist 27:155 D '30

"Undoubtedly sooner or later somebody will write a book about Pinero or, better, about his plays, with due critical and historic perspective. But Mr. Fyfe hasn't quite done it. One gathers the impression that he knows Sir Arthur personally, admires him greatly, was once deeply stirred by 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray' and the rest when they were first produced and doesn't quite know how to get out of his predicament—the predicament of having ceased to admire, in one's heart of hearts, things so long held admirable." W. P. Eaton

— Books p20 O 5 '30 300w

Reviewed by Mark Segal
Nation and Ath 47:324 Je 7 '30 30w
New Statesman 35:185 My 17 '30 350w

"The method of Mr. Fyfe's approach to his subject is admirable. . . The book is full of matter; one of the best of its kind ever written."

+ Sat R 150:22 Jl 5 '30 700w

"The Pinero Plays are here analysed with such skill as to bring them back not only to the minds but one might almost say to the eyes and ears of those who saw them."

+ Spec 144:867 My 24 '30 200w

"The more curious and intelligent among the youngsters may like to hear what a Victorian critic has to say about this formerly very popular and much respected dramatists; and his period, his cast of mind, and his independence of judgment make Mr. Hamilton Fyfe the very man for the task of showing them what Pinero meant to the critical intelligence of his day."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p411 My 15 '30 900w

FYLEMAN, ROSE. Gay go up. 106p il $1.50 Doubleday, Doran [5s Methuen]

811 30-24243

Poems about Jessica's experiences in London and in America, with one section on adventures thru the year month by month.

Reviewed by Rachel Field
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

"Miss Fyleman, wherever she is, has the gift of seeing with a child's eyes. . . A child in any country will enjoy these poems because of their genuinely childlike quality." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 180w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p3e N 23 '30 50w

Reviewed by H. E. Davis
Sat R of Lit 7:207 O 11 '30 220w

FYLEMAN, ROSE. Tea time tales. 246p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-7798

Stories of fairies, elves, goblins and just ordinary people told for children. Each story is prefixed by a poem giving the import of the tale.

Booklist 26:401 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ap 19 '30 60w
Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Je '30

"While Miss Fyleman's most distinguished work is to be found in her verse, she has, in 'Tea Time Tales,' contributed another volume of stories for the ten-year-old which a nimble fancy and a knowledge of what appeals to a child's sense of humor make very pleasant reading." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 120w

"They are just what the title of the book says, gossamer tales spun upon slender threads to tell at the twilight hour when tea, mostly cambric, we hope, is sipped in the nursery. Each story is introduced by a poem, done with the author's light touch. On the whole, however, Miss Fyleman is a much better poet than a prose writer, although these are attractive tales. The jacket and end sheets by Miss Berry are a delight, and there are gay line drawings throughout at just the right places." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 220w

Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 20w

"Miss Fyleman has a perfect instinct for just this kind of tale; the ready invention, the whimsical turn and—most indispensable—the logic that makes the story inevitable. Whether she writes about cats, kings, or saucepans, you feel the authoritative touch; the story really did happen, and it happened just like that. The twenty brief tales in this volume are of the kind that small children will most appreciate, and they would be especially good for reading aloud. The length is just right, and their style lends itself so easily to dramatization that even in the hands of an unskilled story reader they could not fail in effect." Margery Bianco

+ Sat R of Lit 6:962 Ap 19 '30 200w

G

GABLE, J. HARRIS. Boys' book of exploration; stories of the exploration of the world. 435p il $3.50 Dutton

910.9 Discoveries (in geography)—Juvenile literature 30-11034

True stories of explorations by land, sea and air which have been made over the entire world, dating from before the Christian era to the present day. Written for boys and girls.

Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 420w

"It is concisely written rather than exhaustive in treatment, and will appeal to the boy who is seeking definite information rather than a story. It is well arranged for reference use." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 My 31 '30 80w

"Unless extraordinarily well done, which this one is not, a book with such a scope reads like a not very interesting encyclopedia. This will be a convenient source for up-to-date reference material, but for style and interest it is not to be compared with Synge's 'Book of Discovery' which covers much of the same ground."

— + N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 170w

GABORY, EMILE. Alias Bluebeard; the life and death of Gilles de Raiz; Eng. version by Alvah C. Bessie. 315p il $3 Brewer

B or 92 Rais, Gilles de Laval, seigneur de 30-13366

An account of the life and death of Gilles de Raiz, marshal of France, convicted of having killed more than two hundred children. The early part of the biography shows de Raiz, as scholar and soldier, in the brilliance of his youth, up to his subjection to evil example and advice. There follows the history of the reversal of his fortunes and his interests in diabolical sciences. Steeped, finally, in mysticism and corruption, Gilles de Raiz became an artist both cruel and perverted. The account ends with his trial and execution.

"When he traces the career of De Raiz as a soldier under Joan of Arc and as a post-war spendthrift he does it well and with decided élan, but when pathology becomes manifest he is too shocked to be either scientific or sensational."

— + Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 100w

"M. Gabory is a professional scholar—a state archiviste; he tells this weird romance with scrupulous soberness and yet with great dramatic skill. He gives us a convincing treatment of a theme which might easily have been botched by a cheap imitator of Wilde or d'Annunzio. The translation, by Alvah C. Bessie, is excellent—with a handful of involuntary jeux de mots."

+ Books p7 Jl 6 '30 450w

"This book is the only authentic biography of Gilles de Raiz, one-time marshal of France. . . M. Gabory makes him a vivid and startling figure as he describes the horrors of his career."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 250w

Reviewed by Cuthbert Wright

New Repub 65:52 N 26 '30 1150w

N Y Times p10 S 14 '30 250w

"Alias Bluebeard is painstakingly written, but, either because of the subject or the author, it is not very good reading and one concludes it with the feeling that, except for his interest to students of abnormal psychology, Bluebeard is much better off in the story books." F. L. R.

— Outlook 155:67 My 14 '30 250w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 1150w

GABRIEL, RALPH HENRY. Lure of the frontier; a story of race conflict. (Pageant of America, v 2) Liberty bell ed 327p il subs only Yale univ. press

973 Frontier and pioneer life. Indians of North America. United States—Territorial expansion 29-22308

This volume in the Pageant of America series "begins with Abraham Wood's exploration of the Blue Ridge country in 1750, and ends with the present-day frontier of Alaska. The author had to treat in succession the penetration and conquest of the Cherokee country, the Ohio Valley, the Northwest, the Southwest, the Mississippi Valley, the Missouri Valley, the Oregon Valley, the Great Basin, and all the rest." (Sat R of Lit)

Reviewed by M. W. Jernegan

Am Hist R 35:879 Jl '30 480w

Booklist 26:197 F '30

"The history of the frontier has been written in a whole library of works. Mr. Gabriel's service has been to bring an excellent selection from this wealth of illustrative material within one book. The author has quite frankly touched only the high spots, and he has been quite frank also in borrowing largely from other writers—not always the latest or best. There are a number of inaccuracies and at numerous points he writes like an amateur; while his proportion is very faulty. But he has chosen his pictures with excellent judgment, and they constitute an array of exceptional interest." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1011 My 3 '30 550w

"This dramatic story is well told and vividly illustrated." W. B. Munro

+ Yale R n s 19:639 spring '30 200w

GADD, CYRIL JOHN. History and monuments of Ur. 269p il $6 Dutton [15s Chatto]

935.4 Ur. Babylonia—Antiquities 29-23759

A summary of the history of the city of Ur of the Chaldees, the traditional birthplace of Abraham, as deduced from the recent archeological discoveries. The author is a member of the department of Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities of the British museum. The book should be of interest to both the student and the general reader.

"Gadd has given us a straightforward chronicle, with a certain amount of attention to the local culture. He carefully avoids most of the disputed questions of general history, and confides himself rather to a bare statement of known facts. As a result, he adds but little to what has already been published elsewhere." A. T. Olmstead

Am Hist R 35:649 Ap '30 550w

Booklist 26:154 Ja '30

GADD, C. J.—Continued
Reviewed by Ruth Benedict
Books p10 F 16 '30 400w

"A history that, in spite of the inevitable gaps and the meagerness of personal detail, is a model of lucidity, thoroughness and judicious caution. In fact, some readers probably will wish that, in places, the author had been less cautious and had boldly made his choice among the various possibilities which he presents to the reader without committing himself to any one of them; others, however, will be grateful to Mr. Gadd for offering them crumbs of actual history rather than the opulent viands of fiction." R. H. Pfieffer
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 400w

"Dr. Gadd adds to his scholarship so fine a writing gift that his book becomes at once one of the outstanding volumes on Mesopotamian history and civilization."
+ Nation 131:133 Jl 30 '30 180w

"Mr. Gadd does not anticipate Mr. Woolley's account of his discoveries at Ur, but he does successfully reconstruct the political and social history of the city and present it to us as a human story. One finds, for instance, conditions which seem ultra-modern. . . Social usage is revealed to us, in such studies as these, deep-rooted in the past, the product of innumerable cross-currents of influence, some psychological, some zoological, others geographical, climatic, or incidental to complex cultural contacts. An hour of Mr. Gadd discoursing of Ur and its fascinating social and political life is worth several of Freud in estimating the mainsprings of human conduct."
+ New Statesman 36:748 S 28 '29 880w

Reviewed by L. M. Field
N Y Times p10 O 6 '29 1200w

"But for [some] reservations, the book is very readable and graphic." H. J. Massingham
+ — Sat R 148:218 Ag 24 '29 850w

"Mr. Gadd writes well and vividly from personal knowledge of the diggings that have revealed this remarkable chapter of history."
+ Spec 143:161 Ag 3 '29 150w

GALE, ZONA (MRS W. L. BREESE). Bridal pond. 261p $2.50 Knopf

30-27093

Small happenings in the lives of the inhabitants of some very small Wisconsin towns serve as subjects for most of these short stories. Contents: The two carpenters; The need; Brendy; Tattie; Tobacco shop; Wisconsin notebook; Jailbird; White bread; The cobweb; The procession; Bridal pond; Springtime; The dime.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"The title story was included in the O. Henry Memorial collection for 1928. Though some of the other stories apparently come from an earlier period, all of them are the work of a practised, if not altogether conscientious hand. The dénouements are about evenly divided between those which are sentimentally ironic and those which are simply sentimental. One could wish that Miss Gale, who still lives in Wisconsin and whose attitude on the whole is so attractive, had remained a provincial in soul as well as in body; that she had not permitted her taste to be compromised by the dubious standards of the metropolis—particularly by those of the women's magazines." Gerald Sykes
+ — Bookm 72:303 N '30 280w

"'Bridal Pond' gives us Miss Gale of the years between 1913 and 1930, with her sympathy for the oppressed and inarticulate, already so familiar to her readers; with her perception of the ironic in events; with her strain of mysticism, and her growing interest in metaphysics, in abnormal minds, and in minds under the pressure of abnormal circumstances." Garreta Busey
+ Books p6 N 9 '30 550w

"Miss Gale knows how to write short stories, but she evidently does not know how to arrange them. In the present volume the weakest, the most conventional, the least interesting stories are placed first, and only a pertinacious reviewer gets through them to the meat and bread that are honestly there."
+ — Nation 131:588 N 26 '30 220w

"In 'Bridal Pond' Zona Gale is definitely the mature creator, the concise dramatist of fiction, certain of her material and of its human worth." John Chamberlain
+ New Repub 65:225 Ja 7 '31 180w

"The title piece, admirably as it is executed, is the least compelling tale in the volume. But Miss Gale's method of simplicity, saying what she has to say without underlining, without apparent exertion, and as is to be expected, in fine, deft prose, makes all that she writes worthwhile. It surmounts even the book's one fault—a tendency to stretch the long arm of coincidence to disproportionate lengths. On the other hand, this elastic use of coincidence heightens the suspense and points the denouement of many of the stories. They form, at any rate, an interesting, sensitive and valuable book." Arline Cone
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 500w

"It is the author's perfect technique and penetrating vision which makes such tales significant of much more than personal sorrow or pathos. . . These short tales have all the power, all the incisive revelation and tenderness of Miss Gale's longer novels. They are smaller canvases, to be sure, but every detail, every line is right. They become, therefore, small masterpieces of character-portrayal and narrative." E. L. Walton
+ N Y Times p8 N 9 '30 550w

"Miss Gale has a way of delving into the soul of a simple character and depicting its anguish or conflict to which, because of Miss Gale's restrained, unadorned, yet vital treatment, we must respond. With no apparent effort, Miss Gale draws upon our sympathies until we feel ourselves a part of the mute dramas she unfolds. Miss Gale's characters, like the vast number of their prototypes, are, to the casual eye, drab. But after she has explored their innermost depths, we realize that little tragedies may well be enacted in their hearts also." Maxim Lieber
+ N Y World p3e N 23 '30 320w

GALITZI, CHRISTINE AVGHI. Study of assimilation among the Roumanians in the United States. (Studies in hist., economics, and public law) 282p $4 Columbia univ. press

325.73 Rumanians in the United States. Immigration 30-4119

The immigrations of Rumanians to the United States and the problems pertaining to their assimilation are studied in this sociological record. The author, a native Rumanian, includes descriptive studies of segregated groups in the larger American cities.

"This careful study is a contribution to our slight knowledge about the Roumanians in the United States. The author was born in Roumania and is familiar with both the language and the various cultural backgrounds of Roumanian immigrants. She also shows herself proficient in writing the English language." E. V. Stonequist
+ Am J Soc 36:155 Jl '30 450w

"The author has built up her conclusions by careful use of documentary material and first-hand investigation. . . This work will take its place among the detailed inductive studies out of which a science of migration will eventually emerge." H. P. Fairchild
+ Ann Am Acad 149:218 My '30 400w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. On Forsyte 'change. 285p $2.50 Scribner

30-27763

Nineteen short stories each one of which relates in some manner to the Forsyte family. Contents: The Buckles of Superior Dosset, 1821-1863; Sands of time, 1821-1863; Hester's little tour, 1845; Timothy's narrow squeak, 1851;

Aunt Juley's courtship, 1855; Nicholas-Rex, 1864; A sad affair, 1867; Revolt at Roger's, 1870; June's first lame duck, 1876; Dog at Timothy's, 1878; Midsummer madness, 1880; The hondekoeter, 1880; Cry of peacock, 1883; Francie's fourpenny foreigner, 1888; Four-in-hand Forsyte, 1890; The sorrows of Tweetyman, 1895; The dromios, 1900; A Forsyte encounters the people, 1917; Soames and the flag, 1914-1918.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic Bookshelf p52 D '30 80w

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

Bookm 72:310 N '30 280w

"If the figures seem ghostly, if they have only appeared for a moment to add a word for themselves before they vanish into the limbo of dead Victorians, if you feel that somehow they have suspired from their tombs, they are none the less friendly, familiar and touching. Even as spectres they retain that substantial individuality that they had in flesh and blood. Mr. Galsworthy draws from a well of restraint the sifted, filtered essence of life. It does not so much pour out over his pages as it trickles. But whether or no the stream flows thin, it has a crystal lucidity." V. P. Ross
+ — Books p5 O 12 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 N 22 '30 220w

"They are written with the same beautiful and meticulous care that Mr. Galsworthy gives to his novels—more than he has given to some. In a word, they are as fine work as their author is capable of." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 1 '30 120w

Reviewed by R. A. Scott-James
Christian Science Monitor p9 N 15 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"In this latest volume it is Soames again who stands out most authentically. . . The depth of this particular picture of a man makes Mr. Galsworthy a considerable novelist, and the background of family chronicle with which the portrait is embellished makes him even greater." Dorothy Van Doren
+ Nation 131:447 O 22 '30 350w

"Here is a set of stories, all skilful, some lovely, some merely intelligent, about many Forsytes. They are to the Saga what the Homeric hymns are to the epics—only Homer is better in his epics, while his smaller scale is more suitable to the genius of Mr. Galsworthy."
+ New Statesman 36:208 N 22 '30 180w

Reviewed by Leslie Ault
N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 480w

"No doubt there are persons who have never heard of the Forsytes, but with these the present writer refuses to converse. He merely informs them that in 'On Forsyte 'Change' they will find a collection of some of the very best short stories they have encountered in recent years, varied of mood and perfect in execution. And that they had best, after reading them, familiarize themselves with the book's background, namely, the history of the Forsytes, as contained in 'The Forsyte Saga' and 'A Modern Comedy.' . . To the readers of the 'Saga' and the 'Comedy' they who people the pages have ever been as real as for their creator. It is pleasure unalloyed whenever they walk." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p1 O 12 '30 650w

"Your enjoyment of these tales will depend on your saturation in the Forsyte legend. It is conceivable that, if printed alone, without any dependence on the Forsyte cycle, some of them would seem to be very pale and ineffective sketches. But as sidelights on the characters and experiences of men and women related in one extraordinary family they have a different function. They help elaborate the picture." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 O 6 '30 500w

Outlook 156:348 O 29 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

Sat R 150:453 O 11 '30 200w

"Entirely apart from their relation to the earlier Forsyte books these tales are well worth knowing. They are not mere chips from a novelist's workshop, or, as Mr. Galsworthy modestly calls them, footnotes to the 'Saga.' Many of them, such as the one last mentioned ('Timothy's Narrow Squeak'), are capital stories which would be almost equally interesting if they had nothing to do with the Forsytes." H. E. Woodbridge
+ Sat R of Lit 7:285 N 1 '30 900w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Spec 145:554 O 18 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p804 O 9 '30 850w

GALZY, JEANNE. Burnt offering; introd. and tr. by Jacques Le Clercq. 265p $2.50 Brentano's
30-25385

"This novel has a theme of universal applicability, that of the frustrated mother-love of school teachers. In a little town in Picardy, Marie Pascal is teacher in a convent school. Her love of children reaches its climax in her adoration of Annette, a little girl not too happy at home whom Marie alone can nurse through a desperate illness. This frustrated love, like all others, demands its sacrifice. Marie Pascal must give it up and go to another school to save the child from the effects of the mother's jealousy."—Outlook

"The child's illness, which structurally and spiritually forms the climax of the action, is too tritely facile to be moving. Moreover 'the French countryside', which becomes increasingly indispensable in French novels of late, is sketched with an economy of line comparable to 'that of a blank sheet of paper'. Jacques le Clerq's translation, as always, maintains the requisite quality of complete smoothness." Justin O'Brien
— + Bookm 72:418 D '30 280w

"'Burnt Offering' is a book of delicate horror and perverse beauty: the odor of tuberoses, fascinating and unwholesome, seems to hover over it. Only the modern French, both in their literature and in their drawings, have this strange talent for presenting grotesquely shocking matter with dispassionate lucidity. In between the patches of emotional intensity are great areas of wisdom about children and teachers, the quiet cycle of the year in the schoolroom. And there is one stretch of forty pages of almost clinical literalness in Annette's sickroom which is unmitigated pain to any one who has ever watched a loved child die. The translation by Jacques le Clercq, who was chairman of the committee which awarded the Prix Brentano to Madame Galzy's novel, is perfection—or almost." F. H. Britten
+ Books p16 N 16 '30 750w

"A delicate, mature, perceptive, and spiritual story."
+ Nation 131:655 D 10 '30 150w

New Repub 65:200 D 31 '30 150w

"Mme. Galzy's method of handling the theme of frustrated love resembles that of Radclyffe Hall. . . It must be admitted that she has told her pathetic little story with no small show of dignity and formal restraint." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p5d O 18 '30 280w

"The quiet style, deftly presented child-characters and background of French village life contribute to the charm of a story as simple and touching as a lullaby." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 156:387 N 5 '30 150w

GAMIO, MANUEL. Mexican immigration to the United States; a study of human migration and adjustment. 262p $3 Univ. of Chicago press [13s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

325.272 Mexicans in the United States. Immigration
30-15640

"Based on careful research and observation this volume presents a diversity of information on the Mexican immigrant. His cultural background, his religion, his manner of living are described and contrasted under Mexican and American conditions. His social and economic position in the United States is analyzed with considerable fullness. The author feels that transient immigration is of value to both countries . . . He concludes that through the cooperation of official, scientific and social groups all possible measures should be taken to restrict permanent, and to encourage transient migration."—Current Hist

GAMIO, MANUEL—Continued

---

Reviewed by M. S. Handman
Am J Soc 36:485 N '30 650w

Booklist 27:12 S '30

Current Hist 32:1032 Ag '30 160w

"Señor Gamio has had a thorough sociological education, has been sub-secretary of education in Mexico and holds high office in the Mexican Government. He speaks with authority, and his book should help to attract attention in this country to an important but neglected problem."
+ Foreign Affairs 9:165 O '30 150w

"An authoritative survey of this vital question. Dr. Gamio is to be congratulated upon the thoroughness with which he and his associates have worked the statistical material, some of which he has since published separately in Mexico. With such an admirable study before us we shall expectantly await the companion volume." M. W. Hamilton
+ Hist Outlook 21:294 O '30 550w

"Dr. Gamio has demonstrated how fascinating and freighted with human interest a presumably dry subject may be made. Fortunately also an ethnologist, he has illumined his treatise on Mexican immigration to the United States with the full implication of chronological and racial disparities." Ernest Gruening
+ Nation 131:418 O 15 '30 250w

"Mexican immigration has assumed such proportions in recent years that it has attracted the anxious attention of both governments and aroused the opposition of labor in this country. Mr. Gamio's account of the results of the year's investigation he has given under the auspices of the Social Science Research Council comes therefore at a timely moment and carries the importance which, in addition to its able character, the need for it gives. . . Although considerably handicapped by the difficulty, sometimes the impossibility, of getting in Mexico much of the material he desired, he has made a strikingly broad and inclusive investigation that throws light on many phases of the immigration not usually considered in such researches. His report is a very human document."
+ N Y Times p14 Je 1 '30 400w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

GANDHI, MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND. Mahatma Gandhi: his own story; ed. by C. F. Andrews; with an introd. by John Haynes Holmes. 372p $2.50 Macmillian
B or 92 30-25632

In this autobiography, edited by C. F. Andrews, Mahatma Gandhi tells the story of his struggle to overcome the physical and material desires which are, he believes, at the root of the world's suffering. He further outlines the essentials of his philosophy, his doctrine of the spirit of truth, and his firm belief that religion must be a social and political force.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"One must say a word for the unobtrusive, yet skillful manner in which Mr. Andrews has abridged for western readers the text of Gandhi's own much longer original, and another word for the eloquent appreciation of Gandhi by the Reverend John Haynes Holmes in his introduction." W. N. Brown
+ Books p5 S 28 '30 1900w

"Here is an autobiography more captivating than fiction and more stimulating than romantic adventure. It is the most revealing study of the human soul that I have ever read. Stark realism and strict honesty face you on every page. . . Only a man who is truly great and who is inwardly sure of his position and his principles in life could have written a book like this." F. B. Fisher
+ Christian Century 47:1345 N 5 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Edward Thompson
Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

"The world is indebted to Gandhi for His Own Story. It will be a source-book for every type of student. It discloses how deeply he is indebted to the civilization he censures. His thinking and his social and religious ideals are the offspring of English culture and literature. Without English contacts there would have been no Gandhi such as this autobiography reveals. And without Gandhi with his acquired non-Indian ideals England would not now be confronted with the most perplexing problem of its history. To know present-day England in India, one must know Gandhi; to know Gandhi one must know English culture in India." M. G. Evans
+ Crozer Q 8:107 Ja '31 380w

"The story is too utterly naked, too artless. I think it must be the most honest autobiography ever written! For Gandhi does not try to burnish the halo with which others have endowed him. He drags the reader with him through all his 'experiments,' painful and otherwise, much as a scientist might make a demonstration before a class. He leaves no mistake unmentioned, glosses over no detail of his life that had personal significance to him in his struggle to go forward on the path toward the goal." Gertrude Emerson
+ Nation 131:619 D 3 '30 280w

Nation and Ath 48:167 N 1 '30 200w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

"Gandhi sets himself against all the sages by asserting that the letter is just as important as the spirit. Who can wonder that the task of negotiating with such a leader is too much for any Viceroy? There is, nevertheless, no need to say that the Mahatma's Own Story is an absorbing book to read. It stands alone in frankness and plain honesty. It reveals a being of profound humanity and of irresistible charm. Its place among the classics of autobiography cannot be in doubt."
+ New Statesman 36:24 O 11 '30 950w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 S 25 '30 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 N '30 230w

"The claims put forward for him by his friends—the claims in which he acquiesces—are such as to make all who are not wholly for him reluctantly turn wholly against him and indulge in wholly destructive criticism of the halo which he has set about him. . . His character throughout is vitiated by four cardinal defects: an utter inability to rest in any but an extreme position; a complete failure even to realize the inadequacy of the evidence on which he has taken it; a fanaticism which drives him to accept all the logical conclusions of his extremist views; and finally a perverse pride which enables him to view the whole with a benign complacence." Quintin Hogg
— Sat R 150:410 O 4 '30 1150w

"The original book, like so much else that Gandhi has done, is a monument of fine and sincere work and of true craftsmanship, with its binding of khaddar (homespun), and its freedom from all typographical errors. It has, too, an index which the American edition lacks; and these things are significant, for they mean that the Orient is beating us at our own game, as well as offering us a new ethic, a new spiritual ideal, and a very practical moral equivalent for war. C. F. Andrews has done the work of abridgment and editing admirably; perhaps no one else could have done it so well; and the book should have a very eager reception. It contains just what the West needs to understand this grand figure." Kenneth Saunders

+ Sat R of Lit 7:173 O 4 '30 2350w

Spec 145:sup453 O 4 '30 900w

GARBORG, ARNE. Peace; tr. from the Norwegian by Phillips Dean Carleton. (Scandinavian classics) 279p $2.50 Am.-Scandinavian foundation; Norton [7s 6d Allen, G.]

29-28182

A story of Norwegian peasant life in which the main character, Enok Haave, is tortured by a burden of religious obligation. He succumbs gradually to religious mania in his endeavor to put everything worldly from him: wife, children and land. In this ceaseless conflict between flesh and spirit he finds no release except in death, the only peace.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. L. Basinger

Books p5 D 15 '29 850w

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books p10 Ap 27 '30 750w

"Those who love the sombre but psychologically enriching realism of Scandinavian literature may legitimately regret the selection for American consumption of so stark and grim a study of the bleakest aspect of Norwegian background and the Norwegian peasant soul. Called 'the parent of the peasant novel' by a competent critic, this work is nakedly, almost repellently, realistic and lacks entirely a sense of higher spiritual values." Francis Snow

— Current Hist 31:1046 Mr '30 180w

"Perhaps in no other novel in literature has the phenomenon of religious monomania that shrivels and poisons everything it touches been described so pitilessly yet understandingly. From the sordidness of the crouching and canting peasant life and the unrelieved bleakness of the moors and rocks of southwest Norway—both his own childhood environment—the great Norwegian novelist has wrung beauty and majesty as background for the tragedy of the fanatical peasant Enok."

+ Nation 131:229 Ag 27 '30 100w

"The pictures of country life are as clear as the reflection in the fjords, and as remotely peaceful as the mountains. The simplicity of the writing is that of a poet; each word is fraught with its own distinct meaning, and not overburdened. Despite the tragedy, the reader is aware of peace, even though he knows not whence it comes." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:477 Jl 12 '30 100w

New Statesman 35:247 My 31 '30 40w

"As a study in gradual disintegration under the force of continuing fear, in this instance, a person's fear that he is not living up to the precepts of his God, 'Peace' is a powerful document. . . In selecting 'Peace' for English rendering, the American-Scandinavian Foundation has, without doubt, chosen an outstanding work in Norwegian fiction. But the conviction grows, as one reads, that the Foundation has better served the student of comparative literature than the American reading public. Garborg is proved an indefatigable observer, a sharp analyzer, an effective delineator, an uncompromising literary worker. But the casual reader coming upon 'Peace' would more than likely be repelled by so intensive a pursuit of an obsession." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p8 D 29 '29 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

"Lacking expert testimony, it is difficult to judge just what influence this classic may still have in its native land, but it seems certain that in its time 'Peace' ranked as one of the most important books in the language. The impression of the book as a whole is apt to be lasting, since the case of a good man driving himself and his family to sheer insanity because of an overacute consciousness of sin is sufficiently universal, particularly under pioneer conditions, to interest any reader. While Garborg's work seems valuable to us largely because of his influence on other writers of peasant novels in Norwegian, a translation of his best known book is also welcome for itself, as a well built narrative typical of its period and place of birth."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:880 Mr 29 '30 350w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p603 Jl 24 '30 400w

GARCON, MAURICE, and VINCHON, JEAN. The devil; tr. by Stephen Haden Guest from the 6th French edition. 288p $3.50 Dutton [12s 6d Gollancz]

235 Devil 30-8278

The evolution of Satan is the subject of this historical, critical and medical study of man's symbolical conception of evil. The authors trace the career of the Christian devil, the manifestations of the devil in the work of sorcerers and witches, and other diabolical superstitions. In Part II they discuss demoniac delusions in the light of modern science.

Bookm 72:xii N '30 50w

"Exceptionally good. The work is unique in citing observations of clinical cases of demoniacal madness that have come under the notice of the joint authors." Woodbridge Riley

+ Books p2 Ap 6 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 550w

"In the second half of this provocative and fascinating book M. Vinchon surveys the various kinds of modern 'demonic' neuroses which account for many nervous and sexual disorders, and which help to fill our lunatic asylums." Gilbert Thomas

+ Nation and Ath 46:146 O 26 '29 350w

Reviewed by Cuthbert Wright

New Repub 63:212 Jl 9 '30 350w

New Statesman 34:130 N 2 '29 700w

"Well done, well documented and extremely interesting account of human credulity and its horrible results." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p10 Mr 2 '30 480w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p16 F 13 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

"In a series of brilliant essays abounding in observation and erudition, the authors have set out to determine the nature and the status of the devil from a historical and medical point of view, both in our time and in the past. Although their approach is primarily a scientific one, the book is not beyond the enjoyment of any reader who finds pleasure in concise original deduction and lucid exposition. Their neat distinctions between religion and magic and between collective and individual delusions are particularly valuable." Ramon Guthrie

+ Sat R of Lit 6:941 Ap 19 '30 700w

"The book represents a more or less theoretical attitude, and reflects the belief of the authors in the existence of unexplainable forces capable of upsetting the physical and mental well-being of the sensitive individual. Morbid mental delusions are treated at depressing length. The material has historic interest but adds little to modern psychiatry, or psychotherapy."

— Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 20 '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1078 D 19 '29 550w

GARDINER, ALEXANDER. Canfield; the true story of the greatest gambler. 350p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Canfield, Richard Albert. Gambling

30-7290

The life story of Richard A. Canfield, whose name is known by a game he never played and who became one of the most noted gamblers of the nineties. The biography, as a character study, is particularly interesting because of the curious mixture of the Puritan, devil-may-care debauchee, philosopher, swindler, poet and shrewd business man that were components of his personality. In sketching Canfield's background and his amazing career as a gambler, the author also paints an authentic picture of New York City's underworld life in the gay nineties.

GARDINER, ALEXANDER—Continued

"Mr. Gardiner resuscitates those gaudy days with great skill and his hero is sympathetically drawn as a financier, host and art collector. The book is crowded with notorious names and quaint scandals."

+ Bookm 72:vii S '30 80w

Books p15 Mr 30 '30 350w

"In his zealous searching for the facts of this unusual life he overlooks nothing and conceals nothing. The book is a veritable history of gambling and gaming houses in America. In the pen-pictures cleverly drawn by the author of the various periods in the lifetime of his subject, the story of gaming and the celebrated proprietors of the resorts continually forms a sordid though fascinating background." W. M. Emery

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '30 1500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 Jl '30

New Repub 62:279 Ap 23 '30 250w

"Mr. Gardiner's story of Canfield is loosely strung and without vigor. Canfield himself is frequently lost in the smother of facts about other gamblers, in the din of the reform movements of Dr. Parkhurst, Anthony Comstock and others. He never seems quite alive, moving only when Mr. Gardiner prods him. It is rather a pity, too, for Canfield offers splendid material for a biographer of talent." John Ferris

— N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 8 '30 900w

N Y Times p7 Mr 9 '30 750w

"Mr. Gardiner's book on Canfield is careful and thorough, and it need not be said that so far as its materials extend it is interesting; but on the whole it is a disappointment. The reason is that all that is significant or notable in Canfield's career could easily be condensed into two fairly long magazine articles, and the man and his activities hardly justify a 337-page book."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:852 Mr 22 '30 460w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 9 '30 650w

GARDINER, MRS D. F. Beguiling shore. 339p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

Charles Conway, a clergyman's son, drops the university career his father has chosen for him to become a famous artist. Anne, the girl he loves, studies music in preparation for the concert stage. The World war and misunderstanding between them result in Anne's marriage to a country gentleman whose tastes and temperament are alien to hers. The adjustment of difficulties involved in the solution of the love triangle occupies the main part of the story.

Books p10 Ag 3 '30 150w

"To keep in a novel the same suspense without intensity, the clear hopefulness without ecstasy or tragedy which we know to be actually true of life, is quite a test of a writer's ability. Most novelists resort, in order to hold the reader's interest, to violent or striking situation and plot. Not so Mrs. Gardiner—her subjects are restrained and comfortable English people, she expects these people to interest us, and, strangely enough, they do."

+ N Y Times p9 My 4 '30 350w

"The story is well written, the characters are real, but the whole drags badly. Every embryonic emotional crisis miscarries and nothing fructifies in these low temperatures of the spirit."

— + Spec 144:582 Ap 5 '30 120w

GARDINER, EDWARD NORMAN. Athletics of the ancient world. 246p il $12 (28s) Oxford

913.38 Athletics—History. Sports—Greece. Greece—Social life and customs 30-32919

"This interesting presentation of the story of athletics among ancient peoples is based on Mr. Gardiner's book, 'Greek Athletic Sports and Festivals,' published twenty years ago and now out of print. But Dr. Gardiner has wholly rewritten it, simplified the text to give it a wider appeal and omitted all material of a purely historical or archaeological interest, while much new matter has been introduced, including a chapter on ball play. The author takes a preliminary glance at the sports of olden Egypt, China and Japan, but devotes nearly all his attention to athletics in ancient Greece and Rome."—N Y Times

Books p11 D 28 '30 100w

N Y Times p25 N 23 '30 220w

"In scope this book is wider and in treatment simpler and briefer than the earlier work; and, as most detail of merely archaeological value has been omitted, it should appeal to a larger public. . . Dr. Gardiner writes concisely and convincingly. His book should command the attention not only of classical scholars but of all who are interested in athletics for their own sake; and for such readers he has spared no pains to make his work intelligible."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p889 O 30 '30 900w

GARDINER, GORDON. Pattern of chance. 300p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Low] 30-3352

After spending a term of imprisonment for theft, a young Englishman (who is the narrator of the story) goes to South Africa to start life anew. Tho he obtains an honorable post, he is haunted by the fear that his past will be discovered. When the news does leak out, his only escape from complete loneliness lies in his nightly meetings with a young girl who, for some mysterious reason, is herself an outcast. A fire that destroys her father's house, and ends his life, reveals her secret.

Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 80w

"A somber and vivid story with a fresh background."

+ Books p17 Mr 9 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 22 '30 450w

"There is considerable narrative skill displayed by Mr. Gardiner in the telling and a pleasant trick of making the reader fairly beg for details by his seeming reluctance to give them."

+ N Y Times p24 F 16 '30 300w

"If you can flounder through the first hundred pages of The Pattern of Chance the second and third hundreds will repay you." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:227 F 5 '30 100w

"This is an odd, and in its way original, book. The first and better half of the book preserves an illusion of secret intimacy which the end unfortunately dispels."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p796 O 10 '29 220w

GARDNER, EDMUND GARRATT. Arthurian legend in Italian literature. 349p il $3.75 Dutton [12s 6d Dent]

850.9 Arthur, king of Britain. Literature, Comparative. Italian literature

The earliest literary allusions to the Arthurian legend in Italy occur toward the end of the twelfth century. "On Italian soil, it entered into fresh combinations, with rich results in the literature of the closing Middle Ages and the Renaissance, and touched finely to fine issues the two greatest poets of the nations: Dante and Ariosto." Professor Gardner gives a detailed account of the various forms in which the stories connected with King Arthur and his knights appear in Italian literature.

Boston Transcript p3 N 29 '30 600w

Reviewed by James Thornton

Nation and Ath 48:197 N 8 '30 180w

"The name of Professor Gardner on a title-page is a sufficient certificate of accuracy and thoroughness. Many years ago his work on Dante and Giovanni del Virgilio revealed much that could not easily be found elsewhere; and here are the same qualities, if possible in yet higher degree. This is not to say that the book is easy reading. It is not; it is something very much better—hard reading that repays the trouble. A most comprehensive index knits up the ravelled sleeve of names, poems, romances, authorities, and the endless variations of the narrative. Some excellent illustrations increase the reader's pleasure."

+ New Statesman 35:712 S 13 '30 750w

"Dr. Gardner has rendered invaluable service to students, not only of the Arthurian legend, but also of the spread of culture, by collecting every scrap of evidence on the diffusion of the story, especially in these early times. . . A particularly interesting feature of this book is the large number of new illustrations supplied."

+ Sat R 150:422 O 4 '30 350w

GARLAND, HAMLIN. Roadside meetings. 474p $3.50 Macmillan

B or 92 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-24083

A volume of reminiscences in which Hamlin Garland describes his meetings and friendships with famous authors, artists and public men. He tells of a talk with Walt Whitman in Camden; of dining with Rudyard Kipling in company with James Whitcomb Riley; of meetings with Stephen Crane; of visiting Joaquin Miller on his California fruit-farm; of going calling with John Burroughs; of making a night tour of the lower East Side with Theodore Roosevelt, etc.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:466 F '29

Booklist 27:155 D '30

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz

Bookm 72:95 S '30 180w

"This book is more than a mere family album, more than a mere catalogue of the writers of the last three decades of the old century. Out of this book rises a fairly authentic and intelligent picture of American life and literature as it existed in the last quarter of the old century. . . 'Roadside Meetings' is a bridge upon which one may walk into a past that now seems as remote as Nineveh and Tyre, the American life and letters of the seventies, eighties and nineties. Much of it comes from diaries and notes and letters written nearly half a century ago, and no student of American letters, who wants to know something of how the ancestors of our present writers looked and lived, should ignore it." W. A. White

+ Books p1 S 21 '30 750w

Reviewed by L. W. Smith

Christian Century 47:1494 D 3 '30 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

" 'Roadside Meetings' is a superb literary document, full of information, strewn with brilliant portraits (brilliant even in their misunderstandings), and stuffed full of evidence to support Van Wyck Brooks's most pessimistic generalizations about the American literary life." C. H. Grattan

+ Nation 131:351 O 1 '30 320w

"It is a sad book, but unflaggingly interesting, too. It is chock-a-block full of fascinating portraits and sketches. . . The Crane portrait and incidental references are very valuable not only for the information contained (most of which Thomas Beer has used), but also because they show even Crane's best friends had no understanding of him. 'Roadside Meetings' is an usually important literary autobiography. It is superlatively American." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 900w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

N Y Times p2 S 21 '30 1300w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:12 N '30 180w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

"Mr Garland's 'Roadside Meetings' is no attempt at literary history, but an entertaining and frequently significant account of personal acquaintances and encounters. Here are the American veritists—Howells, Garland, James A. Herne, Mary E. Wilkins and various 'vernacular poets and novelists'—and a miscellaneous array of English literary celebrities as well, who are reflected in anecdotes and glimpses."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 S 20 '30 600w

GARRETT, HENRY EDWARD. Great experiments in psychology. (Century psychology ser.) 337p il $2.50 Century

150 Psychology—History. Psychology, Physiological 30-12633

This supplementary textbook stresses the personal element in the study of psychology by presenting the discoveries and experimental methods of the men who have contributed most to the upbuilding of psychology. There are chapters on Binet's scale for measuring intelligence, Ebbinghaus's studies in memory and forgetting, Pavlov and the conditioned reflex, Galton and the measurement of individual differences, Weber's and Fechner's laws, etc.

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 5 '30 380w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury

Outlook 155:671 Ag 27 '30 250w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

GARRICK, DAVID. Pineapples of finest flavour; or, A selection of sundry unpublished letters of the English Roscius, David Garrick; ed. with an introd. and notes by David Mason Little. ltd ed 100p $10 Harvard univ. press [45s Oxford]

B or 92 30-8516

" 'Pineapples of Finest Flavour' represents a selection of hitherto unpublished letters from the actor to various correspondents. It is evident that the forty-four letters reproduced in this volume were chosen primarily for their intrinsic interest as human documents, and secondarily for their value as illustrations of the life and customs of the eighteenth century. The chronological arrangement of the letters, covering the entire lifetime of the actor from early boyhood to the very eve of his death, renders the book in its brief entirety a concise and yet subtly illuminating revelation of the character and career of a great man."—Boston Transcript

"This little group of extraordinary letters—pineapples of finest flavour indeed—serves to reveal the complex, many-sided nature of the English Roscius to a degree never even vaguely approached by any of his formal biographers. So much for the letters themselves. As to the manner in which they are presented—that merits the highest praise. The unusual charm of the editor's informal introductory essay and the painstaking thoroughness of his numerous annotations are equally a credit to the best traditions of literary scholarship. Printer and binder, too, have contributed unsparingly to make this volume as nearly perfect as any book may be this side of Jordan." E. B. H.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 12 '30 850w

"These 'pineapples of finest flavour' represent a high-water mark in the full tide of eighteenth century letter writing. Garrick possessed a tart genius with his pen and could 'chronicle small beer' in witty and ingenuous fashion as well as transact business with shrewd formality."

+ N Y Times p20 Je 15 '30 200w

"However interesting these letters may be to professional or amateur students, it is surely a mistake to put them into the same class with those of the great letter-writers . . . These letters are useful and valuable, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Little will lose no time in bringing out his complete and definitive edition, but do not let us confuse them with the little works of art which are among the chief delights the eighteenth century furnishes us to-day."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:969 Ap 19 '30 280w

GARSON, ETTA CORBETT. Featherland. 66p il $1.50 McBride
30-7629

Robin Redbreast and his wife had a real estate agency from which each year they rented out desirable nests to all the inhabitants of Featherland. This is an account of a very busy season, giving many sidelights on the family life and habits of the birds.

"Information about birds and their habits is woven into the story, and the book would have been, in this reviewer's opinion, a far better one had the facts been presented as such and the story element entirely omitted." A. L. Shea

— Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ap 19 '30 60w

"It is better, after all, in spite of Peter Parley and his successors, to keep separate the attempt to instruct and the attempt to tell a good story." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p25 Mr 2 '30 170w

" 'Featherland' can be said but very faintly to achieve. The invention is somewhat mediocre. There is often confusion, for, although the author obviously knows bird habits, she frequently nullifies the value of her knowledge by contrary fiction. The illustrations are poor relations of Kate Greenaway's." Townsend Scudder III

— Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 400w

GARSTANG, JOHN. Hittite empire; being a survey of the history, geography and monuments of Hittite Asia Minor and Syria. 364p il $6 Smith, R.R. [25s Constable]

913.394 Hittites. Asia Minor—Antiquities. Syria—Antiquities [29-28810]

"Professor Garstang's book gives only an outline of the main facts of Hittite history, as we already know them. He has devoted himself principally to such identifications of the sites as is now possible, to descriptions of the physical aspects of the country and their influence on post-Hittite history, and to carefully detailed accounts of the ruins and monuments already discovered."—N Y Times

---

"Professor Garstang deals but briefly with the history of this interesting people. Some hundred illustrations and about fifteen maps and plans make the descriptions effective. Professor Garstang justifies his eminence as a scholar, but he has only a small literary endowment."

+ — Books p23 S 21 '30 320w

"As an introduction to the study of the Hittite world, Dr. Garstang's splendid record of its geography and monuments is beyond praise. It takes the place of his 'Land of the Hittites,' published in 1910, and long out of print. But it is much more than a second edition of that work, for nineteen years in the story of discovery in Hither Asia is a long time, and of recent discoveries that of Professor Hrozny in 1917, that the official language of the Hittite Court in the fifteenth century B.C., reveals an Indo-European element of the centum branch is positively revolutionary. The method of Dr. Garstang's work is admirable."

+ Nation and Ath 45:832 S 28 '29 800w

New Statesman 36:750 S 28 '29 250w

"While Professor Garstang's book has neither the charm of style which distinguishes Mr. Woolley's writing nor the dramatic vividness of Mr. Weigall's pictures of the personages of the ancient world, it is very interesting. The book has been carefully done, and is profusely illustrated with photographs and diagrams of the principal Hittite ruins and sculptures." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p23 S 28 '30 1150w

Pratt p32 spring '30

"Professor Garstang tells the somewhat dull story as well as it could be told. His book is admirably supplied with plates, illustrations and with maps, in which last category Mr. Gadd's book is notably deficient." H. J. Massingham

+ — Sat R 148:218 Ag 24 '29 200w

"As a survey of geography and monuments the book is very satisfactory. The geographical descriptions, buttressed by excellent maps, are particularly useful. The historical interpretation is less successful." E. H. Sturtevant

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:160 S 27 '30 750w

Spec 143:289 Ag 31 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p676 S 5 '30 700w

GATE, ETHEL MAY. All the king's trumpets. 176p il $2 Yale univ. press [4s 6d Blackwell]
30-26190

A modern fairy tale. A wicked enchantress stole the heart of the Prince Charming and gave him in place of it a chicken's heart. Thru the long perseverance of the gentle Princess Laura the enchantment was finally broken, and the prince regained his heart.

Booklist 26:286 Ap '30

"It is doubtful if many children will read through the 176 pages that make up this volume. A modern fairy story to compete with the old folk-tales must have beauty or humor or both. The author of 'All the King's Trumpets' seems torn between the desire to write a poetic story and a humorous one and she is not very successful in producing either atmosphere."

— N Y Times p19 F 2 '30 120w

"This is a story children will delight in. Exciting events crowd each other so rapidly that there is not a dull moment."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 180w

GATES, REGINALD RUGGLES. Heredity in man. 385p il $6 Macmillan [24s Constable]

575.1 Heredity [30-8991]

"Based on the author's 'Heredity and Eugenics,' Dr. Gates who is Professor of Botany in the University of London (King's College), has completely revised the book, omitting several chapters and rewriting and extensively adding to the remainder. In particular, chapters have been added on the blood groups, metabolic defects and racial crossing." —Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"It is only as one approaches the end of the book that one realises that Prof. Ruggles Gates's interest in human heredity is directly related to his activities as an anthropologist. Throughout the book he neglects the interest of the politician, the physician, and the eugenist, though he continually refers to matters of profound interest to them, and for the reason that undoubtedly he is addressing himself to the anthropologist." F. A. E. Crew

Nature 125:191 F 8 '30 1650w

"The book is fully illustrated, with many Mendelian charts, and is a useful contribution to a fascinating and important subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 100w

GATES, MRS SUSA (YOUNG), and WIDTSOE, MRS LEAH EUDORA (DUNFORD). Life story of Brigham Young; with a foreword by Reed Smoot. 388p il $5 Macmillan [18s Jarrolds]

B or 92 Young, Brigham. Mormons and Mormonism 30-25731

In this biography of her father, the Mormon leader, Mrs Gates deals with his character, his home life, his relations to his family, his work and the hardships and persecutions to which Mormonism fell heir. Her background-story traces the building of the Mormon stronghold in Utah, having followed the long trek of the sect under Brigham Young's leadership across the desert into this promised land.

Bookm 72:317 N '30 600w

Reviewed by Arthur Warner

Books p30 D 7 '30 850w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"Mrs. Gates, one of Brigham's fifty-six children, has written this biography with the object of vindicating her father's memory, and within the limits she has observed, has been unexpectedly successful. As to the tenets of Mormonism, by stating them with a minimum of argument she has gone far to disarm criticism. . . . Allowance made for filial partiality, the biographer has done her work well. English readers may maliciously treasure the avowal that 'all father's wives were excellent cooks,' and, inevitably, they will return to thinking of Brigham primarily as a marrying man; yet at the back of their minds will linger knowledge that he was a good deal else as well." D. Willoughby

+ Sat R 150:22 Jl 5 '30 850w

"Mrs. Gates's life of her father, founded on many unpublished documents and a personal knowledge now almost unique, is the most satisfactory yet written. It is free from the recrimination which mars most Mormon apologetics, and Mrs. Gates has a sense of humour and freshness of style which make one ready to condone her complete disregard of chronology. But, while replying at great length to the more sensational of the charges which have been brought against Mormons in general and Brigham Young in particular, she ignores others which were of far greater weight to the States in which the Mormons first settled."

+ — Spec 144:836 My 17 '30 650w

"Mrs. Gates does not add a great deal that is not already common knowledge. She may give much more detail, as, for instance, about the romantic story of the Mormon journey across the desert, but she adds no new essentials. Certainly Young emerges from her narrative as a most remarkable organizer."

Times [London] Lit Sup p447 My 29 '30 750w

GAUNT, WILLIAM. London promenade. 136p il $10 Rudge [25s Studio]

914.21 London—Description. London—Social life and customs

"Mr. Gaunt is his own author and his own illustrator, for in both parts he is individual, though his illustrations have a more vigorous and lively character than his prose. His book is a record, as Mr. Holme says in his introduction "of the informal life of the City, with its music halls, taverns, chophouses, cafés, clubs, meeting places of Society, Bohemian resorts, etc. etc., as it appears to the mind of an impartial observer . . . here is London as it is, London with a flavour of Vauxhall Gardens and Dickens, of Marie Lloyd and Edwardian pomp, of the naughty nineties and of the twenties, for which the characteristic epithet remains to be filled in by posterity."—New Statesman

"Mr. Gaunt is not a second Rowlandson, but he writes with a pleasant wit and draws with a keen eye for types and class distinctions. His book is a charming record of the cafés, theatres, squares and celebrated haunts of old London."

+ Books p18 N 30 '30 120w

"As a contemporary satire on certain sides of London life Mr. W. Gaunt's 'London Promenade' may achieve a permanent reputation. . . He has penetrated far into those basements of depression where the gay English take 'their sad and surreptitious pleasures.'"

+ Nation and Ath 48:414 D 20 '30 180w

"Mr. Gaunt's work, whether in colour or black-and-white, is invariably good, witty comment."

+ New Statesman 36:22 O 11 '30 230w

"I am uncertain whether this artist has wilfully tried to forget how to draw the human figure or whether he has ever learnt to do so. If Mr. Gaunt's characters are Londoners, I confess never to have seen such people. . . Sometimes Mr. Gaunt is not looking at London with the eyes of an Englishman, but through the eyes of modern French and German caricaturists. The letterpress, which is also by the artist, is informative and amusing." Adrian Bury

— + Sat R 150:382 S 27 '30 280w

GAUNTIER, GENE. Cabbages and harlequins. 326p $2.50 Coward-McCann

29-24383

The first marriage of Minnie Brown, an inexperienced country girl, ended in failure. Leaving her baby with her parents, she ran away to marry Lancelot Le Roy, a repertoire company star, who wanted her money. When Min presented him with twins, a boy and girl whom she named Jack and Jill, Le Roy left her. The rest of the story is concerned with Min's struggle to bring up her children, and their growing success on the stage. Both reach Broadway fame; but Jill pays for an indiscretion with death, and Jack marries a haughty English titled actress. Min, once more alone, goes to live with the son of her first marriage on his ranch in Wyoming, where she becomes a happy grandmother to his children.

"Gene Gauntier herself is a professional of long years' standing, who knows her actor folk and her local color well. But the tone of 'Cabbages and Harlequins' is one of truculent sentimentality. The mother-love theme is handled without restraint. And there is no flux and reflux of rhythm. It has the long, monotonous beat of wheels rattling on steel rails. Clap-trap, clap-trap, it pounds its way through the griefs and recompenses of an obese country woman at large in the world."

— + Books p14 O 27 '29 350w

"For the plain and faithful worth of the story as a human document not too much can be said. The fine humanity and sympathetic understanding with which the novelist handles material which in other hands would be sordid and revolting is noteworthy." M. L. S.

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 16 '29 480w

"Miss Gauntier is accurate without being photographic, realistic without being offensive. She writes of immoralities without the slightest suggestion of indelicacy, and skilfully evades morbid treatment of morbid material. Miss Gauntier's characters, especially Minnie Meyers, the central figure, are portrayed with understanding."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 27 '29 160w

GAUSS, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK. Life in college. 272p $2.50 Scribner

371.8 Colleges and universities—United States. Students 30-31712

Dean Gauss of Princeton University discusses all those practical questions concerning college life which parents and students themselves so often ask. He offers advice as to the types of young men who should or should not go to college, analyzes reasons for classroom failures, takes up the problems of revolt, leadership and romance; and discusses the problems of parents in relation to their undergraduate sons.

Boston Transcript p5 N 29 '30 500w

"If there is a wiser or kindlier dean of undergraduates anywhere than Dean Gauss of Princeton, he has not yet written a book. This book may be read with equal profit by college students and by their parents. Some chapters, such as those on 'mistakes of mothers,' 'mistakes of fathers,' 'troubles at home,' and 'an examination for parents,' are clearly intended for the older generation."

+ Christian Century 47:1531 D 10 '30 150w

N Y Times p6 N 30 '30 550w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:391 N 5 '30 80w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:18 D '30 120w

GAUSS, C. F.—Continued

"This book is one of the few really good books on college life. First, because it is written not only by an expert but by a sympathetic expert, and, secondly, because it rides no hobby. At no point is it sensational nor does it try to deal humorously with a serious subject. It is a dignified, unexaggerated, and sincere presentation of the keen observations of an honest man. It would be hard to ask for more." C. W. Mendell

+ Sat R of Lit 7:468 D 20 '30 450w

GAWALEWICZ, MARJAN. Queen of heaven; tr. from the Polish by Lucia Borski Szczepanowicz and Kate B. Miller. 234p $2 Dial press

232.931 Mary, Virgin—Legends. Folklore, Polish 29-28072

A collection of legends about the Virgin Mary, on earth and in heaven, from Polish folk literature.

Books p10 Ap 27 '30 130w

"The translator has managed to preserve into English the poetic loveliness of these many legends born of the simple piety of the Polish peasantry. Reading them one senses how intimately the thought of Mary, Virgin-Mother, and 'Queen of Heaven,' touches the life and thought of the Catholic Slav. It is an exquisite and delicate book, full of mysticism."

+ Churchman p17 F 1 '30 70w

"One need not be a Roman Catholic to appreciate the naive imaginative beauty of this collection of thirty-one Polish peasant legends of the Virgin Mary. They have the appeal inherent in all folk-lore that has been beautifully retold, and that devotional spontaneity and artlessness." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 50w

St Louis 28:92 Ap '30

GAY, ZHENYA, and GAY, JAN. Pancho and his burro. unp il $1.75 Morrow 30-22894

The story of one day in the life of Pancho and his sister Lola, two little Mexican children.

"A gem of a book, which will teach a tiny child more about Mexican peon life than hours of educational movies. The illustrations are reproduced in clear, brilliant color."

+ Bookm 72:xxviii O '30 30w

"In Pancho and His Burro American boys and girls may enter in to the colorful life of a Mexican household. They will understand and enjoy the authentic details and homely incidents that really do differentiate a day in one country from a day in another." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:245 N '30 60w

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

Books p7 N 16 '30 50w

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

Nation 131:555 N 19 '30 50w

St Louis 28:275 N '30

GAYE, PHOEBE FENWICK. Good Sir John; being an account of the rise and fall of Sir John Falstaff, 1343-1413. 311p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Secker]

Shakespeare in fiction, drama, poetry, etc. 30-25152

A novel centering about the character and witty and weighty exploits of Sir John Falstaff, with the life of fourteenth-century England as a background.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

Bookm 72:x O '30 50w

Books p14 O 5 '30 200w

Chicago Daily Tribune p11 O 11 '30 40w

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 24 '30 350w

"After some pleasant and attentive reading, I cannot feel that I know Miss Fenwick Gaye's Sir John Falstaff but thank heaven that I know someone of his name."

— New Statesman 34:840 Ap 5 '30 150w

"It is the background upon which Miss Gaye seems to have lavished most care and one gets a fine feeling of the color and movement, the people and events of that period of history. It cannot be said, however, that Miss Gaye gets the real subtlety of Falstaff, as Shakespeare has shown him to us, in her novel. That great swollen tun of humors is as complicated as any character out of Dostoievsky. To picture him less subtly is to give us something less than the Falstaff we already have." Edwin Seaver

— + N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 150w

"He is not a very pleasant or amusing fellow, this Falstaff, and his story is made no more convincing by the use, in his mouth, or those of his companions, of modern slang and turns of speech. Shakespeare's Falstaff and Shakespeare's Nym are hardly likely to be ousted by these Cockney-speaking reincarnations."

— Sat R 149:422 Ap 5 '30 120w

"Often the successor to a brilliant first novel is disappointing, but Miss Gaye has more than fulfilled the promise of Vivandière, and her account of 'the rise and fall of Sir John Falstaffe' is a joy. . . There is no single jerk in all the even narrative. Good though the story is, the telling is even better: the style is clean and crisp and sparkling."

+ Spec 144:1020 Je 21 '30 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 180w

"Despite his abundant vitality, Miss Gaye's Sir John is not quite so likable as Shakespeare's; perhaps because he is more successful."

Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Ap 3 '30 270w

GEE, WILSON PARHAM, ed. Research in the social sciences: its fundamental methods and objectives, by Robert Ezra Park, Allyn Abbott Young, Clark Wissler, and others. (Virginia. Univ. Inst. for research in the social sciences. Lectures) 305p il $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

304 Social sciences—Addresses, essays, lectures 29-10456

This book consists of nine lectures delivered before the Institute for research in the social sciences at the University of Virginia. Contents: Sociology, by R. E. Park; Economics, by A. A. Young; Anthropology, by Clark Wissler; Statistics, by R. E. Chaddock; Psychology, by R. S. Woodworth; Jurisprudence, by Roscoe Pound; History, by A. M. Schlesinger; Philosophy, by John Dewey; Political science, by C. A. Beard.

Am Econ R 19:516 S '29 350w

"The papers are of conspicuous merit, and, together, form one of the most instructive and provoking considerations of method in the social sciences yet published. This is not because of a common unity of view, but because of difference in perspective. This independence yields an arresting treatment of fundamental issues of research in the social sciences and avoids a staid presentation of pseudo-scientific dogmas." Herbert Blumer

+ Am J Soc 35:1104 My '30 2650w

"Without exception, the nine lecturers selected for the series were as eminent and capable representatives of the various fields of learning as could have been assembled. The resulting volume, edited by Professor Gee, duplicates nothing hitherto published, and there is not a chapter but merits careful reading by every worker in the several fields touched upon." F. A. Ogg

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:198 F '30 550w

"The centering of the contributions on the special subject of research gives a unity to this volume which tends to be absent in symposiums of the social sciences, especially when defined as broadly as in the present case. The book will be valuable in helping to acquaint workers in each subject with the interests, problems, and methods in related fields. This may in turn stimulate a better mutual understanding and possibly coöperative research. The selection of authorities is excellent." G. A. Lundberg

+ Ann Am Acad 145:205 S '29 180w

St Louis 28:130 My '30

GEERLINGS, GERALD KENNETH. Wrought iron in architecture; wrought iron craftsmanship; historical notes and illustrations of wrought iron in Italy, Spain, France, Holland, Belgium, England, Germany, America; modern wrought iron; lighting fixtures and knockers; specifications. 202p il $7.50 Scribner

739 Ironwork. Architectural ironwork. Decoration and ornament, Architectural 29-14001

"The author considers, in turn, the wrought iron of Italy, where bronze was preferred for a long time; Spain, particularly the superb 'rejas,' or church grilles of the fifteenth century; France, with its originality of design and perfection of detail; also the fine craftsmanship of Belgium, Holland and Germany. . . The section concerning twentieth-century work has many fine illustrations of American bank-grilles and lighting fixtures, and decorative fire screens and grilles by Edgar Brandt of Paris, considered by many to be the greatest living craftsman in wrought iron."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 26:269 Ap '30

"Mr. Geerlings presents in this well-documented, carefully organized and beautifully illustrated book not only a scholarly historical survey but also a valuable discussion of the practical problems confronting builders today who wish to employ such material. In the work of such artists in metal as Edgar Brandt, of Paris, he sees the promise of a development which may produce for our modern age decoration as original as that of the Renaissance and no less distinguished." W. R. Agard

+ Books p12 F 9 '30 120w

"What might well be a ponderous subject is lightly, even gaily outlined by Mr. Geerlings, who knows his subject so thoroughly that he is able to have a little fun with it. . . The whole discussion is as scholarly as one could wish, but there is many a quiet chuckle on its clear, well-illustrated pages." M. E. P.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 27 '29 400w

Pratt p22 winter '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p954 N 21 '29 400w

GENTRY, CURTIS GAVIN, ed. Fifty famous letters of history. 188p $2.50 Crowell

808.86 30-11749

Fifty letters famous in history which run the gamut of human emotions: "war, love, intrigue, hate, disappointment, bitterness, revenge." The letters range in time from Socrates, Alexander the Great, and Diogenes, to Woodrow Wilson.

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

Books p11 My 4 '30 100w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"Very prudently he makes no claim of relativity for these letters; they are 'famous,' but not the 'most' famous, nor the most important. On the whole, he has picked with discrimination these half hundred examples of epistolary correspondence. They are mostly interesting in themselves, and in their sidelights on contemporary history."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 15 '30 120w

GEORGE, LLOYD, and GILMAN, JAMES. Air, men and wings; a comprehensive survey of flying for boys. 263p il $3.50 McBride

629.13 Aeronautics 30-1092

A history of aviation for boys, with a discussion of various types of aircraft, learning to fly, the building of models and other topics relative to aeronautics.

Books p12 Ja 26 '30 80w

"A mediocre book. However, boys will read with interest the chapter on Learning to Fly, and the book contains some excellent and unusual photographic illustrations." D. G. Lunt

— + Books p8 F 23 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '30

"This seems to be the clearest manual of what it's all about for the lay reader that has yet been published. The viewpoint of the pilot is given all the way through, and the sixty-page glossary is a splendid addition. Two dozen plates help explain a text that could almost stand alone without the help of pictures." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30

Pratt p19 summer '30

St Louis 28:70 Mr '30

GEORGE, LLOYD, and GILMAN, JAMES. Grow up to fly. 169p il $2.50 McBride

629.13 Aeronautics 30-30100

A book intended to interest boys in the increasing opportunities today in all fields of aviation. The authors list the colleges and universities which give courses in aeronautical engineering and have flying clubs. Three chapters on glider building and glider flight follow. They also take up such topics as learning to fly motored aircraft, how to obtain pilot's licenses, and training in army and navy flying schools.

Reviewed by D. C. Lunt

Books p8 D 28 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30

St Louis 28:275 N '30

Reviewed by Amelia Earhart

Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 80w

GERARD DE NERVAL, GERARD LABRUNIE, known as. Women of Cairo; scenes of life in the Orient; with an introd. by Conrad Elphinstone; [a tr. of Voyages en Orient]. 2v 282; 402p $7.50 Harcourt [25s Routledge]

916.2 Egypt—Description and travel. Turkey—Description and travel [30-12401]

When the French poet, Gérard de Nerval left Marseilles for Cairo in 1843, Egypt was still under French influence: thus the scenes he describes belong to the Cairo of an earlier age. He records mainly his impressions of native life and customs and his efforts to adapt himself to them and his view of the harem system. The second volume contains travel studies in Syria and Turkey.

Reviewed by George Dangerfield

Bookm 71:125 Mr '30 450w

Reviewed by Eric Strong

Books p15 Ap 27 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 950w

Nation 131:24 Jl 2 '30 180w

"Poetic, spirited and unusual travel record, touched with the malice of Heine and presented in an English edition in all respects worthy of its quality and charm." F. H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 15 '30 450w

"A pleasant wandering narrative that betrays the fact that it was originally written for serialization in a periodical. But this shapeless-

GERARD DE NERVAL—Continued
ness does not destroy its effect. The reader will seem to wander along with Gérard de Nerval through the strange scenes and places and among the alien peoples whom he describes with so vivid and trained a pen." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p17 Je 1 '30 1540w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p10m F 23 '30 1250w
St Louis 28:244 O '30

" 'The Women of Cairo' is impregnated with poetry and color, with quaint humor, with penetrating self-criticism, and with an exquisite comprehension of the chasms that divide culture from culture. He was an unostentatious citizen of the world, who unlocked the doors of the senses and the mind, and bid the exotic flowers breathe out their holy or unholy essences. This, in a word, is what his syncretism really means." Pierre Loving
+ Sat R of Lit 6:890 Ap 5 '30 1150w

"His book is a valuable record of an earlier Near East."
+ Spec 143:986 D 28 '29 140w

"The ablest writing in this vivid book is the description of Constantinople during the Mohammedan feast of Ramadan, which lasts 30 days. The author does full justice to the glorious Constantinople of a century ago; indeed, he identified himself so closely with his surroundings that he was able to reproduce in a remarkable degree that elusive Oriental atmosphere so incomprehensible to the Occidental mind."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 1 '30 950w
Times [London] Lit Sup p887 N 7 '29 1400w

GERBAULT, ALAIN. In quest of the sun; the journal of the Firecrest; with an introd. by Charmian London. 303p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]

910.4 Voyages around the world. Firecrest (yacht) 30-14351

A young Frenchman's record of his voyage alone in the small yacht Firecrest, from New York to Panama, thence into the South Seas, the East Indies, the Indian Ocean, and round the Cape of Good Hope to le Havre, a total distance of 40,000 sea miles covered in 700 days at sea. The author describes not only the hardships and triumphs of his sailing, but something of his interesting experiences with the natives on many of the islands he visited.

Booklist 27:60 O '30

"His experience both aboard ship and at his anchorages is interesting, but he has no literary capacity to take advantage of them. Partly, his sportsman's modesty is at fault; he does not wish to appear to make much of his achievement and so bleeds his recital of the enthusiasm that might have given it its proper glow." Isidor Schneider
+ — Books p16 Je 29 '30 300w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 21 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '30

"M. Gerbault has the innocence of those who embark upon great enterprises. His defect is that he has, apparently, neither the literary gifts nor the sensitiveness to provide anything more than a bare narrative of his stupendous feat."
— + New Statesman 34:542 F 1 '30 380w

"The chief charm of 'In Quest of the Sun' is its simple strength, its utter unpretentiousness, its directness and, above all, its reticence. Nothing is over-stated, each adventure is rather under-stated, if anything, so that M. Gerbault leaves the reader anxious to know a great deal about the people who have stirred him so deeply." Rosalind Ivan
+ N Y Times p10 Je 15 '30 650w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"M. Gerbault's narrative is fascinating. Seamen would have appreciated much more nautical detail, but no doubt M. Gerbault's publishers wanted a book for the ordinary reader. As it is, there is enough about the technique to prevent the expert reader from actually complaining. . . M. Gerbault's success in overcoming all his difficulties may have been equalled but it has not been surpassed."
+ Spec 143:912 D 14 '29 850w

"The reviewer has dwelt on the singlehandedness of it, which is not much affected by the order in which M. Gerbault took his forty thousand sea-miles. But there is much more to make the narrative interesting—the comments on fish and sea-birds which would have suggested themselves only to an observer moving near the water and slowly; the uses he made of his (surprisingly) numerous hours of leisure at sea; his description of the people he had to do with in long sojourns at little-known islands."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1046 D 12 '29 1000w

GERHARDI, WILLIAM ALEXANDER. Pending heaven. 292p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Duckworth]

30-4861

Max Fisher—writer, bohemian, lover—goes from London to the south of France to finish his new novel. His love affairs, emotions, and reactions toward the characters with whom he comes in contact are the material the author employs in his psychological study of the charming futility of Max Fisher's own character and existence.

"Mr. William Gerhardi is very clever, so clever indeed that he is becoming a bore. His latest novel is all cleverness, and precious little else. If Pending Heaven is a satire of the literary life and loves it simply doesn't come off, and if it is a farce it isn't funny." Grenville Vernon
— Bookm 71:217 Ap '30 200w
Books p4 F 23 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 330w

" 'Pending Heaven' is hopelessly careless. It is, however, full of amusing remarks and situations, a few very amusing, the majority fairly so. Mr. Gerhardi is one of the very few modern novelists with a real gift for comedy, but in 'Pending Heaven' he merely reminds us that that is the case." L. L. Irvine
+ — Nation and Ath 46:774 Mr 8 '30 80w

"Pending Heaven is a better book by far than its ramshackle predecessor, Jazz and Jasper. There are many pages that make us laugh, and there is also a good deal of shrewd and incisive caricature. It is not until we reach page two-hundred or so, and find the chief character facetiously ensconced beneath a bower of five adoring mistresses, that the extravaganza becomes too stodgy and one yawns and puts down his book."
— + New Statesman 34:637 F 22 '30 250w

" 'Pending Heaven,' slashing directly at those people whose romantic imaginations insist that they are 'different,' and that if only they were not so considerate of others, they would be able to 'do something,' is, despite its straining after wit, an amusing satire. but. from the author of 'Futility' and 'The Polyglots' a disappointment."
— N Y Times p8 Mr 2 '30 500w

"The Futility of Don Juanism is the theme upon which the author plays with all his accustomed spontaneity, delicious wit, a cosmopolitanism which is quite another thing from internationalism, and a sophistication which is more than wise-cracking."
+ Outlook 154:387 Mr 5 '30 100w

" 'Pending Heaven' is a disappointing book, its humanity and humour made of small effect by the intellectual malaise that overtakes it before the end." L. P. Hartley
— Sat R 149:238 F 22 '30 650w

"The comedy of Mr. Gerhardi is not limited to any single phase of hilarity. His work combines a sharp, chaste wit with the broadest of burlesque and he has shaped his satire about story and incidents which make a perfect vehicle for the purposes of laughter."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:7 Jl 26 '30 750w

"There is no denying Mr. Gerhardi's verve and smartness. Even readers who think him quite needlessly blasphemous will be forced to smile sometimes at his pert irresponsibility. But is this the best he can do? His aim, apparently, is to demonstrate the futility of life. His present book suggests, rather, the futility of Mr. Gerhardi." Gilbert Thomas
— + Spec 144:342 Mr 1 '30 200w

"It is useless to analyse this engaging book: it will depend upon the reader's mood and prejudices for its effect. Some who hope to laugh may not do so; the most unexpectant on the contrary may get aching ribs. It is concocted with the quintessence of inconsequence, yet so clearly that at any moment it seems almost real. One must not ask more than that, but allow Mr. Gerhardi all the licence of his motley."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p140 F 20 '30 400w

GERMANE, CHARLES, E., and GERMANE, MRS EDITH (GAYTON). Character education; a program for the school and the home. 2 pts in 1 259,224p $2.80 Silver

377 Moral education. Children—Management. Child study 29-19885

"The primary purpose of this book is to present a theory and practice of character building, that is of personality enrichment, by means of a program designed to enable the home and the school to cooperate more intelligently and zealously." (Pref.) Part one deals with the rôle of the school in character building; part two is designed to be of special interest to parents in the various aspects of child training.

"The major weakness of the book lies in the fact that the authors construe virtues as the essential elements of character. The book will be of value to those interested in character education. The objectivity of the material, the many actual examples given, and the discussion of the laws of learning and of subject matter in relation to character-building are all commendable features of the book. However, the reviewer believes that it might have been a far greater work had it listed fewer virtues and discussed, instead, the building of an integrated personality." Ruth Cope
+ — El School J 30:548 Mr '30 500w
St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

"The book is a genuine contribution to our understanding of the problems of character-training. It has some faults in organization, and many of its conclusions must await the test of time and further experiment, but in theory and practice it is fundamentally sound." H. E. Dewey
+ — School R 38:470 Je '30 1700w

GERMANY. AUSWÄRTIGES AMT. German diplomatic documents, 1871-1914; sel. and tr. from the documents pub. by the German foreign office, by E. T. S. Dugdale. 4v v 2, From Bismarck's fall to 1898; v 3, The growing antagonism, 1898-1910. 528;441p ea $7.50 Harper [ea 21s Methuen]

327.43 Germany—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Germany. Europe—Politics (29-85)

Volume two of the German diplomatic documents selected and translated by Professor Dugdale presents documents under thirty-two subject groupings, in which Mediterranean problems—Egypt, Italy, and North Africa, predominate. Anglo-German relations are also fully treated, in connection with the constant Turkish difficulties, especially Armenia. Volume three, covering the period from 1898 to 1910, opens with notes on the Chino-Japanese war and follows thru with events that led to the estrangement between Germany and England, up to Bethmann Hollweg and the naval negotiations of 1909-1911.

"Concerned with the diplomacy of only eight years (1890-1898), volume II. of Captain Dugdale's useful translations from the Grosse Politik offers more material than was possible in volume I. and is relatively much more valuable." L. B. Packard
+ Am Hist R 35:670 Ap '30 420w (Review of v 2)
Nation and Ath 46:438 D 21 '29 80w (Review of v 2)

Reviewed by K. M. Moir
Nation and Ath 48:21 O 4 '30 320w (Review of v 3)
New Statesman 34:sup xxvi D 7 '29 250w (Review of v 2)

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield
N Y Times p10 N 9 '30 80w (Review of v)3

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:16 N '30 80w (Review of v 3)
Spec 143:950 D 21 '29 180w (Review of v 2)

"Mr. Dugdale's remarkable summary, the third of his four volumes, treats of all the questions that aroused controversy."
+ Spec 144:873 My 24 '30 80w (Review of v 3)
Times [London] Lit Sup p831 O 24 '29 1550w (Review of v 2)

"There is much to be gleaned from the documents not only on questions of policy but on the minds and characters of those who made policy. It is a very living historical record."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p402 My 15 '30 1300w (Review of v 3)

GEWEHR, WESLEY MARSH. Great awakening in Virginia, 1740-1790. 300p il $4 Duke univ. [18s Cambridge univ. press]

277.55 Virginia—Church history 30-7517

"We are accustomed to think of the Great Awakening in the eighteenth century as largely a New England affair, or at most a Congregational and Presbyterian revival, and confined to New England and the middle colonies. The extension of the revival into Virginia and North Carolina, with its far-reaching influences, has never [before] been thoroughly studied. . . Mr. Gewehr's study may be gathered under four heads: first, the Presbyterian revival in Virginia, its beginnings in Hanover county and its extension under the eloquent leadership of Samuel Davies; second, the Baptist revival, coming just as the Presbyterian awakening was declining, under the leadership of two New England separate Baptists, Shubel Stearns and Daniel Marshall, both converts of the great New England revival; third, the Methodist revival, fathered by Devereux Jarratt; and fourth, the concluding chapters dealing with the political, social and religious consequences of the revival in its three phases."—Christian Century

Reviewed by W. W. Sweet
Am Hist R 35:887 Jl '30 680w

Reviewed by L. P. Edwards
Am J Soc 36:333 S '30 350w

"Mr. Gewehr has added an excellent bibliography to his valuable study of this rather localized aspect of the social and religious development of Virginia; it is a carefully written account with a satisfying amount of documentary evidence for the various statements he makes, and references to little known material which will guide many a scholar in an allied field." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 22 '30 950w

"The book is beautifully executed and so impressive in its thoroughness and scholarship. . . It answers a great many questions regarding a period in American religious history to which little attention has been given." W. W. Sweet

GEWEHR, W. M.—Continued
+ Christian Century 47:306 Mr 5 '30 600w

Reviewed by R. E. E. Harkness
Crozer Q 7:400 Jl '30 250w

Reviewed by Michael Kraus
Hist Outlook 21:398 D '30 220w

Reviewed by Harold Landin
Springf'd Republican p5s Ag 3 '30 550w

"A sound, sympathetic, though not uncritical book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p690 S 4 '30 850w

GIBBARD, MABEL KITTY. Hobbies for girls. 244p il $2 Lippincott [6s Low]

790 Amusements. Handicraft

Thirty-five chapters on hobbies for girls. Some of the hobbies suggested are: the seashore as a hobby; the study of architecture; bicycling; simple book-binding; wild flower collecting; raffia work; how to stencil; hints on sketching; and gardening. The author is an Englishwoman. The book is a companion volume to Hobbies for Boys, by G. Gibbard Jackson.

"A valuable accompaniment to vacation; the range is uncommonly wide and the instructions do not involve much expense—indeed most of the hobbies call for very little."
+ Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 20w

"The author actually talks to [her] readers in a manner of camaraderie rather than in a dictatorial way. The reader [is] made to feel (and this point will be especially attractive to the young and inexperienced makers and doers of things) that each enterprise described is not a far-fetched vagary of the imagination, but a fait accompli which has been undertaken and carried through by others, and is, therefore, altogether possible." Kitty Gause
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1119 Je 7 '30 300w

GIBBON, EDWARD. Gibbon's journal to January 28th, 1763; My journal I, II, & III, and Ephemerides; with introd. essays by D. M. Low. 261p il $5 Norton [17s 6d Chatto]

B or 92 [30-1166]

This is the first edition of a complete text of the English portion of Edward Gibbon's journal, begun at the age of twenty-four when he was in camp with the Hampshire militia and continued for three years. The Journal deals with Gibbon's life in the militia and in society during the years 1759 to 1763. There is a 117-page introduction by D. M. Low and the appendix gives Gibbon's complete correspondence with the Swiss girl Suzanne Curchod, whom the opposition of his family prevented him from marrying.

Reviewed by W. T. Laprade
Am Hist R 35:911 Jl '30 400w
Booklist 27:156 D '30
Boston Transcript p1 My 3 '30 1300w
Nation and Ath 45:482 Jl 6 '29 750w

"If the hand is the hand of the militiaman, which here draws his own portrait (for Mr. Gibbon has become for the moment Captain Gibbon), the mind behind the hand is the mind of the historian of the Roman Empire. So that there is a majestic completeness about the picture which leaves one in no doubt as to what manner of man it portrays."
+ New Statesman 33:308 Je 15 '29 1000w

"It does not, of course, rank among the great diaries; that would be too much to expect of a journal kept by a young fellow of his age and lack of experience. But it might have been a good deal better if he had touched more on the intimate phases of his life, on his emotions, and even on the things that happened to him."
— + N Y Times p10 Mr 30 '30 1450w

"A word of thanks is due to Mr. Low for his strenuous editorial labours, his enlightening introduction, and for the valuable appendices, the first of which gives the Gibbon-Curchod correspondence from 1757 to 1759 in full. The printing, binding and illustrations are worthy of the book."
+ Sat R 148:424 O 12 '29 550w

"Scholarship in the eighteenth century is still a very exciting thing when it can find such material as this to work upon; and it is happily served when it has the services of so skilful an editor as Mr. Low. This book is nothing less than the first accurate and complete publication of Gibbon's early Journals, edited from the original MSS. in the British Museum. It is a permanent contribution to the shelves of eighteenth century students." W. S. Lewis
+ Sat R of Lit 6:871 Mr 29 '30 220w

"Taken in conjunction with Mr. Low's charming introduction and the love-letters which passed between Gibbon and Mlle. Curchod, published as an appendix, the book enables us to get a 'close up' of the great man, which if necessarily a little out of proportion, is intensely vivid and memorable, if only moderately attractive."
+ Spec 142:866 Je 1 '29 1000w
Times [London] Lit Sup p441 Je 6 '29 2800w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Nationalism and internationalism. (World unity lib.) 273p $2.50 Stokes

323.1 Nationalism and nationality. International law and relations. International cooperation 30-6521

A series of lectures delivered at the first session of the Institute for world unity at Green Acre, Maine. The subjects, following a chronological sequence, are as follows: Nationalism before 1789; Nationalism versus internationalism from 1789 to 1815; The development of nationalism in Europe from 1815 to 1870; Nationalist movements from 1870 to 1914; Nationalism during the World war (1914-1918) and the Peace conference (1919); International coöperation since the World war.

Am Pol Sci R 24:789 Ag '30 200w
Booklist 26:341 Je '30
Books p16 Ap 27 '30 200w

"A book of this sort should not be relegated to the shelves of musty libraries to be pored over by the occasional student of politics and world affairs; it is the sort of matter which every intelligent citizen who wields a vote should read. There is direct forceful style in the narrative of events which should be comprehensible to anyone."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 12 '30 350w

"An invaluable summary of what is happening in the political world for the man who does not find it possible to do his own digging in the almost limitless sources."
+ Christian Century 47:465 Ap 9 '30 80w

"Professor Gibbons's book is a collection of lectures on nationalism, refreshingly informal in tone, scholarly in content." John Carter
+ Current Hist 32:422 Je '30 500w
Foreign Affairs 8:669 Jl '30

Reviewed by C. M. Perry
Int J Ethics 41:134 O '30 150w

Reviewed by H. K. Norton
Sat R of Lit 6:1191 Jl 12 '30 100w

Reviewed by K. D. Blake
World Tomorrow 13:314 Jl '30 220w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Wider horizons; the new map of the world. 402p $3 Century

909.82 History, Modern. Twentieth century. World politics. Progress 30-14612

A history of the geographical, political and social changes which have taken place between 1900 and 1930. Dr Gibbons surveys, among other phenomena, the new measurements of time and space, international trade and investment, woman's place in the new world, the influence of youth in contemporary history, international organizations, and changes in the map of the world.

Booklist 27:59 O '30

"Chiefly by the juxtaposition of well-chosen and inherently absorbing material, Dr. Gibbons carries his reader along. Most of what he tells us, all of us already know who are at all addicted to the morning paper. At best he is supplementing the news of the last thirty years with competent editorial comment. But the arrangement is so good that one is grateful for a bird's-eye view even of familiar country." Stringfellow Barr

+ Books p10 Ag 3 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 480w

"He takes up such differing phases of human activity as trade and investments, cultural migration, woman's new place, and youth in contemporary history. Beneath these and a dozen other similar chapter headings, he has marshaled an extraordinary array of facts and has set them forth with clarity and simplicity. The book is as thoroughly a diary of a philosopher as was anything that Keyserling ever wrote, but it is vastly more sane and more readable than any of the outgivings of that egoistic thinker." W. J. A.

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 28 '30 330w

"'Wider Horizons' is a useful book. It sticks pretty close to the surface in dealing with economic and political problems, neglects the Balkans and Russia at the expense of the rest of Europe, and does little more than hint at the social unrest which renders unstable today half of the governments on the Continent. But it is well written, lively, and packed with information such as everybody would do well to have."

+ — N Y Times p13 Jl 6 '30 730w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 100w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

"He is a journalist with an expansive and liberal viewpoint; one of those journalists who keeps his ear to the ground and his eyes open to a good purpose. This adds a touch of validity to his writing, but it is the validity of good reporting. Naturally, the disposition of so many subjects, labor movements, women's movements, youth movements, peace movements, and what not, is very sketchy. But taken as a whole, the book gives a pretty complete picture." Nels Anderson

+ Survey 64:447 Ag 15 '30 220w

GIBBS, ARTHUR HAMILTON. Chances. 285p $2.50 Little

30-15406

Thru all the years of their boyhood Tom and Jack Ingleside were extraordinarily devoted brothers. With the war came the realization that they both loved the same girl. Relations were strained for a time, and then Tom gave his life in rescuing Jack.

Booklist 27:104 N '30

Bookm 71:ix Ag '30 50w

"The background of 'Chances,' the St. Malo school life and the trench warfare, based as it is upon the author's experience, has photographic actuality. The distinction of character between the two brothers, while carefully brought out, never allows your sympathy to linger on either one alone. There is no break in the rhythm of Mr. Gibbs's smooth, efficient story, no venturesome pioneering, no unsuspected thought unfolded."

+ Books p10 Je 8 '30 380w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p3 Je 21 '30 1850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '30

"In 'Chances' Mr. Gibbs has made a very readable, albeit not very penetrating novel, readable because he at all times knows how to tell a story, but not very penetrating because he has allowed an outside force to solve his problem."

+ — N Y Times p7 Ja 15 '30 320w

"In our opinion, the best of the story is contained in Part I, that which portrays the two brothers' boyhood years while they are students in France at the College de St. Malo. The tale thereafter seems to be an urbane, standardized bore."

+ — N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 100w

"As Mr. Gibbs has developed it, there is no more material in the novel than would have sufficed for a short story, and the developments of the plot can be anticipated by any reader. But this author writes pleasantly of likeable people, and is successful with his two young men and their mother. The characters of the boys are well differentiated and each arouses interest and sympathy." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 155:226 Je 11 '30 180w

"This Gibbs, like his brother Philip, writes always like a gentleman and a sportsman, with real concern for decent feeling and decent conduct. You lay down this book with a reassuring sense that the survivors of the war generation cannot have been all worms or cads, despite the weight of testimony in the court of the after-war novel."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 400w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 2 '30 200w

GIBBS, JEANNETTE CLARKE (PHILLIPS) (MRS A. H. GIBBS). French leave. 295p $2.50 Little

30-18554

Charles Clayton, following an unsuccessful marriage in America, has returned to live his life in Paris. Here he meets the daughter of a wealthy American, and falls in love. Muriel for love of him is willing to live the unconventional life that the personality of Charles demands; but the situation becomes a trifle acute when his former wife, bringing their half-grown son (who is very like his charming and selfish father) pays a return visit to Paris.

"French Leave might have been more successful had Mrs. Gibbs eliminated all but the two major characters. Her portrayal of Charles Clayton is vigorous and original; in his presence Muriel comes to life, and their relationship is presented with force and insight." C. L. Aiken

+ — Bookm 72:310 N '30 180w

"Jeanette Phillips Gibbs's third novel has made a great advance in power and artistry. There are fewer characters in this new novel, and more real people, less smartness and more wisdom. In particular, there is more inevitability and less manipulation." R. B. Sanborn

+ Books p4 Jl 20 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 730w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 16 '30 100w

"The plot, though not unusual, is entertaining and well sustained. The book has some really delightful moments. . . Mrs. Gibbs's style has lost the choppiness and unevenness of her first novel, 'Portia Marries,' but it occasionally lacks an easy fluency."

+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 20 '30 300w

"While doing justice to the great, and useless, selfishness of her chief character, the novelist has not been able to give him (for this reviewer) the saving grace of the lovableness which she evidently found in him." F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:226 Je 11 '30 100w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

Sat R of Lit 7:165 S 27 '30 450w

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Hidden city. 302p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson] 30-3875

The patients of young Dr John Devons are the characters in this novel of modern, hectic and neurotic London life. Among them are Eric Pardoe, a self-centered young actor; Gilbert Blake, an embittered novelist whose flippant wife Lucy flirted with other men; a financial magnate, Sir Francis Ide, whose philandering brought tragedy into his household; his silly, middle-aged wife; and his lovely daughter, Cynthia, bored, neurotic, disillusioned—in whom the doctor takes something more than a professional interest. The romances, disappointments and self-sacrifices of the doctor and his sister, however, form the novel's main theme.

Booklist 26:281 Ap '30

"It is an absorbing book containing many psycho-analytical studies. The story itself is poignant and very human; but the greatest interest is in the doctor's many cases and the actual practice of psycho-therapy. Philip Gibbs, whose literary style invariably has charm and authority, shows in addition a considerable knowledge of a universally interesting subject, and has written sanely of it."

+ Bookm 71:xxv Mr '30 120w

"The narrative is skillfully plotted and is told, with now and then a touch of melodrama, in that style of Sir Philip's with which so many of us are familiar."

+ Books p23 Mr 2 '30 500w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p5 F 15 '30 1950w

Cath World 131:508 Jl '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"There is a mild Dickensian flavor about this story with its dramatic, sentimental, and heroic moods, though the philosophy is contemporary. And if in place of the villain there are glands, environment, heredity, neuroses, complexes, yet in the figure of the intelligent and tolerant young doctor the author has provided his readers with a perfect modern knight for a hero."

+ Nation 130:304 Mr 12 '30 200w

"The facile pen of Sir Philip Gibbs is wielded by one who has gleaned the disillusion of modern civilization but still retained an almost child-like, sentimental faith in the ultimate goodness of human nature, whose prose has splendid balance, who is sure of his characters, knows his environment and has something definite to say. 'The Hidden City' leaves the reader with a feeling of having penetrated slightly beneath the surface of something real, tragic and worth while."

+ N Y Times p8 F 9 '30 470w

"A simple, mechanical plot involving many of the doctor's patients holds the book together, and the doctor and his sister, although they are wooden puppets like the rest, command sympathetic interest. As a collection of case-histories, The Hidden City should be absorbing enough to those who enjoy popular psychoanalysis and popularized social problems. It is pretty dull stuff as a novel."

— + Outlook 154:188 Ja 29 '30 240w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

Pratt p39 summer '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p767 O 3 '29 280w

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. King's favourite; the love story of Robert Carr and Lady Essex. 320p il $3.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Hutchinson]

B or 92 Somerset, Robert Carr, earl of. Essex, Frances (Howard) Devereux, countess of

Here is given the first full life of Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset, favorite of James I of England and lover of the notorious Lady Frances Howard, wife of the Earl of Essex. After obtaining a divorce from her first husband, Lady Frances married her lover, and instigated the poisoning of Sir Thomas Overbury.

Bookm 71:iv Je '30 150w

Books p15 Ag 3 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p1 My 31 '30 380w

"Perhaps if the book were not so well documented it would make swifter reading, though the lurid story of Lady Essex and the Earl of Somerset provides excitement a-plenty, swift reading or no." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 200w

"The story is told with much detail and in a style at once unassuming and adequate. We are, indeed, reduced to one criticism. In such literature, an invaluable quality is suspense. We think that sometimes Sir Philip, anxious to allow coming events to cast their shadows before, is apt to release his secrets in advance." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p11 Ap 27 '30 1500w

"With all the thrills and all the suspense and all the deep-dyed plotting, I find this book the least readable of the twenty-five books on the shelf of Sir Philip. He has written it so well, he has established his case with so much authority that he has rather overproved it. The book is written with all the conviction that should go into a lawyer's brief, but with little of the charm that we have come to expect from a volume of biography." Bellamy Partridge

— + N Y World p10m Ap 20 '30 600w

"Apart from this crime-story, which has all the elements of a 'thriller,' Sir Philip gives us a very vivid and realistic picture of the life of this period and thereby makes his book of wide interest."

+ Outlook 154:628 Ap 16 '30 280w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Since then; the disturbing story of the world at peace. 469p $3.75 Harper [15s Heinemann]

940.5 Europe—History—1914-. European war, 1914-1918—Influence and results 30-30351

Beginning with Armistice day Sir Philip Gibbs deals with the problems which have confronted the world in the twelve years since then. Of most of the events in Germany, Russia, Hungary, Poland, Austria, Italy, England and America, the author has been an eyewitness.

"A liberal-minded fellow Philip Gibbs certainly is—liberal-minded and peace-loving—and if there is any bias in his new book it is the bias of a man who has seen war and hates it, a man who is now seeing tyranny, and hates that, too. He is also a great journalist and without a peer as a reporter of history in the making. This is the mind, the emotional bias, the technical equipment behind this story of the world since the Armistice. When it is narrative this book is brilliant, exciting." George Seldes

Books p1 N 9 '30 2250w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '30 2000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '30

"His understanding of national psychology is highly developed, his analysis of the 'imponderables' of international relations particularly keen. Any one may test his knowledge of other nations by reading his impressions of his visits to America which will be found both shrewd and fair. 'Since Then,' despite many brilliant pages, seems at times a too casual and too meager account, with reminiscences of perhaps unimportant encounters taking the place of solid matter that might be got by 'digging.'"

+ — N Y Times p12 D 7 '30 550w

"Admirers of Sir Philip Gibbs—they are legion—will not be disappointed by his latest book. . . The writer displays the same zest and conviction that have characterized all his previous efforts."

+ Sat R 150:646 N 15 '30 180w

"This is a book for the man in the street, an experiment which was well worth making, since indifference to foreign affairs among Englishmen is now definitely a thing of the past."

+ Spec 145:730 N 15 '30 220w

"Sir Philip Gibbs has a remarkable gift for descriptive writing. His history of the world since the Peace has something of the filmlike quality which he notes as characteristic of modern life, and his narrative is so uniformly vivid that, were he not careful to tell them, his readers would never know when he was describing what he had seen himself and when he was relying on the evidence of others."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1017 N 27 '30 280w

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Wings of adventure, and other little novels. 331p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-25905

Ten novelettes, the majority of which deal with characters in post-war England. The first story is about an attempted cross-Atlantic flight. Contents: The wings of adventure; The soul of honour; The Provençal dancers; The dragoman of Cairo; A prisoner of war; The lover of her dreams; A sergeant of chasseurs; A garret in Paris; Portrait of the artist's wife; The key of life.

"If Mr. Gibbs's style is more that of a journalist and his little novels lack the close-knit structure one is accustomed to find in the American short story, he has more than balanced this by the qualities of reality and humanness which characterize them. They are like episodes gathered from a rich and varied experience and recounted informally for a group of friends." Elizabeth Dosser

+ Bookm 72:176 O '30 320w

"Sir Philip does some skillful descriptive reporting in this book, mixing at times with really poignant drama. And he has besides a keen curiosity concerning people, the ability to make them appear vividly alive. Unless, however, one happens to share his special view of life, one will find him here—as in most of his books—a bit sentimental."

+ — Books p21 N 16 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p3 O 4 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p144 N '30

"There are some capital short stories in 'The Wings of Adventure,' some so topical, like the one that gives the title to the book, as to recall recent happenings. Others, including 'The Soul of Honour,' are gleaned from the harvest of the war, a harvest of Dead Sea fruit. 'The Provençal Dancer' fails to grip, and that perhaps because Sir Philip Gibbs has been too intent upon whitening a sepulchre. Otherwise, the tales are vivid and interesting." K. C. Tomlinson

+ — Nation and Ath 47:740 S 13 '30 80w

"Tenderness could be said to be the keynote of all these 'little novels,' a tenderness grown out of sympathy with all men and a belief that they have all something fine in them. They are just such tales as an observing and compassionate writer could build from the human material he sees around him every day."

+ N Y Times p6 O 5 '30 600w

"Philip Gibbs has a happy and dynamic faculty of making the reader believe and feel with his characters until you lose sight entirely of the fact that it is merely a story that you are reading. This he has done especially well in 'The Wings of Adventure,' which is not a novel but a collection of ten long short stories or short novelettes, as you choose to consider them. Some of them are almost worth having made a full novel of; others are treated just about as they are worth; most of them are unusually interesting, dramatic, and full of the real people that Mr. Gibbs seems to get inside of so clearly."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:166 S 27 '30 220w

"His tales are at least effective and readable, their best feature being the colour drawn from a wide experience of men and countries." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 145:319 S 6 '30 100w

"Sir Philip Gibbs attempts, with varying success, to translate the sentimental into the terms of the matter-of-fact. The stories have a core of false sentimentality wrapped round with a protective covering of matter-of-fact dialogue and reasoning, but while the existence of the core is to be deplored, it would be most unfair not to give Sir Philip the credit of contriving a most convincing disguise for it. He is also a sufficiently accomplished writer to stifle the most discerning reader's objections until the story has been read through from start to finish."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p685 Ag 28 '30 280w

GIBSON, WALTER BROWN. Houdini's escapes; prepared from Houdini's private notebooks and memoranda with the assistance of Beatrice Houdini, and Bernard M. L. Ernst. 317p il $3 Harcourt
2

793.8 Houdini, Harry. Conjuring 30-29110

From a collection of Houdini's own notes and drawings explanatory of many of his famous tricks, the author has drawn most of the material for this book. While, according to Mr Gibson, it was Houdini's wish that several of his famous escapes should be publicly explained, certain of the more original escapes he preferred not to make public. Among the devices exposed in the present volume are several forms of handcuff, cabinet and rope escapes, underwater escapes, and escapes from trunks, barrels, coffins, etc.

Booklist 27:195 Ja '31

"The book will be of great help to those who want to know how the impossible is accomplished and will be of considerable satisfaction to the insatiably curious, but it is unlikely, unfortunately, that it will produce another Houdini." John Mullholland

Books p21 N 2 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30

"Whoever wants to know how this famous worker of magic did his amazing stunts can have all the illusion taken out of a great many of them by reading this book. But his wonder, curiosity and admiration will simply be transferred from the things that were done to the man who did them, because of his ingenuity, resourcefulness, physical strength and agility and marvelous skill. . . In the introductory chapters and more or less throughout the book Mr. Gibson analyzes, describes and comments on the personal characteristics and distinctive methods which enabled Houdini to gain his results. This makes a very interesting factor of the exposition, but it would be more effective if its tone were less that of fulsome eulogy."

+ — N Y Times p37 N 16 '30 350w

GIDE, ANDRE PAUL GUILLAUME. Immoralist; tr. from the French by Dorothy Bussy. 214p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-10247

Published in France in 1902, L'Immoraliste was Gide's earliest study of the "puritan" conscience. Michel, a young and studious archaeologist of a rather frigid temperament, contracts tuberculosis on his honeymoon in northern Africa. All that follows, against a shifting background, in Algeria, Sicily, Normandy—his discovery of the body as a source of pleasure as well as pain, his cult of the natural man, his pursuit of evil, the enigmatic and tragic history of his domestic relations—is the result of the destructon of Michel's moral fibre by sickness and climate. The book opens after the death of Marceline, his wife, when he summons three old friends to his Algerian estate to tell them his story.

GIDE, A. P. G.—Continued
Booklist 27:28 S '30

"The Immoralist, true to form, barely holds the reader's interest with an unfulfilled promise which deceives him in the end." Peter Vincent
— Bookm 71:327 Je '30 400w

"'The Immoralist' is pregnant with the veritable human. It bristles with accidents, it bleeds and blooms with thorns and roses, with agony and mercy." Angel Flores
+ Books p4 Ap 13 '30 600w

"As a psychological study, as a work of art, 'The Immoralist' is almost a masterpiece. The mental change in Michel and his moral disintegration are made thoroughly convincing; they do not proceed step by step like a logical theorem, but with those advances and recessions so frequent in life. Michel's drift toward homosexuality, in particular, is suggested with the utmost delicacy and skill. Admirably translated by Dorothy Bussy, the book is written in a graceful idyllic prose. It is a novel that puts to the test once more two dubious, weather-beaten words, for it is completely 'classical' in form and completely 'romantic' in message." Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 130:491 Ap 23 '30 900w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 850w

"Compared with Dostoevsky, Gide seems a little too 'exquisite'; the incidents which illustrate and the characters which exemplify his meaning have too often a literary effectiveness about them instead of an inspired truth. But in its simplicity of line 'The Immoralist' shows, as never again so clearly, the true interests of the man who wrote it." Louis Kronenberger
+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 20 '30 1050w

"'The Immoralist' is one of Gide's best novels because the theme is here explicitly stated, developed with beauty and address, and we do not feel that the problem has been barrenly spread before us; it walks evenly with the evolution of the story, and it comes to rest (although it is not quite solved) when the story quietly closes, on the last page." Pierre Loving
+ N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 900w

"Gide, interested between the conflict of puritan and pagan, examines every oblique angle of human behavior, turns his clear eyes into the obscure corners of the soul. In The Immoralist he illustrates the conflicting pulls of self-development and self-sacrifice. The moral of the story seems to be that he who loseth his life shall find it, for Michel, having found his life, does not know what to do with it. The Immoralist, like all of Gide's books, is rewarding and provocative reading." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:627 Ap 16 '30 300w

"A marvellous story. It is superlatively told, with Strindberg's strange power of making the first sentence portend tragedy; and the spiritual fate of the protagonists is followed by the suspense that, at the other extreme, Wilkie Collins could give to more palpable, but not more exciting, mysteries." Osbert Burdett
+ Sat R 150:263 Ag 30 '30 1000w

"The ideas are frequently confused and confusing, as in all that Gide writes, yet the attraction of an active and inquisitive mind expressing itself in an exquisite prose will remain, no matter what conflicting conclusions may be drawn from the author's prolongation of the last century's search after sensation, curiosities, and the charms of irrational living. Gide's 'Immoralist' is in any case a figure of universal knowledge in France, a type as well known and of considerably greater influence now than Huysman's more effete 'Des Esseintes.'"
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1147 Je 21 '30 380w
Spec 145:806 N 22 '30 150w

GIDE, ANDRE PAUL GUILLAUME. School for wives; tr. from the French by Dorothy Bussy. 116p $2 Knopf

29-18949

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:281 Ap '30

"It is the fashion to call 'L'Ecole des Femmes' either Gide's best book, or else not Gide at all. Both statements are true in a sense; there is in 'L'Ecole des Femmes' a sensitiveness and charm which are new to Gide: they combine with his subtle penetration and wit to make a very remarkable study indeed." H. J. B. Lintott
+ Nation and Ath 47:58 Ap 12 '30 150w

"The two parts of the diary are admirably balanced; there is, perhaps, a shade too much of caricature in the Robert of the early part, written by the worshipping fiancée; but in the second part, written by the disappointed wife, sixteen years later, there is a niceness of truth, a precise quality of characterisation that should make the book classical."
+ New Statesman 35:24 Ap 12 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:12 F '30
Sat R 149:453 Ap 12 '30 320w

"The book is remarkable only for its gradual and delicate revelation of a change of heart. The book is slight, but within its limitations is admirably handled."
+ Spec 144:791 My 10 '30 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p396 My 8 '30 220w

GIDE, ANDRE PAUL GUILLAUME. Travels in the Congo; tr. from the French by Dorothy Bussy. 375p il $5 Knopf

916.72 Africa, French Equatorial—Description and travel. Kamerun—Description and travel 29-13239

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Cleveland Open Shelf p11 Ja '30

"M. Gide has given us a diary that is not only full of objective interest, but is delightful as an intimate revelation of his own temperament."
+ Nation and Ath 46:738 Mr 1 '30 460w

"The reader should feel no disappointment at finding this no scientific record: beyond an amateur interest in the more remarkable fauna of the tropics, and to some greater extent in the lepidoptera and flora, the author had not the equipment for systematic observation. But nevertheless, as a vivid impressionistic picture of life and travel in tropical Africa, it has a value."
+ Nature 125:596 Ap 19 '30 200w

"His travel-jottings have a delightful living quality, and the black youths and maidens, whom he admires, stand out solid, charming and robust."
+ New Statesman 34:606 F 15 '30 170w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:79 N '29
Sat R 149:271 Mr 1 '30 220w

"A big, broadminded book, packed with a variety of interesting information."
+ Spec 144:438 Mr 15 '30 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p384 My 8 '30 750w

"The name André Gide is in itself an assurance of excellence. The famous French writer travelled in certain parts of French Equatorial Africa, commonly called the French Congo, and wrote, in his own language, vivid descriptions of what he saw. His remarkable narrative is charmingly translated." H. G. Bayer
+ Yale R n s 19:853 summer '30 400w

GIDE, CHARLES. Communist and co-operative colonies; tr. by Ernest F. Row. 223p $2.50 Crowell [7s 6d Harrap]

335 Communism Agr30-847

A history of communitarian societies that were founded in the nineteenth century, chiefly in America. Among these religious, socialistic, anarchist, agrarian and cooperative colonies which the author discusses are the Jesuit republics of Paraguay, the Owenite and Icarian colonies in the United States, the Free Society of Vaux, and the Zionist colonies in Palestine.

Booklist 27:50 O '30
Books p10 O 19 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 250w

"Altogether M. Gide's book is an excellent work, brightly enough written to absolve Communist literature from the author's own accusation of invariable dullness."
+ Christian Science Monitor p6 O 11 '30 300w

"On the whole, Professor Gide's work is interesting and doubtless valuable for the restricted field it covers, but it is essentially without importance when looked upon in relation to the vast problems of economics and government today."
— + Nation 131:684 D 17 '30 200w
N Y Times p16 Je 22 '30 380w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30
St Louis 28:231 O '30
Spec 145:317 S 6 '30 380w
Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 50w

"Though unscientific and occasionally incorrect, Professor Gide's account of the Utopians is thoughtful and suggestive. It provides pleasant reading for economists and other serious persons, and is a useful contribution to social history. The translation is clear and good."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p468 Je 5 '30 1150w

GIESEN, JOHN, and MALUMPHY, THOMAS L'HERBETTE. Backgrounds of biology. 278p il $2.50 Bruce pub.
570 Biology 29-21412

A text book on the fundamentals of biology, principally for students just beginning a study of the science. The authors are members of the department of biology at Holy Cross college, Worcester, Massachusetts.

"This is a textbook of elementary biology prepared by teachers in Holy Cross College. It is diagrammatic in its presentation of its facts and in places dogmatic in its assertions of the limitations and inadequacy of many current biological hypotheses including, for example, Darwinism, the tropism theory of Loeb, and eugenics. Orthodox biologists will find it interesting reading. There are excellent chapters on infection and immunity." C. A. Kofold
Am J Pub Health 20:337 Mr '30 80w

"This volume furnishes an accurate background for a proper approach to many a modern problem, distinguishing as it does proved fact from mere hypothesis, a distinction often lost sight of in many more pretentious works."
+ Cath World 131:253 My '30 100w
St Louis 28:98 Ap '30

GIFFEN, MORRISON BEALL. Fashoda; the 2 incident and its diplomatic setting. 230p $3 Univ. of Chicago press [13s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
962.9 Fashoda. Sudan, Egyptian—History. French in Sudan 30-13669

"The first complete exposition of the colonial crisis of 1898, when France and England vied with each other for possession of the rich Fashoda region in the upper Nile Valley of Central Africa. It is based on state documents of the period and delves into the wider European significance of the episodes."—Publisher's note

---

"This study, in contrast to many monographs, is concise and interpretative rather than exhaustive and indeterminate. The policy of England and France toward the Sudan is traced with skill and clarity and the Fashoda incident correctly placed in its larger setting—the Egyptian question. . . Mr. Giffen's work [is] a distinctive contribution to recent diplomatic history." O. J. Hale
+ Am Hist R 36:150 O '30 550w

"Presents an excellent picture of this late nineteenth-century episode."
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:790 Ag '30 100w

"A fresh and thorough account of one of the most famous diplomatic incidents of contemporary times. . . The book may well serve as a model for the historical treatment of subjects of this type."
+ Hist Outlook 21:342 N '30 200w
St Louis 28:205 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p619 Jl 31 '30 950w

GILBERT, ANTHONY. Mystery of the open window. 307p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Gollancz]
30-1936

The body of Sir Hector Ascher, book collector, was found by Scott Egerton, English detective, in the Poisson d'Or hotel in an obscure street of Paris. The window was open; the trunk which had contained some of Ascher's valuable books had been rifled. The condition and position of the body, however, point to the fact that the murder did not take place in the hotel room in Paris; but that the body had been conveyed, in the lower compartment of the trunk, by the murderer himself—impersonating Ascher. A series of false trails, masqueradings, and diverse clues are investigated by Egerton before he stumbles onto the true and simple solution of the crime.

Bookm 71:xxxi Mr '30 30w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p18 Ja 19 '30 120w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 320w

" 'The Mystery of the Open Window' is in the higher class of detective story. Mr. Gilbert occasionally writes with a certain clumsy obscurity which prevents one being carried away with immediate excitement. On the other hand, he plays fair, keeps to the rules, and provides one at the end with a genuine surprise. Many detective stories begin well and tail off sadly towards the end. Mr. Gilbert's fault is of the opposite and nobler order."
+ Nation and Ath 46:180 N 2 '29 100w

"It is a good yarn, but there are times when the author's desire to set the reader on the wrong track is a bit too evident."
+ — N Y Times p24 Ja 26 '30 100w
N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 250w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:150 Ja 22 '30 80w

"Though ingeniously constructed, and although the identity of the murderer is difficult to guess until actually revealed, this exciting story yet leaves a certain disappointment behind it. It lacks one of the essential characteristics of the good detective story: it is impossible for the reader to be cleverer than the detective; and that not because the detective is so overwhelmingly clever, but because the story itself is not convincing, and there is not sufficient motive for the murder."
— + Spec 143:470 O 5 '29 120w

"A capital, if decidedly gruesome, story, told with a sense of style, an eye for character, and even the saving grace of a humorous touch here and there."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p825 O 17 '29 180w

GILBERT, ANTHONY. Night of the fog. 287p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Gollancz]
30-29829

Anonymous letters threatening the life of Jasper Hilton because of his miserly treatment of relatives and employees, act as prelude to the murder of the man. Those who have reason to benefit by Hilton's death are many: greatest suspicion falls upon the nephew, his young wife, and her lover. Scott Egerton, liberal M.P. and amateur sleuth, solves the mystery.

"A clever, clean-cut mystery."
+ Bookm 72:xxv N '30 50w

GILBERT, ANTHONY—Continued

"This one is respectable mystery in its right mind, for those who like to take part in the game of detection." Will Cuppy

+ Books O 26 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:348 O 29 '30 200w

"If you can overlook one serious error, by all means don't miss this book." R. I. Center

+ Sat R of Lit 7:374 N 22 '30 180w

Spec 145:806 N 22 '30 100w

GILBERT, GEORGE HOLLEY. Christian content of the Bible; or, The Bible reduced to the standard in Jesus. 207p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

220.6 Bible—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Jesus Christ—Words 30-3329

In this interpretation of the Bible according to the standards and teachings of Jesus, George Holley Gilbert has gathered together from the Bible those specific passages that seem best to reflect the real spirit of Christ, thus making the Christian message more accessible to the average reader.

Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '30 500w

Christian Century 47:599 My 7 '30 350w

"Another futile attempt to articulate Christianity's essence."

— J Religion 10:458 Jl '30 100w

"Practically every one of the author's sweeping negations has been met and successfully confuted by the saintly and learned writers of our age, and there are abundant numbers of Christian scholars who have effectively disputed every one of his attacks upon the Catholic faith in our Lord's Deity and incarnation. We welcome this book, however, and commend it to the Christian reader as a striking example of the weakness and captiousness which are inseparable from any denials of our Lord's eternal Godhead." J. H. Hopkins

— Living Church 83:53 My 10 '30 420w

"This is an excellent beginning to a task which an increasing number of spiritual leaders feel to be necessary." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 154:270 F 12 '30 100w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

GILES, DOROTHY. Road through Spain. 408p pl $5 Penn

914.6 Spain—Description and travel 29-20896

"A chatty tale of the travels of two adaptable American women who toured Spain in the Ford, Ximena, going down the east coast from Barcelona to Valencia, Alicante, Malaga and Cadiz, and north from Cadiz to Sevilla, Guadalupe, Toledo, Madrid, Segovia, Vigo and crossing to the island of Majorca. The background of each place visited is given full value, but some knowledge of history is assumed."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Boston Transcript p7 N 16 '29 800w

"Miss Giles possesses a journalistic eye and the divine gift of humor, which are enchantingly evidenced in the fabric of this volume. It is rich in photographic illustration and ought not to be overlooked in the compilation of holiday book lists." G. E. S.

+ Churchman p16 D 7 '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '29

St Louis 28:51 F '30

"The author is sometimes at odds with Noah Webster on questions of orthography, and proofreaders had some dust on their glasses, but the book is bright and chatty, and is generously supplied with illustrations."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 21 '30 420w

GILFILLAN, ARCHER BUTLER. Sheep. 272p il $2.50 Little

636.3 Sheep. Stock-ranges 29-24064

A modern shepherd who tends his flocks on a South Dakota range, who has lived in a cabin on wheels, and whose only friends are his sheep and the prairie animals, describes his life and records his philosophy of life. Reprinted from the Atlantic monthly, with illustrations by Kurt Wiese.

Booklist 26:148 Ja '30

"Mr. Gilfillan has written a history of his vocation which will scarcely tempt you to follow in his footsteps, but which turns out to be a surprisingly diverting document. Now and then he waxes rather laboriously witty about the fluency and frequency of a herder's profanity, but his narrative imparts the real flavor of life on the plains."

+ — Books p18 F 23 '30 140w

"Full of local color in undiluted dyes, full of personality, and full of a dry, prairie-ish sort of humor that is refreshing and tantalizing. You have seen sheep, you have heard of herding, but have you ever learned first-hand, in an amusement kind of way, of the daily life of the herder or of the maddening whimsy and unaccountable temperamentality of sheep?" M. E. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

"It is essentially a book for the connoisseur in curious modes of life, for those who like to savor the unusual in attitudes toward modern civilization, for whoever prizes in the printed page the expression of vigorous and distinctive personality. A captious reader will doubtless find that sometimes it is a bit forced and again spun out too far, but even he will have many a hearty chuckle and many an explosive laugh over the author's dry humor."

+ — N Y Times p3 N 10 '29 700w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:24 F '30 220w

St Louis 28:51 F '30

"Delightful sketches of the life of a sheep herder. Written with dry humor, keen observation and real love of the sheep."

+ Wis Lib Bul 25:411 D '29

GILKEY, JAMES GORDON. Solving life's everyday problems. 233p $1.75 Macmillan

170 Conduct of life. Christian life 30-25734

Dr Gilkey's little essays on the art of living are designed to be helpful to the average person, who needs practical advice on how best to adjust his personality to the consciousness of the social group. There are chapters on such topics as finding happiness in an ordinary career, taking second place gracefully, keeping life reasonably simple, and increasing one's chances of achievement.

Booklist 27:186 Ja '31

"Certainly there is in these pages an excessive dilution of thought with anecdote, and an overdose here and there of Pollyanna. But if criticism of this kind is easy, it is also unfair. No one who has not tried it can know how difficult is the task to which Dr. Gilkey set himself in this volume, and how skillfully he has performed it. . . To this undertaking Dr. Gilkey brought the resources of a trained mind richly stored from the treasuries of literature and life, a discerning because sympathetic insight into human nature, a basically sound philosophy and a reasonable faith. We do not wonder that the common people hear this preacher gladly." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p14 D 7 '30 250w

Christian Century 47:1496 D 3 '30 80w

"Doctor Gilkey has given the public in this volume a very practical piece of reading with a very rare merit; it is absorbingly interesting. For those who are faced with the constant task of finding fresh material for addresses and sermons it will prove helpful, not only because it will furnish just such material, but better still, because it will show them how skillfully such material can be put to use." G. F. Finnie

+ Crozer Q 8:127 Ja '31 180w

"In the discussion of each of these problems, Dr. Gilkey shows that he has keen insight into human nature and warm and understanding sympathy with its troubles."
+ N Y Times p25 N 23 '30 180w
St Louis 28:288 D '30

GILKYSON, THOMAS WALTER. Lights of fame. 310p $2.50 Scribner
30-10713

Lisa Wyngarde, prominent in Philadelphia society, has married Rupert Herron, a novelist. John Stair, a brilliant scientist, is still in love with Lisa. Herron gets involved in an affair with an actress, and becomes mixed up in a plot which leads to trouble for John thru a power syndicate that is a rival of his cousin Jeremy's company. Lisa realizes in full the kind of self-centered man she has married when Rupert leaves her; but the book reaches a happy ending when John Stair is at last free to declare his love for her.

"In spite of the melodramatic quality of its plot 'Lights of Fame' is miraculously not cheap. Mr. Gilkyson writes well and effectively and sometimes even beautifully. Yet somewhere, and for an indefinable reason, 'Lights of Fame' falls short of true excellence. It is uniformly an interesting novel, but the impression which it leaves with the reader is one of confusion."
— + N Y Times p8 Ap 27 '30 500w

"The plot is obvious and somewhat melodramatic, but it is the plausible frame-work upon which a skilful and finished novelist has erected an interesting structure of social criticism, adorned by some realistic scenes and by a devastating but truthful portrait of the artist as villain of the piece." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:626 Ap 16 '30 180w

"Mr. Gilkyson plays with currently interesting ideas in his novel, and it is often pleasant to watch his mind dart here and there. But as a narrative, 'Lights of Fame' does not quite come off; it is too thinly scattered, lacking force and direction."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1131 Je 14 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 150w

GILL, MABEL SPICER. Huttee Boy of the jungle. 184p il $1.25 Sully
29-21175

Stories about the life and adventures and friends of Huttee Boy, a baby elephant who lived in the jungle.

"A pleasant little book understandingly illustrated." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p11m D 29 '29 50w

"An altogether delightful little volume for juvenile readers."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 200w

GILLIS, WILLIAM ROBERT. Gold rush days with Mark Twain; with an introd. by Cyril Clemens. 264p il $4 Boni

B or 92 Clemens, Samuel Langhorne (Mark Twain, pseud.). California—Gold discoveries
30-16386

William Gillis and his two brothers, Steve and Jim, were friends of Mark Twain in California during the gold rush. The author spins many yarns about these wild and lawless days, and tells a good many anecdotes centering about Sam Clemens. He reveals the fact that, while Sam liked to play practical jokes himself, he wasn't always a good sport when the joke was on him.

"Very entertaining and interesting, and a valuable, if somewhat slight addition to Americana. Glintenkamp's woodcuts are faithful to the period, and are among the artist's best." Coley Taylor
+ Bookm 71:456 Jl '30 220w

"The interest of the book is not so much in its specific revelations about Mark Twain as in the picture it gives of the newspaper life in gold-rush California, where both Mark Twain and Bret Harte got their early training. . . Mr. Gillis's book, telling of those days in their own idiom, is truly a voice out of the past, and that is what gives it its value." Harvey Fergusson
+ Books p5 My 11 '30 950w
Boston Transcript p1 My 24 '30 600w

"The title of the book is somewhat misleading, and the reader will be disappointed who expects to find Mark Twain continuously present; nor does it seem to the present reader that what is here recorded about him is essentially of much interest or importance. Often (with or without the presence of Mark Twain) these recollections of an old Forty-niner are interesting; yet one may feel that they would have been more interesting by word of mouth than in a book. Nor, again, do they add materially to what the reader already has read somewhere about the time and place."
— + Christian Science Monitor p6 O 14 '30 320w
N Y Times p4 My 25 '30 770w

"It cannot be said that the book adds much to our knowledge of Mark. . . Apart from the Twain reminiscences, the book has pictorial value as showing the rough old times. Perhaps it comes closer to actuality than the highly romantic and artfully fictionized tales of Bret Harte and others."
Outlook 155:105 My 21 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30
St Louis 28:217 S '30

"A slight, but apparently authentic book, and amusing."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1147 Je 21 '30 420w

GILLMOR, FRANCES. Windsinger. 218p $2 Minton
30-28267

The story of Windsinger, the Navajo prophet, who was born when "the moon fainted," orphaned at an early age, became leader of the tribal chants, married a beautiful girl, but never forgot the high destiny to which he believed he had been called. The author has spent considerable time among the Navajos and learned a great deal, first hand, of the native customs and superstitions.

"This is a simple tale; hardly a story at all, it seems to flow so smoothly. There is a lyrical quality to the author's prose that makes it at times almost poetry. The pictures of Navajo life are colorful with both sensual and spiritual color. One reads the book with the feeling that here is something which is both beautiful and fundamentally true."
+ Bookm 72:307 N '30 280w

"'Windsinger' is a story of people whose gods are not our gods; of superstitions which are not ours. The beliefs of the Navajos are treated with beautiful simplicity and acceptance by Miss Gillmor, and in her hands the reverence of a people whom science has not yet touched takes on an archaic beauty."
+ Books p7 O 5 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p4 N 29 '30 180w

"Miss Gillmor has mastered her material. She presents in brilliant pageantry the hogans, the camp-fires, the ceremonial dances and the colored deserts of the Navajos. But there is lacking in 'Windsinger' the simplicity and reality which one felt in 'Laughing Boy.' Windsinger himself never fully materializes as a living and comprehensible character; he remains always a strange and shadowy figure, part of his remote and exotic background."
— + N Y Times p7 O 5 '30 500w

GILMORE, ALBERT FIELD. Fellowship; the biography of a man and a business. 287p il $3.50 Stratford

B or 92 Howard, Clarence Henry. Commonwealth steel company 30-3337

The biography of Clarence H. Howard, head of the Commonwealth steel company, located in East St Louis. The greater part of the biography is devoted to an exposition of Mr Howard's idea of fellowship, as embodied in his commonwealth plan, in the running of his plant.

"Added interest is given the technical survey of the processes of the manufacture of cast steel devices for railroad equipment by Dr. Gilmore's gratefully clear descriptions. Even the reader entirely ignorant of the simplest principles of mechanics can—and will—enjoy the 'biography of a business' as much in its way as the 'biography of a man.' " F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 22 '30 1050w

"The author of this dual biography has succeeded in gaining an extraordinarily correct perspective of the principal characters in his entertaining study of men, events and things. The impartial analyst will, it is believed, accord to the volume a distinct niche in a somewhat crowded shelf of distinguished books." F. L. Perrin

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '30 650w

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 100w

"The greater part of Mr. Gilmore's biography, although it contains also some personal matter about Mr. Howard and some account of the material development of the Commonwealth Steel Company, is devoted to detailed exposition and discussion of Mr. Howard's idea of fellowship in the plant, the methods by which he has realized his desire, and the results that have been achieved. The point of view, of course, is friendly and admiring, but the volume is well worth the study of any industrial executive."

+ N Y Times p18 F 2 '30 420w

GIMMAGE, PETER. Picture book of ships. 64p il $2 Macmillan

623.8 Ships—Juvenile literature 30-14169

All varieties of craft are described and pictured—"little fellas" like the canoe and dory, sailboats and sailing ships, steamers and motor boats. The illustrations are both in black and white and in color.

Booklist 27:32 S '30

Bookm 72:xxviii N '30 30w

"The simple, easy style and gay poster-like drawings should make this book invaluable to children interested in boats. I know of no other one book in which such complete information is given so clearly and graphically. Adults as well as children will find it useful." John Davis

+ Books p8 Jl 27 '30 450w

"Contains a mine of information on a generally interesting subject. . . Not only boys and girls but older people will enjoy these drawings and descriptions of all types of craft. Schools and libraries will find the book useful. It is simple enough for the 8-year-old, without being too juvenile for 12-year-olds and it appeals to both boys and girls." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 150w

St Louis 28:220 S '30

"A delightful book on ships, describing them simply but truly, and picturing them in the many fascinating aspects which interpret them. There is a good bit of seamanship, set forth simply and correctly. This is a book to recommend to youngsters just becoming aware of the ancient lure of the sea—it starts them right and is a bright, seamanlike job." Felix Riesenberg

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 60w

GINI, CORRADO, and others. Population. (Lectures on the Harris foundation, 1929) 312p il $3 Univ. of Chicago press [13s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

312 Population 30-17279

"The major part of the space in the book is taken up by Corrado Gini's presentation of his studies and conclusions concerning the birth, evolution, revival and death of nations. He believes in the theory of the cyclical rise and fall of populations and not at all in the Malthusian assumption of the geometric increase of population, and in vigorous, lucid and effective style he sets forth the observations, the statistical facts and the arguments that have convinced him that the biologic urge to reproduction runs in cycles in races as in individuals and that therefore national or racial groups have their life spans."—N Y Times

Books p17 O 19 '30 250w

"The book is a scholarly and thought-provoking discussion of an important controversial problem and merits careful consideration by those interested in the future of our race." J. F. Steiner

+ Int J Ethics 41:267 Ja '31 550w

"Gini's main argument is interesting rather than convincing." J. J. Spengler

Nation 131:250 S 3 '30 380w

"It is perhaps captious to criticize, in a book that gives so much that is valuable, any omissions. Nevertheless, it is striking that there does not appear a single table presenting the expectation of life of the various countries of the world, though occasional references to the subject are to be found. Yet the expectation of life is one of the most important of all the concepts in population theory, and, incidentally, one of the most difficult to find accurate data upon. Also it is surprising to find so little space given to the topic of birth control, which is the most important recent feature in population theory, and the most significant factor in modern population trends." H. P. Fairchild

+ — New Repub 65:51 N 26 '30 1050w

N Y Times p24 S 7 '30 230w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

GINZBURG, BENJAMIN. Adventure of science. 487p $5 Simon & Schuster

509 Science—History. Scientists 30-29485

Interpretative and analytical lectures on the achievements and theories of the world's great scientists: Copernicus, Galileo, William Harvey, Sir Isaac Newton, Michael Faraday, Charles Darwin, Pasteur, and Albert Einstein. The material in the book was originally delivered as a course of lectures at the New School for Social Research of New York City.

" 'The Adventure of Science' is neither a dry and detailed historical record nor a conscious 'humanization' written for popular appeal. It is a rich story of the intellectual atmosphere and of the great minds in which our universe took form. If it simplifies the picture and eliminates detail it does so only as good drama does, by presenting a series of illuminating scenes which are the great moments." Gerald Wendt

+ Books p7 N 30 '30 850w

"A very readable popularization." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:389 N 5 '30 50w

" 'What one gains from the book is not merely an impression of isolated careers in time, but a sense of an unbroken evolutionary movement, occurring not in nature but in the minds of man.' A rather careful reading leaves the reviewer persuaded that the author successfully accomplishes this result if only the reader will stand by him and finish the book. . . The work is most conscientiously and seriously done, and successfully presents science as an adventure. Few will read it without profit." H. P. Little

+ Sat R of Lit 7:422 D 6 '30 800w

GIONO, JEAN. Hill of destiny; introd. & tr. by Jacques Le Clercq. 266p $2.50 Brentano's 29-23129

"A charming idyl of peasant life in Southern France, full of delicate phantasy, beautiful descriptions of nature and homely philosophy. It is the first of a trilogy to be called Earth, and was awarded the Brentano Prize, the first American foundation to crown French work."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"This novel leaves a sensation of unreality despite beautiful writing and dramatic characterization. It excels in description of the land and the French peasants with their dark superstitions and unbelievable crudities."

Bookm 72:x S '30 100w

"There is a tenacious quality to the book; you read on until the covers are angrily snapped shut. It is an isolated chapter, an incompleted sentence, a non-entity. It is a merry-go-round that has no destination; merely the consummation of time. Commencing nowhere, it culminates at the same place. But it has the quality of strangeness."

+ Books p10 F 2 '30 230w

"One rejoices that such a story won the recognition of the Prix Brentano."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 27 '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '29

"An extraordinarily powerful book. The story of a little settlement of peasants in the foothills of the Alps, desperately and blindly defending itself against two mysterious enemies, nature and a guileful old paralytic in their own midst, yields to few books of the kind in vigor and baleful suggestiveness. It is remarkably well translated by Mr Le Clercq, who renders the Haute Provence dialect very successfully into a provincial English speech."

+ Nation 29:637 N 27 '29 160w

"M. Jean Giono's work is conspicuously imaginative and powerfully compressed." Vincent McHugh

+ N Y Evening Post p8m N 30 '29 350w

"M. Giono's voice is the voice of the realist; his accents are the accents of simplicity, power and a passionate feeling for a land and a people that he must love as well as understand. 'Hill of Destiny' is deservedly the Prix Brentano novel for 1928-29."

+ N Y Times p16 Jl 20 '30 250w

"It is an unusual and astonishing book. Redolent of the French soil, completely removed from the psychological studies of sophisticated groups, it goes back to the superstitions of simple people—the peasants of Haute Provence, whose life centres around a hill, Lure, which dominates their lives as it dominates the landscape." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p15 N 18 '29 350w

"Neither narrative, well conducted as it is, nor the atmosphere, which is accurate with the unconscious precision possible only to a man writing of his own region and his own people, make the book unusual. M. Giono's particular distinction lies in the emphasis which he puts on the unknown element, the hidden malice which accompanies every event of his story." Theodore Purdy, Jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 6:738 F 15 '30 400w

GLADSTONE, MARY. See Drew, M.

GLAISE VON HORSTENAU, EDMUND. Collapse of the Austro-Hungarian empire; tr. by Ian F. D. Morrow. 347p il $6.75 Dutton [25s Dent]
[2]

943.6 Austria—History. Hungary—History. European war, 1914-1918—Austria

A survey of the events that led up to the downfall of the Austro-Hungarian empire in the World war, which covers mainly the years 1916 to 1918. There is a bibliography, and an index of persons.

"Colonel von Glaise-Horstenau's narrative of the three years is by far the best and fullest yet produced in English, and is as interesting as it is important."

+ Spec 145:472 O 4 '30 200w

"Within limitations—unfortunately rather narrow limitations—this is an authoritative book. Before the collapse Colonel von Glaise-Horstenau was an officer in the Austrian army. The military tradition which then inspired his pen has not yet ceased to control it. Try as he will to be impartial, he cannot rid himself of the prejudices of his caste. . . Once his standpoint is allowed for Colonel von Glaise-Horstenau's weakness becomes his strength; for he writes like an officer and a gentleman and never flinches from the blunt truth."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1023 D 4 '30 1300w

GLASER, MRS DOROTHY. Brother Anselmo. 136p il $2.50 Brewer
29-30696

Brother Anselmo, in the Dominican monastery in Avignon where he was sent for training, dreamed of the joys of the world beyond. He thought of leaving the cloister; but his reading of four tales from the past gave him a new outlook on the meaning of life and a revaluation of the pleasures of worldly achievement.

Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 550w

"This little volume has a simple grace of format as of contents which will endear it to readers fortunate enough to come across it." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 153:547 D 4 '29 160w

"This small book is a series of studies in that incommensurate hunger that is beyond reason and without experience. The writer is initiate in the ruthless ways of beauty. She has here accomplished so rare a fusion of vision and design that the two cannot be considered apart. The words seem less the skilfully woven habit of thought than the surface of thought itself. As words indeed the content seems to have found its final form, and the only way to retell these stories would be to express them in music." Lola Ridge

+ Sat R of Lit 6:918 Ap 12 '30 550w

"This slim volume hides between its covers a wealth of philosophy glowing in the old monk's brief sagas of life like the richness of light falling through stained-glass windows across brown flagstones."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 130w

GLASGOW, ALICE. Bright tiger. 309p $2.50 Dial press
30-6542

New York in the years during and directly following the Civil war furnishes the background for this social romance. Stanton Plumer, ward of Darius Atterbury, is fourteen at the time of the draft riots. The story traces his subsequent adventures as a young man-about-town who has risen to success in the profession of political architect, and his various affairs with certain belles of the period. He becomes the lover of beautiful Alida Wyatt, his half-brother's fiancée, who dies from an illegal operation. Following the reversal of his fortunes, Stanton marries the chaste and pretty Hermine Geiger, daughter of a German banker.

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 71:475 Jl '30 180w

"For those who love New York 'Bright Tiger' brings the charm and color of far-off days, achieving its success chiefly through its skillful communication of the background and mood of the period. Once more Manhattan becomes a glamorous city, romantic with the personalities of Tweed, Jim Fisk and Josie Mansfield."

+ Books p29 Ap 13 '30 420w

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 220w

GLASGOW, ALICE—Continued

"There is in 'Bright-Tiger' little external or internal action, no dramatic structure, no sense of the significance and passage of human life; the whole point is simply that it is a narrative made to exhibit a time and place. The jacket copy challenges comparison of this book with those of Hergesheimer and Beer. How does it stand up? Feebly, feebly." C. A. Smart
— N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 450w

"It is difficult to take this book seriously. Miss Glasgow tries, by introducing such figures as Tweed, Jay Gould, Jim Fisk and his lady love, Josie Mansfield, to give the atmosphere of New York of the '60s, but they are as real as the scene on a backdrop of a rural stock company's stage. Why Miss Glasgow has chosen to add difficulty to a task it is obvious she found sufficiently trying is hard to understand."
— N Y Times p6 F 23 '30 500w

"Throughout, Miss Glasgow seems to be fond of melodramatic situations; there is seldom quiet or restraint. The clinical atmosphere attendant on Alida Wyatt's death is fully as coarse as the average reader's taste will permit. We sense continually an unpleasant bias towards sensationalism. Events of considerable interest are involved with the narrative, however."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1113 Je 7 '30 270w

GLASPELL, SUSAN (MRS NORMAN HAGHEJM MATSON). 2 Alison's house. 155p $2 French [7s 6d Gollancz]
812 31-226

The action of the play takes place on December 31, 1899. The family of a famous American poetess has gathered to close up the homestead, for the poetess has been dead many years and her aged sister, Agatha, can no longer be left alone. Completely broken by the unaccustomed stir and the thought of leaving her home Agatha wanders helplessly about. As the old century passes, she too passes on, after giving a portfolio of her sister's unpublished poems to her niece.

"The reader will find the story of Emily Dickinson coming between himself and Miss Glaspell's play every now and then, which is unjust to the play. Miss Glaspell's task was difficult; she had to tell the story and also convey something of the evanescent character of Alison herself. Although there are times in the early part of the play when both expression and development seem quite ordinary, there are excellent emotional passages toward the latter part of the play. It makes us wish that Miss Glaspell would write more often for the theatre." Harry Hansen
+ — N Y World p9 D 23 '30 280w

"Alison's House is a peculiarly exasperating piece of work. . . The play always seems on the point of getting somewhere and coming to life and, as far as I am concerned, never does. . . I am able to perceive and admire Miss Glaspell's careful, skilful and clear-cut characterization. Her characters are all real people still living under the spell of the retiring yet strangely powerful personality of the dead woman—call her Alison or Emily." Otis Chatfield-Taylor
— + Outlook 156:711 D 31 '30 280w

GLASS, FREDERICK JAMES. Composition and expression in landscape painting; a practical treatise. (New art lib.) 287p il $6 Lippincott [15s Seeley]
758 Landscape painting [30-26615]

Practical suggestions, for the beginning artist, on all details of composition and expression "from the preliminary sketch to the finished work in pencil, charcoal, pen and ink, watercolor, oil color, etching, aquatint, mezzotint, dry-point, wood and lino cutting, etc." The book contains illustrative sketches by the author, and 32 plates reproducing the work of great landscape artists.

Booklist 26:384 Jl '30
Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 370w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30
St Louis 28:266 N '30

"Mr. Glass would have done well to leave out his first two chapters, which only confuse the issue. When he comes to what may be called practical 'tips' for composition he has a good deal that is sensible to say. His diagrammatic drawings in the text are to the point; but he might easily have bettered his illustrations at the end. Such as they are, Mr. Glass makes good use of his illustrations, and his analyses of them from a formal point of view are worth reading."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p267 Mr 27 '30 770w

GLASS, MONTAGUE MARSDEN. You can't learn 'em nothin'. 320p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-3868

Eight short stories of the adventures in business or in love of some Jews of the younger generation, as recounted by the author of the Potash and Perlmutter stories.

Booklist 26:312 My '30
Books p19 My 4 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p47 Mr '30

"A little of this goes a long way, especially when the variations are neither frequent nor varied enough to keep interest from flagging. The ends of the stories are guessed long before the final paragraphs, and the characters are seldom more than a combination of a Jewish name, an eye for business, and a love of home, wife and children, the name alone being the distinguishing mark between one and another."
— N Y Times p25 F 9 '30 200w

GLASSMAN, DONALD. Jump! tales of the Caterpillar club. 321p il $3 Simon & Schuster
629.167 Parachutes. Aviators. Caterpillar club 30-9438

The Caterpillar club is an informal organization of persons—chiefly pilots of airplanes—who have saved their lives by jumping with a parachute from a disabled plane. The author recounts some breath-taking tales of famous jumps under terrifying circumstances, and of heroism in the face of death, including jumps made by Lindbergh, king of the Caterpillars. The latter part of the book contains a history of the parachute from its theoretical inception by Leonardo da Vinci to the present.

Booklist 27:53 O '30

"Offhand one would say that an account of how a score or more of men jumped from an airplane would take on an inevitable monotony, but this volume demonstrates how far wrong that conclusion is. The history of each descent is as individual and as breathless as though it were the first one. Events leading up to it are never the same. The circumstances in which the jump is made are astoundingly varied. The travelogue of the return trip is different in each performance." Lisle Bell
+ Books p23 Ap 13 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '30
N Y Times p21 Ap 27 '30 130w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Mr 27 '30 900w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 Jl '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 24 '30 500w

GLEASON, ARTHUR HUNTINGTON. Book of Arthur Gleason: My people, and "A. G.," an appreciation by Helen Hayes Gleason. 235p $2.50 Morrow

B or 92 29-30229

Beginning as a cub reporter with the New York Tribune in 1901 Arthur Gleason developed into a free-lance writer and during the war he knew the battlefront both as stretcher bearer and correspondent. When the war was over he became interested in the British labor movement and wrote several books about it. He died in 1923. This book brings together some of his essays, a few pages of war experiences and an appreciation by his wife.

"Gleason was intense, an idealist, a crusader. He was sincere, tolerant, lovable. He fought gallantly, generously, passionately. Mrs. Gleason has done a fine service. She brought out in this book the priceless qualities which endeared her husband to a large group of friends." A. S. Draper

+ Books p9 D 22 '29 750w

"I feel as I lay down 'The Book of Arthur Gleason' that it represents the man infinitely better than a complete, proportionate work all neated up about the edges. Seventy-five pages of his essays and private writings, varying between mere chips from his literary workshop to pages of astonishing beauty, completeness, and meaning; a hundred and fifty pages of scattered but vital reminiscence by Mrs. Gleason: the book has no conscious pattern. . . It may be association with him, it may be inherent quality, but Mrs. Gleason's writing, in the major part of this book, has something of the same final and simple poetic quality as her husband's. In recommending it as a whole, I am obliged to fall back on an old Samuel Smiles phrase of my boyhood: it is 'a good book to put into the hands of youth.' For here, all expressed, is the finest model for American manhood and gentlemanhood that I have known in my time." Will Irwin

+ Nation 130:73 Ja 15 '30 800w

"A sheaf from his experiences in the War tell in their few pages a more vivid story than volumes of best sellers. Though his brief paragraphs show the horrible stark truth, they pulse with the pity of it all. . . After the richness Arthur Gleason reveals of himself in his own comment on life one would expect an anti-climax in almost anything said about him. Yet in 'A. G.' An Appreciation, which fills the last two thirds of the book, Helen Gleason has written a biography in which her husband lives again, in so far as the light of the word can represent the glow of life itself." Hastings Lyon

+ Survey 63:553 F 1 '30 700w

World Tomorrow 14:28 Ja '31 50w

GLENN, ISA (MRS S. J. BAYARD SCHINDEL). Short history of Julia. 318p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-30572

In a sleepy little Georgia town, to which the atmosphere of its aristocratic past persistently clung, Mrs de Graffenried reared her two daughters, Julia and Marietta, inculcating in them the traditions of an older day. Julia, who lived in a world of romantic illusion, saw the man with whom she had whole-heartedly fallen in love, carried off by her more practical younger sister. Living on her memories of Carey Gordon and calmly accepting the fact that "the pattern of her life had been laid down at her birth." Julia passed with all outward serenity into spinsterhood.

"Isa Glenn has succeeded in making a dramatic figure of Julia de Graffenried, though the significance of Julia's life consisted in its negations. . . If Julia would be a lady, it must be at the expense of never becoming a woman." Isabel Paterson

+ Books p4 N 9 '30 1000w

"Merciless, clean-cut and penetrating is Isa Glenn's character analysis of Julia de Graffenried, and of all the other dwellers in the little forgotten Georgia town whose lives crowd, but so seldom touch, Julia's life. Merciless, but not altogether without sympathy and affection. Her new novel, to which she has given the uninspired title of 'A Short History of Julia,' is by far the best thing she has done yet." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 22 '30 600w

"Isa Glenn could hardly write a book which was not intelligent or one which did not make a conscientious approach toward truth, both of setting and of character. But her latest novel seems a little thin and a little obvious after 'Transport.' "

+ — Nation 131:655 D 10 '30 180w

"A competent but pedestrian account of manners among the worm-eaten aristocracy of the old South, Miss Glenn has brought to its telling virtually everything required of a novelist but inspiration, and the result never rises above a certain monotonous level of excellence."

— + New Repub 65:146 D 17 '30 150w

" 'A Short History of Julia' represents a considerable advance over Miss Glenn's previous novels. This is no light praise, for her flair for revealing details and her clear, careful, lucid prose are admirably adapted to the scenes which she depicts. . . The quiet history of Julia de Graffenried has been wrought into a beautiful and sympathetic story. No one has captured more successfully than Isa Glenn the pathos and the irony of the passing of the old South. No one has better understood the conflict in a sensitive and finely organized nature when tradition and reality are at war."

+ N Y Times p6 N 9 '30 650w

"The story is told with a dignity befitting its background, its central character, its theme, but this does not preclude from its pages the occasional relief of satire. It is the kind of novel which commands respect for its artistry, but which offers meager likelihood of pleasure."

+ N Y World p3e D 21 '30 230w

"Your mind cannot be a sluggard if you are going to follow, with Isa Glenn, the tortuous path of psychological speculation. In her work admirable dialogue, unobtrusive description and a smooth style compliment objective characterizations and unswerving irony." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:427 N 12 '30 230w

Reviewed by Josephine Pinckney

Sat R of Lit 7:416 D 6 '30 1050w

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY. Influence of Christ in the ancient world. (James Wesley Cooper memorial publication fund) 122p $1.50 Yale univ. press [5s Cambridge univ. press]

270.1 Christianity 30-7646

Six lectures originally delivered on the Haskell foundation at Oberlin college. The author describes how Christ brought the principle of freedom into a world in bondage, and how this principle transformed human thought and character.

Christian Century 47:1092 S 10 '30 250w

"The conversational tone has been preserved probably wisely, and the author's conversational tone, it may be remarked, does not encourage scanning. To appreciate his argument every word that he writes must be read. To picture vividly the life and thought of the world into which the Christian message came, Doctor Glover has with great effectiveness let the men of these days speak for themselves. Many of the quotations are quite outside the circumscribed bounds of 'illustrative material'; all are pointed and unhackneyed." M. S. Enslin

+ Crozer Q 7:396 Jl '30 380w

"A delightful and most illuminating tour amidst the social, political, philosophical and religious life of the historic Mediterranean world in the company of a seasoned and celebrated guide and interpreter is offered in this book of a couple of hours' reading. One feels that back of these pages of so much interpretative insight set forth with such elegant style are years of painstaking scholarship and wide cultural contacts." Vergilius Ferm

+ Int J Ethics 41:128 O '30 320w

GLOVER, T. R.—Continued

"With the author's inability to perceive the impact of Christianity upon the ancient world in any aspect save the literary, and with his distaste for any literature save the classical, he cannot be expected to appreciate Christianity as a vital movement. The pages of the book show also other limitations of the author's approach."

— J Religion 10:459 Jl '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

"No living writer approaches Dr. Glover in the power of combining the results of an immense and exact scholarship with a keen sense of the spiritual forces at work beneath the surface of life. . . His new work exhibits his peculiar gifts at their best. It is packed with material; with significant facts, brilliant interpretations, acute and often ironic comparisons of present and past." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 144:27 Ja 4 '30 700w

"Perhaps some people may find the chapters too discursive and conversational, yet they are the more human for that and are full of individual things happily expressed."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1090 D 26 '29 480w

GLUCK, SINCLAIR. Blind fury. 302p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Mills & Boon]

30-24054

A brilliant and respected financier is ruined on the stock exchange, his residence set fire to, and he himself is brutally murdered. Captain McCoy, of the police, and Christopher Morgan, a newspaper man, solve the mystery.

"Improbable and wildly fantastic but sufficiently alluring to whet the appetites of mystery fans."

— + Bookm 72:xxv N '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 O 12 '30 150w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber

Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 50w

"The allurement of the title is more than fulfilled in the number of impossible things which take place, but if you like this kind of story you will enjoy it."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p702 S 4 '30 220w

GLUECK, SOL SHELDON, and GLUECK, MRS ELEANOR (TOUROFF). 500 criminal careers; [with a foreword by Richard C. Cabot]. (Am. trials ser.) 365p $5 (21s) Knopf

364 Crime and criminals. Massachusetts reformatory, Concord. Reformatories. Criminal statistics. Probation system 30-2673

"This is, according to Richard C. Cabot, the first work to attempt a checkup on the results of reformatories. It is also, according to Dr George W. Kirchwey, former warden of Sing Sing prison, 'the first systematic attempt that has ever been made to evaluate on a scientific basis the human product of an American reformatory of the Elmira and Concord type, as well as the social factors which have produced or contributed to produce the delinquent or criminal tendencies which resulted in commitment to such an institution.' The research for this book, covering a period of three full years and associated with the Harvard crime survey, was done by means of personal interviews with ex-prisoners as well as by letter."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 26:342 Je '30

"The statistical method has been pursued in this volume to a point where it almost loses significance. Moreover, well informed students of crime and penology knew already much that has been so laboriously set forth. Nevertheless, it is a most worthy piece of investigation—and one that will help mightily in getting judges, parole boards and others to take a realistic attitude toward criminals." W. D. Lane

+ — Books p4 F 2 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p5 F 1 '30 1150w

"The authors have made a very notable initiation of a much needed line of research, and one which has avoided those inaccuracies of criminal data and social information which tended to have misled social workers in the past." N. M. Grier

+ Christian Century 47:868 Jl 9 '30 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p107 Jl '30

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 32:4 Ap '30 220w

"To anyone interested in methods of social research this study is a real delight, because it was carried on thoroughly, carefully, and with a clear appreciation of pitfalls. . . It is plain that in this study, excellent as it is, we have a considerable contribution to diagnosis, but a slight contribution to treatment. This is the great lack in our social studies today. The accumulation of diagnostic facts has heaped up far beyond any use we are making of them. It seems time to begin to turn serious attention to study and experimentation along the line of treatment." K. H. Claghorn

+ — Harvard Law R 43:1332 Je '30 1700w

Reviewed by William Seagle

Nation 131:227 Ag 27 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Max Lerner

N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 850w

"Penologists will find the body of the book of very great value and interest. The lay reader, however, will be more interested in the final long chapter in which Dr. and Mrs. Glueck summarize and discuss the results of their investigation in their relation to present reformatory practice. It is written with such clear-eyed recognition of the inefficiency of present theory and practice, such calm, judicial temper and such reasoned application of their own findings that the conclusions to which they come deserve the attention of all who are interested in the menacing problem of criminality." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 9 '30 900w

"The study commands respect by the very nature of its exhaustive treatment of the situation. Sheldon Glueck is assistant professor of criminology in Harvard Law School, and Eleanor T. Glueck, his wife, is a doctor of education and associated with the Harvard crime survey. The comparative importance of their study must be weighed by specialists; the function of a lay reader like myself is to direct attention to its exhaustive research, its detailed investigation, its conservative and illuminating conclusions. The legal profession, students of society, all interested in prison reform and in human welfare must find this book of great value." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Ja 18 '30 750w

St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

"In these days, when journalists are called criminologists and expensive volumes of articles about crime and criminals reprinted from the Sunday newspapers, and written in sensational journalese, are hailed as important contributions to penological science, we welcome Dr and Mrs Glueck's book. It is a valuable piece of work which does credit not only to its authors but to the University from which it comes." E. R. Calvert

+ Spec 145:168 Ag 2 '30 950w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 22 '30 350w

"Interesting and valuable book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p344 Ap 24 '30 1550w

GOBINEAU, JOSEPH ARTHUR, comte de. Lucky prisoner; tr. from the French by William A. Drake. 371p $2.50 Brentano's

30-9729

" 'The Lucky Prisoner' is an adventure novel laid against the background of sixteenth century France, seething with civil war between the Catholics and the Huguenots. Its hero, Jean de la Tour-Miracle, a youthful Gascon baron and a Catholic, is in love with the daughter of a Huguenot, but his father does not want even to hear of such a heretic marriage. Yet, disobeying his parent, Jean decides to obtain the hand of the fair lady cost what it may, and this decision precipitates him into a cascade of endless adventures."—N Y Times

Bookm 71:xi Ag '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 4 '30 150w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 50w

"De Gobineau has an effortless imagination of striking fecundity. And he has a gift for developing a plot which perhaps equals that of Stendhal and even often reminds one of that writer. Like Stendhal, our author is impeccably lucid, simple and unstrained even in the most complicated ramifications of his story. Moreover—and this is a peculiarity very characteristic of de Gobineau—while going through his work one has the distinct feeling that, while writing it, he had but one desire—to amuse himself and his reader." Alexander Nazaroff

+ N Y Times p6 Je 22 '30 550w

"It is a little difficult to see just why such flattering attention should be lavished by translators and publishers upon what is in fact nothing more than a conventional novel of adventure, written by its distinguished author for publication in the pages of a daily newspaper. 'The lucky Prisoner' is one of those endlessly spun out stories after the Dumas model, in which each instalment ends with some exciting situation which involves the hero's life."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1182 Jl 5 '30 280w

GODBEY, ALLEN HOWARD. Lost tribes a myth; suggestions towards rewriting Hebrew history. (Duke univ. publications) 802p il $7.50 Duke univ. [34s Cambridge univ. press]

296 Jews—History. Israel—Ten lost tribes
30-13367

"Professor Godbey holds the chair of the Old Testament in Duke university at Durham, N. C. . . . His thesis is the separate character of the Hebrews and the Israelites. He insists that the Israelites were the later comers, who constituted the real Old Testament group, and took up the Hebrew-Phoenician language that had been in use for a thousand years in Canaan. The Aramaic patriarchs of Israel took over much of this earlier culture and made it their own. The main chapters of the work are devoted to the dispersion of the Israelites and the later Jews into the various regions of the ancient and modern world."—Christian Century

Boston Transcript p2 My 31 '30 500w

"The work is a thesaurus of interesting and valuable information on practically every phase of this theme of Judaism. In addition to an extensive and discriminating bibliography, and full biblical and topical indices, Professor Godbey has included at the end of the book nearly fifty pages of illustrations, presenting types of Jewish faces from all parts of the world. In these more than seven hundred pages there is presented not only the ample proof of the fallacious character of the 'lost ten tribes' theories, but a multitude of suggestive and interesting comments on almost every phase of Old Testament history and archeology." H. L. Willett

+ Christian Century 47:627 My 14 '30 450w

"It is a fascinating book. There is no question but that the general positions will be sustained by Old Testament scholarship. . . In itself the book is a great piece of work; in the issues it presents, it is even greater. We do not expect that it will become the 'book of the month,' or even receive 'honorable mention,' but in the field of Old Testament scholarship, it may easily be the book of the decade." I. G. Matthews

+ Crozer Q 7:391 Jl '30 1500w

"The Lost Tribes A Myth is a work of immense erudition in the fields of early history and anthropology. The title does not do justice to the wide scope of the work. The 'lost-tribes' question is only a point of departure for a detailed study of Hebrew origins, Jewish dispersion, world-wide propaganda for 'Yahuworship,' and the question of the racial integrity of the Jews. . . In spite of a number of faults of temper and overzeal, the book is a magnificent collection and arrangement of important material, and it gives for the first time, as far as the reviewer is aware, a full picture of the spread of Judaism (or of part-Judaism) all over North Africa and Asia." S. B. Freehof

+ — J Religion 10:449 Jl '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"The author has done his work well. All who have any interest in the Jewish problem, of whatever age, will find this book indispensable. Dr. Godbey is admirably fitted for the task he set out to accomplish; and at the end of a long, well-reasoned treatise it is refreshing to find that the author has not been too weary to present a full (and critical) bibliography, an index of Scripture passages, a complete index, and three maps illustrating the wanderings of the exiled Jews."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p808 O 9 '30 700w

GODDARD, GLORIA (MRS CLEMENT WOOD). These lords' descendants. 394p $2.50 Stokes
30-3354

A romance of several generations of the Featherstone family in America, painted against a background of American history from colonial days to the present.

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"It is a well planned and well written novel which just misses being important."

+ Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 60w

Books p21 F 23 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p3 F 5 '30 650w

"A well-written, panoramic novel. The story gallops along merrily through the centuries and makes quite entertaining reading." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 80w

"The plan of the book seems overambitious. The old three-decker would hardly contain comfortably the chronicles of the varied lives which Miss Goddard has tried to compress into less than 400 pages. It is hardly to be wondered that the effect is sometimes confusing and obscure, notwithstanding the genealogical charts which are appended to each chapter and which help to keep separate the generations which perpetuate the family name. Considering the formal handicap, 'These Lords' Descendants' is perhaps a more various and colorful book than one had a right to expect."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ja 26 '30 400w

"On a frame as large as the entire history of the United States, Miss Goddard has embroidered a thoroughly petty novel, filled by dozens of neat little figures scattered in poses of strained and uncritical conventionality from Cromwellian England to rough California." M. P. Levy

— N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 380w

"Such a story demands a canvas as great at least as that of 'The Forsyte Saga'; compressed into four hundred pages, it is almost foredoomed to failure. The main characters run too exactly to form: each is always speaking as a typical Puritan or a typical Southern planter or whatever the rôle is, with an oppressive consistency. The minor characters, on whom the burden of illustrating history rests less heavily, are distinct personalities with interesting stories of their own, but of necessity the generations succeed each other too rapidly for any deep interest in any individual."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:785 Mr 1 '30 300w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

GODWIN, GEORGE STANLEY. Why stay we here? 332p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Allan, P.]
30-10248

The story of the war as it affected some of the Canadian troops, and especially Stephen Craig. From a little village in British Columbia to France, and back again after five years, to fight another battle—with tuberculosis—was Stephen's bit to make the world safe for democracy.

New Statesman 34:640 F 22 '30 450w

"At the present time it is difficult to read another war book without impatience, without feeling already satiated; yet although all the facts which Mr. Godwin relates in this, his second novel, are known, the angle from which he approaches them is so quiet, so dignified, stressing continually the acts of man when part of a crowd and his difference as an individual, that this book should certainly be recommended to all young men and women who only know the war through the aspects of 'All Quiet on the Western Front' and 'Journey's End.' "

+ N Y Times p22 My 25 '30 480w

Spec 144:442 Mr 15 '30 80w

"If this book had appeared a year or so ago it might have made some stir: for it is well enough written in a jerky, impressionistic style. We have, however, had so many War novels of late dealing with infantry on the Western Front, all more or less similar in tone, that one finds it hard to raise much enthusiasm over another rendering."

Times [London] Lit Sup p415 My 15 '30 140w

GOGARTY, OLIVER ST JOHN. Wild apples; [with an introd. by A. E.]. 54p $2 Cape 821 30-6741

"In his Introduction to his old friend's book Æ observes that 'a prodigal wit rarely appears the chrysalis out of which we expect the wingèd lovely creature Poetry to be born.' Oliver Gogarty's verse is one of the instances of such nativity. His tart intellect has for years delighted that wittiest of races to which he belongs, and now he surprises us with the charm of his verse."—Books

Bookm 72:x O '30 50w

"The virility of Gogarty's verse is perhaps more remarkable than its beauty. His metres not seldom limp or move with undue stiffness, his rhymes could be more felicitous, and the strength of his work would gain considerably were his lines more compact. . . Such a poem as 'The Emperor's Dream' could be unforgettable. As Gogarty has written it the piece is engaging, but nothing more. It is, nevertheless, plain enough that he responds heartily to all that's lovely, and at moments he snares the bright thing in a net of words." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books p10 F 9 '30 280w

Reviewed by Rolfe Humphries

New Repub 62:306 Ap 30 '30 350w

"Mr. Gogarty's gift for writing light, luminous poetry is unequaled in our generation. Unlike many of the minor Irish poets he does not lean too heavily upon so-called natural charm. His particular contribution is irrepressible gayety. And an unfailing sense of irony saves him from the usual combinations of laughter and tears." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p9m N 30 '29 150w

"There is something wholly engaging to the little collection. Perhaps the shyness with which their creator worked has transferred itself to the product. And perhaps the elusive quality is just the Irish heritage of the author. But whatever the reason, there is a quality, call it elusive or not as one pleases, which results in a lyric naturalness and spontaneity which is rare indeed. . . Oliver Gogarty, with something sentimental about him, is nevertheless so intuitively the artist that he distills sentiment until it is only wistful, airy beauty."

+ N Y Times p14 F 23 '30 500w

"Airy and charming as his verses are, they reveal all of the poet's essential powers. He knows surprisingly well what he is doing, how to make a light touch suggest a serious mood, how to steal upon beauty softly and catch it in a net of words that seems to be casually thrown." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p11m D 22 '29 100w

"Oliver St. John Gogarty, whose mind is as grotesque and volatile as his name, was born out of time, to our delight. Like Casanova, in whose century he would have been more at home than he is in our spindling, self-nauseated age, he chose to live before he wrote. When he would decide to write what he used to speak, those of us who knew him realized we could expect anything. . . And now comes 'Wild Apples,' certainly Gogarty's finest volume." Horace Reynolds

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1157 Je 28 '30 800w

GOLD, MICHAEL. Jews without money. 309p il $3 Liveright [7s 6d Douglas]
917.471 Jews—Social life and customs. Jews in New York (city) 30-5614

Michael Gold writes about the East Side of his boyhood as he so vividly remembers it: the crowded tenements, the prostitutes, the filth and disease and poverty, the crimes and vices of life bordering on the underworld. He describes certain Jewish types, such as Louis One Eye, Aunt Lena, Poppa and Momma Gold, young Nigger and his gang, and Reb Samuel, the umbrella mender; and some of the various factors that led up to the cry for the workers' revolution.

"While 'Jews Without Money' contains some of his best writing, it is too loosely put together to be the epic of the East Side. . . Michael Gold can perform magic with words; he can paint pictures on his typewriter. It is a pity that he does not force himself to organize his pictures and that sometimes—not very often in this book—he falls into the bathos of Messianic prayers for deliverance by the dreamy road of romantic revolution." Lewis Gannett

+ — Books p5 F 23 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 280w

"Raised in a crowded tenement on the east side of New York, in the midst of a welter of vice and crime and a maelstrom of noises and smells which themselves almost amounted to crimes and vices, the author is perfectly equipped to paint a terrible picture of poverty in its most hideous aspects. But it is no caricature that he presents. Not many of even his most repulsive figures are monsters and there is a recognition of human values and virtues even in the unlikeliest spots."

+ Christian Century 47:437 Ap 2 '30 160w

Reviewed by Alter Brody

Nation 130:428 Ap 9 '30 600w

"Michael Gold is a sincere and moving writer. In the present book, in his earlier '120 Millions,' in his plays and in the strained, harsh editorials he is apt to write for The New Masses—even when his writing is marred by awkwardness of thought or expression or by naïveté, and in spite of a faulty self-critical sense—he has a curious, compelling power. He is a personality; and his personal charm pervades everything he writes." M. P. Levy

+ New Repub 62:160 Mr 26 '30 850w

"Michael Gold tells a story that is no story but a stirring panorama of the east side of his childhood. Autobiography this is in a sense, but it surpasses autobiography in that it is not only the boy who is brought to vivid life in its pages but the multi-colored existence of the teeming streets and hallways as well. . . There will be those who will say this book is uneven at times, that its author occasionally offends good taste, that his English is not always the King's. These things are probably true, but they do not count in the face of the overwhelming effect of the book as a whole. It has the deep shadows of a Rembrandt picture, and the high challenge of a Whitman poem." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p11 Mr 23 '30 1300w

"In 'Jews Without Money' Michael Gold has written the saga of the east side. Gold did not have to dig for 'material.' He had only to pour out of himself the rich fund of memories he had been harboring for twenty years. Under the spell of his turbulent emotions the whole panorama of the ghetto comes to life. . . He has written with profound feeling and sometimes with fury, but he has never lost his hold upon his own emotions. His prose is simple, vivid, imaginative and always precise, never disordered." Bernard Smith

+ N Y World p10m F 23 '30 900w

"All this smells of the sewer; it is revolting, it is terrifying; and Michael Gold, in whom there is bitterness, means it to be so. But where there is shadow, there is light; extremes harbor the normal; and he has tenderness for the beautiful and pathetic commonplaces of the Ghetto life. . . 'Jews Without Money' bears such a complement of ache and stir and torn beauty, that surely only from the heart could it have been written down. It has, I think, enduring qualities." Leonard Ehrlich

+ Sat R of Lit 6:944 Ap 19 '30 750w

Spec 145:952 D 13 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 320w

World Tomorrow 13:348 Ag '30 30w

GOLDBERG, BEN ZION. Sacred fire; the story of sex in religion. 386p il $4 Liveright

201 Sex and religion 30-5610

"Mr. Goldberg is an enthusiastic defender of the thesis that love and religion have been separably intertwined all through the history of mankind. . . The author describes primitive man in his love and faith, tells the story of the generative divinities, stresses the erotic motive in the religions of today, and gives his closing chapters to an account of the sexual motive in sectarianism."—Boston Transcript

"The book is a compilation of anecdotes which should have been thrown together for syndication in a newspaper. It is even provided with that essential of all popular science of its order: the happy ending. For, instead of the old slur on religion that has classically gone along with the thesis of its debt to eroticism, it is the conclusion of this volume that religion has transformed sex and sex religion."

— Books p16 My 25 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '30 350w

" 'Sacred Fire' has little to offer that is constructive. Illustrated with copies of rare old prints, the volume reeks with sex symbolism, and rites. It is only in his exposition of the Jewish and Christian faiths that Mr. Goldberg rises at all to the dignity of religion in the accepted sense. Even here the ecstasies of prophet and mystic are designated as erotic. Purporting to tell the place of sex and love in pagan and modern beliefs it is a resume of license, with no distinctive literary merit to recommend it."

— Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 120w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC. Fine art of living; an approach to life and the arts. 314p $2.50 Stratford

170 Conduct of life. Art—Philosophy. Esthetics 30-4308

Dedicated to Havelock Ellis, and based upon his theories, this book treats of the aesthetics of life. Dr Goldberg would have his readers approach reality in their concern with life and the arts. The various arts of life which he discusses are love, culture, music, painting, literature and criticism.

Booklist 26:340 Je '30

"Mr. Goldberg's criticism is broad and inclusive of all sides of existence; it is advice meant to be practical. He is a follower of Havelock Ellis, and his book is really an Ellis primer. He presents in a lively but rambling manner the doctrines of the master. . . The book, in spite of an apparent lack of unity and a diffusiveness which is occasionally exhausting, ought to be interesting and helpful to the beginner, for whom the author says it is intended. It expresses, certainly, a creed which is not marred by any narrow dogmatisms, and it honestly strives to open the eyes of those of us who too placidly and too quickly accept life as it appears." C. D. Abbott

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:950 Ap 19 '30 450w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC. Tin pan alley; a chronicle of the American popular music racket [with an introd. by George Gershwin]. 341p il $3.50 Day

780.973 Music, Popular. Music—United States. Jazz music 30-31878

A history of American popular music and the part it has played in American life. Mr Goldberg gives an account of our first popular songs and song writers, beginning with the Liberty song published in 1766; the early vogue of the colored minstrels; the "Mulligan" cycle; the rise of Tin Pan Alley proper with the "Hearts and flowers" era and the beginnings of rag-time; the work of Sousa, De Koven, and Victor Herbert; the history of the blues; the rhythms of jazz; and the theme song.

"In bringing together this material the author has undoubtedly performed a service for the amateur of Americana and the history of popular song. Yet one wishes that the historical portions of the book were less sketchy, filled with more information and fewer wisecracks; the style of Tin Pan Alley is rather painful. When Dr. Goldberg wishes he can write with excellent good sense. If the entire book were as good as the last two chapters, there would be little complaint." Eugene Armfield

+ — Bookm 72:447 D '30 150w

"Any one who has ever succumbed to a popular song will be delighted with 'Tin Pan Alley.' The songs which were whistled, sung and bawled at us from the old variety theaters, to whose languid rhythm contortionists, hoofers, tightrope walkers and jugglers performed their stunts are lovingly exhumed. . . A series of brief biographies of Foster, Harrigan and Hart, George M. Cohan, Harry Von Tilzer and many others enliven Goldberg's chronicle; but we might question the propriety of including Victor Herbert, Reginald DeKoven and John Philip Sousa in this group. By tradition and environment these three do not belong to the Alley." James Geller

+ — Books p5 N 30 '30 550w

"In spite of minor blemishes inevitable in a pioneer work of this type, Dr. Goldberg has placed against this tinseled background a magnificent parade of gay ghosts who bring to his pages the songs and savors of two centuries of America's popular music. 'Tin Pan Alley,' in short, is a voluminous newsreel, a Floyd Gibbons broadcast, a bulging 'Who's Who' in jazzland, a penetrating essay, a treatise, a history, and withal a crackling, entertaining chronicle of a fascinating racket." Hollister Noble

+ — N Y Times p6 D 14 '30 1250w

"A lively, snappy study of the song racket. Dr. Goldberg is a highbrow, and, like many other highbrows, he is tempted by the preoccupations of the vulgar mob. Despite his learning he makes an eloquent book out of 'Tin Pan Alley'—salts in some snappy anecdotes and says things are looking up. Sophistication is coming in. The Gershwins, Rodgers and Hart, Swift, James Cole Porter, are helping begin 'the long ascent from the melodious underworld of music.' " Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p12 N 13 '30 420w

"A complete history of the popular music racket in America and an exceedingly well done one. . . Goldberg, who has to his credit

GOLDBERG, ISAAC—Continued
a long list of highly praised works on music, literature and the theatre, has done a truly masterly study of the rise of American popular music. The book is well worth your time."
+ Outlook 156:507 N 26 '30 180w

GOLDBERG, MAURICE ELI (E. G. MORRIS, pseud.). 100,000 years of art. 286p il $3 Stratford
709 Art—History 30-22368

The author tells the long story of man's attempt to express himself in form and line and color from the Stone age to the present. He describes the artistic products of successive eras, closing with a chapter on the application of art to life.

"The final chapters have uniqueness of point of view as their principal and outstanding merit. But simultaneously they have didacticism as their fault—a tendency to 'talk down,' a lecturing and giving of do's and don't's with the resultant solid impression that whole sections of the book were addressed to classes in the normal art school, with occasional asides to 'my friend,' 'oh artists,' 'my dear ultra-modern.' The casual adult reader is thus made to feel himself at the back of the lecture hall, a chance listener to the professor's dicta. This is a serious limitation."
+ — Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 320w

"The value the book will have for most readers probably will lie in its very capable and illuminating birdseye survey of the development of art and of man's growth in the power, variety and subtlety with which he can express his admiration for the beautiful in the world around him."
+ N Y Times p34 S 28 '30 400w
St Louis 28:294 D '30

GOLDBERG, REUBEN LUCIUS. Is there a doctor in the house? with il. by the author. 54p il $1 Day
817 29-27824

Two humorous essays, They ought to give ether to husbands and What you need is exercise, by the famous cartoonist, illustrated by himself.

"If you know your Goldberg, this dollar's worth will be about what you'd expect. It is adorned with some of the author-artist's supreme efforts in dislocated esthetics, and is, by the way, thoroughly good fun."
+ Books p10 Ja 19 '30 100w
Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes
New Repub 61:48 D 4 '29 300w

GOLDEN GORSE, pseud. Moorland Mousie; plates drawn by Lionel Edwards. 106p il $3 Scribner
30-24235

The story of an Exmoor pony who was captured and domesticated. At first Mousie was happy in a family where there were several children, but after an accident poor Mousie was sold to a tradesman and hard days followed. At last after many misfortunes he found his way again into good hands.

"The sixteen drawings alone make this a book well worth owning, but the text is not without charm and flavor of its own. The story is told by Moorland Mousie in the first person, and what it lacks in dramatic quality is offset by knowledge of horse nature and the genuine love of a certain stretch of country which greets one on opening the book and sets one longing to be in England in summertime." A. C. M.
+ Books p8 Ag 3 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Unlike most stories of domestic animals, this one is neither too melodramatic nor too painful. Last, but not least, the book is illustrated with sixteen drawings by Lionel Edwards, so lovely and so evidently drawn from life that any lover of horses will long to possess them. Any one who has watched children copy pictures of horses by the hour with patience and enjoyment will be glad to put this book into their hands."
+ N Y Times p19 F 2 '30 200w

"It is a charmingly told story, with simple and touching incident and sufficient development to carry even the mature reader along on the stream of its narrative. Its drawings are admirable and admirably reproduced. Indeed, they alone, even were there no text to elaborate them, would make the book well worth possessing."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1196 Jl 12 '30 130w
Times [London] Lit Sup p969 N 21 '29 150w

GOLDING, LOUIS. Give up your lovers. 287p $2.50 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Heinemann]
30-8171

Philip Massel, a Jewish boy whose family is strictly orthodox, and Ruth Manning, who comes from an aristocratic, landed English family, fall in love. They have more than the usual number of lovers' quarrels, because of Ruth's initial aversion to Jews, her desire to become a Catholic nun, the fact that she is engaged to marry a young man of her own social class, and the determination on the part of both her family and Philip's that they should not cross the barrier of race. The death of Philip's father reunites them, with the approbation of Mrs Manning.

Books p16 Ap 6 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30
Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 47:180 My 10 '30 180w

"Mr. Golding's observation is just, and generous, and impassioned; his writing is occasionally beautiful and never inadequate; and he has a neat turn to his dialogue."
+ New Statesman 35:119 My 3 '30 400w

"This newest book is far from the vitality of the earlier 'Day of Atonement,' a work memorable in any season; it is, in a great degree, unsatisfying, for the social problem implicit in the doings of its people in no wise reaches determination. But the book is rooted in conviction, it is impassioned, living currents sweep through it; and whether readers agree or not with its conclusions they will participate in its verve." Leonard Ehrlich
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 500w

"In parts the plot is exaggerated till it becomes incredible; but where it concentrates on life in the dark and wretched house in the Jewish quarter, with its descriptions of Jewish ceremonies, and of the old men fanatic in their anxiety to appease God, the book quickens, interest is stirred, and continued till the end."
+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 30 '30 550w
N Y World p3e D 7 '30 200w

"Mr. Golding seems to have been a bit uncertain as to where to end his story, to have been torn between desires to describe orthodox Jewish life in the Zangwill manner and to tell a sad love story. He does neither very well."
— Outlook 154:589 Ap 9 '30 150w

"Mr Golding is a writer of varied gifts. He has a sense of character, a feeling for atmosphere, an ear for words. Yet, time after time, when Mr. Golding ought to be causing his reader joy, he merely makes him wince. Why is this? Well, for one thing, although Mr. Golding has an ear for words, he also has a fondness for fine writing, the result of which is that too often he produces an arabesque of mannerisms where a plain narrative is needed. There are passages also in which, so it seems, he aims at being buoyant, but manages to be only flamboyant."
+ — Sat R 149:525 Ap 26 '30 450w

"Mr. Golding is unsparing of his Hebraic atmosphere. None the less, his rabbinical portions remain, I think, the most convincing parts of his book. They are crisp, sure, and full of vitality. Elsewhere he is too apt to lapse into vague similes and sugary sentiment, though he does it with the air of the connoisseur rather than the ingénue. But the real weakness of Give Up Your Lovers is the lack of movement in the first half of the story." I. M. Parsons

+ — Spec 144:753 My 3 '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p350 Ap 24 '30 500w

GOLDMARK, PAULINE DOROTHEA, and HOPKINS, MARY, comps. Gypsy trail; an anthology for campers. v 2 326p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

808.81 Poetry—Collections. Nature in poetry

The first volume of this anthology of verse for campers appeared in 1914. The emphasis in this volume is on the twentieth century poets. French, German, Spanish and Italian poetry and also some translations from the Chinese are represented.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

"The bulk of the English poetry is the work of contemporary authors, and the collection is rich and varied; but I disagree with the idea that people living close to nature wish to read of nature. I would call 'The Gypsy Trail' the perfect anthology for stay-at-homes." B. R. Redman

+ — Books p14 Ap 13 '30 120w

2 GOLDSMITH, ALFRED NORTON, and LESCARBOURA, AUSTIN CELESTIN. This thing called broadcasting; a simple tale of an idea, an experiment, a mighty industry, a daily habit, and a basic influence in our modern civilization. 362p il $3.50 Holt

654 Radio broadcasting 30-33441

The inside story of the evolution of radio broadcasting written by two of the men who have been influential in its development. There are chapters on building the radio program; the announcer and his role; radio and its relationship to the voter, the woman, the farmer, sports, education, and the church; the business of broadcasting, etc.

"Quite fully, with plenitude of words, with many anecdotes, with purple patches of eloquence, with facetious humor, with wide detours that gather into the narrative all its outlying connections, the authors survey the beginning and the successive developments of broadcasting, its present status and its possible future."

+ N Y Times p20 D 21 '30 320w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 D 5 '30 550w

"Our only criticism of the book is that it is a bit rambling. We'd like the story told in a more straightforward way. Trying to 'brighten it up' has merely made it move more slowly. It is, however, authoritative, being written by the Vice-President of the R.C.A., and it answers all of the questions you are likely to ask." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 156:668 D 24 '30 80w

"Both of these authors have been associated with broadcasting from its infancy and have seen the business grow. Their knowledge of the ramifications of the subject is amazing. They can answer offhand almost any question about the practical operation of radio that is likely to spring to any one's lips. All this encyclopædic range of information they put at the reader's service, but not in encyclopædic manner—far from it. They pour it out in the form of a story —a lively, pulsating, up-to-the-minute story of achievement." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 83:16 Ja '31 230w

"The few technical portions of the book, dealing with modulation and amplification, are simply and effectively handled, and are necessary to an understanding of the problems which the young industry had to solve. The evolution of broadcasting from a mere stunt into an art with its own technique is admirably told."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:493 D 27 '30 250w

GOLDSMITH, MRS MARGARET LELAND (VOIGT), and VOIGT, FREDERICK. Hindenburg; the man and the legend. 304p il $3.50 Morrow [12s 6d Faber]

B or 92 Hindenburg, Paul von 30-19477

A penetrating study of Hindenburg's war career, his retirement, and his subsequent return as head of the German republic. The authors place particular emphasis upon the Hindenburg-Ludendorff association and controversy.

Booklist 27:156 D '30

"This biography is controversial, for the subtitle is not mere rhetoric. But since it stops abruptly with [his] election to the presidency, one feels the story is but half told and the legend thesis is supported by ignoring subsequent facts."

— Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 100w

"This book is well informed and fairly well written. In fact, it is interesting and moderate in tone. The authors deserve all credit for these good points. But for all this there runs through it an unmistakable desire to deflate Hindenburg's reputation. The argument is by no means wholly convincing, and it is hard to escape the feeling that Germany's grand old man deserved a more sympathetic and understanding treatment." W. L. Langer

+ — Books p3 Jl 27 '30 1800w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 480w

"This book is simply and well written and is undoubtedly a contribution to the constantly increasing Hindenburg material."

+ Current Hist 32:1031 Ag '30 200w

Reviewed by William MacDonald

Nation 131:251 S 3 '30 200w

"Although the book is readable, I cannot regard it as a satisfactory piece of work. If I study it to learn something about Hindenburg, I find in it nothing more than can be expressed in this one sentence: That he is a modest, impersonal, loyal-hearted man. If I wish to study German strategy I am bound to consult other sources." A. C. Bell

— Nation and Ath 47:769 S 20 '30 150w

"Out of such materials no one could make a very bad book; but 'Hindenburg, The Man and the Legend,' though it is highly readable, is by no means worthy of its theme. The authors have not made the best of their opportunities, and have often been content merely to rewrite Hindenburg's own Memoirs. . . In general the book suggests haste, carelessness, and no very exhaustive study of the documents available." John Bakeless

— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 680w

"Though the latest biographers of Hindenburg add nothing essentially new to one's knowledge of his career, they have told his life story with a clarity, a detachment of view and a discrimination in separating the man from the legend unsurpassed in any other kindred study." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 200w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 100w

"Not only a biography of Germany's Grand Old Man, but an excellent running history of the war from the German viewpoint." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:8 Ag '30 320w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"This interesting volume, compressed within the limit of 290 octavo pages, tells us all we care to know about one of the most outstanding figures of our time in the field of action." Charles Lowe

+ Sat R 149:628 My 17 '30 700w

"They are competent to discuss this historic contemporary figure and they have produced a thorough and enlightening story. . . The authors have given a lucid analysis of the war as planned and executed by the German general staff, particularly as applied to the Russian and French fronts. They have made available for their readers an easy grasp of the military situation at the beginning of the war, culminating in the invasion of Belgium, and they have traced its development through the high point of German successes down to the disastrous conclusion."

GOLDSMITH, M. L., and VOIGT, F.—Cont.
+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 1 '30 650w

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit
Survey 65:168 N 1 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p486 Je 12 '30 650w

GOLDSTROM, JOHN. Narrative history of aviation. 319p il $4 (17s) Macmillan

629.13 Aeronautics—History 30-4833

A story of aviation which confines itself to a selection of outstanding events and developments in aeronautics. The first chapter is in the nature of a survey of early attempts to fly, beginning with the mythology on the subject, and ending with the history of modern pioneers. There follow chapters on the Wright brothers, aviation and the World war, air mail, transoceanic flights, women in aviation, etc.

Booklist 26:266 Ap '30

"A rousing, profitable and entertaining tale, providing recent news on all fronts."
+ Books p12 My 4 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30

"For the most part the book is heavily weighted with a relatively unimportant freight of facts. It includes, moreover, much material which may be found elsewhere. The best writing is a page summation by the late J. D. Hill of an airmail trip through what apparently was a cloudburst. It is perfect pilot humor, if you know what that means. By itself, it is worth the price of the volume. The history is rather well indexed, and serves well its purpose as a reference volume." B. G.
— + N Y Evening Post p10m F 1 '30 220w

"Such a book as this has a distinct usefulness It is more than a bare chronology. The newer efforts at safety in the air, the part women have played in aviation and the important rôle of lighter-than-air craft are not neglected in a book which is both readable and informative."
+ N Y Times p10 Ap 27 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30

Pratt p19 summer '30

St Louis 28:137 My '30

"This is to date the most comprehensive story of aviation to be compiled within a single volume. A sweeping statement, to be sure, but the book can meet the challenge of adverse criticism. Written in a lucid style, devoid of perplexing technicalities, Mr. Goldstrom's history should appeal to every air-minded person in this country. . . With his intimate knowledge of aviation, Mr. Goldstrom has written with authority upon a subject of wide scope. He has made an important contribution to aeronautical literature and his work will be of permanent value."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:810 Mr 8 '30 520w

"Mr. Goldstrom has not only had the advantage of personal friendship with Mr. Orville Wright, the great pioneer of aviation, but he has kept in close touch with modern flying and was one of the first publicists to make the trans-continental journey of the United States by air. His History is probably the most interesting and accurate of those published on aviation."
+ Spec 144:910 My 31 '30 160w

"The chapters which spring from his own knowledge and experience are solid, lively and interesting pieces of work."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p392 My 8 '30 250w

GOLLOCK, GEORGINA ANNE. At the sign of the flying angel; a book of the sailor at the coastline. 244p il $2 (5s) Longmans

387 Seamen. Missions to seamen 30-12177

Traces the changes that have come into the lives of sailors, particularly British sailors, during several hundred years, showing especially the changes wrought by the passing of the old clipper ships and the rise of modern steamers. It depicts the men of the British merchant marine in the ports of the world today; shows them as not unworthy descendants of the Elizabethan seadogs, and describes the work of the Missions to seamen, an agency of the Church of England, with its flag, "The sign of the flying angel."

"Although a book written to awaken interest in and to gain support for the work of the Anglican Missions for Seamen, it uses lively incident and good stories to attain its end, and thus becomes a valuable addition to the long list of books of the sea."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 280w

"Besides telling of the men who have done and who do the work and of those for whom it is done, Mr. Gollock gives interesting accounts of institutes in all parts of the world."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p327 Ap 17 '30 750w

GONCHAROV, IVAN ALEKSANDROVICH. Oblomov; tr. from the Russian by Natalie A. Duddington. 525p $3 Macmillan [10s 6d Allen] 30-12153

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

"Oblomov is a great novel because its author manages to communicate, through symbols chosen nearly a century ago, something universal, still in the world." Ernestine Evans
+ Books p5 Ja 12 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p1 Ja 25 '30 360w

"No matter what 'Oblomov's' political satirical side—uninteresting in our day—may be, this strange drama is so intensely human that the whole novel acquires an undeniable value as a work of art. It is this value that makes it live." Alexander Nazaroff
+ N Y Times p9 F 16 '30 750w

Reviewed by Alexander Kaun
Sat R of Lit 6:797 Mr 8 '30 900w

Spec 143:922 D 14 '29 450w

Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 200w

GONG, ENG YING, and GRANT, BRUCE. Tong war! the first complete history of the tongs in America; details of the tong wars and their causes; lives of famous hatchetmen and gunmen; and inside information as to the workings of the tongs, their aims and achievements. 287p il $2.50 Brown, N.L.

325.73 Chinese in the United States 30-16980

" 'Tong War!' is an outline rather than a history of Chinese racketeering in the United States from the organization of the first tong—the Quong Dock—in San Francisco shortly after the Civil War almost up to last week's unpleasantness between the Hip Sings—of which one of the authors is a member—and the On Leongs."—N Y Evening Post

Books p10 S 7 '30 150w

"It seems, despite intrinsic interest, journalistic drivel, and although Mr. Grant has done a lot of obvious editing and prodding, he has utterly disregarded elements of plausibility, fact, and respectable writing. The principal trouble with 'Tong War!' is its persistent overstatement. Eng Ling Gong, who told the tales to Bruce Grant, is a former Hip Sing president, has lived through much tong warfare, has known many boo how doy and their superiors.

His tale is as good as human recollection can be. It makes fascinating reading for a while." W. M. T.
— + Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 500w

"As an outline the book is satisfactory, though of course no important tong secrets are exposed. Its inaccuracies seem to be only those that are unavoidable when, in a field where little authentic written data exists, historians must rely on memory, legend and hearsay." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 300w

"A sort of superstudy of crime at its coldest and bloodiest and criminals at their most efficient. . . Eddie Gong is a Hip Sing and has been an important person in that tong for twenty years. He tells about the wars between the tongs as he has known them in both New York and San Francisco and about the famous hatchetmen, gunmen and highbinders who carried on these bloody struggles, paying much attention to their various warrior exploits."
+ N Y Times p27 Je 8 '30 350w
St Louis 28:230 O '30
Springf'd Republican p8 Jl 31 '30 450w

GOOD, CARTER VICTOR. Teaching in college and university: a survey of the problems and literature in higher education. 557p $3 Warwick & York

378 Education, Higher. Education, Higher—Bibliography. Colleges and universities—United States 29-14393

A bibliographical survey of the field of higher education. Beginning with a chapter on sources of information concerning the problems encountered in higher education, and a survey of the present status of colleges, teachers and students, Professor Good deals with five fundamental problems in learning and teaching: aims, materials, bases of learning, methods, and measurements. The last chapter sums up the reorganizations and adjustments already under way, lists current attempts to improve college teaching, and presents means of bringing about further improvement.

"A bibliography which differs from the conventional annotated bibliography in that the compiler's comments are placed under suitable headings as quasi-connected discourse, in which style is sacrificed to the more immediate necessity of crowding much into limited space. . . Many readers of the book would welcome evidence of a more critical attitude in the treatment accorded many of the references. As an accurate and extensive bibliography in an important field, Professor Good's book is valuable. It furnishes a ready reference to the literature of higher education and, as such, deserves a place in the libraries of college teachers and students who are interested in the problems of higher education." C. W. Knudsen
+ — El School J 30:391 Ja '30 800w
St Louis 28:39 F '30

"The book fills a real need and fills it with scholarly thoroughness. Bibliographical summaries have appeared in other fields, but this is the first attempt to summarize in a thorough way the investigations in the field of higher education. Even a cursory examination of the book impresses one with its thoroughness. A more careful examination leads to the conviction that it is an outstanding work. One wishes at times that the author had been more critical of the material under consideration. In spite of this objection, the value of the publication as a source book for the occasional reader as well as for the research worker is great." Albert Grant
+ School R 38:68 Ja '30 450w

GOOD, MARGARET E. Hear with your eyes, by reading word-forms on the face. (Appleton popular health ser.) 41p il $1 Appleton [2s 6d Methuen]

371.912 Lip-reading 30-27663

An explanation of the art of lip-reading. The author classifies sound and lip formations, with accompanying photographs to illustrate the position the lips take with each vowel and consonant sound.

"Intended as a handbook for the deaf, this little book explains clearly and fully the art of lip-reading. There are excellent pictures from photographs that illustrate the position of the organs and the look of the face in each sound and the pupil is told how to study in a mirror the appearance of his own countenance as he produces the sounds."
+ N Y Times p20 O 5 '30 120w
Survey 65:240 N 15 '30 20w
Times [London] Lit Sup p459 My 29 '30 200w

GOODCHILD, GEORGE (ALAN DARE, pseud.). Splendid crime. 312p $2 Houghton [3s 6d Hodder]

[30-11611]

"Just as there is said to be black magic and white, so there are black and white criminals. The Reckoner belonged to the latter class, taking it upon himself to mete out justice to those who, although they had imposed upon the poor, had contrived to slip through the net of the law. Against the Reckoner was pitted Inspector Brent, who has the worst of their encounters until, by a lucky chance, he succeeded in discovering the Reckoner's identity."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Bookm 72:xxi S '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 S 7 '30 100w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 80w

"This is a sound choice for those who expect a minimum of probability with plenty of excitement in their detective fare." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p22 O 19 '30 180w

"The story is well contrived; and although Mr. Goodchild is content to use ready-made phrases, his situations are both original and exciting."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p253 Mr 20 '30 100w

GOODENOUGH, ERWIN RAMSDELL. Jurisprudence of the Jewish courts in Egypt; legal administration by the Jews under the early Roman empire as described by Philo Judaeus. 268p $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Milford]

349.32 Jews—Law. Philo Judeaus. Courts—Egypt. Law—Egypt. Roman law 29-29412

"The two most conspicuous representatives of Judaism among the Gentiles in early Roman times were Philo of Alexandria and Josephus. The place of the former in Hellenistic Judaism is a topic of abiding significance and one that has of late awakened fresh interest. In a recently published study by Professor Goodenough of Yale, Philo is presented as a practical lawyer. The investigation is based upon Philo's De specialibus legibus. From this treatise the author believes it possible to extract a more specific picture than has heretofore been available of the law used by Jews in their own courts in Alexandria."—J Religion

---

"A work which gives us much and might well have given us more. Philo is so important and has been so much neglected, except by philosophers and theologians, that we can only trust that Dr. Goodenough will continue his researches and, it may be, revise this particular embodiment of them. It is a type of study full of pitfalls for the unwary but it is eminently worth while." Max Radin
— + Class Philol 25:294 Jl '30 1700w

"This study is of value not only for the light it sheds on the Judaism of the Diaspora, but for the suggestions it offers to one who is concerned with the relations of the early Christians to the legal authorities in the Roman state." S. J. Case
+ J Religion 10:413 Jl '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p296 Ap 3 '30 2050w

GOODENOUGH, E. R.—Continued
"We may say that Professor Goodenough has not taken his responsibilities in these matters quite as seriously as they deserved. The subject matter of his book is highly important and interesting to legal historians and it is to be hoped that he will continue to dig in this scarcely used quarry, and to apply to his results a slightly severer censorship." Max Radin
— Yale Law J 39:1222 Je '30 2000w

GOODIER, ALBAN. Public life of our Lord Jesus Christ; an interpretation. 2v 478;487p $7.50 Kenedy [21s Burns]

232.95 Jesus Christ—Biography [30-32513]

"There are, the Archbishop of Hierapolis says, three main categories under which 'lives of Christ' may be divided—namely, the devotional, the scientific, and that which expresses the search for the living Christ. He would have these volumes placed in the third class. Two questions have been prominent in his mind: 'What was our Lord, as a Man, like? What is He like to-day?' The author confines himself entirely to the period between the Baptism by St. John the Baptist to the day before the Last Supper."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"For community reading and for private meditation, Archbishop Goodier has provided a manual full of charm, spiritual insight and inspiration." F. P. L.
+ Cath World 132:242 N '30 350w

"As it would be of some interest to see a new book on astronomy written from the pre-Copernican standpoint, or a fresh biological treatise which ignored the theory of evolution, so it is interesting to look into a life of Christ composed from the pre-critical standpoint. . . To adopt this pre-critical attitude, repudiating results established in every reputable University in Europe and America by the patient labours of generations of students, is to forego all claims to be scientific, which simply means to be concerned with truth rather than opinion. . . Archbishop Goodier claims to accept 'all that the historians and scientists have positively to teach,' but the word 'positively' indicated that what he means is that he accepts from the historians only those facts which fit in with his own preconceived theories." J. C. H.
— Sat R 149:361 Mr 22 '30 580w

"Altogether, this book, in spite of its avoidance of critical problems, and of much which many of its readers would place among the assured results of textual research, makes a distinct contribution to our understanding of the historical Christ." Evelyn Underhill
+ — Spec 144:868 Mr 24 '30 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p438 My 22 '30 220w

GOODSPEED, HELEN CRANDALL, and JOHNSON, EMMA. Care and training of children. (Lippincott's home economics texts) 219p $1.80 Lippincott

649.1 Children—Care and hygiene. Children—Management 29-25644

Textbook for high school classes. The first half of the book deals with the care of the baby in the first year of life; the second half deals with the child from the ages of one to five. Each chapter takes up one problem, and suggested assignment questions are given at the beginnings of the chapters. The problems are concerned with food, clothing, hygiene, exercises, etc.

Booklist 26:226 Mr '30

"This book should meet a wide-spread need among teachers of home economics in junior high schools, in homemaking units of continuation schools, and in adult education centers. Child study groups in which it is necessary to have very simple, concrete, and elementary reference material will find the book well adapted to their needs." Ruth Andrus
+ J Home Econ 22:51 Ja '30 480w

St Louis 28:99 Ap '30

GOODWIN, GERAINT. Conversations with George Moore. 175p $3 Knopf [10s 6d Benn]

B or 92 Moore, George 30-15190

The author of "Hail and Farewell" has authorized the publication of this book by a young Welsh journalist. The Conversations, which contain valuable literary criticism and views on many subjects, are preluded by an appreciation of Mr. Moore, his talents, his personality, his genius.

"Admiring but intelligent book." A. R. Thompson
+ Bookm 71:341 Je '30 500w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch
Books p6 Je 8 '30 650w

"If the admirer of Mr. Moore is to escape disappointment in this book, he must not open it expecting a supplementary chapter to 'Conversations in Ebury Street.' Mr. Goodwin is not Boswell, and even if he were, Mr. Moore is not Dr. Johnson—his utterances have never had the qualities which made reporting him verbatim an easy task for the biographer. With a subject such as Mr. Moore, the boldly imaginative biographer would have more hope of survival than the faithful and scrupulous reporter—which Mr. Goodwin apparently is."
+ — Nation and Ath 46:356 D 7 '29 500w

"It is the same old George Moore, carrying on another series of conversations in Ebury Street, and saying pretty much the same old things on somewhat newer topics. Here, however, we have the charm of informality, with an atmosphere and touches of characterization on the part of Mr. Goodwin which are often delightful." H. L. Matthews
+ N Y Times p16 My 11 '30 700w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

Reviewed by Richard Church
Spec 143:779 N 23 '29 700w

GORDON, ARMISTEAD CHURCHILL. In the picturesque Shenandoah Valley; with an introd. by Philip Alexander Bruce. 201p $2.50 Garrett & Massie inc., Richmond, Va.

917.559 Shenandoah Valley 30-12587

"The Shenandoah Valley as a picturesque whole, its story, the part it has played in the stages of the nation's history make the many-sided and interesting theme of this book."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p3 Je 21 '30 350w

"Mr. Gordon's book would perhaps have been more interesting and certainly more easily consulted if he had given more attention to the organizing of his material so that each subject would have been treated in full in its proper classification instead of in the rambling, loose-jointed manner in which he turns from the one thing to another in each chapter. But the work is richly compounded of varied and interesting material."
+ — N Y Times p26 Je 1 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

St Louis 28:244 O '30

GORDON, CHARLES G. WILLIAM. Gringo. 355p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-25738

A young Canadian engineer, Johnny Bennett, takes his wife with him to Costazuela, a South American mining camp. A different environment and a different moral atmosphere make life at the camp hard for Phyllis—but she remains true to Johnny until her return trip to Canada. The novel is, in the main, a study of community life in a mining camp.

"One easily enough believes all of this circumstantial and uninspired account."
Books p10 O 5 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 500w

N Y Times p35 N 16 '30 230w

GORDON, CHARLES WILLIAM (RALPH CONNOR, pseud.). The runner. 481p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]
29-23128

The background for this historical romance is the Niagara peninsula during the War of 1812, when border warfare was rampant between the United States and the English, Canadians and Indians. René La Flame and Charlotte Brookes are the hero and heroine of the tale, and such historical figures as Winfield Scott, Tecumseh, Black Hawk and General Dearborn appear.

Booklist 26:204 F '30

"A rousing tale of the historical-amorous persuasion."
+ Books p17 Ja 12 '30 150w

"In this work Connor has equalled his other interesting novels. He has the rather unusual ability of giving a realistic presentation of facts that is cleancut and enthralling."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 4 '30 160w

"Mr. Connor's young hero has a grand time, and most boys, reading of his adventures, will very likely have a grand time, too." E. S.
N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 60w

"Ralph Connor's narrative is a smooth and agreeable piece of writing, with a background of action and scenes of dramatic power. Even if some of the characters are 'too good to be true,' and some of the dialogue is sugarcoated, the setting is realistic and the book has the power of taking you back to an interesting period of the past."
+ N Y Times p9 Ja 12 '30 300w
Pratt p40 spring '30

"The action takes place almost entirely in the Niagara Peninsula, and there are many vivid descriptions of the battle fought by the British to repel the attempted invasions by enemy forces from across the border. For hero there is an incredibly valorous young Canadian whose exploits, if seriously regarded, seem preposterous. The merit of the tale lies chiefly in the historic authenticity with which life in the Dominion is reproduced prior to and during the years of the war."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:741 F 15 '30 200w

"Mr. Connor has drawn some remarkable pictures of scenes enacted during that bitter and prolonged struggle for the mastery of the border."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p192 Mr 6 '30 220w

GORDON, JOHN. My six years with the Black watch, 1881-1887; Egyptian campaign, eastern Soudan, Nile expedition, Egyptian frontier field force (including a study of General Charles G. Gordon and his commission from the British and Egyptian governments to Khartoum). 362p il $3.50 Fort Hill press, 289 Congress st., Boston

B or 92 Great Britain—Army. Egypt—History—British occupation, 1882—. Sudan, Egyptian—History. Gordon, Charles George 29-29380

Relating the story of his own career, Mr Gordon tells how, in 1881 at the age of seventeen, he enlisted in the Black Watch and accompanied this British battalion to Egypt. There he took part in the Tel-el-Kebir campaign and had many other adventures in the warfare against the Arabians, which occupied the next five years.

"Mr. Gordon has written in a very pleasant and easily-read strain. His descriptions are lively, and his admirable historical-biographical-political work is entitled to a position among books of contemporary British-World history." J. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 21 '29 850w

"This book contains many points of interest besides the personal factor, taking us back as it does nearly fifty years to the Arabi rebellion and the beginning of the British occupation of Egypt."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p19 Ja 9 '30 800w

GORDON, NEIL. Silent murders. 294p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Longmans]
29-19785

Eight or nine respectable, quiet gentlemen of various professions were found shot—in succession—each with a small cardboard pinned on the body designating his number in the death chain. Inspector Dewar, baffled by the lack of connection between the men's interests and pasts, finally uncovers the clue and tracks down the murderer.

"A highly exciting tale of a hatred fostered for twenty years."
+ Bookm 70:xxvi Ja '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p11 D 29 '29 130w
N Y Times p21 F 16 '30 150w

"Mr. Gordon gives a very interesting insight into the methods adopted by the police in working out the details of a case, showing how an infinity of trouble may yield only a tiny item of additional information and making it clear that too many clues may be almost as much of a handicap as too few. The reader will feel the greatest reluctance to put down the book unfinished."
Times [London] Lit Sup p341 Ap 25 '29 150w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVICH PYESHKOFF). Bystander; tr. from the Russian by Bernard Guilbert Guerney. 729p $3 (10s 6d) Cape
30-9734

Bystander is the first volume of a trilogy that has for its scope the period from the death of Alexander II to the Revolution of 1917. The first volume ends with the coronation of Czar Nicholas. Clim Samghin, the central figure of this book, was born at a time when the intelligentsia, in their hatred of the Czar, idolized the people. When he was a child, Clim never associated the mouzhiks and country wives with those people of whom poems were written. At the gymnasium he meets various groups who speak of the people, but he does not feel any nearer to them. After the coronation, Czar Nicholas is expected to arrive at Nizhni-Novgorod. Clim hopes that in the Czar he will see a man of power. The Czar finally arrives. Clim notices the indifference of the crowds and listens to their comments. He first begins to understand the people. He realizes that this little man, the Czar, with his guilty smile, is not fitted to rule over so many thousands of people.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 4:354 Ap '30

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p22 Je '30 350w
Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"It is seldom since the days of Tolstoy and Dostoievski that so full a stream of life has poured through the pages of a book as pours through this latest and surely greatest work of Gorki's. There have been instances of the thing; there have been Nexö, Mann, Rolland, Undset, Galsworthy, Bennett, Maugham and Dreiser. But nowhere among the masterpieces of these novelists has there appeared, I think, so rich a spectacle as Gorki, with impressive ease and opulence, here sets moving." Mark Van Doren
+ Books p1 Ap 6 '30 1250w
Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 650w

"It offers American readers a picture of Russia absolutely authentic, for it is not only an in-growing, but an out-growing entity. . . There are over seven hundred pages of 'Bystander,' and somehow it seems fuller of words than any book that I ever have read—perhaps because the characters are forever and ever talking, discussing life, hopelessly, but desperately and passionately, on and on, never doing or feeling so much as thinking. And the author, all of the time, is thinking, too, not feeling. The result is a strange, baffling, but

GORKY, M., pseud.—Continued
tremendously impressive novel." Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p14 Ap 26 '30 430w

"Clim Samghin himself, the central personage in the novel, the prism through which most of the occurrences in the book are refracted, is utterly unreal, invented. Hence many of the events refracted through him, though historically authentic, also appear unreal and invented. In his treatment of Clim the author tries to be super-subtle, analytical, keenly psychological. But he is not very successful. . . Gorki is no master of form, particularly of big form. His novels and plays are almost invariably amorphous, rickety, loose. To conceal these fundamental structural defects he is often forced to resort to dogma, tendentiousness, romantic vaporing, and endless and vapid philosophizing. . Gorki seems never to have learned that long speeches can never make up for a poor plot, and that without organization, concentration, and clarity no novel, however 'splendid in scope' and monumental in bulk, can be properly called a masterpiece." Joshua Kunitz
— Nation 130:452 Ap 16 '30 1150w

"This book's significance is in its challenge. Gorki has a message he must give before he dies. It is here, and it matters, matters profoundly. One reading will not suffice. It is a book to be read and read again, to be discussed until there is not a question left unsolved." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:416 Je 28 '30 450w

"The sketches are as clear and powerful as Forain drawings. There are scenes that stand out unforgettably. For Gorki, no doubt, each of his vivid scenes has its necessary place in the scheme of his trilogy. This first section is but a section; it is furthermore too long and too complex to be fully grasped at a single reading. Only fragmentarily can we be aware of the connections which presumably link up the parts into a whole."
+ New Statesman 35:190 My 17 '30 740w

"Opening 'Bystander,' one naturally asks oneself: Has Gorki, the novelist, at last become equal to Gorki, the short-story teller and the autobiographer? Has he attained in this colossal and exceedingly complicated novel that perfection which he never succeeded in attaining in his pre-revolutionary novelistic period, in works far less difficult and complicated?. . . The novel is rich in high qualities. And yet, the further one reads, the stronger is one's conviction that, on the whole, 'Bystander' is certainly not the achievement one hoped it would be; its shortcomings are serious." Alexander Nazaroff
+ — N Y Times p1 Ap 6 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Ap 8 '30 850w

"One hopes that Gorky will not insist on being judged in the future by this bulky book. It is by one play and a few short stories that he might better be remembered. For the truth of the matter is that Gorky has never written what can conscientiously be called a good novel." W. F.
Outlook 154:628 Ap 16 '30 230w

Reviewed by Alexander Kaun
Sat R of Lit 6:1061 My 24 '30 1600w
Spec 145:198 Ag 9 '30 250w

"The work emphasizes the weakness of Gorky's mixed realistic and philosophical style of fiction. It has some powerful passages and impressive moments, but it is a very disappointing piece of work, confused, prolix, shapeless and slightly artificial."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p455 My 29 '30 530w
World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 40w

GORMAN, HERBERT SHERMAN. Incredible marquis, Alexandre Dumas. 466p il $5 Farrar
B or 92 Dumas, Alexandre 29-22939
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The biography is too long and too wordy; the story and the style both have a tendency to flop. But Mr. Gorman has been at immense pains to collect and marshal his facts, and he is sufficiently interested in them to allow them to tell their own story. He does succeed in giving a very good picture or panorama, on a huge scale, of Dumas's life, and, what is perhaps more important, of that amazing period in Paris between 1820 and 1850 in which Dumas played so prominent a part." Leonard Woolf
+ — Nation and Ath 46:610 F 1 '30 900w

Reviewed by E. P. Dargan
New Repub 62:53 F 26 '30 650w

"There are some extremely good things in this book: they are all Dumas' own. Mr. Gorman has taken one of the most romantic and exciting lives in literature and made a lamentably unreadable book out of it."
— New Statesman 34:512 Ja 25 '30 200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:82 D '29

"Mr. Gorman's merit is that he is profoundly thrilled by the romance of a prodigious personality and of a career at once glorious and preposterous. He has caught fire, and the heat comes through his writing. . . Dumas had personal as well as literary genius. Mr. Gorman has felt that, intensely; and because he has so felt it, much must be forgiven him. His literary sins are as scarlet, but his book must be read. It has something of the prodigality and verve of the master's own reminiscences." T. E. Welby
+ — Sat R 149:110 Ja 25 '30 1300w

"On the whole, while wishing to be of good humor, I find this American life of Dumas to be more curious than authentic, more flamboyant than reasonable: it is not the Dumas of the boulevards and of the doubtful photograph shops that we want at this distance of time. In saying this, I have to remember, in justice to his present biographer, that hardly two persons in his lifetime were agreed either about Alexandre or his works." R. S. Garnett
— + Spec 144:201 F 8 '30 850w

"Until recently we have had but little Dumas literature in English. The last year or so has brought a whole crop; and this book, in spite of faults in taste of several kinds, is the most informing and the most consonant with the spirit of the Great Alexander himself."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p383 My 8 '30 1000w

"Let it be said at the outset that Mr. Gorman has been extraordinarily successful. In a style which is brisk, suggestive, and highly colored—though, at times, a little fatiguing in its search of picturesque effects—he has made Dumas's Gargantuan figure live again before our eyes. . . All this is very lively reading. And yet, however much one may be dazzled by the brilliancy of the book, one cannot help feeling that here is to be found the tendency to stress the humorous side of the personage at the expense of the finer qualities. To put too much emphasis on the physical idiosyncrasies of Dumas is to minimize what, after all, is essential: the wonderful life of his imagination." Albert Feuillerat
— + Yale R n s 19:851 summer '30 950w

GORTNER, ROSS AIKEN. Outlines of biochemistry; the organic chemistry and the physico-chemical reactions of biologically important compounds and systems. 793p il $6 Wiley [30s Chapman]
612.015 Biological chemistry. Physiological chemistry. Chemistry, Organic 29-21409

"The purpose . . . is that those students who are interested in biological phenomena may have an insight into the roles which organic chemistry and physical chemistry play in living processes. It may be regarded as an attempt to interpret some of the reactions of the normal cell. Although a great many of the illustrations have been drawn from plant material, it must be remembered that in the last analysis the chemistry of the cell is essentially the same both for plants and animals."—Preface

"The author has performed an important service in the preparation of this book. It covers much material not found in other texts, with which biochemists need become better acquainted, namely, a very full and modern treatment of the colloidal state, to which is devoted 290 pages; and has valuable chapters dealing with the following groups of substances, of especial interest in the chemistry of plant tissues, the pectic substances contributed by J. J. Willaman, tannins, plant pigments and essential oils. The form of presentation is attractive and stimulating." P. A. Shaffer
+ Am Chem Soc J 52:3474 Ag '30 1200w

"The first impression of the reader is that there is more of chemistry and physics than of biology. This characteristic is particularly pronounced in the early and best part which deals with physical relationships. We know of no more readable and informative material on colloidal phenomena than those first chapters. Certain passages must be read with discretion. These merely remind one that the author is not infallible, and hence very human. Taken as a whole, he deserves our heartfelt gratitude for making available so much material in such condensed form." E. F. Kohman
+ Chem & Met Eng 37:259 Ap '30 200w

"This is not an easy volume to review because it contains so much that is good and so much that is bad. It is strongest in its first half, because it adds a colloid-chemical point of view to the substance composing the orthodox textbooks of 'biochemistry' and because this is the half which is most essentially Gortner. If it were all Gortner it would be better still." M. H. Fischer
+ — Ind & Eng Chem 22:104 Ja '30 800w

"This is not a text-book of agricultural chemistry in the strict sense. It is much more. Thus it devotes ten chapters and 277 pages to a consideration of physico-chemical problems intimately associated with cellular chemistry. Some may regard this as an undue allowance in a book of this size, but they are adequately answered by the originality of selection and the freshness of treatment of the matter embodied in these chapters, much of it distinctly unusual in biochemistry text-books. Prof. Gortner is certainly to be congratulated on his breadth of vision in the more physical fields of biochemistry. . . There are certain omissions which are perhaps explained by the circumstance that the book is based on courses of lectures to students of agricultural chemistry." J. P.
+ — Nature 126:231 Ag 16 '30 1000w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:4 Ja '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30
St Louis 28:99 Ap '30

GOSSE, PHILIP. Hawkins: scourge of Spain (Eng title: Sir John Hawkins). (Golden hind ser.) 290p il $4 Harper [12s 6d Lane]
B or 92 Hawkins, Sir John

A biography of Sir John Hawkins, gentleman of Devon, English naval hero, slave trader, and treasurer of the British navy, who fought against the Spanish Armada, and finally died at sea, as became a gallant sailor.

"It takes perception as well as erudition to handle such material. Mr. Gosse has both and a sense of the dramatic as well."
+ Bookm 72:v D '30 80w

"This is something more than a biography and stirring tale of a gallant sailor. It is the story of the growth of the British navy, and England's rise to power and wealth under Queen Elizabeth. The story of the Armada has been often told, but never better than here—with the inner whys and wherefores—the preparation and the aftermath. The author has uncovered forgotten documents, brought in a wealth of detail and many concrete illustrations in his story. Philip Gosse has entered into the spirit of the times; with great gusto and compelling power he recounts, interprets, portrays and illuminates one of the most romantic and thrilling periods of England's history." T. C. Richards
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 6 '30 2050w

Reviewed by Al Chase
Chicago Daily Tribune p16 N 29 '30 100w

"Mr. Gosse had the kind of partiality for his subject which a biographer ought to have. His account of the Anglo-Spanish conflict is, of course, done from the orthodox English point of view, and the impartial may be shocked a little by his patriotic zest. . . His is a very readable and informative book." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 O 4 '30 950w
N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 50w

"If Dr. J. A. Williamson had not produced his masterly study of Hawkins, and put that great Elizabethan in a new light, it is improbable that Mr. Philip Gosse's vivacious new book on Sir John Hawkins would have been half as informing as it is. However, Mr. Gosse acknowledges his debt to the standard biography, and rightly accepts Dr. Williamson's conclusions."
+ Spec 145:606 O 25 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p906 N 6 '30 1250w

GRACE, DICK. Squadron of death. 304p il $2.75 Doubleday, Doran
B or 92 Aeronautics. Moving pictures
29-22975

Dick Grace, famous movie plane-crasher, writes the story of his life and his adventures. He has been stunt-actor in such productions as "Wings" and the "Flying circus." Dick Grace has the enviable record of having made over 160 changes from speeding plane to express train, to motor-boat, to automobile, or to another plane in mid-air. He is Chief Buzzard of a group of seven original daredevil aviators, three of whom have lost their lives.

Books p23 Mr 23 '30 430w

"Mr. Grace has a fluent style and an insight into human nature that one would not suspect from his devil-may-care exterior. One thing that impresses the reader is the futility of it all, since the moving picture audiences do not seem to be able to discriminate between the false and the true. A stunt man gets none of the glory, comparatively none of the profits, and little or none of the consideration expended on the principals." J. C. G.
Boston Transcript p2 N 6 '29 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

"Grace has told his tale well and with simple straightforwardness. Its literary style is probably not worth a gamma; its true merit lies in its gripping tenor of adventure. He set out to tell his story, one feels, and went ahead with it, like a pilot flying on a compass course. When he got to the end it was all told—a narrative of some emotion and many thrills, breathing a spirit of devil-may-care. . . It is all calculated to make any small boy's hair stand on end." T. J. C. Martyn
+ N Y Times p27 Ja 12 '30 250w
St Louis 28:147 My '30

"This is quite an exceptional book, both in matter and manner and one that we can recommend to anyone, whether interested in films or not."
+ Spec 144:211 F 8 '30 140w

"Mr. Grace tells of his many adventures with a directness and simplicity which makes it a record of fact as exciting as the best of thrillers."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p277 Mr 27 '30 220w

GRAEME, BRUCE, pseud. See Jeffries, G. M.

GRAHAM, CARROLL, and GRAHAM, GARRETT. Queer people. 276p $2 Vanguard press
30-17096

"The central figure is an irresponsible youth, a reporter by profession, who drifts to California because it is one of the few fields where his erratic record is not known. He discovers the fantastic social microcosm of the studio people and finds himself in his element. All Whitey asks of life are the necessities and the diversions, and in his pursuit of these he penetrates strange places and encounters queer people. His moments of professional success are as casual as his adventures with alcohol and women. Even when he becomes involved in the serious melodrama of a murder his gay outlook never forsakes him, and he finds the arena of the law simply another playground, even though his life is at stake."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 27:104 N '30

Books p21 S 21 '30 150w

" 'Queer People' is by all odds the best work that has appeared in this field. Written, roughly, in novel form, the book is a brilliantly savage account of the things that the more or less permanent residents of Hollywood think and do. . . Much of 'Queer People' is cheaply melodramatic and the actual construction and writing of the novel is markedly inferior but it has been composed with such gusto, such fearless regard for the truth and so penetrating a knowledge of actual Hollywood doings that it immediately becomes a rather important book. At any rate, it is an extremely entertaining one."

+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 6 '30 420w

"America has produced little fiction of the picaresque class. Here is one contribution—a book without a moral, seeking neither to prove nor to teach, but merely to entertain the reader with the recital of the adventures of a carefree scamp." Randolph Bartlett

Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 500w

GRAHAM, DOROTHY (MRS JAMES W. BENNETT). Candles in the sun; a satire in pastels. 297p $2.50 Stokes
30-3072

The city of Florence is the setting for this "satire in pastels." Jane Trent, from the Middle West, comes to Italy in search of romance—and meets Count Gino Buonconte. The social interplay between American and Italian types, and the juxtaposition of Latin and Saxon ideals and traditions of love and marriage, furnish the theme for this dramatic comedy of manners. Their pale flames having burned to the frustration point beneath a more robust Italian sun, the American characters suffer by contrast, under the delicate irony of Miss Graham's pen, inevitable defeat.

Booklist 26:281 Ap '30

"All the stock characters are here, but it is to Miss Graham's credit that she has presented them in a new light. She has subtitled the book 'a satire in pastels', and that is exactly what it is—a satire of delicacy, without barbs to its shafts." Edmund Kennedy

+ Bookm 71:109 Mr '30 200w

"The complex web of Florentine life of the present day affords a rich background, and the author has employed it expertly. 'Candles in the Sun' moves surefootedly among emotions; it builds up a picture by minute strokes and it is not until the picture is complete that you realize how rightly each one has been applied."

+ Books p13 Mr 9 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p5 F 15 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

"'Candles in the Sun' is distinctly one of the better-written novels of the new year. With fine economy of means, clarity of purpose and understanding of form, Miss Graham presents the interrelationships of several Americans and Italians in contemporary Florence. . . Throughout her novel Miss Graham sustains a cool ironic suavity of statement entirely in keeping with the ironic nature of her observation." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 200w

"Her satire is qualified by kindliness—a 'Satire in Pastels.' And the entire novel is possessed of a restraint and delicacy that are pleasantly arresting."

+ N Y Times p27 F 16 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

GRAHAM, HARRY J. C. More ruthless rhymes ^{2} for heartless homes. 64p il $1 Putnam [3s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]
827 30-29785

Heartless rhymes about quaint situations, many of them arising from the violent deaths of the author's supposed relations or friends.

Bookm 72:xv D '30 100w

"With only one constructional idea to manipulate, Mr. Graham shows amazing resource; the drawback to the book is that it can be read in five minutes."

+ Nation and Ath 48:sup356 D 6 '30 80w

"It is thirty years since he first filled the nurseries of England with his cruel rhymes, and now here is another store, not perhaps quite so spontaneous, but even more heartless."

+ New Statesman 36:22 O 11 '30 80w

"He has lost none of his old mastery as a rhymed chronicler of misfortune, and his selection of calamities is as varied as ever."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p965 N 20 '30 100w

GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE CUNNINGHAME. See Cunninghame Graham, R. B.

GRANBERRY, EDWIN. Erl King. 285p $2 Macaulay
30-23442

Over John Littlepage, scion of an aristocratic Southern family, a mysterious doom hangs from his birth. The ghost of the mythological Erl King haunts him, and follows him when he takes his sweetheart, Ellen Clyde, over the reefs in a sailboat. The story, built upon this slender thread of plot, ends with the tragic death of hero and heroine. Its setting is the southern part of Florida.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 5:28 S '30

"Thoroughly over-wrought study in adolescent psychology. So great is the author's fondness for 'atmospheric effects' that all the elements of the book—plot, characters, theme—become irrecoverably blurred in the reader's mind." William Troy

— Bookm 72:312 N '30 100w

"An admirably done novel, in which the craftsmanship is sure, the sense of form unfaltering, and the quality of the prose steadily lovely. . . 'The Erl King' has the agelessness of good poetry; one is a little surprised from a casual reference to Halley's comet to find it placed as definitely as 1910. It has, too, in the direct simplicity and loveliness of its prose, the feeling that it is what Ellen Glasgow referred to recently as 'writing with roots.' It is a million miles away from the ordinary hurly-burly of everyday American life, and yet curiously near it by the very truth and universality of its symbolism." Herschel Brickell

+ Books p21 O 19 '30 480w

"To read so unusual a book as this is a rare pleasure. The theme is persistently obscure. Always the reader seems to visualize the scenes through a sort of mental haze. One must resort to metaphor and simile to describe it. It is poesy throughout. It is music—a symphony of delicate feeling through which runs a deep, somber undertone of slow moving melody."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '30 380w

"It is rare today to read a book in which each word is felt to be carefully considered and selected only after much deliberation; but Edwin Granberry has not only achieved this quality of style, but has reinforced it with a tale reminiscent in its delicacy and quiet approach of Alain Fournier's 'Le Grand Meaulnes.' "
+ Nation 131:532 N 12 '30 150w

"There is nothing that we know of in modern American fiction that is quite like 'The Erl King.' It is an attempt to work out a problem of adolescence in terms of a myth—a pagan myth that has been transplanted by Mr. Granberry from the forests of the Elbe to the South Florida coast. . . This constant drawing upon the mysterious in nature makes 'The Erl King' seem more of a virtuoso performance than 'Strangers and Lovers,' Mr. Granberry's preceding novel. Because of the warmer life of that book, because it was closer to reality in the terms we know reality, it will remain preferable to 'The Erl King.' The latter book must seem alien by comparison; like its language, it plays about on the horizons of our consciousness. 'Strangers and Lovers' went closer to the centre."
+ — N Y Times p6 O 12 '30 700w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 420w

2 GRANET, MARCEL. Chinese civilization [tr. by Kathleen E. Innes and Mabel R. Brailsford]. (Hist of civilization) 429p il $7.50 Knopf [25s Routledge]

951 China—Social life and customs. China—History [30-28700]

"What Professor Granet has achieved here is a synthetic picture of the evolution of Chinese social and political customs and institutions from the earliest known times to their fruition in the Han dynasty (206 B. C. to 220 A. D.). This work is the result of years of scholarly research on the part of the author and in that respect is an epitome of all his earlier works and the mature conclusions at which he has arrived."—Current Hist

"The author has been eminently successful in freeing himself from westernized conceptions of legal and social development. By an almost constant reliance upon the sources and very frequent direct translations, rendered in a highly illuminating and beautiful style, the Western reader is led to enter sympathetically and imaginatively into an intriguing new world of social and individual attitudes and relationships. One's appreciation and understanding of Chinese society is greatly enhanced upon the reading of this book." C. H. Peake
+ Current Hist 33:xviii Ja '31 430w

"The author is skillful and convincing and has a literary ability which makes this volume one of the most distinguished in the 'History of Civilization' series."
+ New Repub 65:200 D 31 '30 100w

"Professor Granet is an eminent French authority on the subject, but his book is overweighted with detail and the translation is indifferent. It will not keep many children from play or draw many old men from the chimney-corner."
— New Statesman 36:308 D 13 '30 120w

GRANGER, MARY. Lucy and three. 322p $2.50 Brewer

30-6151

A story of farm life in present day America. Against this background is traced the slow and sturdy unfolding of the character of Lucy Camden from a hard, intolerant girl, embittered by her father's cruelty, into an understanding and forgiving woman.

Books p10 Ap 20 '30 150w

"There is a world of truth and wholesome philosophy in the story, and a gripping poignancy that shows the power of the author."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 300w

"The book shows competent workmanship and artistic sincerity, but contains nothing to distinguish it from many other chronicles of the American farm." R. C. B. B.
— + N Y Evening Post p10 Ap 12 '30 270w

"Miss Granger has written with restraint. Her realism is never sordid, her romance never sentimental. . . She has not permitted anything forced or unnatural in her writing, and it is because she has found the normal and the human in the lives she depicts that her story is never dull."
+ N Y Times p24 Mr 9 '30 200w

N Y World p10m Ap 27 '30 100w

"Here is a grim story of farm life, with much of its effectiveness lost because of ill-chosen time and scene."
— Sat R of Lit 7:92 Ag 30 '30 400w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 11 '30 270w

2 GRANT, AMY GORDON (GALT) (MRS ROBERT GRANT), comp. Letters from Armageddon. 296p il $3.50 Houghton

940.48 European war, 1914-1918 30-30347

Many of the letters in this volume were collected by Mrs Grant during the early years of the World war, and were used as readings in the cause of war relief in the United States prior to America's entry into the war. The letters, representing the experiences of both combatants and noncombatants, reflect several points of view; some of them contain vivid accounts of personal adventure at the front, or in naval and submarine warfare.

"Some [of the letters] from the Front are excellent—one of the best recounts in detail the adventures of a Canadian officer escaping from a German prison camp. Others, which contain detailed descriptions of naval and submarine warfare, are among the most interesting documents of the sort we have. In general, however, the collection savors too strongly of war propaganda."

Bookm 72:443 D '30 150w

"Volume of great historical value and of deep emotional significance."
+ Boston Transcript p4 D 10 '30 380w

2 GRANT, EUGENE LODEWICK. Principles of engineering economy. 387p il $3.75 Ronald

620.02 Engineering 30-15081

'A discussion of various business features of engineering, including such factors as use of accounting records, technique of estimating costs, and applications of statistical method."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"The author has produced a concise and very readable book. . . It is a plain, straight-forward discussion of the principles of engineering economy, with just enough mathematics to make it interesting and, fortunately, it is unusually free from that involved, pedantic, and wordful obscurity which often burdens the economical writings of the hour. The book is recommended as a textbook for engineering students. The plant manager and engineer will find it instructive reading and an excellent reference book for the library." C. W. Cuno
+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:1022 S '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

St Louis 28:263 N '30

GRANT, J. C. Back-to-backs. 303p $2 Cape [7s 6d Chatto]

30-24842

A drab novel of life in an English coal-mining town, where the miners' cottages lie back-to-back, with a dirty alley between which serves as a street—a main street beginning at the pit-head and ending at the graveyard.

"The book has the remote reality of a newspaper account; one does not doubt its truth but its human values elude one." Guy Holt
+ — Bookm 72:338 N '30 100w

GRANT, J. C.—Continued

"Mr. Grant, in choosing the vehicle of fiction through which to vent his intolerable complaint, has forgotten or ignored the fact that people cannot digest so relentless a diet of horrors. He seems to have collected all the macabre tales possible to such a place, all the ghoulish words and pictures fitted to describe it, and crammed them then into one book. You cannot suppress a rebellious reaction, nor can you avoid the feeling that the author, in order to expose such naked torture, has been poisoned himself by his knowledge and has allowed himself to erupt a molten lava of fiendish imaginings." V. P. Ross

— Books p16 O 19 '30 450w

"Had Mr. Grant contented himself with a simple presentation of detail, he would have wholly claimed our horror and anger. Unfortunately, however, he has swathed his detail in hysterical prose, at once crude and overwrought. His story as story is sparse, dull, and conventionally perceived; his satire is feeble and trite; he irritates by trying so obviously to shock us into sensibility, and he strains our emotional credulity by gratuitous melodrama. In short, he commits almost all the sins of the avowedly propagandistic novelist and his book has all the weakness of propagandistic distortion."

— Nation 131:656 D 10 '30 180w

"Mr. J. C. Grant has lived in a mining village till his anger, pity, and disgust exploded in 'The Back-to-Backs.' . . The author, like Zola, has imaginatively invested a sordid subject with infernal horror. If most miners saw their life in the way Mr. Grant sees it, there would be revolution or mass-suicide. In any case Mr. Grant's novel may be recommended to persons interested in literature as well as to those who 'do not understand why those tiresome miners strike.' It has not the epic sweep of 'Germinal,' but it is the nearest English equivalent. The style is often amateur and always rhetorical, but there are sudden images of great beauty." Raymond Mortimer

+ — Nation and Ath 47:795 S 27 '30 600w

"Unwilling though I am to overwork those already overworked sisters, I cannot resist an allusion to the Brontës. for Mr. Grant's writing often resembles theirs in its stern fidelity to imagination, and the whole impression of his book is similar to their own in its ruggedness, its biting flavour and its constant suggestion of gloom. Unlike them, however, he is prone sometimes to overload a scene with an unnecessary encumbrance of nauseating detail. . . Otherwise, though crowded with faults, his book is a memorable devastating portrayal of mining life—and more than that, of human nature in general. After The Back to Backs one is conscious of an ability to face anything that present-day fiction can offer."

New Statesman 35:796 O 4 '30 550w

Reviewed by D. S. Fairchild

N Y Evening Post p5d N 22 '30 250w

"Much of the power of Mr. Grant's story has been dissipated by his very eagerness to drive home his point. 'The Back-to-Backs' is so insistently tractarian that it arouses in the reader an unreasonable, but not unnatural, impulse to dissent. Mr. Grant's manner of piling up detail, and of afflicting one family with all the tragedies and disasters to which miners and their families in general are liable, produces a distorted effect. Artistically the book is uneven and melodramatic, but, in spite of its faults, its very vigor commands attention."

— + N Y Times p6 O 5 '30 600w

"Mr. Grant has something of the late D. H. Lawrence's appreciation of significant incident and love of instinctive, sensuous beauty, but he also has a gift for the macabre which causes Mr. Liam O'Flaherty, in a preface, to describe the novel, rightly, as 'terrifying.' One is bound to acknowledge its qualities, even though to recommend it is something of a challenge to the reader's powers of endurance."

+ — Sat R 150:453 O 11 '30 160w

"This book ought to be read. It is quite possible that it is exaggerated, that it is not literally true. Still it is unmistakably some one's sincere view of the truth, and that cannot be so far out as to be negligible. It will make every one who reads it sick, heartsick and physically sick, but it ought to be read."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:241 O 18 '30 470w

Spec 145:806 N 22 '30 250w

"Nothing is left in the story for suggestion. Fearlessly, sharply, vividly put forth, the picture of the life of a pitman as Mr Grant reproduces it becomes almost too sensationally terrible to achieve its ultimate purpose of reform. The minute description of the change in Tom's face as disease works upon it, and the analysis of the swamp where the filth of Hagger accumulates, prove more repulsive than moving. If these episodes show how deeply and bitterly the author sees the situation, they also suggest that he has seen it too bitterly for the purposes of art."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 220w

Reviewed by John Brophy

Survey 65:397 Ja 1 '31 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p893 O 30 '30 250w

GRANT, JULIUS. Measurement of hydrogen ion concentration. 159p il $3.75 (9s) Longmans

541.37 Hydrogen-ion concentration 30-15087

Following an introductory discussion of the theory of electrolytic dissociation, the author takes up in part two the electrometric method, in part three the colorimetric method, and in part four the methods and technique applicable to particular cases.

"The writer of an abbreviated compendium such as this, assumes the responsibility of selecting the authentic high spots; and the reviewer does not feel that Dr. Grant has succeeded very well. In addition to this general criticism, a number of specific instances of misstatement of theory were noted. . . The reviewer feels that the novice in hydrogen-ion measurement would do better to 'consult the exhaustive standard works on the subject' rather than risk the confusion and false perspectives to which the present volume must surely lead." B. L. Clarke

— Chem & Met Eng 37:503 Ag '30 380w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:34 Jl '30

St Louis 28:209 S '30

"Dr. Grant's book is valuable not only because it gives a clear explanation of the theory underlying the measurement of hydrogen ion concentration, but also because it describes in detail the practical methods employed for the purpose in various industrial and other processes. It definitely supplies a want hitherto felt by many laboratory workers. The volume is well supplied with diagrams of apparatus and with references to original papers, and concludes with a very conveniently arranged table of useful data."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p787 O 2 '30 280w

GRANT, MADISON, and DAVISON, CHARLES STEWART, eds. Alien in our midst; or, Selling our birthright for a mess of pottage. 238p $3 Galton pub co., inc., 11 W. 42nd st., N.Y.

325.73 Immigration. United States—Foreign population 30-12887

"This book contains a great number and variety of extracts from the writings of eminent Americans and statements by them on immigration and its results. The theme which holds them together is its menace, and upon it all of them take much the same view that extensive immigration introduces racial and national elements fraught with danger to our civilization and that constant watch and care must be exercised to prevent deplorable results."—N Y Times

"An able partisan presentation." J. A. Tobey

+ Am J Pub Health 20:682 Je '30 60w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 600w

N Y Times p23 Ap 20 '30 220w

Springf'd Republican p10 O 7 '30 100w

GRANT WATSON, ELLIOT LOVEGOOD. Prophet and his God; the story of Moses (Eng title: Moses, the lord of the prophets). 304p $3 Liveright [10s 6d Butterworth, T.]

221.9 Moses 30-3990

An interpretation of the Old Testament leader in which "Moses is not the man of legend and myth, but the heroic anticipator, the prophet out of time, the great leader whose only serious faults are the reflection of the stupidity and the ingratitude of the people whom he is trying to serve. Mr. Watson follows the Old Testament story fairly closely, only employing legitimate fancy or having recourse to legend in that part of his narrative for which the Biblical story does not give him material." (New Statesman)

Reviewed by Elmer Davis
Books p13 Mr 23 '30 450w

New Statesman 34:419 Ja 4 '30 550w

"The style is singularly appropriate: a mingling of austerity and biblical fervor." Leonard Ehrlich
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 750w

"His success is rather surprising, for he has put life into the dead bones of the ancient record, has reproduced something of the spirit and fabric of ancient life, and has made Moses more humanly real than many a character of present-day fiction."
+ N Y Times p13 Je 8 '30 400w

"The prose is semi-biblical with occasional lapses. The time-sequence is intentionally vague and confusing so that the reader is prepared for the semi-mystical background. The book does not always read easily but for all its apparent obscurity leaves one with a freshened sense of individuality."
+ — Outlook 154:187 Ja 29 '30 500w

St Louis 28:128 My '30

"There is much beautiful writing and there are structural flaws which, however, must be classified as petty rather than grand crimes. Mr. Grant Watson in attempting to write his interpretation of Moses within fairly brief compass has made all too frequent use of the device of presenting past material by moving backward through the recollections and speculations of his actors." Jonathan Daniels
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:753 F 22 '30 450w

"Mr. Grant Watson has written a book full of rich thought clothed in coldly transparent language. 'Moses' has that haunting quality that drags the reader back again and again to its pages."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p941 N 21 '29 280w

GRAS, NORMAN SCOTT BRIEN, and GRAS, MRS ETHEL (CULBERT). Economic and social history of an English village (Crawley, Hampshire) A. D. 909-1928. (Harvard economic studies) 730p il $7.50 Harvard univ. press [34s Oxford]

942.27 Crawley, England (Hampshire). Villages—Great Britain 30-12233

Most of the book consists of documents in Latin, Anglo-Saxon, and English, each prefaced by a commentary. For historians and economists it provides a unique cross-section of English life. The book, which is based upon manuscript sources, direct observation, and correspondence, is probably the first history of a village to cover so long a period.

"Although I have never been in Crawley, never visited the village pond nor Crawley Court nor the rectory nor inn nor parish church, never laid eye on a solitary one of the exactly 222 present inhabitants of the village, I have a sense of intimate understanding with Crawley. And for it I have to thank this charming book that two Harvard scholars have written and compiled, this bulky volume containing documents in medieval Latin and census reports and long statistical tables of the prices of oats and peas and sheep and cheese, all explained and commented upon by the authors in a compact and scholarly section reviewing the history of the village from 909 to 1928." Max Lerner
+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 17 '30 900w

"This stout volume is about three-fourths documents, nearly all of them in Latin, and one-fourth introduction. Most readers, even those who are specialists in medieval lore, will be disposed at once to take the documents for granted and turn to the introduction for such history as it may contain. They will be rewarded for their pains by finding in the introduction one of the most informing and agreeably written accounts of the life of an ancient English village that is to be found anywhere." William MacDonald
+ N Y Times p15 Je 22 '30 1950w

Survey 64:448 Ag 15 '30 50w

"Written in a difficult style, but containing many valuable summaries of the facts provided by the documents printed in the main part of the book. It is the presence of many original texts that makes this book both interesting and valuable for the study of English agrarian history. The reeves' accounts, fourteen of which are here printed in full, are in themselves a mine of information. . . The last chapters of the history of Crawley, as recorded in this monumental work, are neither as interesting nor as firmly based on documentary evidence as the study of the old manorial system which forms the main subject of the book."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p609 Jl 24 '30 1350w

GRATTAN, CLINTON HARTLEY. Why we fought. 453p $3.50 Vanguard press

940.373 European war, 1914-1918—Causes. European war, 1914-1918—United States. European war, 1914-1918—Propaganda 30-3998

"The author begins with an admirable statement of the causes of the outbreak of the war in Europe, summarizing the now familiar theory of divided guilt. Then comes a chapter on the propaganda of the belligerents in Europe, a study of the development of an immense American economic stake in Allied victory, and finally a detailed survey of American diplomacy." —World Tomorrow

Booklist 27:59 O '30

"Mr. Grattan has not risen fully to his opportunity. When the reader has finished this interesting, lively and somewhat loosely written book we fear he may lay it down without knowing precisely why we fought, especially as Mr. Grattan has no summary of his conclusions. It gives the impression of being negative and destructive, not positive and analytical." S. B. Fay
— + Books p5 Ja 12 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p44 Mr '30

"Mr. Grattan has worked hard in writing this book. He has brought together a mass of material and fortified it with footnotes. His references give his work an appearance of sound scholarship just as footnotes gave an appearance of sound scholarship to some of the anti-German diatribes written by American historians during the World War. But his material is ill-digested. He offers no convincing proof that propaganda, preparedness or subservience to British policy brought America into the struggle. Instead of ripe and reasoned conclusions, he throws off opinions some of which are clearly ill-founded. The best that can be said of his book is that his industry has brought together material of which a more objective historical scholarship can later take advantage." J. F. Scott
— + Current Hist 31:1056 Mr '30 1300w

"Mr. Grattan's book is more a masterly compilation of the 'revisionist' documents and the post-war memoirs than any new contribution to the perplexed matter of our amazing war entrance. It serves the useful purpose of reminding us once more that democracy's Achilles's heel is its foreign relations; and that any little group of weak and wilful men, uninformed and irresponsible to a real public desire, can set the war drums beating at the command of that powerful minority which likes its music martial." McAlister Coleman
+ Nation 130:366 Mr 26 '30 250w

GRATTAN, C. H.—Continued

"Grattan may have begun his volume as a disillusionist, but his thorough scholarship and temperate tone entitle him to a place among the objectivists. Not all the juice of opinion is squeezed out of the text, however, because Grattan writes as a morally responsible person who is willing to expose his feelings as well as his knowledge. His judgments, which are not intrusive, lend robustness to the book." H. D. Lasswell

+ New Repub 62:104 Mr 12 '30 1700w

"It is impossible to discover from this book why we fought or why anybody else fought in the great war. The author purports to have given an 'amoral' summary of the events leading up to our participation. . . His estimate of the pro-ally case is patently that of a man incapable of any conception of it that does not slur or belittle the strings of its action, and his avoidance of any reference to any of the major provocations given by the Germans for the existence of the desperate and unyielding solidarity against them stamps his work as fundamentally derivative and sterile, and his mind as moving in a perfect circle far too small for his subject." Gardner Harding

— N Y Times p24 F 2 '30 950w

"It is a good thing to have this carefully documented work, for it will counteract (let's hope) the influence of the school histories, and it teaches scepticism with regard to the pious memoirs of the great." Alfred Lief

+ N Y World p10m D 15 '29 380w

"He has done a competent, compact and interesting job. It is thoroughly documented and, so far as the action of the United States in promoting its ulterior national interests by war as an instrument of policy can be dismissed on purely mechanistic grounds, he proves his case." John Carter

+ Outlook 154:72 Ja 8 '30 240w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 Mr '30 200w

St Louis 28:79 Mr '30

Reviewed by R. C. Binkley

Sat R of Lit 7:140 S 20 '30 320w

"The highest praise one can give this book is to say that the author has notably succeeded in his declared purpose 'to get behind the rationalizations that have been current for the last ten years [concerning our entry into the war] and try to discover the real forces at work.'" Norman Thomas

+ World Tomorrow 13:86 F '30 600w

GRATTAN, CLINTON HARTLEY, ed. Critique of humanism; a symposium. 364p $3.50 Brewer

814 Humanism 30-15561

This symposium on humanism is a reply to another one on the same subject, Humanism and America, edited by Norman Foerster. Contents: The new humanism and the scientific attitude, by C. H. Grattan; Notes on Babbitt and More, by Edmund Wilson; Humanizing society, by Malcolm Cowley; Humanism and value, by Henry Hazlitt; Pupils of Polonius, by Burton Rascoe; The fallacy of humanism, by Allen Tate; The allies of humanism abroad, by Kenneth Burke; Humanism and the fine arts, by Henry-Russel Hitchcock, Jr.; The discipline of humanism, by R. P. Blackmur; Drift and mastery in our novelists, by John Chamberlain; Paul Elmer More and the external world, by Bernard Bandler II; Poetry, morality, and criticism, by Yvor Winters; Towards an organic humanism, by Lewis Mumford.

Booklist 27:9 S '30

"The really important and interesting contribution that this volume makes is the suggestion and something more than suggestion that these essays contribute to a coherent point of view, whose coherence comes from genuine organization of the materials with which the contemporary imagination is faced, not from a dogmatic definition of a point of view that looks to a very special purely literary past and to a quite improbable future." Irwin Edman

+ Books p3 Je 1 '30 1250w

"A book which, catching at a vogue, is designed to be a sensation, yet which, after a careful reading, must be classified as among those writings better left unwritten."

— Cath World 132:377 D '30 200w

Reviewed by E. K. Brown

Int J Ethics 41:273 Ja '31 380w

"If the reader expects nothing at all in the way of concerted criticism, if he is blithely willing to hear one more series of notes added to the confused music which humanism has been making in its small portion of the world, he may proceed with pleasure through Mr. Grattan's book. There is some excellent writing in it; there is some good fun; there is now and then a rousing argument; and there is a greater display of learning than he might have looked for from the young men whom the humanists, academic or otherwise, have certainly urged him to despise." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 131:99 Jl 23 '30 1050w

Reviewed by F. J. Mather, Jr.

New Repub 63:156 Je 25 '30 4000w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p2 Je 29 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 My 30 '30 950w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"The manners of this book are Scythian. It is steeped in an acidity which, like acids in general, leaves a stain upon the page. The wish to inflict pain in a hundred scattered spots is unmistakable. 'Respect' is here and there mentioned, but its confine is the end of the sentence which expresses it. . . This is an ungenerous book—I do not say from ungenerous hands (between work and workman epithets must often warily discriminate). Instead of facing a handful of able and sincere men bravely coping with a situation of unprecedented difficulty, they have seen nothing but a knot of blunders and a train of fallacies." O. W. Firkins

— Sat R of Lit 6:1124 Je 14 '30 1900w

"While a few of these writers contribute little to the discussion except assertions of a point of view—as could also be said of some contributors to 'Humanism and America'—the work, as a whole, makes a coherent and intelligent effect, but an effect marred by repetition."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 My 31 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:404 Ag 1 '30 220w

"The Critique of Humanism indulges mainly in frontal attacks on humanistic ideals, too much of which has been said before. There is one essay, however, that does go back to origins—not to origins of the movement but to the origin of Humanism in the life of one of its prime exponents, Professor Paul Elmer More. This essay, by Bernard Bandler III, attempts to find out how the professor got that way. It reveals the foremost Humanist as one who has lived in a realm of vague and mystic visions in order to escape from the rough reality of life in our modern world. Herein, I repeat, lies a fruitful approach to an effective critique of Humanism." Norman Studer

— + World Tomorrow 14:27 Ja '31 200w

GRATZ, REBECCA. Letters; ed. with an introd. and notes by Rabbi David Philipson. 454p il $3 Jewish pub.

B or 92 29-16008

"Rebecca Gratz was an American Jewess, born in Philadelphia about 1780, who died in 1869. She was one of twelve children, remarkable in their several ways, and the family to which she belonged is a very well-known and highly respected one. Rebecca spent her life caring for her brother's motherless children and in social service, founding in Philadelphia the first Jewish Sunday school. . . She was public-spirited and very pious, but her interest for readers on this side of the ocean lies in the fact that she was, in the universally accepted tradition, the original of Rebecca in Scott's 'Ivanhoe.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Without the least pretension to literary value, with little historical significance, these letters of a simple woman to her relatives and friends will be of immense aid to an historian or a novelist trying to recreate the domestic atmosphere of urbane America in the early days of the republic." B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 400w

"The letters are written in easy, flowing style and in most of their features are characteristic of the correspondence of her day. But they give every evidence of an active, alert, well-endowed mind, a sweet and ardent nature and a loving heart, and they give, sometimes indirectly and again more explicitly, many colorful glimpses of the life, the customs and the feeling of her time." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 4 '29 850w

"This volume is a fitting memorial to one whose life deserves commemoration. The editing of Dr. Philipson is excellent; it is painstaking, intelligent, and adequate, and might well serve as a model for the editing of similar family letters."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 380w

"The letters are not uninteresting, but they suffer very considerably from being printed, as they were written, with endless dashes and almost no other punctuation. Miss Gratz was a very fine character, but the appeal of her letters is chiefly to members of her own family, her own race, and her own country."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1062 D 12 '29 250w

GRAVES, ROBERT. Good-bye to all that. 430p $3 (10s 6d) Cape

B or 92 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-2231

"Mr. Robert Graves calls his book an autobiography, and sets his war experiences in between descriptions of his school-days (just before the war) and of his subsequent adventures since 1918 in the literary world."—New Statesman

"It is set apart by an unforced candor and by a superlative mastery of narrative. The incidents follow one another with telling vividness, and the whole range of one man's war experience is brought into relation with the pattern of his life and with that of his friends and acquaintances. If one could read only one war book, or one half of one war book, the central portion of this volume might safely be chosen." Marshall Best

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p26 Mr '30 300w

Booklist 26:232 Mr '30

"Mr. Graves does not concentrate on any particular phase of the conflict; he portrays whatever came his way. Consequently much of the book is technical or historical information concerning certain British regiments that is not of much interest to the reader. . . Despite its lighter interludes, Good-bye to All That is essentially a serious and despairing book. Mr. Graves may not hold your attention throughout as well as Remarque and the others, but the final impression of hopelessness is stronger." G. T. Hellman

+ — Bookm 71:121 Mr '30 270w

"It is in the war chapters which form a good half of the book that his unusual detachment and objectivity stand out most clearly and shed a light over what is perhaps the most interesting war writing that has yet been set on paper." Eugene Lohrke

+ Books p5 Ja 5 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript Ja 25 '30 2200w

Cath World 131:633 Ag '30 280w

"It is an extraordinarily frank disclosure, but without posing. The greater part of the record deals with the war, and this is the part which will have the widest and most permanent interest. . . Add this to 'All Quiet on the Western Front' and 'Schlump' as contributions to stripping from war its trappings of glory and romance."

+ Christian Century 47:116 Ja 22 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '30

"The interesting thing about Graves's autobiography is not that he tells the truth about the war but that it took him so long to discover it. When 1914 broke he swallowed the horror whole. He was only nineteen, of course; but, more importantly, he was a public-school product. It is fascinating to trace the slow transformation in his character. . . It is a typically British-upper-class document—except that here the man was forced by his intelligence to turn his back on his own class." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 130:186 F 12 '30 750w

"It is an extraordinarily honest book; and if his attempted detachment is not carried far enough to make it a work of art, it has produced a book devoid of hate. It is the sort of book that is needed, for though it makes strongly for peace, it does not lose sight of the dangerous possibility of war, apart from political folly." Bonamy Dobrée

+ Nation and Ath 46:462 D 28 '29 170w

"On the whole, Graves has told a story remarkable not so much for its events as for its manner—cool, detached, straightforward: this is emotion recollected in tranquility. In England the book has apparenty made a great to-do, not only because of its ungentlemanly revelations about 'things that are not talked about,' but chiefly, it is to be suspected, for the calm detachment—which to its readers may seem irony—with which Graves has reviewed such sanctities as the English code of the gentleman, both in the public school and in its child, the officer's mess. Few men have been able to make as good an impression—an impression of candor, level-headedness, good sense—as Robert Graves on the reader of his autobiography." T. S. Matthews

+ New Repub 62:23 F 19 '30 1350w

"His post-war career, in spite of his literary successes, his wide range of acquaintances, his ruthless wit at their expense is little better than an anti-climax to such a book as this. For the story of the war, as Mr. Graves saw it, is admirably told; he gets the atmosphere of nerve-strain, the alternations of deadly fear and mad exhilaration, with extraordinary skill. And as 'comic relief' (there was always plenty of that) we get entertaining pictures of life in rest-camps and billets, in which he never hesitates to give his brother officers away with gleeful zest. Some of his references indeed to his friends, with quotations even from their private letters, do not seem to us either quite fair or in good taste, but they are nearly always lively."

+ — New Statesman 34:sup xvi D 7 '29 360w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

N Y Times p6 Ja 12 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p15 Ja 8 '30 1150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

"The first duty of a reviewer of this book is to be shocked, and it is with some shame that I confess to failure in that duty. It contains a certain amount of impropriety, some of it gratuitous, and a certain amount of violence, but these are not novelties, and are, indeed, to be expected in any young man's autobiography produced nowadays. And as against these not very effective irritants, the book has some attractive qualities. The narrative flows as from a man writing out of a real pressure of reminiscences that must be given an outlet. It strikes me as a book it was necessary for Mr. Graves to write in the interest of his own peace of mind, though, as I have already implied, there are some few passages of which I do not feel the necessity and which I take it were written in mere provocation." T. E. Welby

GRAVES, ROBERT—Continued
+ — Sat R 148:614 N 23 '29 1500w

"Robert Graves's vivid narrative lacks the sensitiveness of Edmund Bunden's 'Undertones of War,' but it presents an accurate picture of the daily drudgery of trench life and the occasional horror of an offensive. He writes incisively in a style refreshingly untainted by affectation, and when he is not too angry there is a Puckish humor about him that is very delightful. Unfortunately the wistfulness which distinguishes his poetry, the awareness of the ever present contrast of beauty and ugliness, idealism and selfishness, is almost entirely lacking in his prose." Arnold Whitridge
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:706 F 8 '30 1400w

"The major part of the book is concerned with the worlds of school and war. They are written vividly, truthfully, and utterly without mercy either for the subjects of discussion or for the reader. Since Mr. Graves has always been able to tell a story, we have therefore a book that is worth a great deal of mystification at the end. It is worth more than the books of more ordinary men, because Mr. Graves can both see and say more than they; yet it is worth more than the books of the psychologists, since he has no axe to grind. The school to which Mr. Graves was sent will not thank him for his plain-speaking; nor, perhaps, will the Royal Welch Fusiliers and the army. Those in authority, in particular, are not spared. Yet it is good, objective writing."
+ Spec 143:780 N 23 '29 750w
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 26 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple
Survey 64:35 Ap 1 '30 180w

"It is painful, as any honest book by a sensitive man is bound to be painful to those of his own generation. It is a humane and passionate book; and almost as soon as the War was over he knew that it would have to be written. Mr. Graves does his utmost not to be moved by anger or indignation; and this very detachment gives the War part of the book a biting quality which is rare in war writing."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p991 N 28 '29 900w

Reviewed by R. W. Abernethy
World Tomorrow 13:346 Ag '30 850w

GRAY, ELIZABETH JANET. Meggy MacIntosh. (Junior bks.) 274p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-24046

How a brave Scotch girl of fifteen ran away from Edinburgh and sailed to America in the year 1775. It was her intention to join the rescuer of Bonnie Prince Charlie, Flora MacDonald, who then lived in North Carolina. After many months Meggy had her wish, and lived for a time with her heroine, but when a chance came to help someone who had once been kind to her she went back to Wilmington. There romance overtook her and her wanderings came to a happy end.

Booklist 27:108 N '30

"Quite aside from its merits as a book of brave adventure it is valuable for Colonial history, giving a vivid picture of the Scottish emigrants who settled in the Carolinas before the Revolution. . . Meggy MacIntosh is one of the most unspoiled and lovable heroines that ever graced the pages of an historical story for girls." Marcia Dalphin
+ Books p10 N 16 '30 800w
Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

"It is rare that a book with the scene laid in two countries is so well put together as is this one. The author seems equally at home in Edinburgh of the eighteenth century and in the New World of the same date, and the reader passes from one to the other with no feeling that the continuity is broken. It is a delight to find a story for girls in which the interest is provided by skillful and truthful character drawing, and one without the introduction of any sort of melodrama." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p33 N 30 '30 320w
St Louis 28:303 D '30

GREAT ones of ancient Egypt; portraits by Winifred Brunton; historical studies by various Egyptologists. 177p il $10 Scribner [42s Hodder]
932 Egypt—Kings and rulers. Egypt—Queens 30-18885

A companion volume to Kings and Queens of Ancient Egypt (Book Review Digest, 1926) portraying and describing other great figures which have been reconstructed out of the history of ancient Egypt by the labors of excavators and archeologists. With fifteen modern portraits.

"Undismayed by evil spells, Mrs. Brunton here offers us the second of her sumptuous volumes, revealing the shadowy countenances of a long-buried Egypt. As the high priestess of post-dated portraiture, she is attended, once more, by an authoritative company of archaeological acolytes who, with good reason chant her praises." P. W. Wilson
+ N Y Times p10 Mr 30 '30 1050w

"All the miniatures in this book are beautifully executed and give great pleasure, but there are three which stand out especially—the portraits of King Senusert III., of Amenophis III. and Queen Tiy, and of King Haremhab. . . The descriptive articles which have been contributed by a number of very distinguished Egyptologists deal satisfactorily with the history and known portraits of the various personages. . . We must not fail to mention the admirable introduction by Mr. Baikie on 'The reliability of Egyptian portrait-sculpture.' "
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p393 My 8 '30 1300w

GREELY, JOHN NESMITH. War breaks down doors. 278p $2.50 Hale
29-25613

"This is the story of Jan Sincowiez, son of a Polack miner, who joined the army at sixteen, before the war, to get out of trouble after a strike, and who in the war won a major's commission, made a fortune through lucky speculation, and married the beautiful and unapproachable daughter of one of the leading families of Washington."—Sat R of Lit

"It is a good tale of one temporary gentleman who made good. It is rapidly and skillfully told, with some thrills and plenty of sentiment, especially where babies are concerned. Considering the minor part that polo plays in the working out of the plot, it appears to fill a good many useless though well-written pages."
+ — N Y Times p7 N 17 '29 300w

"The author writes vigorously and attractively of scenes that he evidently knows; his admiration for strength with a good deal of ruthlessness, and his love of the open-air army life, are very infectious."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:699 F 1 '30 200w

GREEN, ANNE. The Selbys. 291p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Benn]
30-11718

Written with an artlessness which itself amounts to art this novel, by a sister of Julian Green, is a light-hearted comedy of life among Parisian Americans. In particular it is the story of Barbara Winship, pretty niece of the Selbys, who comes from Georgia to be introduced to French society by her uncle and aunt, many years resident in Paris.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

"When I praise The Selbys I do so in full awareness that it is not solely the considerable merits of that agreeable book which I am extolling. In cold fact, it is familiar, even threadbare stuff of which Miss Green has made her story. . . Even the fact that the book is so well done—that the narrative dances, the talk is sprightly, the people so skilfully manipulated that they manage to take you in and persuade you for a moment that they really do exist—all this is no more than adroit and amiable trifling. But behind these enjoyable mannequins and their artfully concocted adventures there is apparent, although never obtrusively, a mocking friendly spirit which I take to be that of the author. It is that urbane attitude of indulgence toward the people of the tale that gives the book its savor." Guy Holt

+ — Bookm 71:473 Jl '30 680w

"Like a charming sitting room where you feel the decorous good will of its owner pervading the atmosphere, Miss Green's book soothes you. 'The Selbys' is written fastidiously, written with a flair for the description of people, written in a smiling mood of observation. . . Yet, despite her gayety, Miss Green's book lacks lilt; despite her warmth, it is pale. Given the tang of lemon and the smart of bitters, 'The Selbys' would be a juicy novel."

+ — Books p26 Ap 13 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 My 31 '30 330w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

"Miss Anne Green has not any snatching tactics, and her story of an American family and their French setting is marked by a refreshing and humorous detachment. The characters, not intended to prove a point of view, have a wider field in which to be amusing and unexpected. A book in which even griefs make lighthearted reading, according to the author's cheerful intention."

+ New Statesman 35:680 S 6 '30 230w

"Anne Green has sympathy and understanding, a quiet drollery and an engaging lightness of touch. Perhaps she is least satisfying when most consciously smart and sophisticated. But there is very little labored smartness in 'The Selbys.'" Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 480w

"The story is written with a zest, with the greatest of gayety and good-will. There are no tense moments, no serious tragedies, no periods of long suspense. One gay incident rolls into another. People, scenes, conversation are all handled with delightful ease and conviction. The whole story is rollicking and real. . . The spontaneity and gayety of the novel will be the qualities which endear it to readers. The book is very refreshing and very human."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 27 '30 430w

"Told with an uncommonly fine command of characterization, in a style which, though racy, trenchant, satirical, avoids the extremes of over sophistication." E. C. B.

+ N Y World p7m Je 8 '30 300w

"The book is full of acute observation, high spirits and clever characterizations, only one of which is burlesqued beyond reality. It is first rate light reading, and introduces a new talent in that sparsely settled field." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 154:626 Ap 16 '30 140w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

"Anne Green has created her own world. And it isn't like any other cosmos in contemporary fiction. I don't mean that 'The Selbys' is a masterpiece. But I doubt very much if the present publishing season will bring forth so thoroughly delightful and unusual a comedy." S. V. Benet

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1009 My 3 '30 500w

"'The Selbys' offers little new in plot, but it does provide a freshness of presentation, a bountiful supply of keen good humor and a revealing perspective of Paris."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 250w

"She is extremely clever in presenting her elderly Americans and her ancient French couples, and she speaks with the voice of authority for impertinent American youth intimately acquainted with the calculating but sentimental Latin young. The Selbys themselves, with their habit of entertaining each other at restaurants and theatres to celebrate their various quarrels, their frank speech and their active interest in the happiness of their niece Barbara, imported from Savannah, are a delightful pair."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p736 S 18 '30 300w

GREEN, JULIAN. Christine, and other stories; tr. from the French by Courtney Bruerton. 214p $2.50 Harper

30-8169

Each of these four stories reflects Julian Green's keen psychological insight, most of them being concerned with the sensitive, neurotic reactions of an adolescent boy to his environment and to his fellowmen. A touch of the supernatural, as well as the haunting presence of the strangely abnormal, is especially pronounced in the title story. Two of the stories are of novelette length. Contents: Translator's introduction; Leviathan; Christine; The keys of death; The pilgrim on the earth.

Booklist 27:28 S '30

"The stories in Christine, though fused with the spark which ignited a flare of popularity for Avarice House and the later novels, are the unsubstantial shadows of more durable work—slight variations on a well (and much) written theme. Julian Green's stories are sicklied over by the pale cast of modern psychology. In spite of some fairly decent writing they do not ring true; neither do they hang together." Leo Kennedy

— Bookm 71:441 Jl '30 220w

"It is quite true that, as the publishers say, these four stories would have made their mark in literature even if Mr. Green had written nothing else. As a supplement to his novels and as evidence of his ability to handle a different technique they have an added importance. Certainly they should be read by any one interested in Mr. Green's development as well as by those willing to be absorbed for an hour by the power of an alien world." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p10 Ap 6 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 250w

"All of the four stories in the volume are psychopathic studies. And they are somehow unsatisfactory. The eerie prose and the continued playing on the same note of the weird and uncanny begin to take on the appearance of the ordinary. Mr. Green's stories are unsatisfactory because they arrive nowhere. Nor is this a matter of plot or detail; it is rather a confusion that exists in the mind of the author himself, a confusion that creeps into the words and actions of his characters."

— Nation 131:104 Jl 23 '30 220w

"Possibly the best of these stories is 'The Keys of Death,' a thin, Proustian novelette of childhood habit and domestic relations. Here the prose picks up to a certain extent: it is less denuded of texture and tone than in the stories which went before. In most of them the scaffolding, though not particularly intricate, is clever; that is about all. Mr. Green is an ingenious and intelligent writer, but not important enough to justify the fuss made over him." E. D.

— + New Repub 64:27 Ag 20 '30 350w

"The subjects which Mr. Green selects are of the utmost difficulty. They demand for their success a sustained emotional drive, and a technical excellence approaching perfection. When the atmosphere of a story is convincing, and the illusion unbroken, the effect which Mr. Green achieves is almost hypnotic in its intensity. . . This collection is interesting, not so much for the startling material which it includes, as for its display of Julian Green at his worst, and at something very close to his best."

+ — N Y Times p8 Mr 30 '30 600w

"His stories are a curious blend of the old and the new, the classical and the modern. There is in them a mystic strain that is not to be found in his novels, and still there is the same merciless logic in the progression of events." Bellamy Partridge

N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 280w

Outlook 154:508 Mr 26 '30 130w

GREEN, JULIAN—Continued

" 'Christine' contains four stories by Julian Green, the author of 'The Closed Garden' and 'The Dark Journey.' Two are very short, scarcely more than sketches, two are long contes. They show the author in a new manner, if not a new mood; they have not the tight, careful plotting of the novels, but they have the same atmosphere of oppression and terror, which is increased, in these stories, by the introduction of the supernatural. These stories are in a sense less finished, less mathematically perfect than Mr. Green's novels, but many readers will find them more fascinating." Basil Davenport

+ Sat R of Lit 7:53 Ag 16 '30 700w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 300w

GREEN, PETER. Our heavenly Father; a study of the nature and doctrine of God. 112p $1.50 (4s; pa 2s 6d) Longmans

231 God [29-30693]

As a sequel to an earlier work entitled Our Lord and Saviour, the object of the present volume is, in the words of its author, "to recall men to the practice of the presence of God," since he believes that the chief feature of our modern age is its godlessness.

"This little book is easy to read, because of its smooth style and well-chosen illustrations; and it should prove helpful to laymen as well as to the clergy." E. L. Pennington

+ Churchman p5 Jl 26 '30 120w

"Mr. Green has the gift of simple argument, and clear illustration, to a degree, but do not be under any delusion about the simplicity; the argument often parallels deep theories, and if you do not recognize them in their home-spun dress, a note or an illusion will set you right. If you would like something quite tough, the chapter on The Doctrine of God should satisfy you. The book is not only a veritable armory of the dialectics of the defense of our Blessed Faith, but is also a modest guide for our reading therein." F. H. T. Horsfield

+ Living Church 83:508 Ag 9 '30 480w

"In stating the grounds of faith in God and the objections against it Canon Green combines plain speaking with sympathy in such a way that every honest reader will find himself challenged by insistent and searching questions. . . The author's gift of clear statement is evident in every page of the book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p323 Ap 10 '30 220w

GREENBIE, SYDNEY. Educators beyond their depth; the inside story of the Floating university, its disruption and its possibilities. 85p pa $1 The author, Amherst, Mass; Traversity press, 320 E. 42d st, N.Y.

371.392 Floating university 30-2754

"Sydney Greenbie was the president of the Floating University of 1928-1929, and in this pamphlet he discusses the idea of combining travel and education, gives a detailed account of the collegiate cruise of which he was the head, answers the criticisms that were made of it and sets forth what he considers to be the reasons for the trouble into which it ran."—N Y Times

N Y Times p21 F 2 '30 180w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

GREENBIE, SYDNEY. Romantic East; India, 2 Indo-China, China and Japan. 298p il $3.50 McBride

915 India—Description and travel. East (Far East)—Description and travel 30-30009

"Sydney Greenbie is chiefly interested in sharing with the reader his personal response to incidents, places and people he has encountered in casual journeyings through India, Indo-China, China and Japan. He himself calls his book 'a record of Asia at the moment of transition,' modestly adding that it is offered not as truth, but as his sense of truth."—Books

"Mr. Greenbie's book is not one of swift and fugitive impressions; obviously and vigorously it reflects years of travel, observation, and study." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 72:xviii N '30 120w

"The book is uneven in style, punctuated by rather ponderous balanced sentences which alternate with passages of real charm and beauty. Though it brings back no very important cargo from the East, either of ivory, peacocks or ideas, it contains a number of shrewd observations, calculated to shake a round-the-world tourist out of the upholstered depths of his prejudices, convictions, persuasions and superstitions." Gertrude Emerson

+ — Books p20 N 23 '30 600w

GREENE, MRS ANNE (BOSWORTH). Lighthearted journey. 450p il $4 Century

914.4 France—Description and travel. Automobiles—Touring 30-12624

The account of a long-planned journey which the author took with her daughter. The route extended from Boulogne, along the lesser known byways of France, to the Italian border.

Booklist 26:391 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 71:xiv Jl '30 130w

"This is the record of precisely the sort of tour of France which every traveler longs to make. Each chapter is like a letter from a friend, save for the absence of that note of haste with which friends are inclined to discharge their letter-writing obligations while traveling. There are plenty of books of French travel which impart more information, but few which impart more flavor."

+ Books p12 My 18 '30 200w

"For a happy space, the reader of this enchanting chronicle is as carefree as the mother and daughter whose motoring adventures in France it records. Having read 'Lambs in March' and 'Dipper Hill' our hopes winged high at the mere sight of the name of the author. But delicious as those essays were, a-gleam with that love of out-of-doors which transfuses each of Mrs. Greene's books, there is a quality to this story of travel adventure which makes it different from any other." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

GREENE, GWENDOLEN MAUD (PARRY) (MRS HARRY PLUNKET GREENE). Mount Zion. 211p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

242 Spiritual life

The author is the niece of Baron von Hügel to whom he addressed the letters of spiritual advice and teaching recently published under the title "Letters to a niece" (Book Review Digest, 1929). Written two years after her conversion, under her uncle's influence, to the Church of Rome, Mrs Greene's book consists of contemplations on such subjects as prayer, the church, the nature of God, and the work of the Holy Spirit.

Cath World 132:379 D '30 150w

"Her genuineness is evident, and the simplicity of the style is not without its charm. Formerly a member of the Church of England, Mrs. Greene writes of that society without bitterness, though also, we are bound to add, without much understanding. Her criticisms are conventional, and in perceiving certain real defects she seems to have been rather lamentably blind to many beautiful things."

+ — New Statesman 35:226 My 24 '30 160w

"Mrs. Plunket Greene, already known to thousands of grateful readers as the recipient of Baron von Hügel's Letters to a Niece, puts us still more deeply in her debt by the publication of Mount Zion. For here is that rare thing, a spiritual document which is entirely fresh, spontaneous, personal, and realistic, yet without a trace of self-occupation." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 143:775 N 23 '29 600w

"In view of her conversion to the Church of Rome readers will turn with special interest to a chapter bearing the title 'The English Church. No one can object to its tone, nor need there be any surprise at the criticisms made by the writer of the Church of her baptism. . . Two chapters, the first on 'God's Joy,' and the second on 'Suffering in Man,' must be read together. The second is a fine study of a difficult subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1063 D 12 '29 300w

GREENE, GWENDOLEN MAUD (PARRY) 2 (MRS HARRY PLUNKET GREENE). Two witnesses; a personal recollection of Hubert Parry and Friedrich von Hügel. 199p il $3 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Parry, Sir Charles Hubert Hastings, bart. Hügel, Friedrich, freiherr von

In this spiritual autobiography Mrs Greene describes her religious evolution and the part played by two men—Sir Hubert Parry, her father (the English composer), and Baron von Hügel, her uncle (the Roman Catholic mystic), in her progress toward the establishment of a sound and happy religious philosophy.

"Sections of the book are too discursive, and there are chapters in which the theme is lost sight of altogether. It is almost as if we had two separate books dovetailed into one another. This is regrettable, because Mrs. Greene's writing catches fire whenever she touches either of the two men. Her picture of Hubert Parry is alive. He moves through the pages, swiftly, on those winged feet of his—ardent, absorbed, joyous, and always intensely earnest whatever he was about, from picking apples to writing an Oratorio. And with the Baron, the effect is quite different. Mrs. Greene makes us feel alone with him, alone with him and the God who was throughout his life for him the one Reality." Edith Olivier

Nation and Ath 48:sup212 N 8 '30 680w

"Even as a study in contrasting human character, seen with the clearness of intimate love, the book is an interesting one—especially since both musician and theologian have left so deep an impress on the modern world. Mrs. Plunket Greene's vivid memories of childhood fill many delightful pages of her book. The chief intellectual figures of the Edwardian world wander in and out of them." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 145:911 D 6 '30 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p946 N 13 '30 300w

GREENE, WARD. Ride the nightmare. 327p $2 Cape

30-21769

Jake Perry believed in living selfishly, and in getting what he wanted. He started his career as a newspaper artist; he ended as a well-paid cartoonist. Thruout he is a poseur; for the sake of his pose as an individualist he drinks, mistreats his faithful wife and numerous other women as well, practices sadism, and, as a final gesture, attempts suicide.

"The characters, including Jake, are puppets carefully manipulated. Mr. Greene as puppet-master has some interesting things to say, some brilliant lines, some hard-boiled judgments in the best contemporary tradition. Mr. Greene has talent; there are some good chapters in Ride the Nightmare and there are some that are rankest tabloid in conception and in writing; glamorous, one believes, in intention, but scandalous, if not libellous, in effect." Coley Taylor

+ — Bookm 72:76 S '30 420w

" 'Ride the Nightmare' is as precise a record of a talented poseur's progress through the newspaper world to the unsatisfactory eminence of a highly paid comic artist as Dreiser's 'American Tragedy' is of a bellhop's ascent through small town society into the electric chair. And it is almost as photographic and as carefully documented. But the writing is as unlike Dreiser's as writing well can be. It is tempestuous—marked with something of the violence and the pyrotechnic verbiage with which Liam O'Flaherty writes of the Irish scene." F. H. Britten

Books p2 Ag 24 '30 580w

Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 180w

"To the critical reader Mr. Greene's second novel is a sad performance because of its jagged unevenness, its waste of possibilities. At times it rises to genuinely powerful expression —notably in the scenes between Jake Perry, the protagonist, and his wife, Beth, who is, possibly because of her very quietness, the most vivid character in the story—but more often the writing is bald and flat, and most of the characters, instantly recognizable as types, fall to come to life at all."

— + Nation 131:329 S 24 '30 280w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews

New Repub 64:213 O 8 '30 150w

N Y Times p6 S 21 '30 500w

"One wonders why anyone should be interested enough in the fellow to write about him, why anyone should take the trouble to read about him, why Beth, who is very real and very decent, remains faithful to him. The answer is that here is not a man, but a child adult. And Beth's loyalty is that of the mother rather than of the wife. Mr. Greene has caught this child-adult remarkably well, and he understands him, his excesses, his showoffness, his petty defiances, his cheap little-boy vulgarities. The book is well written and never grows boring." Orrie Lashin

+ — N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 350w

"Mr. Greene has consciously or unconsciously written his version of an American Pantagruel. The book, while it is too abrupt, too synthetic, and too expositively sensational to give you the rich variousness of a Rabelais, has none the less a gargantuan thrust which must be recognized as bona fide."

Outlook 156:107 S 17 '30 450w

"It is to be feared that this book will be one of those houses of Liberty's friends in which Liberty is wounded. It has the jocose vulgarity, the anarchism expressed by the characters, and the excess of sexual looseness in the incidents, that are frequently praised, in the many recent books in which they occur, as so many blows struck at the forces of repression; but a book like 'Ride the Nightmare' could do more to reconcile readers to a censorship than fifty books advocating it."

— Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 600w

"As a study of the hectic existence of some young men and women the story is informative if a bit extravagant."

Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 180w

GREGG, CECIL FREEMAN. Body in the safe; a detective story. 304p $2 Dial press

30-2370

Some clews late to turn up proved to Inspectors Dryan and Higgins that William Goode and his pal Jack had been wrongly imprisoned for a theft and murder they didn't commit. Then, after freeing the prisoners and trailing and capturing some members of a professional gang, with the exception of the notorious Slick Sims, Scotland Yard receives a letter from Mr Goode informing them that he himself is Slick Sims, who murdered the man whose body was found in the safe. It is only by a lucky break that Inspector Higgins, after a series of adventures, finally lays hands on the elusive murderer.

"Mr. Gregg uses a highly unusual (and probably illegal) narrative method for his rather rough-hewn but surprising yarn of dope, disguise and other deviltry." Will Cuppy

Books p18 F 16 '30 100w

"Few mystery tales contain more unexpected elements than this."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '30 230w

N Y Times p21 F 16 '30 130w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 80w

GREGG, C. F.—Continued

"You will have to go far to find a better mystery. . . The novel is well written and well reasoned. It sets some clever problems and you will enjoy your attempts to unravel them." Eugene Reynal

+ Sat R of Lit 6:830 Mr 15 '30 250w

GREGG, CECIL FREEMAN. Murder on the bus. 308p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Hutchinson]
30-23902

"Atop a bus travelling on a lonely road on the outskirts of London a man is murdered. Inspector Higgins, whose discerning mind made possible the apprehension of the criminal master mind in The Body in the Safe, gets on the job. He links the murder with a faked suicide, calmly collects the facts despite several attempts on his life, and bares the machinations of a blackmail gang."—Bookm

Bookm 72:xxvi O '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 19 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p80 Ja 30 '30 100w

GREGG, CECIL FREEMAN. Three daggers. 308p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Hutchinson]
29-19251

A murder, reported from Maida Vale by Sergeant Woodhouse, brings Inspector Higgins to the scene—to discover that the victim is Woodhouse himself. In searching for a solution Higgins finds that a notorious gang of crooks, a mystery surrounding Penstone Park, and a lovely young girl, are all parts of the problem. He falls in love with the girl, Edith; and when she too is found, a victim of a dagger similar to the one that killed Woodhouse, Higgins lets nothing stand in his way till he traps the murderer, and achieves a most satisfactory personal revenge.

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 220w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p477 Je 13 '29 160w

GREGORY, HORACE. Chelsea rooming house. 65p $2 Covici
811 30-30425

A strongly individual book of poems, in some of which the author presents certain realistic aspects of New York city life, such as that suggested by the title piece, while in others he is concerned in a new way with the old metaphysical problems of life and death.

"Mr. Gregory is contemporary in the best sense of the word. . . With real passion and a great tenderness, he has gone to meet all that this life in a mechanized world implies. He has refused to sentimentalize over it, or to propagandize concerning it. . . He has gauged the feelings of the average man and been able to phrase with poetic intensity all that those feelings implied. . . 'Chelsea Rooming House' is an unforgettable book of poems which burn into the brain." E. L. Walton

+ Books p3 N 30 '30 500w

"'Chelsea Rooming House' is an extraordinary book; a fresh poetic vision and an individual talent here are loosed to express a great fear and a deep tenderness concerning human life. . . Taken all in all, [it] is a book one cannot forget. It has none of the ennui, the aloofness, the sterility which have deadened so much modern poetry." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 131:680 D 17 '30 400w

"The vigor of Horace Gregory's work is not the only characteristic to recommend it. For its vigor might arise from the subject matter alone, and not at all from the verse. . . For admirable verse, there must be other peculiarly poetic properties, of the sort possessed by 'Chelsea Rooming House.'" Kenneth White

+ New Repub 65:53 N 26 '30 600w

"Mr. Gregory, with his short, stabbing lines, his directness of speech and his aptness in selecting striking detail, succeeds in getting under the skin of the reader, and one concludes that he has pretty much got under the skin of those who live and love and commit suicide in his pages. In its entirety it is a gloomy picture illuminated with sharp flashes of a littérateur's calcium bursts. The book is a valuable tract in civic enlightenment." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 200w

"There is nothing stale about this book, though it deals with stale ambitions and lusts and hopes and the drums of defeat beat in it. It is a very good book about the general average in New York. We are too near to all that life to realize the fundamental horror of it, but some citizen of the future picking up this volume will find in it the voice of an industrial era upraised, on the whole, without particular bitterness, that may seem to him fantastically harassed if things have changed much by then. . . Mr. Gregory has accomplished an original thing." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:249 O 18 '30 380w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Trail to paradise. 282p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hodder]
30-22754

Garry Moncton, rancher, has been falsely accused of a killing, and rides away in the hope of escape from arrest. But Tom Brand, the sheriff, captures him. Garry escapes, later falls in love with Eve Paradise, and solves the mystery of the murder.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 S 14 '30 100w

"The story stands somewhere between mystery and the pure romance of the West. In spite of the fact that it is well enough written, it loses considerably by being neither the one nor the other. It is as straightforward, as rough on the hero, as pleasant in ending as romantic readers could possibly demand."

N Y Times p18 Ag 31 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1044 D 4 '30 180w

GREIG, IAN B. Silver king mystery (Eng title: King's club murder). 279p $2 Holt [7s 6d Benn]
30-14664

Blows given by a Silver king golf ball, plus strangulation, evidently caused the death of Miss Piltar, wealthy spinster, whose body is found near the eighteenth green. Inspector Swinton of Scotland Yard takes over the case, which develops several unexpected angles and leads to an exciting chase after the murderer.

Bookm 71:xviii Ag '30 80w

"For the most part Mr. Greig writes with fluency and ease, though he favors the locution, 'like any golfer would.'" Will Cuppy

+ — Books p13 Ag 17 '30 150w

"Rather good handling of police routine and clever plotting make the first part of the book interesting, but too much of the same things along the same lines keeps the interest from lasting throughout." Dashiell Hammett

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 40w

N Y Times p18 N 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:678 Ag 27 '30 80w

"Mr. Ian Greig has written an ingenious story, with enough probability to make it plausible and enough surprises to make it entertaining." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 149:115 Ja 25 '30 120w

"The plot is well developed and leads to an exciting and unexpected finish."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p193 Mr 6 '30 100w

GRENARD, FERNAND. Baber, first of the Moguls; tr. and adapted from the French by Homer White and Richard Glaenzer. 253p il $3.50 McBride

B or 92 Bābar, emperor of Hindustan. Mogul empire 30-25106

The story of that comparatively unknown genius of the sixteenth century, the Zahir ud-din Muhammed, nicknamed Baber the Panther, descendant of Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, and founder of the great Mogul empire.

Bookm 72:v O '30 100w

"M. Grenard's Baber is drawn from the autobiography. It by no means assimilates the virtues of its source. The author writes lightly and gracefully and appears to know his material. It is impossible to tell how far the translators and adapters have thinned out the work. As it stands a graceful style is spoilt by exhibitionism, by banal cynicism and clownish metaphors. The chief object seems to be to entertain; the book opens with a foreword like a ring-master's spiel; it promises thrills and furnishes them; a more substantial book would have provided a richer and longer satisfaction. Its recommendations are that it happens to be the only biography of Baber now in English print." Isidor Schneider

— + Books p30 S 28 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 800w

N Y Evening Post p5d O 18 '30 100w

"He has much to say about the unchanging Indian conditions that is of permanent value. He also possesses the happy knack of making the man himself live, while the illustrations are worthy of the text. The past of India receives too little attention, and its present a little too much, and such works as this are extremely valuable in showing how completely the one is embedded in the other."

+ Sat R 150:569 N 1 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p12 S 17 '30 250w

GRENSTED, LAURENCE WILLIAM. Psychology and God; a study of the implications of recent psychology for religious belief and practice. (Bampton lectures, 1930) 257p $4 (10s 6d) Longmans

201 Psychology, Religious [30-20852]

"Theological reconstruction in the light of recent developments in psychology."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

St Louis 28:288 D '30

"Based on a solid knowledge of modern psychology and a level-headed appreciation of its value and limitations, his book should correct much vague thinking about 'psychology and religion.' Especially all those inclined to explore the mysteries of 'spiritual healing' should study the excellent chapter on this subject. Perhaps the most valuable feature of the book is the constant insistence of Personality as the supreme factor in all spiritual life." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 145:637 N 1 '30 500w

"His handling of these delicate themes is everywhere tactful and imbued with respect for the strong points of his opponents' views, and is followed by an evaluation of the evidential worth of mystical experience which shows his judicial attitude at its best."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p930 N 13 '30 1600w

GRENSTED, LAURENCE WILLIAM, ed. Atonement in history and in life; a volume of essays. 340p $3.50 Macmillan [10s 6d S.P.C.K.]

232.3 Atonement 30-18041

A volume of essays by clergy of the Church of England, on the doctrine of the atonement.

"We have, especially in the essays of Mr. Grensted and Mr. Shebbeare, an application of the concept of atonement to the inner experience of the individual man—his sense of wrongness and of need. Mr. Shebbeare, in bringing these thoughts into relation with the austere transcendentalism of Karl Barth, has done a valuable piece of work. His paper, and the interesting and original discussion of 'Atonement and the Problem of Evil,' by Archbishop D'Arcy, are the most attractive and thought-provoking essays in the book." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 144:533 Mr 29 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p94 F 6 '30 950w

GREVILLE, CHARLES CAVENDISH FULKE. Leaves from the Greville diary; a new and abr. ed.; arr. with introd. and notes by Philip Morrell. 877p il $6 Dutton [21s Nash]

B or 92 Great Britain—History—19th century [30-26603]

This edition of the famous diary introduces Greville's Journal to modern readers in a short and readable form. The original eight volumes have been reduced to one, by the omission of a great deal of political gossip, portraits of people of minor importance, and almost all that relates to purely foreign politics. On the other hand the editor has retained all that the diarist tells directly of himself, descriptions of important historical figures and passages throwing light on the conditions and manners of the time.

Booklist 26:406 Jl '30

"The Diary is not an easy work to curtail, as Mr. Morrell is fain to admit. In the main, he has made his excisions with tact and skill. He shows especially happy judgment in retaining many of the passages in which the diarist stands outside himself and shakes his head ruefully over opportunities wasted and energies misapplied." D. M. Stuart

+ Nation and Ath 46:354 D 7 '29 600w

"More brilliant men have written less important diaries. Greville is consistently pedestrian; he is the hard-headed man of the world, who knows his world and knows that he belongs to it. The companionship of influential men, the enjoyment of privilege and the interest and bustle of affairs never swamped his critical faculties. He was a minor figure, and minor figures can afford to stand apart and look on through impartial eyes. Greville was fascinated, usually envious, but he was seldom overawed. His strength consisted in the union of plain commonsense and close observation with detachment and perspicacious severity." Peter Quennell

+ New Statesman 34:367 D 21 '29 1550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1045 D 12 '29 430w

Times [London] Lit Sup p109 F 13 '30 2350w

GREY, ROMER C. Adventures of a deep-sea angler. 224p il $7.50 Harper

799.16 Fishing 30-28287

A record of the deep-sea fishing adventures of the author, who is a brother of Zane Grey. There are accounts of swordfishing days on the California coast, angling in the Galapagos, tuna-fishing, native fishing in the South Sea islands, and broadbill fishing.

"The army of eager anglers who have followed with interest the adventures of Zane Grey in his search for and capture of the giant mako, broad-bill, black marlin and tuna are well acquainted with his brother and inseparable fishing companion, R. C. This book is bound to be a source of delight to big game fishermen. It supplements and complements the adventures of Zane Grey as though they had taken alternate incidents of ocean fishing combats and made two books with two authors." W. E. Haskell, Jr.

+ Books p22 D 7 '30 200w

"Any fisherman of any variety who has a bit of sporting instinct will be interested in these tales of salt-water fishing. . . But there is a good deal more than fishing to these stories of

GREY, R. C.—Continued

'R. C.' and his better known brother may look well to his laurels not only in fishing but what is more, the telling of it." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 5 '30 300w

GREY, ZANE. Shepherd of Guadaloupe. 335p $2 Harper

30-14881

Clifton Forrest, returning to his parents' ranch in New Mexico after being wounded in the World war, finds that the old property has come into the possession of Jed Lundeen, an enemy of his father. But Forrest falls in love with Jed's daughter Gina—and love triumphs over the family feud.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 Je 22 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 500w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 80w

"It is all written in the romantic spirit, 'the light that never was' hovers ever over its hero and heroine, it is compact of action and emotion, its pictures of its locality are true and vivid—in short, Zane Grey at his best."

N Y Times p8 Je 1 '30 620w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 280w

"Technically, Mr. Grey's style is excellent, his plots run like well-oiled machines; his climaxes are carefully prepared for and neatly placed. He deals in the unreal world, the motion-picturesque."

+ Outlook 155:308 Je 25 '30 150w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

"The situation does not seem very real, but Zane Grey makes the most of it."

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 270w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1044 D 4 '30 180w

GREY, ZANE. Wolf-tracker. (Round table ser.) 98p il $1 Harper

30-13906

The tale of the tracking down of Old Gray, a magnificent but destructive wolf, by a grim and silent hunter.

"Besides the melodrama and touch of brutality in this story there is an exasperating sententiousness in the style which children and young people may well be spared." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p17 Jl 8 '30 200w

"It is not a pretty story: but vigorously told."

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 130w

GRIBBLE, FRANCIS HENRY. Balzac: the man and the lover. 276p il $5 Dutton [21s Nash]

B or 92 Balzac, Honoré de 30-10700

Mr Gribble is entirely occupied with Balzac's love affairs. His first—the love of a boy of twenty for a woman of forty—was followed by a succession of affairs, more or less intense, culminating in his seventeen years' attachment for Madame Hanska, whom he finally married shortly before his death.

"The book is more monotonous than scandalous, although Balzac was too vital and his milieu too theatrical to be dull. Here is the man, who desired above all to be famous and to be loved by fascinating ladies. The reader can do his own interpreting."

Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 80w

Reviewed by Albert Guerard

Books p15 Mr 30 '30 900w

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley

Nation 130:493 Ap 23 '30 250w

"This biography is far from being satisfactory. The style is too dramatic, the means of expression often crude, it is impossible to agree with most of the many generalizations, and where Balzac's conquests are concerned the author loses all sense of proportion. Mr. Gribble, however, has been very thorough in examining all possible sources of information."

— + Nation and Ath 46:680 F 15 '30 650w

"Mr. Gribble has had much practice in the composing of books that, without any falsification, pick out the high lights in his subjects. Balzac does not suit him well, and we imagine this volume will disappoint readers who are attracted by the title. Balzac was, first and last, a worker, an artist who would sacrifice anything to achieve his determined end. How far his purpose was shaken by the affair with Madame Hanska is not easy to settle: Mr. Gribble tells the facts picturesquely, and not without respect for the great novelist."

New Statesman 34:480 Ja 18 '30 130w

N Y Evening Post p9m My 31 '30 100w

"So far as concerns the work of Balzac, with that Mr. Gribble has virtually nothing to do, considering as he does that it has been amply appraised elsewhere. The man himself, however, emerges in Mr. Gribble's meticulous portrait a little more comic, considerably more ridiculous and yet somehow much more touching and pathetic." H. J. Forman

N Y Times p19 Mr 23 '30 1100w

"Humor and gossip are fairly included in this important work, which actually throws new light into the obscure corners." P. L. Wakefield

+ N Y World p11m F 23 '30 850w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"While it contains no novelties as regards either facts or interpretation, the book is not without merit. It is pleasantly and intelligently written. It offers to the general reader a good deal of information, some of which has not hitherto been made accessible in English. The author understands these ladies, as well as Mme. Hanska, pretty well; and the portrait of Balzac himself is usually shrewd and plausible." E. P. Dargan

+ Sat R of Lit 7:55 Ag 16 '30 800w

"The whole book is very readable, if slight."

+ Spec 144:236 F 15 '30 100w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 30 '30 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p212 Mr 13 '30 650w

GRIBBLE, LEONARD R. Case of the Marsden rubies. 322p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Harrap]

30-14190

The disappearance of the valuable Marsden rubies, followed by the murder of Sir Dudley, their owner, leads Inspector Slade on a venture of peril that ends in a desperate battle at sea with the Death Hawks, a ruthless Soviet organization.

Bookm 71:xvii Jl '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p13 My 18 '30 100w

"Here is an exciting tale which marches rapidly to its conclusion, so rapidly that one reads on breathlessly, as one danger quickly follows another only to be overcome by Slade and the flying squad of the police."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 400w

"A muddled story devoid of excitement and suspense, with a mystery that the police could have solved in a day or two simply by grabbing most of the suspects and hanging on to them." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 150w

"There are so many crooks and so many detectives in this story that it is often difficult to guess which is which. What complicates matters still further is that neither all the crooks nor all the detectives are working together."

— N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1085 D 19 '29 220w

GRIERSON, FLORA. Haunting Edinburgh. 178p il $5 Dodd [20s Lane]

914.1445 Edinburgh [30-15424]

An historical and descriptive portrait of the city of Edinburgh from medieval days until the present. Illustrated with drawings, many of them in color, and facsimile title pages of some rare books.

New Statesman 34:sup xx D 7 '29 250w
St Louis 28:271 N '30

"Of the many books recently issued on Edinburgh Miss Flora Grierson's holds a very high—perhaps even the highest—place. While she dwells long and lovingly on the various romantic memories of Scotland's capital, she tempers her appreciation with a discerning criticism admirably expressed."

+ Spec 144:59 Ja 11 '30 200w

"Miss Grierson's book is better than its title, for she has tried to avoid the beaten track. . . Even when she deals with well-known figures, one comes on tales that have a certain freshness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p11 Ja 2 '30 570w

GRIFFISS, TOWNSEND. When you go to Hawaii, you will need this guide to the islands. 344p il $3.50 Houghton

919.69 Hawaiian Islands—Description and travel 30-30529

A guide book to the Hawaiian Islands, somewhat in the manner of Clara Laughlin's "So you're going" books. In addition to information on the history and geography of the islands, the author gives full information on sights to see and things to do when there. There is a glossary of common Hawaiian words, and four maps and an index are included.

"To practical information about the islands themselves, it adds information about the means of reaching and of journeying from one island to another. It corrects many erroneous impressions." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 72:xvii D '30 180w

"The guidebook is admirably complete and painstaking in its assemblage of material, advice, counsel and suggestion."

+ N Y Times p40 N 30 '30 220w

"The book is delightful at the same time that it is comprehensive and dependable. It is geography, history, botany, description and general information blended in a skillful fashion. What makes the book of particular value is the fact that it shows the tourist and the new resident as well, how to get under the surface of Hawaii and how to share experiences which commonly would have been available to only an oldtimer. It seems unfortunate that a better selection of illustrations was not made when so many enchanting ones are available." B. W.

+ — Outlook 156:428 N 12 '30 230w

GRIFFITH, ROBERT OWEN, and MCKEOWN, ANDREW. Photo-processes in gaseous and liquid systems. (Textbooks of physical chemistry) 691p $8.50 (25s) Longmans

541.35 Photochemistry [30-5562]

"This textbook . . . for senior and research students, incorporates the most recent advances in the subject. As a preliminary to the purely photochemical matter, the first half of the book is devoted to modern physical theory with special reference to such topics as atomic and molecular spectra, photoluminescence and chemi-luminescence. . . The remainder of the work deals with photochemical changes, their energetics, kinetics, and reaction mechanisms. While earlier work has not been neglected, this part of the book is concerned mainly with the intensive photochemical research of the last fifteen years."—N Y New Tech Bks

"A book which gives evidence throughout of great but discriminating industry, a nice comprehension of essentials, a critical acumen above the ordinary, and an unlaboured and clear expository style." A. J. Allmand

+ J Phys Chem 34:447 F '30 700w

"The treatment is very fair to diverse views, and the criticism which is presented from time to time by the authors is both pertinent and stimulating. The authors are to be congratulated on writing what may well be considered the standard text-book in this growing subject." E. K. Rideal

+ Nature 125:404 Mr 15 '30 800w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:56 O '29
St Louis 28:40 F '30

"Will be widely welcomed as an authoritative presentation of the results of recent research and an exposition of present-day views on the subject. The specific theme of the book is introduced by a masterly account, occupying nearly half the volume, of the interaction of radiation and matter, including the theory of atomic and molecular structure and spectra, and photoluminescence—an account which alone would serve admirably as a text-book; so concisely does it display the foundations on which much of the new physics and chemistry is being built."

Times [London] Lit Sup p195 Mr 6 '30 220w

GRIGS, MARY. Bid her awake. 288p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-22208

"The story of Susan who walks in the shadow of her sister until love awakens a knowledge of her own power."—Publishers' Weekly

Booklist 27:210 Ja '31

"So quietly is it done that the insensitive reader may fail to perceive the artistry with which it is composed; though he cannot fail to be charmed by the effect so subtly created." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 72:207 O '30 100w
Books p16 O 5 '30 180w

"The story is well conceived and written in a careful, quiet, agreeable but somewhat too reticent prose. In spite of the directness and simplicity of her main plot, Miss Grigs falls occasionally into dullness and obscurity. From these faults the host of bold and colorful minor figures are not sufficient to rescue the novel."

+ — N Y Times p7 S 7 '30 500w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross

Outlook 156:68 S 10 '30 350w

"There is so much in Miss Grigs's 'Bid Her Awake' that is attractive and refreshing that one is inclined to overlook and to forgive weaknesses to which it would be unfair to the author not to draw attention. She has been duly careful in the development of the action of her story, but, having got so far, she suddenly becomes frightened and leaves a crowd of ragged ends floating aimlessly in space. Miss Grigs has a fine sense of dramatic situation and a keen eye for beauty, and her story is a good story told with an obvious delight in the telling."

+ — Sat R 149:422 Ap 5 '30 120w

"It is her sensibility to transient emotions which distinguishes her novel and shows her to be a writer of promise; the pity is that so much of the book is given over to incidents and characters too commonplace to arouse any real interest."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p276 Mr 27 '30 250w

GRISWOLD, FRANCIS. Tides of Malvern. 333p $2.50 Morrow

30-23091

This historical romance traces the fortunes of a family of Southerners from the early eighteenth century to the present. Malvern Barony, an old house in Charleston, has been the home of the Sheldons for many generations.

GRISWOLD, FRANCIS—Continued
Against this background we follow the activities of the Sheldons from the founder of the house, Gilbert, to the last of the line, Hugh, who was killed in action during the World war.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"A sound romantic novel this: competent and poised and at moments reaching a high level." Guy Holt
+ Bookm 72:206 O '30 300w

"In many respects one of the most considerable pieces of fiction that have come out of the current interest in the South, Mr. Griswold's novel is unusual in that it is the work of a Northerner. . . There is richness and a solidity about 'The Tides of Malvern,' a sort of easy-paced story telling, with no tricks of style to interfere, which results in fiction that may give pleasure to many readers, without giving offense to the hypercritical." Herschel Brickell
+ Books p6 S 7 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p3 O 1 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30

"Only a writer extraordinarily skilful at creating and sustaining narrative interest could make a successful novel from two and a half centuries of family history. Francis Griswold has no unusual mastery of that kind of skill and he has been unwise enough to undertake, in his first novel, to trace the history of a fictitious Charleston family from the time of Old Noll down to 1930. He seems to have neither the sense of family nor the sense of place that his task required."
— Nation 131:331 S 24 '30 80w

"There is nothing the matter with the writing: it is firm, unsentimental, adapted to the task of encompassing much in little space. But the lives and the loves and the sufferings of the seven generations seem always far away; the characters are always a little like figures in a tapestry. . . When one tries to get the shifting flavors of three centuries into one short book, along with a novel that deals with unchanging verities such as birth, love and death, one ends up with a rough résumé of history that is well known, anyway, and a novel that has little more force than a family tree looked at imaginatively."
— N Y Times p7 S 14 '30 550w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Outlook 156:147 S 24 '30 200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"Mr. Griswold has done his job so well that a Northern reviewer, going clear through the book before reading the jacket notice which identifies the author as a young man from Albany, had supposed he was an old gentleman of Charleston. The book lives, the house lives, the family lives; Mr. Griswold's sensitiveness to the peculiar quality, and at the same time the universal humanness of a departed civilization is quite remarkable. The whole, however, is more effective and more impressive than some of its parts. Covering six generations in three hundred pages requires a good deal of compression, and deliberate avoidance of melodrama makes it inevitable that some things receive more extended treatment than they appear to deserve." Elmer Davis
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:157 S 27 '30 380w

GRODINSKY, JULIUS. Railroad consolidation; its economics and controlling principles; with an introd. by Emory R. Johnson. (Appleton's transportation ser.) 333p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Appleton

385 Railroads—Consolidation. Railroads—United States 30-7955

"What are the primary factors that lead the railroads as business enterprises to press forward so persistently and urgently with their plans for consolidation?" This volume, based on information gathered from hearings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is an attempt to answer the above question by analysing the principles underlying the consolidation movement.

"In chapters on the basic factors of interchange and control of traffic movements, followed by others on striving for the long haul, on bargaining at interchange points and discrimination between connections according to how 'friendly' or competitive they are, on the economic significance of direct and indirect routes and the varying effects of consolidation on circuitous routing, as well as others, he sets forth realistically and with an abundance of illustrative material the processes through which the basic promptings for increased business or for protection from competitive encroachments work themselves out. He has given emphasis and clarity to subjects which are of the essence of the railroad business today. It is in these chapters that he makes his chief contribution." C. S. Morgan
+ Am Econ R 20:730 D '30 950w
Am Pol Sci R 24:795 Ag '30 80w

"This is by far the most interesting and instructive contribution that has been made to the much-discussed subject of railroad consolidation. . . The interest and the value of Dr. Grodinsky's work lies in the exhaustive analysis of the complex factors which determine the strategic policies adopted by railroads in competition for business—an analysis presented with a wealth of illustrative example to be found nowhere else in the literature of railroad transportation." T. W. Van Metre
+ Ann Am Acad 151:297 S '30 500w

Reviewed by George Soule
N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 180w
St Louis 28:208 S '30

GROOM, BERNARD. Literary history of England. 392p lib ed $3; school ed $2 (6s) Longmans

820.9 English literature—History and criticism 29-18672

The work of the great English writers from the Anglo-Saxon era down to the present, intended as a text for English courses and an introduction to the general reader.

Booklist 26:151 Ja '30

"So far as we know there has as yet been no really successful attempt on more than a small scale to combine the history of England and the history of its literature. At first sight the task does not seem extraordinarily formidable, but anyone who has tried it or tried to combine the two in teaching will remember the difficulties and pitfalls. Mr. Bernard Groom in his Literary History of England has made the attempt again (his project is not so novel as he imagines) and has achieved only a moderate success."
— + Hist Outlook 21:42 Ja '30 420w
Pratt p29 spring '30
St Louis 27:338 D '29

"The mark of one who deals with minds younger than his own is rather prominent and this can hardly be regarded as a merit."
— + Sat R 148:680 D 7 '29 230w

"Within his limits Mr. Groom has accomplished his task admirably; he does not merely repeat the common text-book judgments, but chooses his own illustrations and gives his own criticisms. He directs his attention more to poetry than to prose; but perhaps this is the best way of encouraging an interest in literature. Even for those who already feel themselves at home in the by-paths of literature this volume may well prove valuable; it will bring back to them a sense of proportion and sweep."
+ Spec 144:133 Ja 25 '30 150w

"An interesting book, but unlikely to supersede Mr. Saintsbury's 'Short History' as a guide to students."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p687 S 5 '29 300w

GROPPER, MILTON HERBERT, and SHERRY, EDNA. Is no one innocent? 237p $1.50 Cosmopolitan bk.
30-21171

Seven people told Inspector Kennedy that they murdered Dwight Mortover—and each had sufficient motive. But Kennedy could not find the gun from which the fatal shot had been fired. Moreover, it was necessary to prove six of the confessors innocent in order to discover the guilty party.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Ag 17 '30 120w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 150w
Reviewed by Bruce Rae
N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 150w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:630 Ag 20 '30 100w

"The situations are not very original, but new tricks are given to each one which makes the story refreshing. Its chief weakness is that it is more of a play than a novel." R. I. Center
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:379 N 22 '30 80w

GROPPER, WILLIAM. Alay-oop. unp il $2
^{2} Coward-McCann
30-32700

A story in cartoons which ironically caricatures the recent woodcut novels. This is the hard-boiled, melodramatic tale of a lady acrobat, her trapese-artist partner, and a four-flushing tenor, who steals the lady's heart with false promises. Washtubs, twins and tragedy follow. The fact that the twins turn out to be acrobats rather than musicians saves the day for mamma.

"Mr. Gropper's drawings illuminate this tale with broad strokes. 'Alay-Oop' has humor, but not much finesse."
— + Books p15 Ja 4 '31 200w
Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '30 150w

"'Alay-Oop!' is one of the most successful of the picture novels. Gropper is impressed with life's ironies, he uses his medium to tell a story in quick, effective strokes. . . It gives opportunity to Gropper's flair for irony and drama." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 D 15 '30 160w

"It is bad 'art,' but it is very much in the temper of the present time. It is hard boiled in the story, and carefully slovenly in execution."
Sat R of Lit 7:462 D 13 '30 80w

GROVE, FREDERICK PHILIP. Yoke of life. 355p $2 Smith, R.R.
30-28641

"[The author deals] with the austere hardships of existence endured by Canadian backwoods settlers on government grant farms, centering his story's action in the futile endeavors of an ambitious youth to gain an education while at the same time aiding in the support of his poverty-stricken people."—Sat R of Lit

"Young Len Sterner, a thwarted idealist in the Canadian wilderness, proves an uncommonly sympathetic companion the while he endures the miseries of bush farming, struggles for an education and undergoes the growing pains of spiritual development. . . His story ends with a grand operatic atonement quite out of tune with the rest of his career."
+ — Books p12 D 7 '30 120w

"Competently written, though rarely interesting, the story is one of the dreariest and most tedious we have read in many a day."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:274 O 25 '30 180w

GROVE, JOHN, ed. Omnibus of adventure. 882p
^{3} $3.50 Dodd
Short stories—Collections 30-26106

A collection of forty-four great adventure stories. The contents include such masterpieces as: A terribly strange bed, by Wilkie Collins; Hunilla: a story of the enchanted isles, by Herman Melville; The Sire de Maletroit's door, by R. L. Stevenson; The sealed orders, by Alfred de Vigny; The man who would be king, by Rudyard Kipling; The mummy's foot, by Théophile Gautier; The three strangers, by Thomas Hardy; MS. found in a bottle, by E. A. Poe; The wreck, by Guy de Maupassant; Dr Manette's manuscript, by Charles Dickens; The body-snatcher, by R. L. Stevenson.

"Mr. John Grove would appear to have chosen wisely and well along the fairly trodden paths of the adventure field. Old or not, every story in the collection is worth rereading, unless it's 'The Brigand's Bride,' by Laurence Oliphant." Will Cuppy
+ — Books p20 D 14 '30 380w

"This compilation of many of the best short stories of the world is an omnibus indeed, and a volume of perpetual pleasure. . . Clearly, of course, criticism wilts before such a book, which could be served with nothing short of a comparative study of the short story as practiced in the Occident in modern times. But the editor, with mountain on mountain of material to choose from, wisely held to a touchstone to aid him in his selection. The story must have for its theme some aspects of adventure, and this he has kept steadily in mind."
+ N Y Times p9 D 14 '30 450w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:550 D 3 '30 50w

GROVER, EDWIN OSGOOD, ed. Animal lover's knapsack: an anthology of poems for lovers of our animal friends. 288p il $2.50 Crowell
808.1 Animals in literature 29-21089

"Poems gathered mainly from modern poets, grouped by kinds of animals—the dog, man's burden bearers, kittens and cats, hunters and hunted, the lyric choir, barnyard friends, wings and stings, etc."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 26:151 Ja '30
Christian Century 47:116 Ja 22 '30 150w

"The book is the ideal companion on a hike, a canoe trip, or for a week-end outing."
+ Churchman p17 F 1 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p22 F '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30
Wis Lib Bul 25:369 N '29

GROVES, ERNEST RUTHERFORD, and BLANCHARD, PHYLLIS MARY. Introduction to mental hygiene. (Am. social science ser.) 467p $4 Holt [16s Howe]
131 Mental physiology and hygiene 30-13633

An introductory textbook for the college student on the subject of mental hygiene, treating of its origin and development as a study, and its psychiatric and psychological background. There follow chapters on mental hygiene in relation to childhood, adolescence, marriage, the schools, the college, business and industry, religion and literature, social work and public opinion.

"Of the many problems which arise in the lives of all, there is scarcely one that is not discussed sanely and helpfully. The great value of the book from the standpoint of the reviewer, apart from its soundness, is that it is understandable, and one does not have to be versed in the language of the alienist to profit by it. The reviews of the book by specialists have been favorable from the professional standpoint. In view of these and his own experience with it, it is recommended to the average reader with confidence. The printing and make-up are excellent." M. P. Ravenel
+ Am J Pub Health 20:1375 D '30 380w
Booklist 27:9 S '30

"It is a rather formal presentation written for classroom purposes, and therefore, perhaps, not as exciting to read as if differently arranged, but it cannot fail to be adopted as a textbook or reference work wherever mental hygiene is taught. The authors have done a fine piece of work and the book can be highly recommended to all interested." W. A. White, M.D.

GROVES, E. R., and BLANCHARD, P. M. —Continued

+ Books p10 S 7 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '30 450w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:508 Jl 30 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

St Louis 28:229 O '30

"This is the book that every person in the professional field of mental hygiene has promised himself some day he would write. That Groves and Blanchard should have stolen a march on the rest of us who were laggard, speaks much for their energy and perspicacity. And the best of it is that the book is a corking fine one. . . Groves and Blanchard have caught and imprisoned in their book the true significance of this contribution and have demonstrated effectively how education, religion, social work, and the like, can free themselves from some of the fetters of out-moded tradition that render sterile so much of their effort." G. K. Pratt, M.D.

+ Survey 65:228 N 15 '30 480w

GRUBB, KENNETH G. Amazon and Andes. 296p il $5 Dial press [18s Methuen]

918 South America—Description and travel. Amazon valley. Andes 30-33130

"Mr. Grubb's book is the result of many thousands of miles of travel and investigation in the Upper Amazon waters and through Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, and Venezuela. In the latter countries he lived as a missionary and his journeys in the Upper Amazon region were made under the auspices of the World Dominion Movement."—Sat R of Lit

"The author is a methodical rather than inspired reporter. His book packs an impressive amount of information, but the narrator is not inclined to let excitement color his pages. If anything, he is too assiduously matter-of-fact. . . However, the author has allowed his camera to counterbalance his partiality for understatement; the book is a rich pictorial record of his journeyings."

+ — Books p23 O 26 '30 200w

"His work is grave but sympathetic, intelligent, and informative. It is profusely illustrated with photographs, some of them beautiful and all interesting."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:314 N 8 '30 120w

"His writing has a character of its own, for he brings to the observation of things seen not only a familiarity with South American history but general culture also; and with these the capacity to relate the things seen to the circumstances, present and past, that have made them what they are."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p694 S 4 '30 950w

GRUDIN, LOUIS. Primer of aesthetics; logical approaches to a philosophy of art. 247p $3 Covici

701 Esthetics. Philosophy, Modern 30-11933

"This 'Primer of Æsthetics' will be a nearly unique phenomenon in the current American lists. Its title may catch the unwary. It is a primer only in the sense that it attempts to compose a new logic, i.e., a new essential order, for philosophy. Not much more than a third of it can be said to be concerned directly with esthetics (since the definition and relation of terms, even as symbols, properly underlies the whole of philosophy); but all of it may be applied to the particular science of esthetics." —N Y Evening Post

Reviewed by Charles Hartshorne
Am J Soc 36:329 S '30 480w

Reviewed by Odell Shepard
Bookm 71:458 Jl '30 220w

"Mr. Grudin contends that aesthetics must engage in analysis of the nature of symbols. The result is a book that will appear to most readers more like an advanced treatise on logic than a primer of aesthetics." Van Meter Ames

Int J Ethics 40:557 Jl '30 500w

"Mr. Grudin's effort is itself valuable and courageous; and his considerable achievement in clarification, even though it must be limited more to a definition of potentialities than to any resolution of actual problems in the field, earns him a portion of that kind of praise he has himself accorded to minds 'magnificently rigorous.' . . Mr. Grudin's translation into metaphysical terms of such data as the newer concepts of physics is adroit in the extreme. One feels nevertheless that the tortuous distinction and multiplication of references, when these are applied to specific problems, will bring about something like the nearly unworkable complexity of Jennings's finding in genetics. This is the chief objection Mr. Grudin's further work in the field must answer." Vincent McHugh

+ — N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 800w

"Throughout, Mr. Grudin's thought is well oriented and most carefully consecutive. But if one agrees with him in believing that Wyndham Lewis and Paul Valéry have fallen into the Scylla of philosophical pretension, one must also wonder whether Mr. Grudin himself has not been swept into an equally dangerous Charybdis. Is it possible to pin down the subtlety and complexity and variety of the esthetic facts into premises so cut-and-dried that our author's equally cut-and-dried, abstract conclusions follow from them with such superb precision? It seems as if Mr. Grudin had achieved an intellectual structure of crystalline lucidity, with remarkably little actual relevance to the world of experience under consideration." Axton Clark

+ — N Y Times p5 Jl 27 '30 520w

St Louis 28:294 D '30

GRUENBERG, BENJAMIN CHARLES. Story of evolution; facts and theories on the development of life. 473p il $4 Van Nostrand [21s Chapman]

575 Evolution 29-24072

Professor Gruenberg's book is concerned chiefly with organic evolution. His stand upon the question is stated in the following prefatory statement: "We can find evidence that the plants and animals now inhabiting the earth are different from the inhabitants of a former age; but we can not prove that the latter 'evolved' from the earlier."

Am J Soc 36:170 Jl '30 150w

Booklist 26:301 My '30

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley
Books p10 Je 15 '30 220w

Boston Transcript p8 D 28 '29 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30

"Being a specialist in biology and a long time student of his present theme, he speaks upon it with the voice of authority. . . He devotes about half his volume to a notably lucid marshaling of the facts that have been assembled by observation and experiment to show the scientific evidence on which the theory of evolution has been based."

+ N Y Times p43 D 1 '29 200w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

GRUNDY, C. W. Egyptian portrait. 288p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

A story portraying the life of a modern Egyptian boy, Ahmed Farouki. He grows up in Cairo as the son of a carpenter, later becomes a student in France, and then goes to Oxford. Here he meets and falls in love with a French girl, marries her, and takes her back to Egypt with him. The struggle between Ahmed's marriage and his love for his country is the main interest of the author.

"The story is readable, but not 'compelling.'"
Bookm 71:545 Ag '30 230w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Ag 10 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"The book is written objectively, in an equable, detached manner. . . 'Egyptian Portrait' gives an interesting sketch of modern Cairo, as well as of a twentieth century Egyptian. It is a book more than a little out of the ordinary."
+ N Y Times p7 Je 29 '30 420w

"Sometimes his sense of reality fails him, and he then ekes out the deficiency with a hasty borrowing from the stock resources of romantic convention. But Mr. Grundy has a considerable gift of narrative, and the momentum of his story carries him safely through several passages where a slower pace would have been fatal. He has at his command, too, a simple, direct style which, however, he sometimes adulterates with a slight admixture of stilted diction, especially when he passes from actual narrative to reflection or dialogue."
+ — Sat R 150:177 Ag 9 '30 320w

"For a first novel 'Egyptian Portrait' is a firm and reasonable piece of work."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p415 My 15 '30 300w

GRUVER, MRS SUZANNE CARY. Cape Cod cook book. 214p $2 Little 641.5 Cookery, American 30-15898

This cook book, containing not only the distinctive native dishes for which the Cape is noted but other recipes more widely known and used, is an excellent general collection.

Booklist 27:15 S '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30
J Home Econ 22:863 O '30 80w
N Y Times p28 Je 22 '30 180w
St Louis 28:211 S '30
Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 24 '30 600w

GUEDALLA, PHILIP. Missing muse [and other essays]. 208p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Hodder]
824 30-4742

The title essay in this book of light, informal sketches is a plea for the "lost art of history," a witty complaint against the purely scientific historians who are content to present documents in undigested masses without the touch of imagination that brings them to life.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

"About half of the book is devoted to the miscellaneous stock-in-trade of the essayist, and Mr. Guedalla's acidulous meditations have hardly fermented enough to produce a very heady brew; they are often very small beer indeed. The prefatory dialogue on essay-writing condemns the 'studied triviality' of 'Lambkins', but says nothing of studied smartness. However, it is only an established author who can afford to clean out his desk so thoroughly."
— + Bookm 71:118 Mr '30 320w

Books p29 Ap 13 '30 250w

Christian Science Monitor p10 N 9 '29 750w

Reviewed by Barrington Gates
Nation and Ath 46:174 N 2 '29 320w

"The book is clearly a re-serving of tit-bits produced for the magazines and newspapers. The practised eye can usually detect the book or performance which called them forth, and often just where the editorial '800 words, please' has made them glide to a standstill Those who are not cast down in spirit by the sight of a very large tray of mixed patisserie being dumped before them will enjoy themselves."
New Statesman 34:96 O 26 '29 350w

"Mr. Guedalla is acute to the things surrounding him, to the flavor of his age and to the hue and coloring of personalities. He is adroit in his presentations. The critical essays in the volume display his particular forte. They are slight pieces, but they have a healthy, pungent quality. . . This is a delightful book for a quiet and an unhurried hour."
+ N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 400w

Reviewed by C. G. Poore
N Y Times p5 Je 29 '30 470w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith
N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 500w

"Mr. Guedalla has an astringent sanity which is likely to correct the hysterical enthusiasms which are handed on from one critic to another. He has a mordant seriousness which makes mountebanks fade away. He writes so well that he almost seems old fashioned—good prose having almost gone out of fashion."
+ Outlook 154:387 Mr 5 '30 230w

"Ephemeral though these essays are in character they are worth the permanence of publication in book form if only for their constant crackle of wit. But Mr. Guedalla is historian and scholar as well as brilliant epigrammatist and stylist; back of his coruscating epithet are knowledge and the reconstructive imagination, and woven into the play of his cleverness, even in articles so slight as these, is a wealth of allusion and instance that lends them substance. . . All of them are brief, all of them are sparkling, none of them is without its kernel of pertinent commentary or suggestive analysis. Entirely unimportant, they are entirely delightful." Amy Loveman
+ Sat R of Lit 6:751 F 22 '30 250w

Spec 143:sup463 O 5 '29 420w

Times [London] Lit Sup p896 N 7 '29 700w

GUERNSEY, JOHN. Retailing tomorrow. 228p ^{2} il $5 Textile pub. co.
658.87 Retail trade 30-580

"A practical retailer's view of the future of his profession."—Subtitle

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '30

"Somewhat technical for the general reader, it throws interesting side lights on problems of consumer buying."
J Home Econ 22:222 Mr '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30
Special Libraries 21:264 S '30

GUGGENHEIM, HARRY FRANK. Seven skies. 216p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam
629.13 Aeronautics 30-21886

These essays upon different aspects of aviation record the scientific and social problems involved in its history and development. The Lindbergh flight, which Mr Guggenheim considers as having ushered in the industrial era of flying, receives special emphasis. Contents: Aviation's first one hundred years; The significance of the Lindbergh flight; Creating air wisdom in the public; Research as a worker of miracles; The conquest of fog; The public's responsibility; Aviation and the Americas; Giving wings to the world.

Reviewed by G. L. Wilson
Ann Am Acad 152:420 N '30 400w
Booklist 27:142 D '30

"As the former president of the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, Mr. Guggenheim speaks with authority upon aviation. If he speaks also as something of a propagandist for flight one would hardly expect anything else from one of the best known of the nation's air enthusiasts. The most interesting essays are those which discuss the Lindbergh flight and the problem of conquering fog."
+ Books p10 S 14 '30 300w

GUGGENHEIM, H. F.—Continued
Boston Transcript p5 O 4 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30
Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn
N Y Times p10 S 14 '30 1050w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30
St Louis 28:264 N '30
Spec 145:508 O 11 '30 40w

"The book is written in an easy style throughout, with no technical references which might baffle the layman, to which it is primarily addressed."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 O 14 '30 750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1071 D 11 '30 80w

GUICHARD, LOUIS. Naval blockade, 1914-1918; tr. and ed. by Christopher R. Turner. 321p $3.50 Appleton
940.452 Blockade. European war, 1914-1918—Blockades 30-4502

The author, a lieutenant in the French navy, furnishes a detailed story of the economic blockade, the conduct of submarine warfare, and the effect of the naval blockade upon neutral countries and upon Germany.

"A scholarly and quite dispassionate summary of the world's most recent experience with the exercise of sea power in economic war." Walter Millis
+ Books p19 Mr 16 '30 600w

"When M. Guichard's masterly study of the naval blockade during the Great War appeared, it aroused such interest that a translation was urged for the benefit of American readers. The present volume is the result of that demand and appears at the exceedingly opportune time, during the Naval Conference. It gives to those who read it an understanding of the problems facing that conference which will be afforded by no other single volume." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '30 700w
Christian Science Monitor p7 Ap 26 '30 350w
Reviewed by J. F. Scott
Current Hist 32:194 Ap '30 500w

"The interminable complications of the 'naval blockade' are described with particularity by the author. He omits nothing of importance and not a word is wasted. To understand the blockade and its auxiliary processes, his compact little book is indispensable." H. E. Armstrong
+ N Y Times p22 F 23 '30 1200w

"As far as it goes it is a useful book, although, naturally, a description cannot bring out all the implications. Once in a while M. Guichard loses his objectivity. Again he fails to keep an accurate control over his figures, noting only occasionally that the increase or decrease of trade figured in English pounds does not show the quantity increase and decrease. And, lastly, he invalidates his discussion of Germany's supplies of certain raw materials at the outbreak of the war by assuming that Germany had accumulated stocks in anticipation of the war. On the whole, though, the book is valuable and worth while, bringing order into an immensely complicated subject." C. H. Grattan
+ — N Y World p10m Ap 6 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

"As a picture of the blockade from the allied standpoint his work is not likely to be seriously modified. In contrast to his treatment of the neutrals his interpretation of British policy is unusually sympathetic, while he deals with Germany in a fair and even admiring spirit." E. M. N.
+ Sat R 149:141 F 1 '30 1250w

"Very clear, compact and on the whole fair account of the blockade. Lieutenant Guichard is to be complimented on the amount of information which he has put into a relatively small space without seeming to be cramped. As a seaman himself and as a member of the Historical Section of the French Ministry of Marine he has been doubly in a position to understand his problem."
+ Spec 144:201 F 8 '30 800w

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES ALFRED HONORE. Short history of the French people; tr. by F. G. Richmond. 2v 440;738p $15 Macmillan [ea 25s Allen, G.]
944 France—History 30-8618

Professor Guignebert, of the University of Paris, in this two-volume study sets forth those events and those active influences which, from century to century, have made the France of today, thus centering his attention upon the concrete idea of a French people. The first volume begins with a study of the original inhabitants of France and ends with the secularization of French politics in the sixteenth century. Volume II extends from the Renaissance to the great problems of the present in France.

"The outstanding characteristic of the book is its sound scholarship. At every point it displays the most careful and painstaking investigation. The high standard which its distinguished author had previously shown in his well-known books upon religious history is fully maintained in this work of more general scope. His judgments upon persons, groups, and movements show a talent for getting at the heart of the matter and a spirit of fair dealing which gives the book exceptional value as an interpretation of French history. To some readers his estimates of the Napoleonic régimes may seem unduly severe. One characteristic, the reviewer fears, will prevent the book from getting the large number of readers its merits deserve. Professor Guignebert's aptitude for description is better than his talent in narration. Somehow he fails to get across to his readers the story of French history." F. M. Anderson
+ — Am Hist R 36:102 O '30 800w
Booklist 26:389 Jl '30
Reviewed by Albert Guerard
Books p19 Je 22 '30 350w

"As a compendium Guignebert's manual is too bulky and too expensive, and as a history it is too obviously biased to please anyone but a student about to pass an examination in an anti-clerical lycée of present-day France." B. L. C.
— Cath World 132:124 O '30 450w

"Provided the reader is sufficiently acquainted with the general history of western Europe to be able to discount Professor Guignebert's anti-German prejudices, these are books he may read not only with profit but with pleasure. But we could not honestly recommend them to the novice. Until a better work appears, however, this one will continue to do for French history all that Green's has done for that of England and the British Isles." F. H. A.
Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 14 '30 350w

"A historical work by Professor Guignebert could not help being lively, stimulating and brilliant. This 'short' history of the French people is all that. It has, in addition, the virtue of clarity. Written by a scholar who is endowed both with a critical mind and a sense of honor, it compares favorably with other 'national' histories written in the hagiographical vein and composed in the spirit of a 'patriotic' tract." O. G. Guerlac
+ Current Hist 32:606 Je '30 550w

"English-speaking people have certainly been in need of a readable, reliable, up-to-date survey of the whole history of the French people, and Guignebert's work comes nearest to satisfying the need. But it is not wholly reliable. It is marred by a considerable number of factual errors and inaccuracies, and preeminently so by the author's biases, notable among which are his inveterate prejudice against Catholic Christianity and his sterling devotion to French patriotism of the Jacobin variety." C. J. H. Hayes
+ — Nation 130:709 Je 18 '30 600w

"The book has an interesting origin. The studies now translated into English were first prepared as lectures for American soldiers who attended the Sorbonne in the Spring following the armistice. The history is thus especially directed to an American audience and will be duly appreciated here as a work of polished French scholarship, offering a pleasant approach to an understanding of the peculiar qualities of French culture and French institutions."

+ N Y Times p11 S 14 '30 320w

"The treatise is incomparably great; for a history of the people of France, as opposed to the country itself, all roads should lead to it. . . The translation by Mr. F. G. Richmond is admirable. Any one who would like to know the story of the people of France and who reads English by choice or because of linguistic limitations, owes him a sterling sum." A. W. Porterfield

+ Outlook 154:508 Mr 26 '30 400w

Pratt p33 autumn '30

"This study is primarily for the layman. Much that Monsieur Guignebert has written will not be new to the scholar, but even the scholar may profit from a careful perusal of the History. It will afford him an aspect and a synthesis of which he, with his mass of facts so often poorly coördinated, may stand in need." J. M. S. Allison

+ Sat R of Lit 6:947 Ap 19 '30 800w

Spec 145:63 Jl 12 '30 200w

"A work of finely tempered scholarship and lucid interpretation. The author, a professor in the University of Paris, assembles his facts from the splendid library of specialized or period studies in which French scholarship is rich, and to which Prof Guignebert has himself contributed, and presents a well-proportioned, dispassionate and luminous narrative."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 23 '30 1100w

"It is an admirable piece of work, not marked, to judge from the translation, by literary charm, but always readable, stamped with the impress of a scholar and a thinker, and in certain passages absorbingly interesting. Yet it must be admitted that one feature which the writer expands with the most loving care makes stiff work for foreigners and probably even for his own countrymen. Nothing seems to interest him so much as a constitution, even a projected constitution, though it be shortly obliterated as completely as a child's sand-castle is by the next tide. We cannot help feeling as we plod through page after page of constitution-making during the period of the Revolution that we would willingly spare some of them for a few more upon the foreign policy of Choiseul or Vergennes."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p690 S 4 '30 1200w

World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 60w

"As he approaches the modern period his judgments are decidedly tinged by his good republican sentiments. His French Revolution should be balanced with that of M. Madelin if one wishes to obtain a complete picture of the period which M. Siegfried tells us laid the foundation of modern French political psychology. These are after all but minor criticisms. As a whole M. Guignebert's book fulfils its purpose extremely well. He shows clearly and as briefly as possible the forces which have formed the tradition that is the heritage of France today." Sidney Painter

+ — Yale R n s 19:844 summer '30 380w

2 GUITON, PAUL. Switzerland, western and southern. (Picture guides) 224p il $3.50 Hale [7s 6d Medici soc.]

914.94 Switzerland—Description and travel

Beautifully illustrated chapters on western and southern Switzerland, which supply some historical background for the localities visited. Contents: Geneva and its lake; The lower Valais; The valley of La Viège and Zermatt; The valley of Conches and the Great Passes; The Saint-Gothard and the Canton of Ticino; Gruyère, Fribourg and Neuchâtel.

"The rotogravure illustrations are adequate and excellent, and the text descriptive and entertaining." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 72:xvii N '30 100w

"The Medici Picture Guides have long been models of their kind. Their photogravure illustrations are particularly notable. This volume is furnished with the usual generous number of enchanting pictures and the text by Paul Guiton is no less distinctive."

+ Books p12 Ja 4 '31 100w

GUNNARSSON, GUNNAR. Seven days' darkness; tr. by Roberts Tapley. 294p $2 Macmillan

30-29253

A volcanic eruption near the Icelandic city of Reykjavik covers the country for seven days with an unearthly darkness. To make matters worse a bad epidemic of influenza breaks out and takes its toll. Against this dark background runs the story of the conflict between the idealist, Dr Grimur Ellidagrimur, and the brilliant cynic, Pall Einarsson, who is in love with Ellidagrimur's wife, and successfully seeks, thru her, to undermine the doctor's faith in humanity. Ellidagrimur, worn by fatigue, suspicion and torturing doubt finally loses his sanity, and is committed to an asylum.

"The tale is filled with true Norse symbolism. There are occasional passages of power and illumination, but the whole tends toward repetitiousness."

Bookm 72:viii D '30 100w

"This novel should win a place among the world's classics. It belongs there rightfully. . . Gunnar Gunnarsson was born and raised in Iceland. He seems to have taken to story-telling as naturally as a duckling takes to water. The saga lived in his blood, as for many generations it has lived in the blood of his fathers. The reading of this novel should convince you that its author has fallen heir to a priceless inheritance. . . Mr. Tapley has done well in the difficult work of translating. The meaning is nearly always clear; the narrative flows easily, though at times we are disturbed by harsh sounds. With the many delicate moods—this novel is rich in moods—he is less successful. Much of the poetic beauty of the original has been lost in the process of translation. In Mr. Tapley's defense let it be said that there is no more difficult task facing a translator than the transferring of mood from one language into the idiom of another. Only black art can do it satisfactorily." O. E. Rolvaag

+ Books p4 N 2 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 D 17 '30 550w

"There is no doubt that the author possesses a spiritual depth which 99 per cent of our authors lack. He is a man of real profundity. But he is not a novelist. The form of his novel is anything but organic. The story might have been poured into a mold. There is no dramatic progression. The author has not attempted to convey his story in aesthetic terms, but relies upon the horror of its events to make it effective. This does not succeed, of course, and as a result only the ideas are of value."

Nation 131:740 D 31 '30 350w

"The climax is tragic; it would be more so, and the novel as a whole more effective, if the translator had not written in a style vaguely reminiscent of Laura Jean Libbey."

New Repub 65:118 D 10 '30 80w

"The Christian and sentimental elements which go into the making of the drama are clear, I think, even in this outline. It is a good story, and the characters are interesting, if we leave out of account some of the more obvious heroics. The psychological effects of the doctor's self-distrust are real, and are portrayed sometimes with genius. The drama is

GUNNARSSON, GUNNAR—Continued
occasionally intense, though as a whole the book seems to me somewhat melodramatic." Clinton Simpson

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 480w

"Notwithstanding the difficulty of the material, and the air of naïveté with which it is presented, 'Seven Days' Darkness' is an undeniably compelling and effective novel. . . Gunnarsson has drawn a remarkable picture of an entire social group under the stress of public calamity, and he has constructed a remarkable symbol of human life—of man's struggle under the threat of darkness and disaster to preserve the spark of love and faith in another being necessary to his salvation."

+ N Y Times p8 N 16 '30 550w

"The tragedy could hardly be stronger, but it might well be swifter. The author has not Ibsen's ability to advance a plot and a discussion simultaneously, and his book suffers from the inclusion of a good deal of inconclusive argument about the survival of the soul that contributes nothing to the story, and seems to be caused only by the general northern love of abstractions. The story is further delayed by some humor which is by our standards terribly heavy-handed, such as one has encountered in other Scandinavian authors. These defects may well be due to differences in convention between our literature and the Scandinavian. In any case, the difficulties they place in the reader's way disappear by the middle of the book, and one is rewarded by a most unusual story, grim in conception, and compelling in execution." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:385 N 29 '30 600w

GUPPY, HENRY. Art of reading [foreword by 2 William Lyon Phelps; introd. by Charles F. D. Belden]. 67p $1 May & co, 755 Boylston st., Boston [1s Manchester univ. press]

028 Books and reading 30-25294

"Dr. Guppy has been for over thirty years head of the John Rylands Library in Manchester, England. The present essay is a transcript of a speech made in this country at the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the American Library Association. Our growing interest in adult education makes its publication timely."—Bookm

Bookm 72:xxii D '30 50w
Boston Transcript p4 N 15 '30 380w

GUTTMANN, BERNHARD. Ambition; auth. tr. by Ludwig Lewisohn. 323p $2.50 Harper 30-29902

German prize novel, which portrays the tireless ambition of the deformed son of the Great Elector of Prussia in his strife for a royal crown, and its effect on the Europe of his day.

Bookm 72:517 D '30 200w

"'Ambition' is unquestionably an excellent historical work; but one finishes it more conscious of the parti-colored society of the time than of the human beings in the story. Even the fluent translation cannot disguise the arid stretches of dull polemics and the patterned confusion of names. . . Bernhard Guttmann has conceived and written a thoroughly documented piece of historical research; he has not produced a living novel." W. J. Fadiman

— + Books p2 N 23 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p4 N 15 '30 380w

"Guttmann has an excellent satiric gift and he is besides a familiar of his period. His chief accomplishment is that he has been able to select from the age of Frederic William of Prussia, Louis XIV of France and William of Orange those beginning liberal threads in social, philosophic and political departure which have been woven into the modern spirit." Vincent McHugh

+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 500w

"It is not often that publishers bestow prizes with such justice, or that a young writer striking out along new lines receives such awards, or that he benefits by such pithy translation as Ludwig Lewisohn has given him. To those who care to watch the conception of an empire in the womb of time almost as if at first hand, to those Guttmann offers a pair of spectacles that are neither rose-tinted nor blue, but colored only by Prussian soil and the ambition of the Hohenzollern."

+ N Y Times p9 N 30 '30 600w

"The period and setting are well treated, and Guttmann shows himself an adept at keeping up a thread of narrative utilizing multitudinous historical and semi-historical personages, ranging from the Great Elector of Prussia and his family to the servants and innkeepers of Potsdam and Berlin. Yet it may be noted that unlike Feuchtwanger he has chosen no dominating figure around which to build up his story, and has consequently lost the principal means of holding the reader's attention."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:508 Ja 3 '31 250w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 380w

GUZMAN, MARTIN LUIS. Eagle & the serpent; tr. from the Spanish by Harriet de Onis. 360p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

972 Mexico—History—Revolution, 1910-. Villa, Francisco 30-25082

"Señor Guzmán held various offices under the administration of President Madero. After Huerta overthrew and killed Maderó, young Guzmán, who sympathized with 'the Revolution' rather than with the ambitions of the military chieftains who so commonly swallow up reform movements in Spanish America, had a chequered experience. He followed Carranza for a time, then joined Villa. . . He writes this book in Spain, looking back with almost an outsider's detachment on the astonishing mixture of idealism, brutality, and daily melodrama which he lived through during the years when the rest of the world was at war in Europe."—Sat R of Lit

"It is a loose autobiographical piece of reporting, in which are set some imperishable pictures of Mexico itself and some perfect short stories—'stories,' not artfully constructed, but stories in the sense that every device of art has somehow been bettered by a day's or an hour's news. . . What I like is the curious combination of sensual recreation of experience and, obbligato, the intellectual accent of the artist, reporter, politician and revolutionist by whose grace the record is made. . . Nothing is overwritten, there is a translucence in the style, something as fine and quiet as Tchekov in the plays, which when applied to historical material, by an eye witness, brings this book of memoirs into the first rank." Ernestine Evans

+ Books p2 S 21 '30 500w

"A Mexican Iliad, with Pancho Villa as its Achilles, is this memorable account of certain phases of the Mexican Revolution by a civilian revolutionist who had active part in it and knew its leaders with a sometimes painful intimacy. . . And Guzman, reporting by means of carefully selected and vividly revealing incident rather than by method of historic summary and analysis, is a very capable Homer, a modern Homer who has read and traveled widely and philosophized much. In short, we have here the passionate drama, the brilliant spectacle of the revolution, not its scholarly history." M. L. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 450w

"Guzmán's style has the perfect spontaneity of good writing. His words recreate a scene so effortlessly that no words seem to stand between the reader and the actual event itself. . . The fine timbre and balance of the words as we see them in English draw attention to the excellence of the translation that Harriet de Onis has achieved."

+ N Y Times p7 N 9 '30 550w

"Martin Luís Guzmán's reminiscences of the Mexican Revolution, in 'The Eagle and the Serpent,' are not history in the formal sense and yet they may well give the foreign reader more than formal history usually does of the authentic 'feel' of the time. . . One of the definitely valuable things about the narrative is the picture it gives of the utterly haphazard nature of much of the horror of a violent revolution—the way in which innumerable lives hang on the mere toss-up of a dictator's passing mood, and all the acts done, not because of any policy or plan, but merely because some dull, blundering ignoramus had to do something and didn't know what to do next." Arthur Ruhl

+ Sat R of Lit 7:284 N 1 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p927 N 13 '30 900w

GWYNN, DENIS ROLLESTON. Daniel O'Connell, the Irish liberator. 288p il $5 Stokes [18s Hutchinson]

B or 92 O'Connell, Daniel. Ireland—Politics and government [30-2519]

This biography of the great Irish politician and demagogue marks the centenary of the Catholic Emancipation act, which was O'Connell's personal achievement. Mr Gwynn, whose admiration for his subject amounts to hero-worship, emphasizes those qualities in O'Connell which made him one of the world's greatest popular leaders.

Booklist 27:61 O '30

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 1650w

Cath World 131:761 S '30 450w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p11 Je 22 '30 1950w

Pratt p37 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 Je '30 80w

St Louis 28:52 F '30

"There has been no satisfactory biography of O'Connell. He has been much written about and has had whole books to himself but they have all been marked by either undue bias (the Protestant or the Roman Catholic bias) or by an insufficiency of information. Mr. Denis Gwynn's book is much the best yet written."

+ Spec 143:374 S 21 '29 850w

"Mr. Gwynn has the distinction of having produced what is perhaps the most humanly interesting of the accounts of O'Connell and his work called forth by the centenary of Catholic Emancipation."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p777 O 10 '29 1400w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Captain Scott. (Golden hind ser.) 240p il $4 Harper [12s 6d Lane]

B or 92 Scott, Robert Falcon. Antarctic regions 30-6429

Robert Falcon Scott's antarctic explorations, the story of which has been told in his diary, here form the biographical background for an interpretation of Captain Scott the man. Mr Gwynn, thru the medium of the explorer's hitherto unpublished letters to his wife, Lady Scott, is able to present the real character—the sensitive, emotional nature that lay behind a courageous and noble spirit.

Booklist 26:310 My '30

"It is fully documented and scientifically valuable."

+ Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 100w

Reviewed by C. L. Skinner

Books p4 Ap 6 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 1000w

"One of the merits of this book is that it is free from the detailed irrelevancies that clutter many would-be biographies. Neither does the author indulge in vivisection, displaying his subject's separate members to our horrified gaze! Rather do we feel the single impact of a great personality upon ours. . . One closes the book feeling that 'This was a man!' " G. C. Ervin

+ Christian Century 47:1220 O 8 '30 350w

"Mr. Gwynn's life is generously and nobly conceived." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 600w

Reviewed by Francis Birrell

Nation and Ath 47:52 Ap 12 '30 200w

"Gives us a picture of an ideal, an unblemished hero. The addition of a few faults in the character of the man would have given us something far greater—a human being. Gwynn's book makes one itch to plunge into some such unpublished material as Oates's diary, to see if this god of his did not, after all, possess some of the so-called baser qualities of the human race." Earl Hanson

+ — N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 650w

Reviewed by W. B. Hayward

N Y Times p10 Ap 6 '30 1450w

"Mr. Gwynn, though a friendly biographer, has spared no pains to make his book thorough and accurate. In the main he has been successful in this, though he does make an occasional error." Bellamy Partridge

+ — N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30

Pratt p36 autumn '30

"The brilliant Antarctic record of Robert Falcon Scott has already been fully described in his own account of the voyage of the Discovery and his last journals. But there is still room for such an admirably written and sympathetic sketch of his fine, inspiring career as has now been written by Mr. Stephen Gwynn—a master in this form of literary art. . . Mr. Gwynn adds a good deal to our knowledge of Scott's personal life—especially of his naval career before he was able to devote himself to the quest of the South Pole. He has been able to draw largely for this purpose on many of Scott's unpublished letters."

+ Sat R 148:682 D 7 '29 250w

"An excellent biography of Captain Scott. The selections made from Captain Scott's own letters, some of them hitherto unpublished, has been admirably done, and the whole book has been greatly helped by the author's restraint. The latter would be no easy matter to many writers."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:829 Mr 15 '30 300w

"There are new letters here, and there is new material to enable us to judge how Scott struggled against certain traits in his character, and overcame them. By virtue of his tactful sympathy and his clear and buoyant narrative style, Mr. Gwynn has written a book worthy of Scott and his imperishable record of adventure."

+ Spec 143:821 N 30 '29 700w

"Mr. Gwynn with the help of the letters put at his disposal by Lady Scott, now published for the first time, and by his own insight and his aptitude for significant quotation now presents a study not only of the man of action but of the dreamer from whose dreams great actions sprang. That, we take it, was Mr. Gwynn's purpose: to let us see the inner heart of the man, the fountain from which flowed noble deeds. He has accomplished it in an intensely moving book which displays Scott as a man who before he could grapple with material circumstance had first to grapple with himself."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1015 D 5 '29 650w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Life of Sir Walter Scott. 384p $3.50 Little [15s Butterworth, T.]

B or 92 Scott, Sir Walter, bart. [30-15328]

Lockhart's Life and Scott's own diary furnished most of the material for this new biography which contains some critical chapters on Scott's novels.

Booklist 27:101 N '30

"Mr. Gwynn's biography is simple and straightforward, like the subject. It offers a great deal of sensible criticism of poems and novels which the lapse of a century and the change of taste have made necessary. It springs from an affection evidently lifelong, and warms our hearts by its sudden departures from sober criticism to delighted reminiscence among characters in the Waverley novels as real and companionable as Sir Walter's friends. Best of all, it sends one straight to the Waverley novels and to Lockhart." H. F. Whicher

GWYNN, S. L.—Continued
+ Books p2 Ag 10 '30 1200w

"Mr. Gwynn has a discerning and an interpretive eye for the personal touches in novels and poems alike. He has the skill, too, to evoke the atmosphere of that Border country which Scott knew and loved so well, and which conditioned all the best of his art."
+ Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 19 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

"Mr. Stephen Gwynn gives us the best of Lockhart and from Scott's own Journal, and it says much for his practised charm and clarity that he rarely shows fatigue in recounting what is familiar." Austin Clarke
+ New Statesman 34:sup xviii Mr 15 '30 1250w

"Gwynn's 'Life' is an admirably dignified piece of writing. Both as the study of a Scotchman and as a model of compressed biography Stephen Gwynn's is an outstanding work."
+ N Y Times p5 Jl 20 '30 1250w

Pratt p36 autumn '30

St Louis 28:273 N '30

Reviewed by T. E. Welby
Sat R 149:268 Mr 1 '30 1200w

"I question whether the author did not make a mistake in dwelling mainly on Scott's life and personality, in retouching the noble pictures that Lockhart had already painted so admirably. Yet there is a good deal to praise in Mr. Gwynn's book. It condenses into one moderate sized volume the five big tomes of Lockhart, a godsend even to some of the literary in this hag ridden, hurrying age. It states clearly some matters which were known to Lockhart, but which, for diplomatic reasons, he passed over with veiled allusions. Its new material, though small in amount, is excellent. The style is not quite so colorful as it might be in presenting a life at once so famous, so upright, and so picturesque; but it is a good, perspicuous, readable style. In the main the book stands for honest and intelligent scholarship." F. E. Pierce
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:51 Ag 16 '30 700w

Spec 144:392 Mr 8 '30 950w

"No old fellow who already loves Scott but will love him a little better and enjoy him a little more deeply for reading this biography of him by Mr. Gwynn—a strong, straightforward work on the old-fashioned lines, in which the biographer's aim is to unfold the subject, rather than to show what new pattern he can make of it. . . Mr. Gwynn has the reverence, the humour and the fidelity which the task requires."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p161 F 27 '30 2050w

H

HACKENBURG, FREDERICK L. Solitary parade. 339p $3 Thistle press, 151 5th av., N.Y.

B or 92 New York (state)—Politics and government 29-19004

"The autobiography of a Central-European emigrant who came to this country twenty-five years ago, a poor and friendless boy of sixteen, and rose to prominence in the New York State Democratic Party. Largely self-educated, the author qualified for the bar, but soon after so favorably impressed his fitness for public office upon Tammany leaders that in 1920 he was nominated candidate for the state legislature from the fourteenth New York Assembly District. Following his election he filled that office with distinction for seven successive years, a leader of the minority at Albany, the sponsor of many progressive measures for improved regulation of divorce, labor, censorship laws, a redoubtable die-hard who became known as the champion of lost causes on Capitol Hill."—Sat R of Lit

"Mr. Hackenburg has a simple, impartial style, and endeavors to tell of his experiences and observations as fairly as possible. . . As a searching resume of New York politics the book is authentic and unique." J. C. G.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 8 '30 360w

"The chief interest of his book lies in his very frank account of his political activities, his work in connection with the Tammany organization and his comments on the people with whom he was associated. His graphic story of how a man, ambitious to become a district leader, hoists himself up to that czarlike throne and then makes it impregnable could hardly be exceeded in realism."
+ N Y Times p26 My 25 '30 500w

"He presents a candid, condemnatory picture of state and city government methods and representatives, the truth of which, though disturbing and unpalatable, may not be easily refuted."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:298 O 19 '29 230w

HACKH, INGO WALDEMAR DAGOBERT. Chemical dictionary. 790p il $10 Blakiston [42s Churchill]

540.3 Chemistry—Dictionaries 29-24910

"Containing the words generally used in chemistry and many of the terms used in the related sciences of physics, astrophysics, mineralogy, pharmacy, and biology, with their pronunciation based on recent chemical literature." —Subtitle

"This volume, comprising some 30,000 terms, is a serious attempt to provide a moderately comprehensive pronouncing dictionary of chemical terms, and is the first such available in English for more than a century. It is obviously intended to be definitive rather than encyclopedic. The style is uninvolved, the selection of terms on the whole good and the printing and proof reading are satisfactory. . . In spite of faults it is vastly superior to any other chemical dictionary in English and becomes at once a necessary part of the working library of every active chemist." W. A. Boughton
+ — Am Chem Soc J 52:1726 Ap '30 800w

"As a general precept (and incidentally a necessity) the author has committed himself to the barest brevity throughout. His definitions include only a descriptive sentence or so, and as much of formula as will illustrate it. The biographic items also serve for the merest identification. But this laconic style is the prime virtue of the book. For it enables Mr. Hackh to expand where there is a real call for clarification, while in the other instances he is aware that beyond identification a dictionary can do very little without becoming encyclopedic. Coverage is his aim, rather than exhaustiveness; and his only departure from it is the inclusion of numerous biographic portraits, justified by their appearance, and miscellaneous cuts." Richard Koch
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:744 D '29 220w

"The author has produced a book which represents many laborious hours of searching the literature and many more in attempting to restate and re-define in simple modern terms the phenomena of science. The work will prove of invaluable assistance to many students and scientific workers as a source of definitions of many obscure terms and many of the modern terms which have come into more or less general use without having been clearly defined, or, if defined, in a place not easily located." C. J. West
+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:99 Ja '30 520w

"The production of a one-volume chemical dictionary is a great achievement, and Prof. Hackh has rendered an important service to chemists and chemistry. The volume is not too bulky to be handled conveniently and, for the most part, the information given is reasonably accurate and, in many cases, surprisingly detailed. It is almost a super-dictionary, the author being rarely content to give a mere definition or description." C. S. Gibson
+ Nature 125:593 Ap 19 '30 960w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:5 Ja '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30
Pratt p16 spring '30
St Louis 28:209 S '30

HADDON, KATHLEEN (MRS O. H. T. RISHBETH). Artists in string; string figures, their regional distribution and social significance; with a foreword by J. L. Myres. 174p il $2.20 Dutton [6s Methuen]

394.3 String figures. Cat's cradle

The author deals with string figures, their social significance, and the environment and culture of the "artists in string" who make them. The semi-primitive peoples studied are: the Alaskan Eskimo; the Navaho Indians; the Kiwai Papuans; and the natives of the Cape York peninsula and the Gold Coast.

"Like most enthusiasts, Mrs. Rishbeth, in spite of a strong endowment of native caution, is perhaps inclined to infer too much from her data; but this debatable point apart, her book is an attractive guide to remote but fascinating territory." J. M.
+ — Nation and Ath 48:114 O 18 '30 250w

"Mrs. Rishbeth has long been known as a zealous collector and student of the string games known popularly as 'cat's cradle'. In this volume she justifies a study which, to the Philistine, may seem puerile, by indicating its bearing upon the problems of cultural anthropology, showing on one side that these string games, especially in their more complicated forms, represent an expression of a creative or artistic impulse, and, on the other, give the student certain quite specific pieces of information about the environment and social facts in the life of the people among whom they are found."
+ Nature 125:888 Je 14 '30 520w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30
St Louis 28:262 N '30
Sat R 149:668 My 24 '30 230w

"This author has loved and studied her subject well; she has investigated as an ethnologist and geographer and has presented her material against that background, bringing out new significances in the old idea of string-figure pastimes. Years of travel and scientific study have evidently gone into this book, as well as something else almost as difficult, the solution of the problem of fruitful contacts with shy or unfriendly natives. . . The figure diagrams are clear and the whole is in graphic form."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:111 S 6 '30 230w

"Mrs Rishbeth makes out a good case for the study of these figures, which, like children's games throughout the world, are the last vestiges of old and dying customs and traditions, rapidly being obliterated by civilization. The matter needs no recommendation to the anthropologist. The general reader, also, who is attracted by an out-of-the-way subject, which has an appeal as a fascinating pastime, may be recommended to try string figures."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p384 My 8 '30 600w

HADER, BERTA (MRS ELMER HADER), and HADER, ELMER. Under the pig-nut tree. 65p il $1.25 (3s 6d) Knopf

30-13446

"A colorful little book which will appeal to children from four to seven. Though planned for use particularly in kindergarten and primary grades, and libraries, it should be a welcome addition to the home nursery shelf. It tells of the springtime adventures of a little elf who is taken for a ride on a grasshopper's back, and is the first of a series of four nature books, the others to deal with similar experiences in summer, fall and winter."—Springfield Republican

Booklist 27:108 N '30

"It is a pleasure to find a story for little children (4 to 7) which has so much imagination, so much zest in the telling and such real delight in out-of-doors. . . The book is simple enough to be a welcome addition to the shelf of easy books for beginners in reading. The illustrations have charm and humor." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 170w
Outlook 155:348 Jl 2 '30 30w
St Louis 28:248 O '30

"Another book of comfortable, readable size with very spirited pictures is the product of those clever young artists, Berta and Elmer Hader. . . We thought the text could have been written with considerably more charm and distinction, but it is an engaging little book all the same." Rachel Field
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 80w

HAECKEL, ERNST HEINRICH PHILIPP AUGUST. Love letters; written between 1898 and 1903; arr. from the correspondence by Johannes Werner; tr. from the German by Ida Zeitlin. 298p $3 Harper

B or 92 30-10068

These letters reveal the romance that came into the life of the renowned biologist when at sixty-four he found himself eagerly corresponding with a young woman less than half his age who had written him in appreciation of his books. Their correspondence, begun on a strictly formal and intellectual basis, increased in ardor, as their growing love for each other came to fill their lives. Haeckel, with an ailing wife and daughter, was not free to marry and the lovers were obliged to content themselves with letters and an occasional meeting. The correspondence continued for five years, when it was ended by the sudden and tragic death of Franziska von Altenhausen.

Booklist 27:62 O '30

"The letters are a very beautiful revelation of two characters whose story as told by themselves suggests somehow an old and fine German fairy-tale." Norah Meade
+ Bookm 71:471 Jl '30 350w

"The unprejudiced reader will honor the memory of a pair of lovers whose letters, like those of Robert and Elizabeth Browning, of Goethe and Charlotte von Stein, of Abelard and Heloise, will take their place among the classics of epistolary literature." Eric Strong
+ Books p25 Ap 20 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p4 My 31 '30 1260w

"There are few really fine letters in this collection and almost none which one would care to preserve singly. But together they tell a story whose curious fascination has seldom been equalled in a similar record. The letters have a charm and reality which no imaginary correspondence could possibly have achieved, and they are presented with a completeness altogether rare in an actual correspondence." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 650w

Reviewed by Rosalind Ivan
N Y Times p4 My 25 '30 680w
St Louis 28:218 S '30

"Perhaps one reason why the book is so intensely moving is because it leaves so much untold. Not being a story, but the actual letters that passed between two brave and beautiful souls destined for sorrow, the thing stirs the imagination and sets the mind wondering about many of the eternal riddles of the universe."
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 600w

HAECKEL, E. H. P. A.—Continued

"The pathos of the last few letters which are marked by passionate emotion and concern on his side and by tenderness and unfailing enthusiasm on hers, could scarcely be sharper. The entire correspondence, one of the most memorable of its kind, is a remarkable revelation of the conflict of love and duty in a sterner and more austere generation than our own."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p714 S 11 '30 1050w

HAGEDORN, HERMANN. Book of courage. 408p il $2.50 Winston

920 Heroes 29-27812

Mr Hagedorn's heroes are the following: Socrates; Moses; Hannibal; Saul of Tarsus; Francis of Assisi; Joan of Arc; Savonarola; Martin Luther; Elizabeth of England; Francis Drake; George Washington; Daniel Boone; Andrew Jackson; Abraham Lincoln; Robert E. Lee; Clara Barton; Garibaldi; David Livingstone; "Chinese" Gordon; Father Damien; Theodore Roosevelt; Robert E. Peary; Wilbur and Orville Wright; Dr Grenfell; Catherine Breshkovsky; Edith Cavell; Mahatma Gandhi; Lawrence of Arabia; Felix von Luckner; Lindbergh.

Booklist 26:360 Je '30

Christian Century 47:818 Je 25 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

"The first hero is Socrates. Would any child reading this account feel anything of the beauty of the life and death of Socrates? The present tense is used most of the time, with a resulting effect of sprightliness that is almost unbearable. Reading this book makes one recall thankfully the dignity and restraint of Andrew Lang's 'Red Book of Heroes.'" A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 200w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 D 19 '29 220w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Belshazzar. 306p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson] 30-33610

This posthumous romance is the story of Ramosé, an illegitimate son of Pharaoh Uah-ab-Ra, and his wanderings, which finally led him to Babylon and the court of Belshazzar. The dénouement of the story took place at the famous feast at which appeared the handwriting on the wall.

Books p10 D 28 '30 180w

"The tale is entertaining, full of adventure, and handled in a workmanlike manner. It is perhaps a little too workmanlike, rather suggesting the competent craftsman turning out something in which he himself is not especially interested."

+ — N Y Times p20 N 9 '30 280w

"It cannot be claimed for the story that it is one of the author's best. Its movement is slow and uncertain."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 2 '30 450w

HAHN, EMILY. Seductio ad absurdum; the principles & practices of seduction; a beginner's handbook. 198p $2 Brewer

817 Humor 30-10481

Amusing rules and regulations are here laid down for the scientific art, if such it may be called, of seduction.

"It is not exactly exciting, and it lacks even the flavor of conversations one might overhear on a Coney Island boat. And on a Coney Island boat you would at least be getting the stuff first-hand and not warmed over."

— Books p14 Je 22 '30 450w

Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Je 28 '30 80w

"Miss Hahn's method is by no means perfect, but it has points. Her first pages reveal her bent, but some of the episodes that follow are more obvious than subtle." Harry Hansen

— + N Y World p14 Ap 4 '30 380w

HAIDER, CARMEN. Capital and labor under fascism. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 296p $4.50 Columbia univ. press [18s King]

331.81945 Italy—Fascist movement. Labor and laboring classes—Italy. Industry and state—Italy 30-9010

A study of the Fascist movement and its leaders, of the development of Fascist syndicates and associations, and a survey of labor problems and other factors in Italy's current economic situation.

"Dr. Haider has selected a very revealing aspect of Fascist activity and has produced a valuable study, clearly, carefully, and thoughtfully presented." E. P. Herring

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:760 Ag '30 480w

"Miss Haider's book is perhaps the first serious attempt to appraise the functioning of the new Italian system. Despite the fact that she has tilled virgin soil, she has produced an extremely instructive work which will answer many of the questions that political scientists have raised concerning the feasibility of the corporate state." S. B. Clough

+ Ann Am Acad 149:205 My '30 240w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 4 '30 650w

"An excellent monograph, based upon documentary material, personal observation and consultation with adherents and opponents of the régime."

+ Foreign Affairs 8:674 Jl '30 20w

Reviewed by Gardner Harding

N Y Times p9 S 28 '30 1200w

Pratt p10 autumn '30

"A valuable if prosaic study of that secondary adjunct of the Fascist system—syndicalism. Miss Haider is a fair-minded author and indicates drawbacks as well as advantages. Her sketch of syndicalist origins is enlightening."

R of Rs 81:14 Je '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p320 Ap 10 '30 400w

World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 50w

HAIG, ROBERT MURRAY, and others. Public finances of post-war France. (Social and economic studies of post-war France) 462p $5.50 Columbia univ. press [27s 6d Oxford]

336.44 Finance—France. Debts, Public—France. Taxation—France 30-3753

A study of the public finances of France in the period since the war. The work was accomplished with great difficulty owing to the unreliability of French statistics and the peculiarities of "an accounting system which the French experts themselves are not always able to explain." The volume is divided into three parts: the development of French financial policy since the war; the public debt of France; and taxation and expenditure. There is a bibliography and an index.

"The workmanship is of the first quality. Prepared in France, with access to government officials and documents and with obviously competent collaborators, assistants and translators it is the most accurate, up-to-date, and comprehensive survey of French debt-questions and taxation-questions now available. A certain heroic quality pervades the book. Through the long struggle with inaccuracies, inconsistencies and secrecies in the French accounts, the author kept his perspective and his friendliness . . . The study is furnished with tables, charts, footnotes and bibliographies, and at the same time much of the account is delightfully readable. Professor Haig has given a happy illustration of the new doctrine that to be sound and discriminating it is not necessary to be dull." Alzada Comstock

+ Am Econ R 20:340 Je '30 750w

Reviewed by William MacDonald

Am Hist R 35:874 Jl '30 450w

Reviewed by E. M. Patterson

Ann Am Acad 150:296 Jl '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Ap 3 '30 200w

HAIGHT, GORDON SHERMAN. Mrs. Sigourney, the sweet singer of Hartford. 201p il $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]

B or 92 Sigourney, Mrs Lydia Howard (Huntley) 30-31243

In his preface to this biography of the prolific, sentimental poetess once known as the sweet singer of Hartford, Mr Haight records how he searched diligently thru her forty-odd fat volumes of moral verse for something that might justify the lady's own claim to "eternal fame" —but found nothing. He has, nevertheless, discovered an ironically amusing, if not important, personality in Lydia Sigourney, and has traced the interesting course of her career and her social and literary pursuits.

"There is an irresistibly comic element in Lydia Sigourney's career, which Mr. Haight unobtrusively permits her reader to enjoy to the full. He never sins by emphasis or overstatement against the canons of scholarship or good taste. But it is hard to see how, dealing fairly with his material, he could have drawn a better or more delightful portrait of a woman who, lacking an interpreter of Mr. Haight's talent, must have been one of the dullest figures in American literary history." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:181 O '30 280w

"Mr. Haight, in delving into the domestic and literary remains of the most curious literary paradox of the first half of the last century, is a disappointed biographer, yet his achievement in letters is far from a disappointment, although he is exasperatingly ironical. . . He has vitalized her sentimental and commonplace writings with touches which make them interesting, if not important, to the sophisticated reader of today." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p14 D 21 '30 900w

"Mr. Haight's life and criticism of Mrs. Sigourney is admirably done. He uses the technique of scholarship and research even on this frail subject, but it does not prevent him from being amusing. If the plentiful quotations from her works deprive the reader of all desire to go farther in search of them, there are not too many to be wearisome."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1035 D 4 '30 750w

HAKE, GUY DONNE GORDON, and BUTTON, EUSTACE HARRY. Architectural drawing; a practical handbook for students and others. 96p il $3.75 Scribner [10s 6d Batsford]

744 Architectural drawing [30-26560]

An elementary course in draughtsmanship for the beginning architect. Fully illustrated.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 25 '30 120w

St Louis 28:139 My '30

"At a first glance rather elementary, this turns out to be a useful guide to the practice of drawing as it concerns the architect. Nothing in this book is left to chance; the 'hints for comfort in working' are well worth attention, and there is an excellent chapter on lettering—in which the modifying effects of tools and materials are duly noted. The illustrations are taken from good models."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p103 F 6 '30 130w

HALDANE, JOHN SCOTT. Sciences and philosophy. (Gifford lectures. Univ. of Glasgow, 1927-1928) 330p $3.75 Doubleday, Doran [15s Hodder]

104 Science—Philosophy [29-17177]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:144 Ja '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '30

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 130:127 Ja 29 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Lewis Mumford

New Repub 62:331 My 7 '30 1000w

"'The Sciences and Philosophy' must be credited with originality for its attempt to make modern biology instead of physics and astronomy fundamental to any philosophic view of the universe and for its extension, on a scientific basis, of life processes from the individual organism to include the total unity of the environment. Yet taken as a whole it shows serious flaws. The reviewer believes that its final value lies chiefly in the concreteness of its biological approach, in its illustrative material, and in its many stimulating passages." Axton Clark

+ — N Y Times p10 Ja 26 '30 1450w

Pratt p7 spring '30

St Louis 28:63 Mr '30

Reviewed by F. S. C. Northup

Sat R of Lit 6:621 Ja 4 '30 650w

"Interesting and lucid statement by a scientist of the limitations of a mechanistic conception of the world order."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 5 '29 700w

HALDEMAN-JULIUS, EMANUEL. Big American parade. 424p $3 Stratford

917.3 United States—Civilization. United States—Social conditions. National characteristics, American 29-18695

All aspects of contemporary American life and thought are treated by the author in this sociological and psychological survey. America's background, materialistic program, morals, family life, politics, religion, journalism, education and opportunities are optimistically discussed.

Bookm 70:x Ja '30 100w

"There is no muckraking here, nor attempt to criticize ruthlessly. If anything, the book is constructive." A. S. R.

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 2 '29 600w

Nation 130:200 F 12 '30 200w

HALEVY, ELIE. World crisis of 1914-1918; an interpretation. (Rhodes memorial lectures, 1929) 57p $2 (5s) Oxford

940.3 European war, 1914-1918 [30-16027]

"The book by the distinguished French historian contains the three Rhodes Memorial Lectures delivered by him in 1929. It is an interesting analysis of the forces which made on the one hand for revolution and on the other for war, and which thus produced the crisis of the years 1914 to 1918."—Nation and Ath

Boston Transcript p4 My 31 '30 550w

Foreign Affairs 8:671 Jl '30 30w

Nation and Ath 46:643 F 8 '30 70w

"Mr. Halevy's book has a specious convincingness, but is fundamentally weak just because he maintains that 'the basis of history is idealistic, not materialistic; and idealism makes revolutions and wars.'" C. H. Grattan

— N Y World p10m Ap 6 '30 750w

Pratt p32 summer '30

"When the sun of historical truth comes to shine upon future generations after the deluge of diplomatic documents and learned treatises as to the origins of the War, its brightest rays, perhaps, will be reserved for this little gem of perception and analysis, which he who runs may read."

+ Spec 144:204 F 8 '30 350w

HALEVY, ELIE—Continued
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p201 Mr 13 '30 950w

HALIDAH ADIB, khānum (HALIDE EDIB). Turkey faces west; a Turkish view of recent changes and their origin; with a preface by Edward Mead Earle. 273p il $3 Yale univ. press [14s Oxford]

949.6 Turkey—History 30-26898

A history and defense of the modern Turkey by the well-known Turkish woman journalist, teacher and social worker.

"Mme. Edib is singularly well qualified to act as interpreter between the new Turkey ana the American world. She presents in a more interpretative way her matured analysis of what has been happening in Turkey, not without illuminating observations upon the progress of ideas elsewhere in the world." A. H. Lybyer
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:1035 N '30 480w
Booklist 27:99 N '30

"This book of Halide Edib, though it cannot undo the past, should do much to assist those who desire to know more about the Turkey of today, and help toward a more generous comprehension of a past which has been befogged by religious passions and well meaning but frequently misguided and prejudiced historians. It is, of course, natural and admirably human that Halide Edib should give in her book a picture favorable to her own people, but the story is very fairly stated." M. L. Bristol
+ Books p1 Ag 24 '30 1000w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

Reviewed by A. H. Lybyer
Current Hist 33:xiv N '30 420w
Foreign Affairs 9:173 O '30 280w

"Madame Halidé Edib is a persuasive champion of her people. She has a head as well as a heart, and she knows how to be critical. But since her task is to defend the Turks against many hoary and false opinions, she naturally reserves the most of her criticism for their enemies and traducers. No fair-minded reader of these pages will deny that Madame Halidé Edib has stripped off a great deal of the whitewash with which the Christian West has so smugly covered itself. And she has done it without malice or vituperation, by a recital of indisputable facts and the new light she throws on the qualities and the aspirations of her own people. She makes some mistakes in detail, and the 'real Turk' may not perhaps be quite so fine a fellow as she suggests. But he is a better fellow than millions of us have chosen to believe."
+ New Statesman 35:709 S 13 '30 1250w
N Y Times p2 D 14 '30 420w
St Louis 28:274 N '30

"The most vital section of the book is the one which deals with the new republic. Although she does not hesitate to criticize the present régime, Halidé Hanum is moderate and impersonal in tone and writes on the whole with fairness and discrimination of what has been accomplished during the last decade. But in dealing with a period of evolution that is still far from complete one is liable to make judgments which, in the light of unforeseen events, may need revision." Nermine Mouvafac
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:263 O 25 '30 1250w

Reviewed by F. Yeats-Brown
Spec 145:522 O 18 '30 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p691 S 4 '30 1750w

"Five years of exile in comparative isolation, but filled with writing amid stimulating environments, have developed her gifts of expression and powers of discernment in a degree which can only be realized by one passing through her 'Memoirs' and 'The Turkish Ordeal' to this less expository but more interpretative climax. She has read and pondered adequately the attempts of others, as Toynbee, Cahun, George Young, Keyserling, and Spengler, to explain the trends of events in the Near East and indeed in the whole world: but the synthesis is her own, and her presentation of well-known ideas in new lights and of original interpretations is remarkably attractive. Of particular value are her brief clear pictures of the mentalities of Turks, Arabs, and Persians, of Greeks and Armenians, of Catholics and Protestants, and of Russia, America, and Europe." A. H. Lybyer
+ Yale R n s 20:195 autumn '30 600w

HALIFAX, CHARLES LINDLEY WOOD, 2d viscount. Conversations at Malines, 1921-1925; original documents. 308p $1.40 Morehouse [3s 6d P. Allan]

280 Christian union

These documents, in French and in English, represent the proceedings of the meetings at Malines, under the presidency of Cardinal Mercier, in the cause of the reunion of Christendom.

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill
Spec 144:396 Mr 8 '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p147 F 20 '30 150w

HALIFAX, CHARLES LINDLEY WOOD, 2d viscount, ed. Good estate of the Catholic church. 67p 80c (1s 6d) Longmans

280 Christian union

In these brief essays on the present relationship between the Church of England and the Church of Rome, Lord Halifax pleads for a return to "Catholic principles" and reunion with Rome.

Reviewed by J. C. Hardwick
Sat R 150:178 Ag 9 '30 450w
Times [London] Lit Sup p820 O 16 '30 200w

HALL, ALBERT NEELY. Big book of boys' hobbies; new things to make and new things to do. (Handicraft bks.) 467p il $2.50 Lothrop

680 Handicraft 29-30174

"Based on the theory that a boy's hobbies will develop his creative ability, this book contains a large variety of ideas of interest to him, grouped into programs for spring, summer, autumn and winter." (St Louis) "Some of the hobbies are an aeronautics scrap book, a cracker box aquarium, a shooting gallery, a dancing puppet, and a quiz clock. Includes new material and old material modernized." (Cleveland Open Shelf)

Booklist 26:286 Ap '30

"The idea of dividing the work into Spring, Summer, Fall and Winter activity seems a good one and should tend to popularize the book. None of the models is experimental. They have all been tried in practice by the author, and in scores of cases they are the result of magazine and newspaper articles in which tests have been made by groups of boys."
Boston Transcript p5 F 1 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30
St Louis 28:248 O '30

HALL, SIR ALFRED DANIEL. Book of the tulip. 224p il $5 Stokes

635.944 Tulips [29-17011]

A monograph on the tulip, for both amateur and scientific gardeners, which aims to "bring together the main facts that are known about the tulip, from the point of view of the gardener or lover of flowers who desires to learn something about the scientific as well as the cultural aspects of the flower." Includes a brief history of the tulip, with chapters on species and cultivation. There is a short bibliography, index of species, index of varieties and a general index. Twenty-four illustrations in color and in black and white.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p41 Mr '30

"An exceptionally good monograph which is of the greatest interest to all horticulturists and gardeners."

+ Nation and Ath 45:514 Jl 13 '29 100w

"He writes with all the knowledge of the expert, and yet with a clearness and simplicity that will be appreciated by the lay person. There are twelve admirably coloured plates."

+ New Statesman 33:192 My 18 '29 160w

"Although this is an English book the information it contains is so varied and comprehensive that American lovers and growers of the tulip will find it valuable and interesting."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 200w

St Louis 28:101 Ap '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p374 My 9 '29 1050w

HALL, BARRINGTON. Modern conversation. 278p $2 Brewer

374.1 Conversation 31-26086

A conversational discussion of the art of conversation, which takes up such questions as: What is your conversational type? Are you a good liar? Do you know the technique of flattery? Are your phrases fashionable? Do you know when to squelch? Do you know how to tell a story? Can you tame lions?

Bookm 72:xxii D '30 80w

Books p39 D 7 '30 150w

"It's amusingly written, and it tells you how to use your daily 70,000 to the best advantage: how to tell a story, to squelch, to enter or leave a room, to listen, to flatter, to shock, and so on. There are even tests by which you can determine your conversational type." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:430 N 12 '30 280w

HALL, FRANCIS JOSEPH. Christian reunion in ² ecumenical light. 150p $1.40 Macmillan [3s 6d S.P.C.K.]

280 Christian union 30-13897

"A presentation of the problem of union from the Anglo-Catholic point of view."—Christian Century

Christian Century 47:599 My 7 '30 100w

"As an exposition of Anglican views about the church with reference to union, this volume is rewarding reading." G. S. Banks

+ Christian Century 47:1217 O 8 '30 650w

"This book, with its Foreword by Bishop William T. Manning, of New York, and by an author who was a 'member of the World Conference Commission of the American Episcopal Church, and co-opted delegate to the Lausanne Conference of 1927,' may be taken as the authoritative and official expression of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America upon questions of the reunion of all Christian bodies of the world." R. E. E. Harkness

+ Crozer Q 7:248 Ap '30 550w

Spec 144:672 Ap 19 '30 220w

"The author of this volume is well known as a learned theologian whose works have found a wide acceptance among Anglo-Catholics in America and in this country. Here he considers the problems of Christian unity in the light of principles which he insists have always controlled the major part of Christendom."

Times [London] Lit Sup p255 Mr 20 '30 320w

HALL, JAMES NORMAN. Flying with Chaucer. 56p $1.25 Houghton

940.47 European war, 1914-1918—Prisoners and prisons 30-6819

Shot down after a fight with seven German planes the author fell within the German lines and was made prisoner. Sometime later, when he was nearly dead of boredom, a battered copy of the Canterbury Tales came into his possession and with this as talisman boredom fled.

Booklist 26:389 Jl '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

HALL, JAMES NORMAN. Mother Goose land. 97p $1.50 Houghton

30-24317

All about the journey which Roger took to Mother Goose land. He rode on the back of Mr Leonard's cow, which was really the cow that jumped over the moon.

"It is hard to match the quaintness of the Mother Goose rhymes, and neither the writer of the story nor the illustrator accomplishes the miracle—there is not the sort of invention that surprises us in either the text or the illustrations. And yet this is a well written and well illustrated book." Padraic Colum

— + New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 100w

"The story is pleasant and easy to follow, but it lacks distinction and the quality of spontaneous invention which puts a nonsense story into the first rank." A. T. Eaton

— + N Y Times p12 O 12 '30 100w

"A well done account of the adventures of a seven-year-old in the country of famous Mother Goose which the thirty striking black and white illustrations by Bacharach transform into a fascinating territory. Never were pictures better adapted to text. The construction of the book is clever, but the tale lacks a certain element of racy authenticity; it is a manufactured one and does not dash on as a child's story, particularly a child's story in nonsense parlance, should. The wheels creak a little."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:344 N 15 '30 150w

HALL, LINCOLN WITHINGTON, and HALL, R. LEIGH. Approach to definite forecasting. 142p $3 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [12s 6d Oxford]

330.1 Business cycles. Business—Graphic methods 29-13395

"A study of business statistics setting forth a more easily calculated methodology for handling all forms of time data in business. The author is Assistant Professor of Economics in the University of Pennsylvania."—St Louis

Reviewed by D. H. Davenport

Ann Am Acad 148:299 Mr '30 150w

"The high hopes raised in the mind of the reader who is eager for both a time-saving and a more accurate device for forecasting economic series, are hardly fulfilled by the contents of the book. . . The superficial appearance of a scientific approach claimed for this book should not blind anyone to the fact that the method described here takes more time than the results are worth." L. H. Bean

— J Pol Econ 38:357 Je '30 1080w

St Louis 28:37 F '30

HALL, RADCLYFFE. Saturday life. 320p $2 Cape [3s 6d Arrowsmith]

"An earlier novel by the author of The Well of Loneliness. Sidonia, daughter of Lady Shore, reveals successively exceptional talent in every line of artistic endeavor; drops each one for the next one, and drops the last to marry and have a baby."—Outlook

HALL, RADCLYFFE—Continued

"Much less pretentious and deep-rooted than the 'Well of Loneliness,' this earlier born novel nevertheless bears an obvious kinship to it. It is marked by the same well bred honesty and integrity, the same yearning appreciation of the dignity and beauty of a normal life. It shares also with that famous volume a naïveté of style which sometimes slides into amateurishness. The other characters [beside the heroine], supposed for the most part to be amusing, seem to me hopelessly strained and yanked into typically eccentric poses. An exception is Frances Reide who plays second lead and who is sort of a thumb nail sketch for the heroine of 'The Well of Loneliness.' In her Miss Hall's sincerity shines steadily and she therefore attains a convincingness which the charming and flighty Sidonia does not even approach." M. C. Dawson

+ — Books p2 O 12 '30 750w

"Miss Hall gives us the Saturday life of one Sidonia from childhood to marriage—and a very joyous, thrilling life it is. The novel, somewhat lighter in vein than Miss Hall's later works, is one of the most delightful, genuinely humorous and ardently youthful novels we have read in a long time."

+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 120w

"It is one of her earlier novels, amateurish in form and workmanship, strained and unimportant in conception. It is considerably lighter in mood than anything we have yet seen from Radclyffe Hall's pen; but it cannot be said, in this connection, that Miss Hall is at her best in a light or facetious vein."

— N Y Times p9 D 14 '30 550w

"A lot of people are going to be disappointed in A Saturday Life. There is nothing even remotely improper in it. In fact, there's not much of anything in it." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 156:312 O 22 '30 100w

HALL, ROBERT C. Facing the issue squarely; a plea for supremacy of law over violence. 190p $1.75 (10s 6d) Putnam

341.6 War. Peace 30-15721

This volume deals with the subject of war and its prevention. The author makes an earnest plea for world peace, urging American cooperation with other nations to renounce war and advocating American membership in the League of nations.

"It is a warm and stirring appeal, but does not make available to us the facts and data upon which we might build our own judgment. . . The volume is thus of interest mainly as the production of a strong enthusiast for peace, giving his personal reflections, and not as a calm, dispassionate, scholarly examination of all the causes and results of war."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 180w

"Mr. Hall does not profess to say anything very original about war and its prevention, but he is much in earnest in advocating American cooperation with other nations to abrogate war. His thoughts shape themselves into torrents of words, but beneath all, runs a plain, practical purpose. . . Perhaps the author expects too much from his rather vague proposals, but to the spirit in which he writes no exception can be taken."

Times [London] Lit Sup p815 O 9 '30 220w

HALL, THOMAS CUMING. Religious background of American culture. 348p $3 Little

277.3 United States—Church history. United States—Religion. Protestantism. Dissenters 30-18755

A history of the origins of American religious traditions. The book is divided into two sections. The first part deals with the English dissenters from the time of Wycliff, thru the days of the Lollards, Henry VIII, and Queen Elizabeth. The second part is devoted to the history of dissent in New England and Virginia, the relation of toleration to colonial culture, the great awakening under Jonathan Edwards, the reorganization of American Protestantism, the relation between religion and capitalism, and recent phases of Anglo-American Protestantism. There is a bibliography and an index.

Booklist 27:48 O '30

"Professor Hall's book is in the great tradition of historic scholarship: that is to say, it is first rate literature in spite of being based on careful historical research. . . His volume is packed with enlightening and good-humored observation." Stringfellow Barr

+ Books p1 Jl 27 '30 1220w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 20 '30 650w

"There are two features that distinguish Dr. Hall's book from the average volume dealing with American life. The first is his recognition of the fact that the religious element has been of sufficient importance to justify an attempt to describe its bearing upon our national culture. The second is his way of undermining one's general concepts of early American history by findings which have all the earmarks of genuine and scholarly research. Here is a treatise which not only compels sustained interest, but is also conducive to a renewed intellectual approach to the whole problem." W. E. Harrison, Jr.

+ Christian Century 47:1087 S 10 '30 320w

"This is an interesting and suggestive book, in spite of its occasional inaccuracies, its glaring omissions, and its split infinitives. The treatment of Wyclif is perhaps the best part of the book." E. L. Pennington

+ — Living Church 84:124 N 22 '30 1850w

"This work strikes the writer as one of the most original monographs on American religious history he has been privileged to read." C. H. Grattan

+ Nation 131:302 S 17 '30 850w

"Dr. Hall is seventy-two years old. Long connected with a theological seminary, he has retained an unusual independence of thought. And possibly his residence in Europe—he is now a member of the faculty of the University of Goettingen—has helped him to attain the remarkable detachment of mind which he shows in writing of America. For the most striking and praiseworthy trait of his book is its impartiality. . . Dr. Hall's book suffers more than once from muddiness of exposition, but its most serious defect lies in its incompleteness. It does not fulfill its title." Gerald Sykes

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 900w

"The case against Puritanism is very ably presented in Dr. Hall's pages, and considerable rewriting of American history will have to be done if the story of religion in America is to be squared with the facts and conclusions which Dr. Hall presents." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p3 Ag 3 '30 1700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

St Louis 28:259 N '30

"The author says at the close that his book is only the beginning. Though it would be polite to deny it, the fact is that he is right. There are other and more hearty books to be written on the subject, but until they appear one could do no better than to forego three one-dollar books and get Professor Hall's able volume. It is fluid and written with a gay sense of discovery. And after all Bishop Cannon and other modern religious phenomena cannot be understood merely from the newspapers." C. W. Ferguson

+ Sat R of Lit 7:103 S 6 '30 600w

"A more persistently argumentative book could hardly be imagined, and yet it cannot be said that the major theses are advanced with bias. Whether or not his major contentions are accepted—and they are likely to be found too rigidly intellectualized—the work contains scores of generalizations that are incisive and illuminating. There is abundant serious thought for scholars to argue about, but for the layman unversed in history the work may prove somewhat difficult."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Jl 19 '30 1200w

HALL, WINFIELD SCOTT. Love and marriage. 367p il $2 Winston

392.5 Sex. Marriage 29-28047

"Dr. Hall's book is divided into four parts; the first deals with love, mating and marriage and their attendant problems, parts two and three consider man and woman physiologically in their relations with each other, and part four is concerned with personal and family hygiene. It is an account, written in simple language, of the general principles underlying 'the facts of the personal life, mating and family life as these concern society.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

"His book is four-square committed to the older decencies and conservatisms. Some of his phrases will make a smart younger generation laugh and yet it is probable that he has as fair a share of truth in his utterances as most of our modern commentators. . . Winfield Scott Hall is too committed to the 'ideal' of marriage to credit with sufficient seriousness the real and legitimate causes for this growing spirit of disillusionment, but the book is filled with thoroughly practical information which will undoubtedly assist many a young couple in developing mutual adjustments." Lorine Pruette

+ — Books p23 N 10 '29 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 80w

"One of the clearest, sanest, and most thorough books we have seen on this subject. Dr. Hall is modern and advanced, yet balanced and not without ideals."

+ World Tomorrow 13:139 Mr '30 50w

HALLER, JOHANNES. Epochs of German history; [tr. by E. W. Dickes]. 247p $3.50 Harcourt [10s 6d Routledge]

943 Germany—History 30-31731

The critical turning points that have determined the direction of events in German history are discussed by the author, who is professor of history in the University of Tübingen. He begins with the origins of the German realm and ends with the growth of national self-consciousness and the unification of Germany under Bismarck, for whom he has great admiration.

Reviewed by H. D. Hill

Bookm 72:202 O '30 250w

"Professor Haller is a man of exceptional keenness and force who, some years ago, created no little stir with an analytical and positively devastating criticism of the policy of Prince Bülow. The same characteristic alertness and sense of contact with the realities of every-day life is noticeable on almost every page of the present volume, even though the sharp controversial element is absent." W. L. Langer

+ — Books p14 S 14 '30 1050w

Boston Transcript p3 S 24 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30

"Thoughtfulness and thoroughness are the leading characteristics of this volume. The upward movement of Germany from a strong resemblance to the Balkans to first-class power status is described with an attractive clarity."

+ Sat R 149:798 Je 21 '30 280w

[2] HALLER, JOHANNES. Philip Eulenberg: the kaiser's friend; tr. from the German by Ethel Colburn Mayne. 2v 388;393p pl $10 Knopf [30s Secker]

B or 92 Eulenberg-Hertefeld, Philipp, fürst zu. William II, German emperor [abdicated 1918]

"Philip Eulenberg was the Kaiser's one bosom-friend, and the scape-goat of the great public scandal in 1908. Here is a presentation of his brilliant and artistic personality, one that strives to clear him of the charges that were brought against him and which cannot fail to inspire the reader with pity for the friend so sacrificed to his imperial master's interests. This memoir by a man who knew him well, recounts his life in detail from adolescence to death, and throws many side-lights on the enigmatic figure of the Kaiser as well as on such figures as Holstein, Caprivi and Bülow. The book is a mine of important —and often amusing—revelations about the pre-war Germany of Eulenberg's day."—Publisher's note

"The biography which Miss Ethel Colburn Mayne has now rendered into English ranks in Germany among the most important documents for the history of William II.'s reign, and the lights which it throws, not only on the monarch, but on such decisive personalities as the Chancellor von Bülow and the occult 'dark force' Baron von Holstein, are new, vivid, and convincing. It is an attempt to rehabilitate the Prince and to clear his memory, not only of the crimes charged against him, but of the political obloquy which was heaped up at the same time." R. C. K. Ensor

+ New Statesman 35:709 S 13 '30 1450w

"Dr. Haller's entertaining book is both a mine for the conscientious historian and inspiring study for the psychiatrist." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p10 N 9 '30 1350w

"Secker has presented us with a study in morbid psychology as well as a considerable and important footnote to history. . . The agonizing diaries of the Prince will be read by the judicious with grief, and by the sensationalists with gusto." Shane Leslie

+ Sat R 150:411 O 4 '30 1250w

HALLIBURTON, RICHARD. New worlds to conquer. 368p il $5 Bobbs

918 Spanish America—Description and travel. South America—Description and travel 29-28351

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:199 F '30

"A sprightly book, Halliburton's best to date." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 70:xvii F '30 520w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 8 '30 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p75 My '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:15 F '30

St Louis 28:51 F '30

"Authentic travellers and explorers are inclined to be exasperated by Mr. Halliburton's methods of harnessing romance to his dashing chariot. But we prefer to regard him as a natural phenomenon; like sunspots and earthquakes, interesting if of slightly obscure significance."

Sat R of Lit 6:830 Mr 15 '30 250w

"If we want solid history and character analysis, with searching reflections on the moral and social atmosphere of the times, we shall go to Herr Wassermann's Columbus. But if, in another mood, we would prefer whimsical charm, shot always with a deep sense of beauty and reverence for things that deserve reverence, and always with a true vein of poetic feeling, then let us take up with Mr. Halliburton." M. J. C. M.

+ Spec 144:336 Mr 1 '30 480w

"The narrative is noteworthy chiefly as being so characteristic of a certain type of sightseer and souvenir collector as to read at times like a caricature. Those to whom the type appeals will call him impulsive and unconventional; and there should be nothing but praise for his capacity to interest himself in what has influenced the development of his kind—conquest, literary classic and feat of engineering."

Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 13 '30 620w

Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30

HALLIDAY, JAMES F. Robbing youth of its religion. 253p $2 Holt

239 Religion. Christianity. Youth 29-23911

Writing autobiographically, the author, a Congregational minister, tells how his early Christian belief, as taught in the home, was shaken from its foundations by a college professor of philosophy. Thenceforth his struggle was to reconcile Christian religion as based on a literal acceptance of Bible teaching, with the findings of modern science. Dr Halliday believes that youth today will respond to the following definition: "The Christian is the person who honestly tries to live out the spirit and the teachings of Jesus, nothing more, nothing less."

Booklist 26:298 My '30
Books p17 F 23 '30 180w
Christian Century 47:243 F 12 '30 140w
Cleveland Open Shelf p19 F '30

"Here is a book genuinely constructive but one which religious traditionalists may well take to heart. It is withal an account of a fascinating spiritual pilgrimage." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 153:631 D 18 '29 120w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30
St Louis 28:64 Mr '30

HALLOCK, GRACE TABER. Bird in the bush. 47p il $2.50 Dutton

811 30-18293

Pictures and verses describing the parts of the pictures, done for small children. The pictures follow the birds, animals, and flowers, thru the year from early spring to winter time.

"Enjoyment of the minute drawing of the pictures, pleasure in locating on the picture maps of 'The Garden in Spring,' 'The Lane in June,' &c., the beehive, flower beds, trees, hedges, ponds that are mentioned in the poems, does not come until a child is too old to enjoy the verses, while for the little child, to whom the verses will make an appeal, the illustrations are too small and complicated. There is, however, a delicate charm and country atmosphere in both illustrations and rhymes." A. T. Eaton
— + N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 100w

"A delightful Nature book for children from four to nine years. Miss Hallock, whose 'Boy Who Was' is an outstanding contribution to juvenile literature, has a keen understanding of children and the things they enjoy."
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 80w

HALLOCK, GRACE TABER, and TURNER, CLAIR ELSMERE. Edward Livingston Trudeau. (Health hero ser.) 168p il $1.12 Heath

B or 92 Trudeau, Edward Livingston. Tuberculosis 29-22216

A brief biography of Edward Livingston Trudeau, the beloved physician and founder of Trudeau sanatorium for tubercular patients. The book is the third in the Health hero series and is written for young readers.

"This little book is written in a pleasing style, with a fine sympathetic appreciation of the friendly physician of Saranac, who lived an inspiring life of self sacrifice. There may be some stimulation in conflict, but after all, there is greater inspiration in a career which could produce the love, regard, and respect of all fellowmen. This book can be highly recommended for its purpose." J. A. Tobey
+ Am J Pub Health 20:801 Jl '30 150w
Booklist 26:360 Je '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Je '30
Pratt p36 autumn '30
Survey 64:448 Ag 15 '30 100w

HAMBLEDON, PHYLLIS. Paved path. 326p $2 Crowell [7s 6d Low]

30-5172

Up the paved path to the doctor's office in a small English town come all sorts of people and cases. But the doctor's own case is the most difficult of all and that he fumbles. He has come to this village to escape his hopeless love for the wife of another man, but it pursues him. His failure in his relationship with Moira brings tragedy to her as well as to himself, but another woman is at hand to save him.

Bookm 72:vii N '30 30w

"A narrative crowded with incident and characterized by deep insight into human weaknesses. The entire story is presented with vigor and sharpness, and even its less plausible episodes are set down with a stamina which breeds conviction."
+ Books p22 Ap 13 '30 200w

"Into 'The Paved Path' she has assembled her knowledge of Yorkshire people and of the varied human problems other than physical, which are bound to be brought to the surgery door of any good physician. She has assembled this knowledge into a novel of distinction. She has opened a fascinating field which we hope she will develop through other Yorkshire novels. These people grip the reader as they eventually did Dr. Devenham." F. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 760w

"Although Miss Hambledon has given us a very readable story, she has not succeeded in all that she attempts. The emotions are not convincing, they are not as vital as they should be. We miss the inevitable—the driving force of fact. This it is that holds us removed from reality, while immersed in a pleasant haze of enjoyment."
+ — N Y Times p24 Mr 30 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p797 O 10 '29 230w

HAMILTON, ALBERT EDWARD. Boyways; leaves from a camp director's diary. 238p $2.50 Day

136.77 Boys. Camping 30-13124

A study of boy psychology, particularly of the boy away from home, as evidenced in the paragraphs jotted down from day to day by the author during his busy years as camp director and leader of boys. Author is editor of Camp Life.

Booklist 27:92 N '30
Books p16 Je 15 '30 100w

"The book is marked with sympathetic understanding of the boy problem from many angles and is of value to the parent as well as to workers with children." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ag 9 '30 80w

"This is no ordinary, superficial account of camp life. One finds in it an unexpected and rewarding depth of insight into human nature and the psychology of childhood, a constant effort to discover and understand the realistic demands and necessities of modern life as the boys now going to camp must presently meet them, and a high but wholly practical ideal of what camp life should do for boys and girls."
+ N Y Times p19 Je 15 '30 220w
St Louis 28:214 S '30

"We did not suppose that so much boy could be got into a mere book." Morris Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 7:490 D 27 '30 250w

HAMILTON, ANTHONY, count. Memoirs of the Comte de Gramont; a new tr. by Peter Quennell; with an introd. and commentary by Cyril Hughes Hartmann. (Background of hist.) 392p il $5 Dutton [25s Routledge]

B or 92 Gramont, Philibert, comte de

30-24619

The first English translation of the Memoirs was published in 1714. The present edition in Peter Quennell's translation is the most faithful rendering of the original which has yet been made. Exiled from France the Comte de Gramont found a congenial atmosphere at the court of Charles II and married Elizabeth Hamilton, sister of his future biographer and one of the great beauties of the English court. Gramont was 80 years old when he supplied his brother-in-law, Anthony Hamilton, with the materials for these Memoirs which give a lively account of the licentious court of Charles II. They are regarded as generally accurate in substance, tho weak in chronology.

"The curious thing is that we should have had to wait so long for an exact translation. Hitherto only two versions have existed, neither of them reproducing the exact sense or the elegance of the original. In the present one which has been made by Mr. Peter Quennell, both these qualities have been restored, and for this reason it is likely to remain the definitive translation, upon which it would be difficult, except in a few places, to improve. The more thankless task of preparing a commentary has been undertaken with much patience and good sense by Mr. Hartmann."

+ Nation and Ath 47:224 My 17 '30 800w

"It is obviously of special importance that a book of this kind should be well translated, and Mr. Quennell, being both scholar and poet, has given us a translation more accurate and more brilliant than has been produced in England before. Mr. Hartmann supplies an introduction which includes in a few pages just what information is really essential, and an extremely useful commentary that takes the form of short biographical notes about all the persons mentioned in the text."

+ New Statesman 35:64 Ap 19 '30 200w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 150w

"A book of endless charm and entertainment." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 60w

"These witty, scurrilous and inaccurate memoirs have been a best-seller ever since their original publication in 1713, and have been read and re-read by people who have never opened a book of history in their lives, and who have come to regard it as an authentic picture of life and manners in England after the Restoration. . . This translation will, no doubt, remain for some time the definitive English edition."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Mr 20 '30 1250w

HAMILTON, BRUCE. To be hanged; a story of murder. 296p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-20595

As Mihail Stefanesco was being led away from the stand, sentenced to be hanged for murdering Paul Clifford, a young journalist recognized him and remembered a queer conversation he once heard between the convicted man and the murdered man's daughter. Starting with this clue the journalist did some quiet sleuthing and outwitted a clever human devil.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p12 Jl 27 '30 100w

New Statesman 35:162 My 10 '30 30w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p17 Ag 10 '30 180w

Sat R 149:429 Ap 5 '30 130w

"The author is to be congratulated on having avoided the snares, baited with brilliant amateurs, bungling police and machine-made evidence, that threaten most writers of mystery stories. The plot is credible, and the tale well written enough to be recommended to even the most blasé readers, in the certainty that they will not discover the real murderer until they reach the final chapter."

+ Spec 144:634 Ap 12 '30 100w

"Mr. Hamilton writes pleasantly and well; and if at rather greater length than his drama requires we owe to that a commentary on the crime which disarms his critics by forestalling them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p338 Ap 17 '30 170w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Pleasure house. 303p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-11607

An Englishman of good family, very much on his uppers as a result of the war, turned his home into a genteel gambling house, in order to support his invalid wife and large flock of children. He counted on Jane, the eldest daughter, to marry a wealthy frequenter of Pleasure house, and make life easier for all of them. Jane was willing enough, even tho she did not love Bob, but a lucky chance made Jill, who did love Bob, the family saver.

"'The Pleasure House' is not strong on suspense; and it is neither sparkling nor convincing. But the characters seem a rather more human lot than one usually encounters in fictional comedies of this order."

— + Books p10 Je 22 '30 250w

"Perhaps the most noticeable thing about the work of Cosmo Hamilton is that it is easy to read. Mr. Hamilton's sentences flow along smoothly; his action flows along smoothly and his characters do the same thing. This is all true of 'The Pleasure House,' wherein he has taken a family that is somewhat preposterous, and has made the story about it seem logical and not at all improbable."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 27 '30 300w

"Told with great verbosity and little art." R. D. T.

— Outlook 154:667 Ap 23 '30 80w

"Unlike the majority of the Hamilton novels, this book contains some really fine and convincing character portraits—that of Frankie is particularly impressive—and though the sentimental factors are in spots too unrestrained, the story is by long odds the author's best in several years."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:996 Ap 26 '30 250w

HAMILTON, DAVID OSBORNE. Picaresque. 332p $2 Scribner

30-24055

An amusing chronicle of the gay adventures of Tom Mark, pseudo-artist, and his lovely model, Cecilia, who, posing as a statue of Persephone—which Tom unveils before a wealthy prince as his masterpiece—sneezes at the critical moment, but wins the wealthy prince, none the less. Tom gets himself another girl, elopes, and ends his gay artistic career by going in for orange-raising.

"This is a novel compounded of one part craftsmanship, one part story, and a somewhat overpowering dose of sheer balderdash. For those people interested in reading a completely hysterical story of a partially hysterical generation, Picaresque is recommended."

Bookm 72:xiii O '30 100w

"This is a most original, sparkling, and amusing book, for the first hundred and eighty pages. And then the author, having got everyone into fascinating difficulties, shows a fatal New England trait. He decides to be thorough, and he writes what happened afterwards, which is sadly anticlimatic. Nevertheless it is worth reading at least two hundred pages, just to meet Tom and Cecilia."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '30 350w

"The plot is wholly gay and delightfully mad. Mr. Hamilton has one of the nicest qualities that any young author can have (this is his second book). He has a real sense of humor, which isn't concerned alone with the plot (it is a very funny scramble), but which flickers in his sentences. It's a chuckly sort of humor rather than a guffawing one."

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 S 27 '30 320w

"Mr. Hamilton, undoubtedly a member in good standing of the generation he chronicles, knows whereof he writes, and his fictional cocktail contains all the used and abused ingredients peculiar to those novels whose sole aim is to please. Nor does he fail to serve the eventual concoction in the slapdash manner characteristic of our minor fictioneers."

+ N Y Times p24 S 28 '30 300w

HAMILTON, D. O.—Continued

"We feel that Mr. Hamilton has accomplished what he set out to do. He has given us a light and frothy novel and if his characters point us no moral nor trouble themselves to leave with us a thought, they have the saving grace of taking their merriment straight. We like this. It is a pleasant change from the tawdry pseudo-psychology of so many of the novels that deal with this pleasure loving generation."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:253 O 18 '30 500w

HAMILTON, EDITH. Greek way. 247p $3 Norton [10s 6d Dent]

880 Civilization, Greek. Greek literature—History and criticism 30-13749

An interpretation of the Greek mind and spirit and an application of the Greek ideal to the civilization of today. Contents: East and west; Mind and spirit; The way of the east and the west in art; The Greek way of writing; The Athenians as Plato saw them; Aristophanes and the old comedy; The idea of tragedy; Æschylus, the first dramatist; Sophocles, quintessence of the Greek; Euripides, the modern mind; The way of the Greeks; The way of the modern world.

Booklist 27:20 S '30

Reviewed by C. A. Pearce

Bookm 71:462 Jl '30 350w

"The value of the book lies chiefly in a pithy characterization of the classical drama. The spirit of Aristophanes is accurately caught and illustrated in a few well chosen scenes neatly translated, and the chapters on Æschylus and Euripides are certain to entice readers into the plays by an approach that insures comprehension. The author knows the original texts and has read them with understanding and sympathy."

Books p13 Je 15 '30 380w

Cath World 132:508 Ja '31 150w

New Repub 65:116 D 10 '30 230w

"This book is an American interpretation of Greek civilisation. It is written in a sustained, but deadly, vein of enthusiasm which will make the ordinary reader thankful that his son is on the Science side at school. The style is that of the direct statement with 75 per cent. of the statements unsupported by documentation."

— New Statesman 35:744 S 20 '30 200w

"No one could ask for a better presentation of all that Greek civilization has meant and still means, than this fine, clean-cut study supplies." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 100w

"In her masterly exposition and deep understanding of the contrast between the Greek and the modern conception of life, we are brought to fresh appraisals of our own intellectual activities. And because she has written with such a clear perception of the value of clarity in an expository work, her pages are a pleasure to follow." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p2 Je 15 '30 1150w

"The book is delightful reading throughout—and good sound sense, too. Of the greater writers who have discussed the Greek way of life and thought, none has expressed himself in a manner more likely to appeal to the common reader. The atmosphere of ponderous erudition which hangs over the usual work of scholarship on the Greek period, is absent from Edith Hamilton's book." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:145 My 28 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30

"We do not know a book which we would prefer to this, if we were asked to recommend an introduction to the peculiar quality of Greek thought which gives it value to ordinary people. Miss Hamilton makes little demands on any sort of special knowledge of antiquity in her readers, but she succeeds in conveying an atmosphere and getting us to share in her admiration of the Greek spirit."

+ Sat R 150:646 N 15 '30 180w

"An excellent book which sums up with profound and sympathetic insight the essential quality of the Greek genius and its achievement, especially in the field of literature. But I have a quarrel to pick with some of her statements, which will out. As a background to the Greek picture Miss Hamilton paints, in a few bold strokes, a sketch of the civilizations which were already extinct or in full decline when Greece was born. Such sweeping statements are dangerous, even for Egypt and Mesopotamia, although in a very general way they hold true." Hetty Goldman

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:35 Ag 9 '30 800w

"A book so delightful, and so illuminating and informing that if widely read, as it deserves to be, it surely will send thousands of eager and curious persons to the letters, art, science and philosophy of ancient Greece. And they will be richly rewarded." V. S. Yarros

+ Survey 64:405 Ag 1 '30 400w

"There are omissions: the epic and still more the lyric poets, who reflect so well the directness of the Greek outlook, are neglected; also there are qualities not in themselves commendable, but contributory to this directness, such as the literalmindedness of the Greeks and the lack of that imagination that characterizes not only the Eastern civilizations with which Miss Hamilton is at pains to contrast the Greek, but also modern literature, that are here unnoticed. And there are minor inaccuracies. Apart from these faults the book is fresh, sincere and imbued with a coherent conception of its subject, and should not fail to prove stimulating."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p736 S 18 '30 450w

HAMILTON, ERIC RONALD. Art of interrogation; studies in the principles of mental tests and examinations; with an introd. by C. Spearman. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 174p $2.75 Harcourt [7s 6d Routledge]

151.2 Mental tests. Examinations [29-15519]

A study in the use of the direct-question method in classifying and investigating the mental qualities of children and students.

Boston Transcript p2 F 8 '30 380w

"Mr. Hamilton's lucid and impartial analysis of the principles of this art, in relation to the mental test, the examination and practice in the classroom, fills an important gap in the literature on this subject. His main purpose is a contribution to exact science, but he achieves a secondary purpose in applying the laws of the mental test to a comparison of the old and new examination."

+ Nation and Ath 45:739 S 7 '29 700w

"Mr. Hamilton's book, though it deals only with one corner of the subject, is such a book as parents may read with understanding and profit. It sets out first principles with lucidity and fairness and is stimulating enough to send the mind enquiring among problems beyond those with which it immediately deals." Edward Shanks

+ Sat R 148:159 Ag 10 '29 1000w

"The book is clearly and pleasantly written and makes a not very attractive subject surprisingly interesting."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p835 O 24 '29 700w

HAMILTON, MRS MARY AGNES (ADAMSON) (ICONOCLAST, pseud.). J. Ramsay MacDonald; a biographical sketch. rev ed 305p $3 (7s 6d) Cape

B or 92 MacDonald, James Ramsay [30-26604]

"Under the nom de plume of 'Iconoclast,' Mrs. Hamilton published in 1923 a short study of MacDonald, venturing the seemingly insane prediction that he would live to be Prime Minister of Britain. . . In 1925 Mrs. Hamilton wrote a retrospective analysis of the first Labor Government. She reaffirmed her faith that the Lossiemouth orphan was not done. The present book is a reprint of these two sketches of 1923 and 1925, plus a 'Postscript' chapter written last summer."—N Y World

For biographical sketches of the author see N Y World F 9 '30; and Wilson bulletin 4:432 My '30

"A work written with sympathy and manifest admiration. The study though partisan, is not unsound." C. F. Brand
+ Am Hist R 35:673 Ap '30 420w
Booklist 26:407 Jl '30

"It is the most complete and satisfactory of all the attempts to depict Britain's present leader."
+ Christian Century 47:147 Ja 29 '30 140w

"Over-emphasis, and a too constant straining to express what she feels as well as what she thinks, make her book hard to read."
— New Statesman 34:474 Ja 18 '30 650w

"I count her book the best introduction in print to a phenomenon that bulks ever large on the horizon of our time—the British Labor Party and its creator in chief." K. M. Gould
+ N Y World p10m Mr 30 '30 500w

"The book is useful and instructive in many ways but it is written too much in the tone of a panegyrist. To a man of the Prime Minister's stature this is a disservice."
— + Sat R 148:619 N 23 '29 70w

HAMILTON, MRS MARY AGNES (ADAMSON) (ICONOCLAST, pseud.). Three against fate; a tale of 1917 (Eng title: Special providence). 287p $2.50 Houghton
30-3353

A psychological study of the effect of the War upon three persons: Jean Claviger, her husband Harold, an active participator at the front, and Stephen, intellectual pacifist, in love with Jean. The main events that make up the external action of the story are presented, in retrospect, thru the mind and mental reactions of Jean: Harold's estrangement from her because of the horrors of his war experience, Stephen's growing love for Jean during Harold's absence, the sudden return of Harold to find Jean and Stephen in intimate conversation, and the shooting of Stephen by Harold. Altho at the trial Harold is vindicated, it does not change the status of the tragedy that has destroyed the lives of three people—War.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p30 Ap '30 180w
Booklist 26:281 Ap '30

"If you can admit the hypothesis of 'Three Against Fate,' then the development stares sharp and lucid from its pages. . . But the crime itself, the hypothesis, strikes false. You are not brought to believe in it. It does not lie in the scope of Harold's character. And this doubt nags at the roots of your mind. Unless you can accept the psychological basis of a problem, its subtle complexities do not move you. For this reason Mrs. Hamilton's book seems untrue." V. P. Ross
— Books p7 Ja 26 '30 450w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:774 Mr 8 '30 80w

"Miss Hamilton is never melodramatic; where her story might have been sentimental and maudlin, it is grim and authentic. . . It is a story at once illuminating and devastating; it will stand in its own right beside the records of the men, who could have learned no more of the meaning of the War through their actual presence in the trenches." E. F.
+ New Repub 61:335 F 12 '30 200w
New Statesman 34:741 Mr 15 '30 320w

"Miss Hamilton writes earnestly and vividly of conditions in factory towns; she knows her characters, but at a distance; her treatment is oblique and only after pages of Jean's mind revolving through moral notions and metaphysical concepts do we finally get a sense of her agony. The book is full of the fuzzy judgments typical of the female Puritan." Horace Coon
— + N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 450w

"Into what might have remained a merely sensational story Mary Agnes Hamilton has put so much that is good, stable and wise that it is that impression which remains, not the shot, the blood and murder, the brilliant hectic misery of wartime in London and the suspense of the trial, though all these things, too, are well conveyed. Nor does Miss Hamilton give herself any easy ways out."
+ N Y Times p8 F 2 '30 500w

"Here are: first of all, a workmanlike murder mystery; second, straightforward solid writing for those who pay for books and like something that stays by them for a spell; third, a quiet tidal flow of feeling, sympathy for individuals and hatred for their mass stupidites; fourth, a woman's report on the home sector of the late war which complements 'Journey's End.'" Paul Sifton
+ N Y World p11m Ja 19 '30 350w

"Readers who can get through the heavy going of the first chapters will be rewarded by a striking picture of war-time England. The authoress presents setting and mass-psychology with great effect. She is less successful in her drawing of all but the major characters of her complicated and tragic story." F. L. Robbins
+ — Outlook 154:186 Ja 29 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

"Technically the story-telling is very interesting. The problem is finely imagined, and ably presented. But the solution is not quite credible. It is noble, it is appealing, but it is not convincing."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:904 Ap 5 '30 380w
Spec 144:613 Ap 12 '30 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 3 '30 400w

"It cannot be said that the elements are altogether well fused, but each is handled with Mrs Hamilton's fresh and spirited intelligence."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 26 '30 200w
Wis Lib Bul 26:68 F '30

HAMLIN, FRED. S. Parkes Cadman, pioneer radio minister; with an introd. by Francis J. McConnell. 148p il $1.50 Harper
B or 92 Cadman, Samuel Parkes 30-13893

This brief, enthusiastic sketch of Dr Cadman's rise from pony boy in the Shropshire coal field to the world's most widely heard preacher, takes the reader behind the scenes of his enormous activities as pastor and as radio minister of the Federal council of churches in America.

"The 'feel' of the man is in these pages, without a doubt!—yet it is only a sketch, terribly thin in places, and there are going to be thousands who will feel, as I felt, after devouring these 147 scant pages, that appetite has not been satisfied but only whetted. It is this kind of book, however, which probably had to blaze the trail. Later and fuller books will follow. Some day the Cadman story will be one of the great biographies of the language." J. H. Holmes
+ — Books p16 Je 8 '30 320w
Christian Century 47:599 My 7 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p99 Jl '30
N Y Times p16 Je 29 '30 380w
Pratt p34 autumn '30
St Louis 28:273 N '30

HAMMETT, DASHIELL. Maltese falcon. 276p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf
30-5939

"The Maltese Falcon is about a detective, Sam Spade, whose partner is murdered while shadowing a man for a client. In finding the murderer, Spade runs afoul of the police, as well as of several sets of people who are all after a mysterious statuette."—Outlook

HAMMETT, DASHIELL—Continued
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p17 F 23 '30 230w
Reviewed by Donald Douglas
New Repub 62:226 Ap 9 '30 400w

"The story would have been better had it been told in the simple style one might have expected, instead of in the affectedly sophisticated manner chosen by Mr. Hammett."
New Statesman 35:576 Ag 9 '30 180w

"Mr. Hammett, we understand, was once a Pinkerton operative, and he probably knows that there is very little romance about the detective business. There is none of it in his book, but there is plenty of excitement."
+ N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 150w

"The story has plenty of action, a good plot, excellent characterization, and a startling denouement. . . This is not only probably the best detective story we have ever read, it is an exceedingly well written novel." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p654 Ag 14 '30 220w

HAMMETT, LOUIS PLACK. Solutions of electrolytes; with particular application to qualitative analysis. (Int. chemical ser.) 211p $2.25 McGraw

541.34 Solution (chemistry). Electrolytes. Chemistry, Analytic—Qualitative 29-20878

"One-term course in qualitative analysis presenting and illustrating by numerous examples the general principles relating to the behavior of solutions in electrolytes. Laboratory experiments and procedure are given in part 2. Author is Associate Professor of Chemistry in Columbia University."—N Y New Tech Bks

"Its title is slightly misleading since this book's purpose is not to discuss the theoretical aspects of solutions but simply to illustrate and explain the common phenomena found in qualitative separations. This is done very thoroughly. Accompanying the text are numerous experiments which exemplify various separations. Lecture experiments with the same object in view also are included." J. E. Vance
+ Chem & Met Eng 37:109 F '30 200w

"This book is written in a personal fashion and can be recommended unhesitatingly to teachers and students of chemistry. The references at the end of each chapter have been well selected and make a very valuable addition." Stephen Popoff
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:1303 D '29 320w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:53 O '29

HAMMOCK, CLAUDE STUART. Why murder the judge? 223p $2 Macmillan

30-11284

Judge Stilwell was poisoned with prussic acid. Eight people had the opportunity and the means to commit the murder. The problem before Probus Throne, detective, aided by his astute Japanese butler, Nikko, was to discover the reason for the murder. The tale reaches a climax, leading to solution, in the old mansion of Peter Van Dorn at Spuyten Duyvel.

Bookm 72:xxv N '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 380w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 80w

"So many persons seem to be involved that the reader is hopelessly confused. Pointing the finger of suspicion at first one character and then another is a favorite device of mystery writers, and when it is ingeniously done there is nothing to be said against the practice. In this book it is done very clumsily, and the author's attempt, in the concluding chapter, to pick up the loose ends and make them fit into his design is not particularly successful."
— N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 120w

"Though readable and exciting, doesn't quite meet our credibility test." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 155:27 My 7 '30 50w

HAMMOND, JOHN LAWRENCE LE BRETON, and HAMMOND, MRS BARBARA (BRADBY). Age of the chartists, 1832-1854; a study of discontent. 386p $5 (12s 6d) Longmans

331.8 Chartism. Great Britain—Social conditions. Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain [30-27748]

A social history of the new urban population in England between 1832 and 1854. The authors endeavor to explain the discontent and class conflict of this particular period by contrasting early nineteenth century England with the ancient states of Greece and Rome, showing how little share in community life the people of the former had compared to those of the latter.

" 'The Age of the Chartists' has all those admirable qualities which we have come to expect in a work by the authors. The merits, like the authors, are so unobtrusive that it is only when one has finished the book that one becomes fully aware of them—a merit itself as rare as it is remarkable. . . The book carries you with it and is never dull or laborious, and when you have come to the end of it, you are aware that it has not been a mere collection of facts or detailed analysis. Insensibly it has constructed for you a picture, or at any rate one side of a picture, of an era. The authors, so unobtrusively in the background, were very much there all the time, performing one of the chief and most difficult duties of the historian, informing the period which they have studied with an idea which was inherent in it." Leonard Woolf
+ Nation and Ath 48:139 O 25 '30 650w
New Statesman 36:86 O 25 '30 1250w
Reviewed by D. Willoughby
Sat R 150:529 O 25 '30 600w

" 'The Hammonds' have added yet another to their valuable series of historical studies. It is hardly too much to say that they have invented something in the nature of a new historical form. They do not write history in the ordinary sense of the word. . . Only one short chapter out of nineteen, and that perhaps the least satisfactory in the book, is devoted to the actual story of the Chartists themselves. The book is, rather, a detailed thesis, backed by a knowledge of the period and a scholarship which by now must be unequalled, or equalled only by the Webbs." John Strachey
+ Spec 145:sup543 O 18 '30 1100w

"We commend the conscientious industry of the authors in their analysis. They take up the following items and work them out:—The methods of town government, the Poor Law of 1834, housing and sanitation, the loss of playgrounds through enclosure and building, drink, education, religion. In handling all these subjects they display wide reading, and by apposite quotation make the story vivid."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p848 O 23 '30 1050w

HAMSUN, KNUT. Vagabonds; tr. from the Norwegian by Eugene Gay-Tifft. 549p $3 Coward-McCann

30-29561

The vagabonds are that charming scamp August, and the naive, honest-hearted young Edevart, who wander up and down the fishing villages of Norway, engaged in this business and that—sometimes penniless, sometimes rich to the extent of fine gold rings and watches—loving, making and losing friends, fighting, dreaming, thoroly enjoying life on the whole, aimless and lovable. Tho other characters appear in this story of Norwegian peasant life, the business affairs of the comically materialistic August, and the love of innocently adolescent Edevart for his sweetheart Lovisa Margreta, whom at last he follows to America, are the main interests of the story.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

Bookm 72:viii N '30 80w

"'Growth of the Soil,' Knut Hamsun's masterpiece, is an epic; the rest of his work is not epic, but ethnic. It pictures Norway more than humanity, and though the picture is vivid and honest and illuminating, it is too local and often too prosaic to partake of greatness. . . There is nothing Odyssean about August's and Edevart's wanderings—they move, to their misfortune, through a narrow world of peasants. 'Vagabonds' has too great a sense of home for a picaresque novel." Louis Kronenberger

— + Books p3 N 2 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

"Knut Hamsun is commonly regarded as one of the great European writers of our day, and yet I doubt whether a worse novel than this has ever been written by any American novelist of distinction. American writers, at least those of today, are too shrewd, on the whole, to let their work become so dull. . . These materials in the hands of another novelist, a younger Hamsun perhaps, might have been made into a powerful fiction. Hamsun simply has not realized their potentialities. The traces of age are present throughout the work. Not only did an old man write this novel, but he has written it in a manner that is dying, and about the spirit of an age that is already dead." V. F. Calverton

— Nation 131:528 N 12 '30 750w

"The reader may feel that 'Vagabonds' is unnecessarily long. Yet if he lays the book down in a momentary fit of boredom he will find that he is compelled quickly to take it up again. It is as difficult to shut one's self off permanently from its pages as it is to shut one's self off permanently from the life of the community in which one lives. . . It is life's comedy as viewed by an Olympian, tears and laughter caught by a vast understanding. For Knut Hamsun is one of the Olympians, and 'Vagabonds' is one of the finest and most truly profound of his works." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p7 N 2 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p3e D 28 '30 850w

"Living characters such as Hamsun knows how to create, varied incident, rough humor, turbulent emotion and a rich background make the novel a sort of peasant pageant, refreshing and picturesque." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 156:387 N 5 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"This novel is what Hamsun's novels have not lately been—good narrative. . . 'Vagabonds' is the final fruit of a matured philosophy and perfected art." P. D. Carleton

+ Sat R of Lit 7:305 N 8 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 500w

HANEMANN, HENRY WILLIAM. Facts ot life. 276p il $2.50 Farrar

817 Humor 30-13904

"A book of brighter biography executed in the manner of some of our best or best-known writers, scriveners & scribes." Nell Gwynn is presented as by Kathleen Norris; Catherine the Great, by Vina Delmar; Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton, by Count Luckner; Queen Victoria, by Mary Roberts Rinehart, and so on.

"This volume combines parody and scrambled history in the interests of harmless and not too innocent fun."

Books p19 Je 8 '30 150w

Reviewed by Jeannette Greenspan

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 300w

"This group of ten 'brighter biographies,' like many smart literary ideas, is better in theory than in practice. That is not to state that the 'The Facts of Life' is dull or a failure. On the contrary, here is a good bit of literary burlesque. If you enjoy literary horseplay, interlarded with puns, to the accompaniment of illustrations of an almost Flemish vulgarity, here you have it. Taken one by one, the chapters of this book are amusing skits, written with a good sense of satire and a thorough grounding in Manhattan humor; taken in a single gu.p, the effect is cloying." John Carter

+ — N Y Times p2 Je 1 '30 850w

"There are ten side-splitting parodies in this volume done in a fashion so humorously imitative of the ten contemporary authors caricatured, of their styles and idiosyncrasies as to make the book a gem among recent contributions to the field of broad comedy."

+ N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 150w

"They are all riotously funny. As parody they are rather rough and ready, but better parodies would perhaps not have been so amusing. Herb Roth's illustrations are splendid." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 120w

HANKEL, WALTER S., ed. Whither, whither; or, After sex, what? a symposium to end symposiums. 279p il $2 Macaulay

817 30-24724

A symposium satirizing sex symposia. Contents: You: a foreword written for the reader, by W. S. Hankel; Libido: or the future of debauchery, by Corey Ford; Waste: or the future of prosperity, by Kenneth Burke; Gorgonzola: or the future of literary criticism, by Edmund Wilson; Democritus: or the future of the atom, by Slater Brown; Freud: or the future of psychoanalysis, by James Thurber; Leviathan: or the future of ocean travel, by R. M. Coates; Anthropos: or the future of art, by E. E. Cummings; Fugue: or the future of frozen music, by John Wheelwright; Coolidge: or the future of history, by Isidor Schneider; Quo vadimus?—or the fate of complexity, by E. B. White; Eno: or the future of the vine, by Matthew Josephson; Œdipus: or the future of love, by Malcolm Cowley.

"Awards of merit must go to Bill Gropper for his elegant drawings, to Walter S. Hankel, the shadowy ringmaster of the whole exhibition, and to the equally hypothetical Jacob Bean, who contributes the review questions at the end of chapters and the prose poems attached to the pictures. . . Corey Ford was a happy choice to lead the van with 'Libido, or the Future of Debauchery.' This young man is naturally funny, always an advantage in a humorist." Will Cuppy

+ Books p7 S 14 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p4 O 18 '30 180w

"'Whither Whither,' a symposium to end symposia, is about as funny as a premeditated epigram. The thirteen contributors have worked too hard or else stayed up at Tony's too long and were still thirty pages short at the deadline. The illustrations aren't bad." D. S. Fairchild

— N Y Evening Post p5d D 20 '30 250w

"Of the essays collected in 'Whither Whither' some are good, some indifferent, and some wearying." Saxon Salgood

N Y Times p10 O 19 '30 600w

"This book is a $2 book and to my notion it is worth $2.27 of anybody's money, the seven or eight pages by Edmund Wilson—'Gorgonzola: or the Future of Literary Criticism'—being worth $2, Bill Gropper's illustrations being worth twenty-five cents and the rest of the book worth all of two cents. As far as I am concerned the book is 'Gorgonzola,' as grand a piece of jolly nonsense as ever got printed, and the rest of the book a binding for that. . . It is too bad. It is a beautiful book physically. Everything possible has been done to make it interesting—Questions for Students and Brief Biographies, in burlesque, after each contribution; clever illustrations; pictorial end-papers; snappy jacket; beautiful printing and lay-out—

HANKEL, W. S., ed.—Continued
but Sex sinks it. Even Corey Ford, who is always a safe bet, skids on Sex and falls on his neck this time." E. P. Butler
— + Sat R of Lit 7:178 O 4 '30 450w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Wild justice. 349p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Methuen]
30-9246

"Colonel Devenish's wife was shot by Irish republicans for betraying the whereabouts of an ambush to the King's forces; eight years later Devenish takes advantage of his position as Chief Constable to murder one of his wife's 'judges' and to get the other hanged for it."—New Statesman

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30
Bookm 72:xxvii O '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Ap 13 '30 150w

"This will seem to many a more than unusually revolting plot for a detective story that has no surprises and is written with an anti-Irish bitterness hard to understand in the author."
— New Statesman 34:680 Mr 1 '30 100w

"The story is highly dramatic and beautifully written."
+ N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 180w
Pratt p40 summer '30

"We are allowed to be clever: we are allowed to find out nearly everything quite soon, but the main bulk of the story is so excellently told that we never become bored enough to feel that our knowledge was too easily won. We are, in fact, provided with just that quality of mental stimulus as is employed by the solving of a simple cross-word puzzle, and very pleasant it is too."
+ Spec 144:445 Mr 15 '30 220w

" 'George A. Birmingham' gives us of his best in this engaging murder story, both the setting and the narrator suiting him to perfection. . . The only drawback to the story—and in a mystery tale that did not offer so much in the way of incidental interest it would be all-important—is that the narrator, in discussing the problem of the murder, lets the cat out of the bag far too easily, so that when the solution is at length forthcoming it lacks the element of surprise which should provide the clou to the whole entertainment."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p253 Mr 20 '30 200w

HAPGOOD, NORMAN. Changing years; reminiscences. 321p il $4 Farrar
B or 92 30-30906

Personal reminiscence, reflection and observation by a man whose work as editor, publisher, politician and social experimenter has brought him into contact with many people and many ideas. Norman Hapgood writes of certain boyhood incidents that seem to him important in his development; of his Harvard days and his school friendships; of his various experiences while editor of Collier's Weekly, and in connection with other publications; and of his friendship with such interesting people as Sir Henry Irving, Ellen Terry, Mark Twain, Roosevelt, Santayana, Louis Brandeis and Woodrow Wilson.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"Intellectual honesty in print is rare enough nowadays. Unshrinking exposure of one's own mental processes is even rarer. Norman Hapgood's reminiscences have both, which makes them good medicine for what ails the American mind. . . Essentially it remains a story of the doubts and experiments of a man who has been moving with the left flank of a changing civilization, bold, alert, questioning all things and, most insistently of all, himself, asking, 'What do I know about it?' We have had too few men like him and too few books like this." R. J. Walsh
+ Books p3 O 26 '30 950w
Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '30 1200w
Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '30

"The verdict on the book in this reviewer's mind is: 'Mildly interesting but disappointingly unimportant.' Mr. Hapgood's life brought him in contact with leaders in manifold activities: literary, dramatic and political. He has, obviously, a capacity for friendship, a mellow and kindly judgment and a real generosity even toward those with whom he had differed. William James, Mark Twain, Roosevelt, Wilson, Smith and a host of others appear in comment or anecdote, yet I recall nothing which adds significantly to one's understanding of these men." Norman Thomas
— + N Y Evening Post p5d N 22 '30 580w

"Mr. Hapgood was not, and is not, a reporter. This volume is rich, as his life has been, in associations and contacts with interesting, important persons in momentous years. He tells of his part in the backgrounds of historic events, yet in most instances his recital is not the detailed, precise report which otherwise would make these reminiscences more significantly informing than they are. . . But Mr. Hapgood's active, ranging intellectual curiosity is that of an editor and commentator rather than of reporter." C. McD. Puckette
N Y Times p20 D 7 '30 1050w
Reviewed by W. A. White
Sat R of Lit 7:261 O 25 '30 900w

HARBAGE, ALFRED BENNETT. Thomas Killigrew, cavalier dramatist, 1612-83. 247p $3 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [12s 6d Oxford]
B or 92 Killigrew, Thomas 30-4515

An account of the life and work of Thomas Killigrew, seventeenth century playwright and ideal cavalier. The author bases his study upon contemporary sources of information, and presents his work in relation to the literature of Killigrew's time.

"Alfred Harbage has done a legitimate, no doubt useful and probably laborious piece of work in digging out the real facts of Killigrew's life, reading all his plays (that was laborious!) and fixing their place in the still not too well understood transition between Carolinian and Restoration drama. . . The volume is material for a biographer. It is the kind of book which makes 'research' a frigid thing to the average reader—and some others." W. P. Eaton
Books p20 Mr 16 '30 280w

"Mr. Harbage has written a straightforward biographical and critical study, painstakingly accurate in every detail and notably sane and objective in interpretation." D. A. Roberts
+ Nation 131:275 S 10 '30 300w

"Quite without strenuous effort Mr. Harbage has written a curiously fascinating book. Like most men who possess a passionate genius for accurate scholarship, Mr. Harbage manages to make his protagonist interesting by means of understatement. Mr. Harbage presents the facts concerning his hero, and you, dear reader, have the divine privilege of playing psychoanalyst over Thomas Killigrew's dead body." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ja 18 '30 950w
Times [London] Lit Sup p315 Ap 10 '30 1500w
Reviewed by H. T. Perry
Yale R n s 20:418 winter '31 550w

HARDING, ALFRED. Revolt of the actors. 575p il $3.50 Morrow
792 Actors' equity association. Actors and actresses. Trade unions—United States
29-27944

" 'The Revolt of the Actors' is a colorful but highly prejudiced account of the events leading up to the formation of the Actors' Equity Association and the picturesque strike it engineered in 1919, which resulted in much better working conditions for the American actor."—Books

Booklist 26:304 My '30

"Mr. Harding's book is probably much too long for the general reader, but constitutes a pretty accurate record of the facts, even if it invariably interprets those facts in favor of Equity. However, every reader who can remember the merry war of 1919 will enjoy browsing in this colorful record of the actors' revolt." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books p26 D 8 '29 350w

"Mr. Harding's volume will probably take its place as the standard account of events extremely important both in the history of the American theater and in that of the labor unions." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 130:50 Ja 8 '30 70w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 80w

St Louis 28:13 Ja '30

HARDING, LOUIS ALLEN, and WILLARD, ARTHUR CUTTS. Mechanical equipment of buildings; a reference book for engineers, architects, and contractors. 2d ed rev and enl 2v v 1, Heating and ventilation. 963p il $10 Wiley [50s Chapman]

690 Building. Anals for v.1: Heating. Ventilation (29-21532)

"This work is one of the recognized standard text books on the science of heating and ventilating. It combines the fundamentals upon which these sciences are based with the accepted practices. It is equally useful as a textbook and as a handbook. . . It also gives the results of numerous tests that have been made on equipment and materials within the last few years." Edward A. Ryan in the Engineering journal, Montreal, Dec., 1929

N Y New Tech Bks 15:7 Ja '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30

St Louis 28:71 Mr '30

HARDING, THOMAS SWANN. Fads, frauds and physicians; diagnosis and treatment of the doctors' dilemma. 409p $3.50 Dial press

610 Medicine—Practice. Medical ethics. Physicians. Quacks and quackery 30-31882

"In his long and impassioned plea for the substitution of State medicine for medical practice as it is at present carried on in this country, T. Swann Harding subjects physicians and surgeons, as well as those engaged in activities contributory to the profession of medicine, to severe criticism. . . Mr. Harding makes it clear that by State medicine he means that all medical practice should be under the supervision of the Federal Government."—N Y Times

"It is unfortunate Mr. Harding did not have time to write a shorter book. By leaving out repetitions and irrelevancies he might have presented a succinct and far more persuasive argument." Logan Clendening

— Books p4 D 7 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 600w

"Despite obvious self-restraint, he lambastes all of them with lusty vigor. The author frequently quotes written opinions of members of the profession he attacks to substantiate his allegations, and he rewards those individuals whose expressed views he uses to endorse his contentions with figurative pats on the back which may not be welcomed when the recipients realize that they have been made parties to wholesale condemnation and castigation." Van Buren Thorne

N Y Times p6 D 21 '30 1200w

HARDMAN, SIR WILLIAM. Hardman papers, a further selection, 1865-1868; from [his] letters and memoirs; ed. and annot. by S. M. Ellis. 358p il $5 Smith, R.R. [21s Constable]

B or 92 Great Britain—Social life and customs [30-20838]

"The third instalment of selections from Sir William Hardman's letters and diaries, the first two having been called 'A Mid-Victorian Pepys' and 'Letters and Memoirs of Sir William Hardman.' The period covered in this volume is but three years, April, 1865, to April, 1868. Hardman presents those three years of his life to you intact, in the round; you can, if you like, relive them with him, eat his dinners, and crack his jokes with George Meredith, and John Morley, and Shirley Brooks."—Nation and Ath

"Sir William Hardman was a lively letter writer, but any one who has read the two volumes of extracts from his letters and diaries which have already been published will be likely to feel that the present volume does not add much to Hardman's reputation." William MacDonald

Books p9 Ag 31 '30 850w

Christian Science Monitor p4 Jl 5 '30 400w

"Luckily we do not all like and dislike the same people, and there will be people to whom Hardman will seem charming and sympathetic. I find him a nasty creature. But that does not prevent me getting a great deal of pleasure reliving his life with him, watching the slow procession of the months of the years 1865, 1866, and 1867 through the eyes of this fat, stupid, cultured, lascivious, respectable, narrow, mean little mind." Leonard Woolf

— + Nation and Ath 46:542 Ja 18 '30 750w

"Hardman was a man of essentially mediocre attainments and of an extremely restricted outlook, but the picture which he gives of himself is not altogether an unattractive one. He shared many of the prejudices of the rich men of his period, confessed to a partiality for cock-fighting, loved a good dinner and a bad story, was mildly interested in literature, had a fondness for amateur theatricals and hated Radicals as he did not hate the world, the flesh or the devil."

New Statesman 34:508 Ja 25 '30 500w

"Here is a full-blooded man of the world, overflowing with the joy of life, relishing and detailing the most Rabelaisian of stories (the book is full of them), going everywhere, and meeting or hearing about everyone that mattered, and then sitting down to write about it all with the liveliest of pens, and not a particle of restraint, to an intimate correspondent in Australia. The book is throughout entertaining in the highest degree—perhaps it appeals more to the manly palate—and is lucidly and usefully edited by Mr. S. M. Ellis."

+ Spec 144:166 F 1 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p53 Ja 23 '30

Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 900w 700w

HARDY, FLORENCE EMILY (DUGDALE) (MRS THOMAS HARDY). Later years of Thomas Hardy, 1892-1928. 289p il $5 (18s) Macmillan

B or 92 Hardy, Thomas 30-11943

The first volume of Mrs Hardy's biography of her husband covered the period of his novel-writing. The second and concluding volume, after a brief account of the reception of Tess and Jude the Obscure, and the close of Hardy's prose work, comprises his career as a poet, a period of about thirty years.

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

"Though dull as narrative, the biography is invaluable as a source book. . . Most valuable to the critic are the records of Hardy's thoughts about his work, particularly about the philosophy underlying The Dynasts." A. R. Thompson

+ Bookm 71:553 Ag '30 550w

"In contrast to Mrs. Hardy's first volume this narrative of the later years contains singularly few lively and quotable anecdotes. Reticence, though one sympathizes with Mrs. Hardy's desire to maintain it, has been carried a little too far. It would have enlivened the narrative, and have done no harm to any one." Samuel Chew

Books p5 Je 1 '30 1380w

HARDY, F. E.—Continued
Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p2 My 17 '30 1700w
Cath World 132:245 N '30 450w

"She gives us many an intimate detail concerning his method of work, particularly the later novels and the poems, and she is quick to emphasize the countless little influences that contributed to it. That is why, with this volume and the previous one, she has added another memorable picture to the gallery in which is depicted that most fascinating of beings, the great artist in his workshop. If ever a portrait suggested greatness, it is this of Hardy." Thomas Moult
+ Christian Science Monitor p5 My 31 '30 570w

"Mrs. Hardy's biography, of which this is the second and concluding volume, seems to be little more than a chronicle of her husband's thoughts and movements as he himself recorded them in his journal. But she makes up for the meagerness of her method by having a great man to reveal, and she reveals him, or allows him to reveal himself, with a most interesting fulness." Mark Van Doren
+ — Nation 130:680 Je 11 '30 800w

"Mrs. Hardy, with 'The Later Years of Thomas Hardy, 1892-1928.' completes a biography of which the precision and refusal to rhapsodize are such as the subject would have admired, and the new multitude of theatrical daubers in biography would do well to study. No doubt the advantage of direct information is considerable; at any rate, here we are not involved in a medley of worked-up scenery and ostentatious, presuming accounts of what the man concerned was thinking at a particular moment of his life." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 47:174 My 10 '30 1400w
Reviewed by Gerald Skyes
New Repub 64:160 S 24 '30 600w

"Mrs. Hardy attempts no fine writing; she is utterly self-effacing; as far as possible she lets the story tell itself in the words of Hardy's letters or diaries, or in the notes he jotted down for her special use. The narrative and explanation of events are simple, even naive, but never crude. The author's sympathy is so complete that it never obtrudes itself. She seems perfectly sure of her ground, her assertions being limited to what she knows. It is a modest though quite confident record of one of the most modest great men who ever lived." R. A. Scott-James
+ New Statesman 35:120 My 3 '30 1600w

"The new volume sustains the unity of the previous one, the unity of a truly great personality; if the personal revelation is more frequently through comment and thought, and conscious contacts with men and society, it is not less spontaneous and individual."
+ N Y Evening Post p7e My 11 '30 1500w

"We close the book with a distinct feeling of gratitude for the privilege of living and thinking with so monumental a man as Thomas Hardy. Valuable as Mrs. Hardy's biography is, it is doubtful if these books will materially dissolve the fog of misunderstanding which still hovers about the name of Thomas Hardy." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p9m My 24 '30 500w

"These two volumes on Thomas Hardy, the first including many of the reminiscences of the first Mrs. Hardy, who died in 1912, are a living monument to one of the greatest writers in the history of English literature. Lovingly, but never sentimentally done; illuminating from the first page to the last, and conducted throughout with the dignity which befits the object of the narrative, they form one of the most distinguished biographies anywhere to be found." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p5 My 11 '30 1450
Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 650w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:68 My 14 '30 30w
Pratt p35 autumn '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 Je '30 80w
Reviewed by Osbert Burdett
Sat R 149:559 My 3 '30 1150w

"Mrs. Hardy, by her careful laying together of extracts from his journals, notes and letters, and by her revealing commentary, has made him live for us. We see him in all his gentleness and courtesy, with the strange hint of haunted solitude and horror occasionally glinting in his shy eyes. For some reasons which I cannot explain, I find the picture poignantly sad, and I close the book feeling overcome with a sense of heartache and loneliness. It may be because I loved his work so much." Richard Church
+ Spec 144:sup823 My 17 '30 1100w.
Times [London] Lit Sup p367 My 1 '30 2200w
Reviewed by Wilbur Cross
Yale R n s 20:175 autumn '30 800w

HARDY, H. F. H. Good gun dogs. 91p il $6
² Scribner [15s Country life]
636.75 Dogs

"Captain Hardy offers in his book on dogs a readable, rambling discussion of the choosing, training and handling of animals, with many reminiscences of incidents of the field. The American reader, accustomed to the predominance of the setter and pointer as gun dogs, finds that Captain Hardy barely mentions these breeds, but has much that is interesting to say of retrievers, clumber and Irish water spaniels." —N Y Times

"Clearer than any words can do, the splendid drypoints of G. Vernon Stokes, R.B.A., depict the various breeds. Beyond being mere portraits, these sketches are charming sporting scenes."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 320w

"His advice on training of dogs is particular and sound. He is a stickler for the proper manner of handling the retriever and has the expert's impatience with the bungler. Whoever has the management of dogs will benefit by this understanding, if short, discussion of them." C. M. Puckett
+ N Y Times p10 Ja 4 '31 100w

"No owner of a sporting dog could desire a better guide. He is a little inadequate, if not inaccurate, in accounts of origin, as of the golden retriever, and says too little about whistled notes; but on technique and principles of field training he is almost above criticism."
+ — Spec 145:913 D 6 '30 220w

"The whole book, while not teaching, or professing to teach, any novelty, will be a delightful possession to those who love dogs, enhanced as it is by the charming dry-points of Mr. Vernon Stokes."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1078 D 18 '30 800w

HARE, KENNETH, ed. Archer's chronicle and greenwood companion. 244p il $4 Dutton [15s Williams & N.]
820.8 Archery. English literature—Collections [30-31025]

A chronological arrangement of selections in verse and prose that have to do with the sport of archery. There are a few extracts from classical literature on the subject; the majority of the pieces are gleaned from fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth century writings. Among the "moderns" represented are Keats and Shelley, Lord Byron, Maurice Thompson, and Rider Haggard.

"Although very few today have even the most casual interest in the ancient sport of the long bow, the subject provides an excuse for another picking over of the plummiest parts of English literature. . . It fulfills the highest function of anthologies, that of sending one hot-foot to read its sources."
+ Bookm 72:xxvi S '30 100w

"Mr. Hare's whimsical and alluring title admirably suits the quaint, utterly unmodern book he has made. Turning its leaves one steps into another world, and, if one cares about that kind of thing, is quickly so absorbed in it that he forgets the twentieth century and all its works. Mr. Hare has yielded himself to its fascinations and evidently has had a most enjoyable time collecting and putting together the material that composes his anthology of archery. The happiness he has had in it gleams all through his long introduction."
+ N Y Times p20 Ag 10 '30 200w

"Charmingly got up, with exceptionally good type. The illustrations, particularly the engraving of Queen Victoria shooting an arrow into the air in elegant but most uncomfortable clothes, are delightful. We feel that the essence of the romance of the forest and the greenwood is found here distilled. It should have a select but devoted public."
+ Spec 143:928 D 14 '29 80w

HARGREAVES, SHEBA. Heroine of the prairies; a romance of the Oregon trail. 288p $2 Harper

Oregon trail—Fiction 30-23198

The year 1930 is the one hundredth anniversary of the opening of the Oregon trail. This romance of the trail in its early days is mainly the story of Salita Prentiss and her brave fight to establish a home.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books O 26 '30 80w

"Miss Hargreaves presents an authentic picture of those days of a century ago, her picture of an old-time frontier settlement being particularly realistic. With this interesting period of our country's history as a background, a winsome heroine and a clever, well-worked plot, the 'Heroine of the Prairies' is both entertaining and instructive." J. C. G.
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 500w

"Miss Hargreaves writes with a sure knowledge of her historical background and her characters. Starting with an unusual situation, her plot is well conceived and smoothly developed, but she has failed signally in infusing her romance with that feeling of life which would make it a vital, thrilling epic of the plains. It is a clean, vigorous narrative, notable more for its historical significance, its local color and its types than as fiction."
+ — N Y Times p6 S 28 '30 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p921 N 6 '30 220w

HARING, CHESTER E. Manufacturer and his outlets; foreword by Roy S. Durstine. 190p $3 Harper

658.87 Retail trade 29-30184

"A volume originally written for the executives and salesmen of a large manufacturing concern and intended to give them, as briefly as would be consistent, with clarity and accuracy, a picture of present-day retailing, the causes which have produced it, and its probable future. Based mainly on personal observation and study during twenty years in the advertising agency business, but also on standard books on economics and marketing. Deals with general retailing problems and those of the various types of stores, presenting the subject with the minimum of personal bias."—J Home Econ

---

"A clear and readable account of the various types of agencies' selling commodities."
+ Am Econ R 20:115 Mr '30 50w

Reviewed by D. R. Cowan
Am Econ R 20:303 Je '30 350w

"Omission of a careful consideration of the specific effects of the changing nature of outlets upon the manufacturer and the inadequate treatment of voluntary chains, is regrettable. The volume should appeal to those in contact with the field of marketing who have not had the opportunity to study closely its broader aspects." R. F. Breyer
+ — Ann Am Acad 148:299 Mr '30 130w

Booklist 26:301 My '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '30

J Home Econ 22:318 Ap '30 100w

"Engaged neither in making nor selling products as a personal occupation, Mr. Haring has studied the problems of retailing for the past twenty years from the viewpoint of advertising. There is not a line of theory in his book, but page after page of vital facts. What he has to say has importance not merely to the manufacturer but to everybody interested in the operations of the business machine—and that means you and me." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 81:16 F '30 230w

St Louis 28:71 Mr '30

HARINGTON, SIR JOHN. Letters and epigrams; together with The prayse of private life; ed. with an introd. by Norman Egbert McClure; foreword by Felix E. Schelling. 438p $5 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [21s Oxford]

828 30-14691

These sixty-two letters by Sir John Harington, Elizabethan man of letters, reflect many interesting aspects of Elizabethan life, and include Harington's reports of his interviews with Queen Elizabeth and with King James. The poems and epigrams reveal him as a shrewd and witty commentator on the times.

Boston Transcript p2 Je 28 '30 300w

"Exceedingly well edited with notes scholarly and sufficient. . . The introduction deals with Harrington's life and works in greater detail than has ever been done before."
+ New Repub 65:117 D 10 '30 200w

"To students of the Elizabethan age, Sir John Harington, with his 'damnable uncovered honesty,' will always be an interesting figure. The letters which Professor McClure has collected put the reader in possession of some priceless pages which hitherto have been hard to come at."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p697 S 4 '30 2150w

HARPER, THEODORE ACLAND, and HAR-
² PER, MRS WINIFRED MARY (HUNTER-BROWN). His Excellency and Peter. 313p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-31491

A story of Russia, written for older boys and girls. It deals with the building of the Trans-Siberian Railway, and Russia during the years between the Russo-Japanese war and the outbreak of the World war. Peter, the small boy who appeared in Siberian Gold, is the hero. He is now fifteen and goes to school, learns to know some of the revolutionaries and almost joins them, but remains loyal to his Excellency the governor, and to Stephen Wyld, engineer, for whom he has a regard amounting almost to adoration.

Booklist 27:212 Ja '31

"The theme is interesting, with Russian conditions of those times well presented. There is action and adventure and it is a rattling good story." A. L. S.
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 120w

"An interesting and excellent, though rather complicated story." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 200w

HARRIGAN, MILDRED H. Traveling light. 265p $2 Brentano's

914 France—Description and travel. Switzerland—Description and travel. Italy—Description and travel 30-3441

"How to see southeastern France, Switzerland and northern Italy economically, independently and enjoyably." (Subtitle) "A convenient, concise guide-book for the traveler who would see

HARRIGAN, M. H.—Continued
Europe at extremely moderate cost. A suggested itinerary for forty-four days is included as well as practical suggestions about money, baggage, passports, steamships, and other details." (Booklist)

Booklist 26:308 My '30
Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xxiii Ap '30 140w
Books p18 Mr 2 '30 150w
Reviewed by Halsey Raines
N Y Times p14 Ag 3 '30 80w
World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 40w

HARRINGTON, MILDRED P., comp. Ring-a-
^{2} round. 250p il $3 Macmillan
821.08 Children's poetry 30-28636

An anthology of poems for children. The authors include James Stephens, Walter De la Mare, William Blake, Kate Greenaway, Christina Rossetti, Vachel Lindsay, Carl Sandburg, and Robert Louis Stevenson.

Booklist 27:212 Ja '31

"Such a volume (it is excellently printed and illustrated) if read to youngsters frequently enough cannot fail to imbue them with a genuine love for good poetry."
+ Bookm 72:xxvii D '30 80w

"It is a book that has grown slowly at the demand of and subject to the approval of a real family of small children, niece and nephews of the editor, who was eager to arouse in them a love of fine poetry that will lead them later to explore the wealth of the world's great poetry. It is destined to become a standard work in the nursery, one that mothers, eager to give little hearts and minds the best, will appreciate."
+ Cath World 132:506 Ja '31 200w

"The book is interesting in that it is one of the first, if not the first, collected verse of a really high quality for pre-school age. It would be a difficult child, indeed, who failed to find food for his poetical fancy here." Rachel Field
+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 100w

"The editor has displayed splendid taste and judgment. . . Surely, out of this fat book 'the youngest children,' for whom, as the jacket recommends, this book is meant, as 'very first reading,' will draw treasures that will haunt their lives and color them." Daisy Neumann
+ Sat R of Lit 7:476 D 20 '30 280w

HARRIS, FRANK. My reminiscences as a cowboy (Eng title: On the trail). (Paper bks.) 216p il 75c Boni, C. [7s 6d Lane]

"It will no doubt be news to most readers that Frank Harris was once a cowboy on the Western plains. . . It was in the year 1870-1871 that Frank Harris, then 17 years of age, was partner to a Texas cattle 'king,' and rode herd and fought Mexicans and Indians. . . It is only a vivid memory now to a man past his threescore and ten, basking in the sunshine of the Riviera."—N Y Times

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y World p10m Mr 30 '30

"The book is more interesting as a glimpse into the early life of Frank Harris than as a picture of the early West. He remembers well what happened to him and the impressions made upon him by others, but he does not picture a country or a society very adequately. It is as though the backgrounds had faded with the years, leaving events and characters in stark relief." Harvey Fergusson
+ — Books p3 Mr 30 '30 600w

" 'My Reminiscences as a Cowboy,' by Frank Harris, is the most absurd farrago of falsities I have ever read. . . If he was ever a cowboy—and there is not so much as one homely metaphor of the soil or one fresh fact to show that he once rode the range—his memories of the experience have become so dim that in writing he found himself obliged to construct rather than arrange them. The construction is about as convincing as the most strained Western thriller." J. F. Dobie
— Nation 130:425 Ap 9 '30 450w

" 'My Reminiscences as a Cowboy' is different from the usual Wild West book in that there is no heightening of style, no especial attempt at drama, no dialect, not even an attempt to reproduce the vocabulary of the cow-puncher. It is a quiet memory, rapidly flowing, enjoyable in the reading." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p5 Mr 2 '30 1300w

"Liberally sprinkled with marauding Indians, sinister Mexicans, buffalo hunts, rides for life, pistol and knife fights, the story of this trip is as exciting as Mr. Harris intended it to be—and it is also a graphic, straightforward story of life on the plains. Well worth reading." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:427 Mr 12 '30 120w
Spec 145:320 S 6 '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p4 Ap 7 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p732 S 18 '30 600w

HARRIS, HENRY WILSON. League of nations. (New lib.) 127p 60c Cape [pa 6d Benn]
341.1 League of nations 30-12889

"The little volume sets forth in very brief but accurate and attractive form the essential facts concerning the League: its beginnings and aims, its working mechanism, its technical tasks and humanitarian work. Mandates, armament, and the preservation of peace are discussed, and the book concludes with an estimate of this agency for international coöperation."—Am Pol Sci R

Am Pol Sci R 24:523 My '30 120w

"While little new is given here, yet the essential facts are presented so clearly and so interestingly that the book serves an admirable purpose especially for the busy person, who, though not a historian, is none the less interested in the larger problems of present day international relations."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 260w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:18 Mr '30 180w

HARRIS, MURIEL. Seventh gate. 340p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Cape, J.]
30-8166

This book, the winner in an English prize novel contest, has for its theme the psychological theory of sublimation of sex impulses. Catherine Troon, a spinster and music teacher, learns of sublimation by reading an article on the subject by a certain Dr Risaleur. Following a bump on the head, Catherine undergoes an amazing transformation: she becomes very lovely and develops a wonderful voice. Everyone falls in love with her, even Dr Risaleur. The shock of this last is too much, and Catherine drops dead on the stage—a melodramatic gesture worthy of the Trilby whom, in her meteoric career, she so closely resembles.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

"The book, despite the ingenious variation of the Trilby theme on which it is based and the close observation on which even the least important scenes are grounded, does not quite come off. Over-elaboration of detail, which only talent of a high order such as Virginia Woolf possesses could make endurable, frets the reader's patience; and long before the story has approached its climax the reader's interest has evaporated." Guy Holt
— Bookm 71:475 Jl '30 200w

"You cannot quite believe in Miss Troon, the old maid, the bedraggled duckling when a fortuitous blow on the head combines with her inner dreams to turn her into a full-throated swan. Yet partially baked as the idea appears, it is woven into a story of such live people that it almost convinces you. At least it leads you down the channels of curious fancy." V. P. Ross

+ — Books p4 Mr 30 '30 580w

Boston Transcript p8 My 10 '30 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

"Anyone who can write a novel as generally intelligent as 'The Seventh Gate,' and throw in humour too, deserves £1,000—but, like many prize poems, prize essays, and prize beauties, 'The Seventh Gate' is just a little dull." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 46:774 Mr 8 '30 300w

"That the force of sex might be diverted and harnessed to some other use, and turn a drab woman into a beauty and a genius (though a sexless one), is the fantastic theme of The Seventh Gate, and if the treatment of it does not make for interest on every page of a book that is a little too long, it does make for a good deal of interesting reaction on character. The imaginative theme is pinned down to earth by an engaging realism of character and conversation."

+ — New Statesman 34:742 Mr 15 '30 200w

"The author runs away from her main problem. The practical consequences of Catherine's rejuvenation are neither met nor developed. . . Miss Harris has the equipment to write a highly entertaining story, for she has something of the Arnold Bennett touch and sense of the incongruous." Horace Coon

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 600w

"It is presented so quietly and conventionally, with a skill so natural and unobtrusive, that one almost fails to realize the startling character of the thesis. . . The fantastic plot has been woven by Miss Harris into a clever and absorbing novel. Her style is graceful and uniformly adequate, and a variety of entertaining minor characterizations testify the fertility of her invention."

+ N Y Times p19 Ap 6 '30 650w

"Silly as the theme is, the book holds the reader's attention. The author writes with a refreshing, malicious humor, and builds round characters."

+ Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 80w

"The book though a little dull in spots is amusing. There is a nice sense of humor about the doings of the 'B Flat Club' and the 'Tired Teachers' as well as in the racial differences between the French and the English. It is a competent piece of writing; nothing startling or extraordinary. Its chief value lies in its gorgeously preposterous theme, over which the author gets so excited at times that she forgets she is only fooling." Bellamy Partridge

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:924 Ap 12 '30 650w

"Miss Harris is an able writer [illegible]d her swift character sketches of the people who make up Catharine's old and new world are vivid and clever. All the same the hotch-potch of fantasy and realism with which the author attempts to prove that physical and mental miracles may be performed by faith is not at all convincing."

+ — Spec 144:791 My 10 '30 220w

"Ideas of a scientific—or even of a pseudo-scientific—character are rarely handled as satisfactorily in a novel as in Miss Muriel Harris's The Seventh Gate. . . It is a tribute to the author's narrative technique that she has built up a credible and lively story on her main assumption. Her manner is a little subdued and tentative at times, but she writes with humor, insight, and a keen sense of the discontents and frustrations of life."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Mr 27 '30 500w

HARRISON, BRUCE. A-100. 249p $2 Dutton
30-22207

Near the bodies of three murdered in the quiet neighborhood of Cedar Street Inspector Dan Golan finds scrawled in chalk, "A-100." The strange fear of a pet monkey in the shop of Professor Schmidt, one of the victims, finally gives the detective a clue in the case.

"Mr. Harrison's light touch might well be combined with slightly weightier material." Will Cuppy

Books p12 S 21 '30 100w

"It is in no way a remarkable novel, but the plot is intricate enough and the interest so well sustained that the reader's attention is held till at last the puzzle is solved and the guilt laid at the door where it belongs."

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 250w

"Readable and fairly ingenious mystery tale." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p22 O 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:349 O 29 '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 100w

HARRISON, CHARLES YALE. Generals die in bed. 269p $2.50 Morrow [7s 6d Douglas]
30-16259

A private in the Canadian army tells this brutal story of his experiences in the war. The narrative consists chiefly of incidents in the life of these men who made up the shock troops of the British army thruout the war, life in the trenches, on leave in London, etc.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"His short, stabbing sentences, his utter economy in sentiment as well as statement, and his ability at presenting a sudden contrast or a biting irony, force home a picture of the war which is brutal and terrible, but which bears the unalterable stamp of truth. He never pauses to preach; there is nothing in the book which gives the appearance of having been set down in rancor; and he never romanticizes either the heroism or the horror of war. He is content to set down as tersely and as vividly as possible the actions, the talk and the expressed emotions of the Canadian soldier. . . Within the limits he has set he has written a book that stands out among a host of other war books for its honesty and its reality." Lambert Davis

+ Books p6 Je 15 '30 450w

Christian Century 47:1015 Ag 20 '30 100w

"The value of Charles Yale Harrison's sketches of trench warfare lies in the fact that the author is convincingly anonymous. Beyond his gift for writing rapid-fire, hard-hitting prose, Mr. Harrison has the knack of submerging his personality in the lives of his fellow-privates serving as Canadian shock troops on the British front line. If after reading 'Generals Die in Bed' you have any enthusiasm left for the glorious aspects of modern warfare, you have a strong and excessively non-realistic imagination." Horace Gregory

+ Nation 131:71 Jl 16 '30 350w

"A fresh, downright piece of writing, unpretentious but thoroughly efficient." Lionel Trilling

+ New Repub 63:296 Jl 23 '30 100w

"The story may be nothing more than a poison memory which the author had to expel from his system, but the directness and economy of its style suggest that Mr. Harrison might write unusually well about Canadian life under normal conditions."

New Statesman 35:316 Je 14 '30 160w

"The book is written with a masculine, hobnailed abruptness, that is quite the nearest thing to the rhythm of the ordinary, vermin ridden, starved, bullied and generally miserable buck private. The descriptions of the passages through this particular hell are admirable." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 200w

"One of the most notable books on the war that has appeared in English. This material Mr. Harrison has wrought with beauty and unsparing purpose into a rounded and (granting him his own hard-earned war bias) always actively challenging whole." L. C. Woodman

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 3 '30 450w

N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 180w

HARRISON, C. Y.—Continued

"It is extremely vivid; the author picks out a few startling episodes, and, so to speak, fires like a machine gun, in rattling volleys. . . The book as a whole suffers from constant literary explosiveness, but one reads it breathlessly." R. D. Townsend

+ — Outlook 155:268 Je 18 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

Sat R 150:150 Ag 2 '30 280w

Reviewed by E. G. Taylor

Sat R of Lit 6:1123 Je 14 '30 250w

"From the Canadian barracks with their 'heavy odour of stale booze and women,' as described on the first page, we are frog-marched to a war, the bestiality and horror of which are so emphasized that the author's sincere and passionate desire to do what he can to prevent its recurrence is entirely defeated." Vernon Bartlett

— Spec 144:981 Je 14 '30 130w

"It would be too much to say that this book brings home the full ghastliness and horror of warfare, for it is doubtful whether any book has ever been able to do that; but it is certain that few readers will be able to follow Mr. Harrison's series of gruesome pictures without a feeling of utter repugnance at the barbarity of what has been ironically termed 'civilized conflict.'" S. A. Coblentz

World Tomorrow 13:377 S '30 320w

HARRISON, ELIZABETH. Sketches along life's road; ed. by Carolyn Sherwin Bailey. 227p il $3.50 Stratford

B or 92 Kindergarten 30-15092

The autobiography of Elizabeth Harrison, a pioneer in kindergarten education in the United States, founder of the National kindergarten and elementary college in Chicago, and author of many books on child study.

"A chronicle as constructive as it is candid, as sane as it is optimistic." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Jl 12 '30 1280w

N Y Times p24 Je 22 '30 400w

HARRISON, MARJORIE. Go west—go wise! a Canadian revelation. 308p il $3 Longmans [7s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]

917.1 Canada [30-27847]

An enterprising young London journalist visited Canada for two or three months and has written a vivid account of her impressions of the conditions and people.

Reviewed by R. M. Fox

Nation and Ath 48:20 O 4 '30 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"Miss Harrison went to Canada to see things for herself, and she is of opinion that the country has reached a stage when the truth may be told. Her 'revelation' will not be altogether pleasing to 100 per cent. Canadians, who will think that the picture she gives of the hardships of life, especially for women in the lonely places, overdrawn."

Sat R 149:597 My 10 '30 300w

"Her sincerity and good sense are very pleasant. The title is, perhaps, not as alluring as it is meant to be, but readers who are not annoyed by its spurious brightness will find the contents of the book worth more than it may lead them to expect. . . It contains useful information for prospective settlers in the West, and it offers shrewd comments and practical advice."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p405 My 15 '30 700w

HARRISON, WARD; HAAS, O. F.; and REID, KIRK MENDENHALL. Street lighting practice. 270p il $3.50 McGraw

628.9 Street-lighting 30-14377

"Subject matter here covered ranges from problems of a purely engineering character . . . to problems of contractual relations, of methods of financing, of maintenance provisions, and even of the history of street illumination."—Pref.

Booklist 27:54 O '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

St Louis 28:211 S '30

HARROW, BENJAMIN. Making of chemistry. 223p $2 Day

540.9 Chemistry—History 30-6166

A history of chemistry for the layman with no professional knowledge of the subject, told largely in terms of the personal activities of great chemists, with special emphasis on modern industrial chemistry and its contribution to the intellectual and material development of our times.

Booklist 26:301 My '30

Bookm 71:iv Ag '30 180w

"It is superficial and amateur, not to be compared with the excellent books that Professor Harrow has previously published." Gerald Wendt

— Books p15 F 23 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p56 Ap '30

Reviewed by F. B. Dains

Ind & Eng Chem 22:565 My '30 400w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:17 Ap '30

"Mr. Harrow has a peculiar gift for the simple and clarifying presentation of scientific matters, as he has shown in several previous books dealing with chemical knowledge of one sort or another. He can always make his subject interesting to the general reader without sacrificing scientific accuracy. This gift is especially manifest in this new book."

+ N Y Times p20 F 9 '30 380w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30

Pratt p15 summer '30

St Louis 28:135 My '30

HART, BASIL HENRY LIDDELL. See Liddell Hart, B. H.

HART, FRANCIS RUSSELL. Disaster of Darien; the story of the Scots settlement and the causes of its failure, 1699-1701. 433p il $5 Houghton [18s Constable]

986 Darien expedition. Company of Scotland trading to Africa and the Indies. Scotch in America. Paterson, William 29-27913

A monograph which tells the story of the Scottish attempt, at the close of the seventeenth century, to found a colony in Darien, and its disastrous failure at the hands of Spanish interests on the Isthmus. The appendices contain contemporary letters and other material of interest concerning the Scottish expedition.

"Mr. Hart's monograph is complete and concise. It will prove of lasting value to the student of history and it provides in one volume the materials for future historians. It does adequate justice to a little known but extremely important episode in the history of the Americas and one of the few occasions when the whole Scottish nation lost money." William McFee

+ Books p10 Ja 26 '30 750w

"Probably the most interesting thing about this book is that it gives, from wholly new Spanish sources the Spanish point of view, not only on the Darien matter, but incidentally on the Spanish feeling toward their prerogatives in the New World in general. . . The Darien adventure lies buried in the sands of Panama, but here its very dust is brought to life." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 7 '29 2050w

"A careful study of this subject is of value to both the student of English and Spanish colonial history. But the author of this work has presented much of his material in a way which does not inspire the confidence of the reader. Apparently he lacks the courage of his convictions, for he uses many qualifying expressions, which seem hardly necessary. Moreover, his knowledge of Spanish accents seems very scant, and his acquaintance with certain facts in Spanish colonial history is open to question." A. C. Wilgus

— Hist Outlook 21:185 Ap '30 600w

"A narrative of much human interest and of value to students of the history of Central America and the Spanish Main. . . Mr. Hart has added some contributions of his own drawn from Spanish sources, so that his book offers new material from a very different view-point, as well as selects, organizes and presents in accordance with the methods of modern scholarship the already known facts and events of the enterprise."
+ N Y Times p20 F 9 '30 350w
Pratt p36 spring '30

"Mr. Hart's is by far the best work on the subject which has been produced: type, printing, and illustrations are all excellent." Frank Cundall
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1045 My 17 '30 700w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 1150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p646 Ag 14 '30 1050w

HART, JAMES S., and BYRNES, GARRETT D. Scoop. 310p $2 Little 30-4847

A story of newspaper life by two Rhode Island journalists. Snakes Shiel, star reporter, is sentenced to ten days in jail for driving his car while drunk. In prison he runs across evidence of political scandal concerning the practices of a certain judge in dealing with pardons for convicts—a story which Shiel follows up for his paper. The campaign for reform and justice is considerably complicated when Shiel falls in love with the sister of a murderer whose freedom has just been bought.

"It is brisk, vigorous, credible, and as romantic as are newspaper men themselves; if they weren't, they wouldn't keep on being newspaper men, much less write books about their kaleidoscopic world. And undoubtedly it will appeal to young men from the provinces who want to see how life ticks in a City Room." Mary Ross
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p28 Mr '30 120w
Reviewed by Guy Holt
Bookm 71:239 Ap '30 100w

"Knowing whereof they write, through years of experience in the pressrooms and cities of which they tell, the authors have made of this, their first novel, a singularly moving story. There is no moment of inaction, but an inevitable progress which retains the absorbing suspense of the unexpected. As frank and clearcut in its speech as in its story, this is essentially a man's book."
+ Boston Transcript p5 F 15 '30 120w

"Though in spots trashy and too sensational, this story gives an authentic picture of contemporary newspaper life, as well as exposing a new racket in the field of political graft." E. C. B.
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 230w

"The authors, James S. Hart and Garrett D. Byrnes, have been far more interested in their melodramatic and intermittently exciting tale than in the business of journalism in general. They have written carelessly, for the most part, with sketchy characterization and a deal of matter superfluous to the main narrative. The story is punctuated, however, with passages of racy brilliance, making it, as romantic melodrama, a promising first work."
+ — N Y Times p7 F 23 '30 380w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 80w

"It should be said at once that those who are waiting for the appearance of the great newspaper novel will not find it here. Read or not 'Scoop' will probably be made into a movie. It is very full of plot and almost devoid of characterization. Unfortunately our authors felt it necessary to insert a love interest. When they start in on Snakes's love life the tale becomes sticky as well as absurd. But that won't matter to Hollywood."
— Sat R of Lit 6:809 Mr 8 '30 350w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 180w

HARTMANN, LOUIS. Theatre lighting; a manual of the stage switchboard; foreword by David Belasco. (Am. theatre manuals) 138p il $2 (5s) Appleton
792 Theaters—Lighting 30-7123

An historical summary of the progress of the art of stage lighting in recent years. The author, who has been Belasco's chief electrician since 1901, gives also much practical information on the technicalities of lighting effects, useful for amateur producers. Illustrated with drawings and diagrams. Annotated bibliography.

Booklist 27:18 S '30
Bookm 72:xiv D '30 200w
Boston Transcript p4 Ap 5 '30 180w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30
Pratt p25 autumn '30

"His historical summary of the development of stage lighting is excellent in its way and is backed up by a nice sense of the general development of the theatre during the period of his own practical experience."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p396 My 8 '30 160w

HARTZ, RUTHERFURD S., and HALL, ELZOR E. Airplane mechanics rigging handbook. (Ronald aeronautic ser.) 267p il $3.50 Ronald [15s Simpkin]
629.181 Airplanes. Parachutes 30-3743

Thoroly practical manual in non-technical language, on the rigging, maintenance, inspection, and repair of airplanes. Includes details on the care and packing of parachutes.

Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:15 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30
St Louis 28:100 Ap '30

"In addition to telling all about rigging and 'trouble-shooting' the authors have collected and arranged a mass of information about fabric, wood parts, metal fittings, wire and dopes and doping. . . The language is nontechnical, and theory as such has been omitted. The instructions are in detail."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 F 5 '30 180w

HAŠEK, JAROSLAV. Good soldier: Schweik; tr. by Paul Selver. (Griffin ser.) 448p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Heinemann]
30-5693

"The author was a Czech journalist. Returning to Prague after a long period of war-imprisonment in Russia, he began in 1916 the weekly publication of this chronicle of the military exploits of an incredibly simple-hearted and gullible Czech rear-rank private soldier from the streets of Prague, who with ostentatiously selfless loyalty served meticulously, ridiculously, the various kinds of shoulder-strapped fools commanding him. In all continental Europe, especially in Czechoslovakia and Germany, they are holding their sides over this book; though it enrages the militarists and the martinets of all the armies because it exhibits the screaming absurdity of the people and business of war. . . It was the author's intention to continue the series; he died leaving Schweik just arrived on the Russian front."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"Schweik, who is in the tradition of Falstaff, Mr. Pickwick, Uncle Toby and Mr. Dooley, fought the war in detention camps, in hospitals—anywhere but the front line. His ingra-

HASEK, JAROSLAV—Continued
tiating idiocy leads him into many diversified mishaps. There is an undercurrent of bitterness and satire that is not too subtle."
Bookm 71:xxvii Mr '30 70w

"It's an excellent war book for a pipe and a peaceful evening. Higher praise than this no one can give." Eugene Lohrke
+ Books p5 F 9 '30 750w

"Hasek, a prolific writer even before the war, has a sense of the ludicrous which would seem to be international. In Germany the story is said to have met unusual popularity in book, play, and moving picture, and Schweik to have become an archetype."
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 8 '30 300w
Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

"If you like wholehearted burlesque with the material picked up pell-mell in generous buckets, squirming, vigorous and with lots of sap, this is your book. This is a long book and its greatest virtue is its fundamental humanity, its good nature. It casts a spell. You can bury yourself in it." C. A. Chapman
+ New Repub 63:26 My 21 '30 220w

"Many of Hasek's shots are mildly effective, but they are hidden in the stretches of unimportant (to an American) incident. The whole story of Schweik's adventures is diffuse, watered. The fate of Schweik on this side of the Atlantic will be an interesting commentary on just how 'national' humor is."
— N Y Times p7 F 16 '30 700w

Reviewed by Pierre Loving
N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 900w
Sat R 149:558 My 3 '30 500w

"It is intensely and intentionally funny, answer sufficient to any suggestion that the Czechs lack humor. Deliciously Rabelaisian in spots—a true satire. On the whole we have a new literary creation." J. P. Gavit
+ Sat R of Lit 6:733 F 15 '30 750w

"In Europe last summer the fame of this book had already crept from the Balkans through Austria and was beginning to be talked about in Paris and London. Schweik's distinction is precisely that he is so much the perfect soldier that everything he does and says has a slightly ironic suggestion until the whole institution of militarism begins to seem a little ridiculous. He is the nearest thing to Bardolph and Falstaff that this war produced."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:837 Mr 22 '30 170w

"Schweik is more than the hero of a somewhat Rabelaisian satire. He typifies the Czech resistance to the Austrian domination, and he is admirably drawn—even if the drawing is a caricature. Mr. Jaroslav Hasek has written both an epic and a satire."
+ Spec 145:361 S 13 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 320w
Times [London] Lit Sup p449 My 29 '30 560w

HASKINS, CHARLES HOMER. Studies in mediaeval culture. 295p $5 (18s) Oxford
940.1 Civilization, Medieval. Latin literature, Medieval and modern [30-8504]

A cross-section of mediaeval life—the court, the universities, sports, the Eastern question, alchemy, the Inquisition, sermons and heresies. Here is a record full of human interest by a mediaevalist of world-wide reputation. It is based not upon the full dress literature of the chronicles, but upon the unofficial Latin in which the students made jokes and the alchemists, recipes for gold.

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

"Professor Haskins is to be congratulated on the successful appearance of this volume, bringing up to date the labours of thirty years; and still more on the energetic scholarship which has enabled him to produce work beyond the reach of criticism and, as so little work can claim to be, immune from the corrosive touch of time." F. M. Powicke
+ Eng Hist R 45:478 Jl '30 650w

"The topics selected are in no way related, except as they are phases of the cultural life of the Middle Ages. By careful selection and arrangement of the materials, they have been moulded into a compact whole, possessing a well-balanced unity and community of ideas." L. W. Truman
+ Hist Outlook 21:294 O '30 750w

"Though some of these chapters have appeared in earlier form elsewhere, a number are new, and altogether they constitute an interesting volume on the Middle Ages. If some of them bear marks of having been undertaken by their author as incidental to larger problems, perhaps for that reason they seem to throw more illuminating side lights on the life and customs of their time. That they are the work of Charles H. Haskins is sufficient guarantee of their competence and scholarship." Christian Gauss
+ New Repub 63:50 My 28 '30 800w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 380w

"The Middle Ages to which Dr. Haskins has offered all his gifts, even health itself, are richly repaid in this work of real scholarship. True, it is a collection of articles from periodicals, with only a modicum of new material; but these articles have been revised up to the last possible moment with scrupulous care and great attention to details."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1092 D 26 '29 1150w

HASLETTE, JOHN, pseud. See Vahey, J. G. H.

HASTE, GWENDOLEN. Young land. (Songs
2 of today ser.) 75p $1 Coward-McCann
811 30-22346

Lyrics of various aspects of pioneer life in Montana. Miss Haste, who for ten years helped her father edit a Montana farm paper, knows well the country whereof she writes.

"Miss Haste lacks verbal distinction. Her work has the quality of a good photograph, necessary for a surface understanding of a kind of life that is rapidly disappearing from our continent, and her attempt to express the pathos and fear that motivated the lives of pioneer women is admirable." Horace Gregory
+ — Books p14 S 7 '30 230w

"These are no soft lyrics of a soft country. But they bring before one the beauties of that country—the colored buttes, the gray trails, the green valleys. 'Young Land' is a fairly arresting little book without rising to poetic heights." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 180w

"Gwendolyn Haste's method presents no difficulties though it yields no signal successes. She gathered her material through a knowledge of the people of modern Montana and a delving into the folklore of the state." W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:104 S 6 '30 550w

HATCH, ERIC. Romance prescribed. 280p $1 Farrar
30-21170

Jarnal Harvey was a young author who thought very highly of himself. In fact his sense of humor had almost died because of his own imagined importance. His publisher, Colonel Fisher, determined to change all that. As a consequence Jarnal spent a summer on the Colonel's houseboat and rediscovered himself, his sense of humor, and various other things and persons.

"From out the mass of 'modern' literature this particular book comes as a refreshing interlude. It is an excellent story, well told and one which could be given any member of the family, for it is an essentially clean romance of the open air. The author has succeeded in blending humor and tragedy to just the right degree, and there are several very amusing situations which make light, pleasant reading."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 300w

N Y Times p16 Ag 24 '30 230w

"One of those featherweight books to pick up and put down, and nothing much missed if one's place is lost while dozing off. However, Mr Hatch knows his boats and his women, which in combination play the major part in this novel. After becoming accustomed to his staccato manner of writing, one finds it enjoyable rather than otherwise. His descriptions are as crisp and clear as a fine October day."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 160w

HATCHER, ORIE LATHAM, and others. Rural [2] girls in the city for work; a study made for the Southern woman's educational alliance. 154p $1.75 Garrett & Massie, Richmond, Va.: Southern women's educ. alliance, 401 Grace-Am. bldg., Richmond, Va.

331.4 Woman—Employment. Woman—Social and moral questions. Girls. Sociology, Rural 30-21535

"This record was compiled under the auspices of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance, and 'tells the story of 255 rural girls in the city for work.' The questionnaire that led to the book took up in detail the background of the girls, their opportunities in the country, their reasons for coming to the city, the kind of work they were doing and their opinion as to whether the step has been justified."—N Y Times

"The case histories which form the nucleus of this slim but thought-provoking volume, interviews with young girls of Virginia and the Carolinas who had run away from farm homes to seek work and adventure in Richmond and Durham, make an interesting and sometimes touching record."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 350w

"The book should be valuable to all who are interested in guidance activities for girls. Especially important are the suggestions of the girls themselves as to possible changes in conditions which might make them more willing to remain in the country."

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 3 '30 220w

St Louis 28:262 N '30

HATFIELD, HENRY STAFFORD. Conquest of thought by invention, in the mechanical state of the future. (New science ser.) 80p $1 Norton [2s 6d Routledge]

901 Civilization 29-28656

The author of this essay in the New science series decries the growing mechanization of life, and its effect upon society and the political machinery of nations.

Reviewed by C. D. Clark

Am J Soc 36:165 Jl '30 150w

Reviewed by C. M. Perry

Int J Ethics 40:458 Ap '30 220w

"Mr. Hatfield argues his proposition cogently, with much provocative evidence from social and political developments of the last two or three decades and with lively comparisons of the reactions of populace and individuals a few years ago and now to mechanizing processes."

+ N Y Times p32 F 16 '30 380w

Spec 143:980 D 28 '29 80w

"Mr. Hatfield deals with this matter in a bright and breezy way. A subject that could, so easily, be ponderously dull, he transmutes, by virtue of his engaging style, into a charming billiard-room topic. He permits himself to use the very limits of irony; but not to go beyond. This is a stimulating and provocative essay that ought to be read more widely than it probably will be."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1087 D 19 '29 220w

HAUSER, MRS ERMINIA (ARBIB). Man without a necktie; tr. by Charlotte Brewster Jordan. 294p $2.50 Dickens pub. co., inc., 1006 Times bldg., N.Y.

30-553

"In so far as there is a story it relates the adventures of Moacir, a man of primitive instincts who goes through life refusing to wear that item of civilized apparel known as a necktie—'the band that separates the heart from the brain.' To the natural endowment of his youth in Brazil the accomplishments of European culture are added, and Moacir sets out on a pilgrimage through the world. The author has depicted his bewilderment, his conquests and his defeats, contrasting his simplicity with the artificial standards of the life about him. Although the novel was written in New York, it appeared first in Italian."—Books

"It is an uneven work, but it possesses moments of exceptional vividness and in its gallery of bizarre characters are a number which come upon the scene with arresting delineation."

+ Books p14 Ja 12 '30 230w

"Moacir's story is told with an eager sincerity that brings dignity to an old story and freshness to a philosophy that we have heard from babyhood. 'The Man Without a Necktie' is much more than a sugar-coated tract: it is a story of more than ordinary vitality blended artistically with the idealism of solidarity and universal peace."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 26 '30 450w

HAUSER, ERNST ALFRED. Latex; its oc- [2] currence, collection, properties and technical applications; with patent review comp. by Carl Boehm von Boernegg; tr. by W. J. Kelly. 201p il $4 Chemical catalog co.

678 Rubber 30-9951

"A historical introduction recalls the earliest patents for the use of latex. The story is brought up to the foundation of the plantations from which the modern rubber industry dates. There follow chapters on the most important latex-bearing trees, on the collection of latex, the physical and chemical properties, non-rubber constituents of latex, less important latices, coagulation, evaporation, preservation and shipping, concentration, vulcanisation, and industrial applications."—Nature

"Dr. Hauser was well fitted to write a monograph on the subject. He has made important contributions to our knowledge of latex, has investigated latex fresh from the tree in the East, and has studied one of the most urgent technical problems (that of latex concentration) intensively and on the works scale. In the result his book is admirably balanced and full of implications for further work. It may be said here, also, that the translation is done in lucid, enjoyable prose." T. R. D.

+ Nature 126:751 N 15 '30 350w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:25 Ap '30

St Louis 28:212 S '30

HAUSER, HEINRICH. Bitter waters; tr. by Patrick Kirwan; pref. by Liam O'Flaherty. 245p $2.50 Liveright

29-29525

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The writing is emotionally restrained, but there is an underlying enthusiasm for life and vitality which, combined with the simple, intensely human story, attains a catalysis of high emotional content."

+ Bookm 71:xxiv Mr '30 130w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 46:806 Mr 15 '30 100w

"An honest, often frightful book of great power and unexpected dignity."

+ New Statesman 34:782 Mr 22 '30 130w

"It is a novel full of force and vigor, stamina

HAUSER, HEINRICH—Continued
and vitality; it narrates starkly and without embarrassment brutal and elemental facts; yet it combines with these qualities subtlety and comprehension."
+ N Y Times p8 F 2 '30 650w

"In this direct and simple book, human emotion pours through channels made by imperceptible but certain art." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 153:629 D 18 '29 180w

"Their fight against the climate, their own natures, and their continual bad luck is as good a thing of its kind as has been produced in recent years. The petty things that make life a burden to the dweller on the land have seldom been more accurately set forth, while the quiet, disillusioned ending which follows is both logical and expected."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:808 Mr 8 '30 280w

"It is impossible at times to make out what is happening or whether certain incidents have any existence outside of the narrator's thoughts. But the story, particularly the later part, has atmosphere and genuine strength; the coarse violence of some of the descriptions attests a gift for first-hand observation which promises better things."
Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Ap 10 '30 150w

HAUSWIRTH, FRIEDA MATHILDE (MRS SARANGADHAR DAS). Marriage to India. 303p $3 Vanguard press

B or 92 India—Social life and customs
30-29428

"By birth a Swiss, by residence and training an American, Frieda Hauswirth met the young Hindu, whom, after six years of friendship, she married while both were students at the University of California. After the war they went to India, eagerly planning extensive programs of constructive work, economic, social, educational, and Mrs. Das's book tells what befell these plans and her own experiences with racial prejudice, caste lines, Indian women and housekeeping in India. Not the least interesting portions of her volume are those that tell of her friendship with Sir Jagadish and Lady Bose, whose guest she was in their home in Calcutta, and her experiences with Tagore and Gandhi."—N Y Times

"The book will live—if it does live—not for its interpretation of India or its analysis of essential differences in outlook between India and the West, but for its sincerity as autobiography, and its tragic human story, told with great art. Incidentally, a word of special praise is due to the publishers for turning out a book which it is a joy to hold in the hands." Gertrude Emerson
+ Books p32 D 7 '30 950w

"Mrs. Das tells from her own observation much that it is hard to learn elsewhere. She met many white women married to Indians and practically without exception they were unhappy. She herself had hoped that by marrying 'India' she would hasten the day when brotherhood among the nations would be an accomplished fact. She found caste and all that it implies an insuperable obstacle." L. H. Titterton
N Y Evening Post p5d N 29 '30 300w

"Her book is, as far as it goes, one of the most fair-minded and clear-sighted accounts and discussion of India to be found among all the many volumes that have been written about that unhappy country in recent years, as it is also one of the most vivid and interesting."
+ N Y Times p30 N 9 '30 420w

HAVEMEYER, LOOMIS. Ethnography. 522p il $4.80 Ginn

572 Ethnology
29-20771

The plan of this textbook in ethnography is to select a few tribes under the main races about which we know, on reliable authority, all the typical and significant facts; then to describe such groups according to one general system, setting forth their environmental and racial characters, their methods of self-maintenance, self-perpetuation, and self-gratification, their religion and their regulative organization. The author is assistant professor of anthropology at the Sheffield scientific school, Yale university.

"There are excellent photographic illustrations, but it is difficult to see what possible purpose the book can serve. It is not in any strict sense a textbook; there is no viewpoint, and no problems are presented. Nor is a systematized scrapbook from standard authors in any useful sense a source book. The exercise of producing an approximate equivalent ought not be denied the classroom student." Robert Redfield
— Am J Soc 35:860 Mr '30 220w

"The use of this book could not only have no good effects; it would inevitably have bad ones by so alienating the students' interest from primitive material that any tendency towards research would be nipped in the bud. The author states that he follows the method of treatment devised by Professor Sumner; his complete disregard of all the modern and scientific sources of recent publication suggests that he must have confined himself to using only a part of Professor Sumner's bibliography, limited as it was by the date when it was compiled." Margaret Mead
— Ann Am Acad 150:314 Jl '30 450w
Booklist 26:266 Ap '30
Boston Transcript p3 N 9 '29 320w
Nature 126:53 Jl 12 '30 180w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:46 Je '30

HAWES, HARRY BARTOW. My friend the black bass; with strategy, mechanics and fair play. 288p $2 Stokes

799 Black bass. Bass fishing
30-7626

Senator Hawes of Missouri, an expert fisherman, undertakes to cover the whole subject of black bass fishing, "the theoretical, the practical, the experimental,—from catching to cooking."

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30
N Y Times p27 My 18 '30 170w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 Jl '30 150w
St Louis 28:141 My '30

HAWK, JOHN. It was locked (Eng title: Locked door). 273p $2 Farrar [7s 6d Skeffington]
30-5930

When Robin Smith, young poet, received a week-end invitation from Lady Dorothy, he was immensely pleased—because Robin was in love with Lady Gwendolyn, one of the guests. But pride, and jealousy of a formidable rival, Donald Flint, caused the shy and sensitive poet to lock the door of the room he was to occupy at the house-party, crawl thru the window and make his way back to London. After all, how was he to know that, some few hours after he left, the dead body of Gwendolyn's adored brother would be found in his room? And the door was locked, and Robin had the key. It takes some skilful work on the part of Scotland Yard, aided by Gwendolyn, to discover the really guilty party.

Bookm 71:xxx Ap '30 100w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Mr 16 '30 100w

"All in all, a fairish story, with a flavor of love in it, but rather too conventional, house-party, week-endy, to rouse the appetites of the regular murder enthusiasts." W. H. M.
— Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 350w

"The story does not meet the standard of acceptable mystery fiction and is below the author's usual mark." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:468 Mr 19 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1005 N 28 '29 180w

HAWKINS, CHAUNCEY JEDDIE. Do the churches dare? 174p $1.50 Macmillan
230 Church. Modernism 29-21161

An attempt to translate the doctrines of Christianity into the thought of our time—to make dogma square with modern science.

Booklist 26:261 Ap '30

"Dr. Hawkins deliberately sets himself, in these brilliant chapters, to the difficult task of translating the doctrines of Christianity into the thought of our time. His guiding principle is 'emergent evolution'. . . It is all well done—amazingly well done. Dr. Hawkins knows his subject in both its theological and scientific phases and welds the two with consummate skill. His argument will convince all but those who have definitely passed beyond the need of salvaging operations of this kind." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p10 Ja 5 '30 160w

"Dr. Hawkins has shown the courage of his convictions and has dared to be positive and constructive in a modern way." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p8 D 14 '29 400w

"Doctor Hawkins has summarized in this small book the best thinking in a very large number of works dealing with current problems in church life. At the same time he has done this in a very readable, even almost popular, and attractive style. Any attempt to summarize the contents of the work would fail certainly in doing it justice and at the same time would tend to defeat the purpose of this review. One wishes that the volume be widely read and its incisive thought together with its practical application be thoroughly considered." F. G. Lewis
+ Crozer Q 7:134 Ja '30 300w
J Religion 10:162 Ja '30 70w

"It deserves a thoughtful reading." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 153:430 N 13 '29 60w
St Louis 28:36 F '30
Springf'd Republican p12 O 8 '29 160w

HAWKINS, RICHMOND LAURIN. Madame de Staël and the United States. (Harvard studies in Romance languages) 81p $2 Harvard univ. press
B or 92 Staël, Anne Louise Germaine (Necker) baronne de 30-22963

"Mme. de Staël, Professor Hawkins says, had an interesting connection with the United States through a quarter of a century which has been almost wholly neglected. During that time she corresponded with a number of eminent Americans, invested a considerable amount of her great wealth in American bonds and banks, bought large tracts of land in New York, and for half a dozen or more years seriously considered emigrating with her children to this country. Professor Hawkins's volume contains letters to and from her written by Albert Gallatin, Thomas Jefferson, Gouverneur Morris, Judge William Copper, the New York City commercial firm of Le Roy, Bayard & McEvers, and a number of others. The author provides the necessary explanatory text in ample measure." —N Y Times

Reviewed by Justin O'Brien
Bookm 72:441 D '30 350w

"The associate professor of French in Harvard University has written a scholarly book upon a much-neglected aspect of the study of this remarkable woman." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 1 '30 600w

"Most of the letters Professor Hawkins has brought together have not heretofore been published, so that his volume throws some new light on the social and economic contacts between the United States and France during the early days of our history."
+ N Y Times p5 O 5 '30 230w

"The book is the fruit of thorough and wide investigation. It is addressed to historians and to students of Mme. de Staël, but its erudition does not cloak the human interest of the narrative for the lay reader." Benjamin Woodbridge
+ Sat R of Lit 7:368 N 22 '30 400w

HAWORTH, PAUL LELAND. Caverns of sunset; being the story of Patricia Percy's quest in the Pays en Haute. 304p $2 Bobbs
30-5931

"The story is of Patricia Percy, daughter of the Earl of Northumberland, who set out in the guise of a man to find her frail brother who had escaped to Canada to become a man. She joined a young fur trader, Robin Haldane, and for close to two years in the wilds maintained her disguise. The end is anticipated—that Patricia's brother has become a man of tremendous force and Patricia and Robin fall in love."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

"Mr. Haworth knows at first hand the country he so vividly describes. He is a historian and has written of the explorations in the Northwest. He can be relied upon to give a faithful description of the scene of Patricia's wanderings." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 29 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30
N Y Times p29 S 28 '30 220w
Pratt p38 autumn '30

"The style is rich, flowing, and filled with the vivid tang and color and hardships of wilderness life. It is a fine addition to the tales of the courage and resourcefulness of the early builders of this great empire."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:929 Ap 12 '30 280w

HAWORTH, WALTER NORMAN. Constitution of sugars. 100p il $3.40 Longmans [8s 6d E. Arnold & co.]
2
547 Sugar 29-14391

"Concise account of the experimental work on which the new constitutional formulas of sugars are founded. Has some interesting pictures of atomic models. Dr. Haworth is Professor of Chemistry in the University of Birmingham, England."— N Y New Tech Bks

"The volume can be recommended most heartily to all students of carbohydrate and polysaccharide chemistry, as well as to all other students interested in obtaining a clear and accurate present-day picture of the structure of the products in this field." Harold Hibbert
+ Am Chem Soc J 52:4618 N '30 220w

"Throughout the book there is keen, inductive reasoning, which may on occasions be strained and somewhat difficult of acceptance, and in other cases be predicated upon experimental data which may possibly be contested. Granting all this, Haworth's rather radical ideas will have justified themselves if they lead to new and successful lines of experimentation. The subject itself is of such complexity and of such tremendous importance that no one man can hope to contribute more than one part to the solution of its problems. The writer considers this monograph a most valuable contribution to the chemistry of the sugars, and it should be in the hands of every serious student." C. E. Coates
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:709 Jl '29 380w

"The author has taken it for granted that his readers are familiar with the classical work on sugars and has given an authoritative review of the more recent developments, including not only work which has already been published, but also a large amount that is still in the press. The book is therefore not only up-to-date but actually in advance of current literature. and will be a standard work of reference until it becomes out-of-date, mainly as a result of the author's own further researches." T. M. L.
+ Nature 124:291 Ag 24 '29 1200w

HAWORTH, W. N.—Continued
N Y New Tech Bks 14:14 Ja '29
St Louis 28:40 F '30

HAWTREY, RALPH GEORGE. Economic aspects of sovereignty. (Lowell inst. lectures, 1929) 162p $2.75 (9s) Longmans
320.157 Sovereignty. Economic policy. World politics. War 30-10685

The economic ambitions of states underlying the exploitation of new territory, the securing of grants and concessions and the extension of economic power are treated as the principal causes of war.

Reviewed by D. H. Robertson
Nation and Ath 47:293 My 31 '30 460w

"Mr. Hawtrey's book is important both to the political scientist and to the economist. . . In exploring the economic foundations of political authority, and the effect of the exercise of political authority upon economic development, Mr. Hawtrey has thrown a new ray of light on a doubtful borderland which has only recently begun to receive the attention which its practical importance deserves."
+ New Statesman 35:186 My 17 '30 1200w
St Louis 28:204 S '30
Sat R 149:665 My 24 '30 250w

"Series of very thoughtful and original chapters, which were primarily lectures delivered at the Lowell Institute of Boston. They will gain by being presented in a book; for the style is often very condensed and it is sometimes difficult to follow the sequence of thought at first sight, so that hearers of the spoken word may well have been puzzled. This difficulty disappears on attentive reading."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p380 My 8 '30 1350w

HAY, IAN, pseud. See Beith, J. H.

HAYCOX, ERNEST. Chaffee of Roaring Horse. (Ends of the earth adventures) 291p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Paul, S.] 30-7788

Jim Chaffee, forced to abandon his own home on account of hard times, became manager of the Stirrup S ranch. He ran into some lively cattle rustling and encountered an educated rancher who hired his gunmen, but Jim circumvented him, rescued Gay Fletcher, and earned his reward.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Mr 16 '30 120w
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 80w

HAYDON, ALBERT EUSTACE. Quest of the ages. 243p $2.50 Harper
201 Religion—Philosophy 29-29726

The quest of the ages has ever been "the hope of a good life in a good world." The religions that man has made have embodied his ideal and supported his hope. Deeply rooted in the social life of man, religion has changed its forms with changing social conditions. Dr Haydon's essay is an effort to formulate a philosophy of religion out of the natural, social, and religious sciences.

"A religious book that rises above sectarianism is rare. This is such a book. There is here no plea, not even a subtle, concealed one, for Christianity—nor any prejudice against it. . . This book is a remarkable appreciation of religion and religious men in spite of the remarkably poor claim they can make for the honor." T. V. Smith
+ Am J Soc 36:309 S '30 650w
Reviewed by C. C. Webber
Ann Am Acad 149:205 My '30 280w
Booklist 26:298 My '30

"The author argues most persuasively. It is, however, a book for those who agree with him."
+ Bookm 70:viii F '30 180w

"Nowhere is [the humanistic] attitude stated more persuasively, or with a more adequate basis of knowledge of the history of religion, or with more impassioned conviction of the supreme value of those ideal ends for which religious men have striven through the ages. It is the eloquent utterance of a noble mind." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:273 F 26 '30 600w

"Those interested in the present-day problems of religion in any form have long awaited this book. It is the Philosophy of Religion based, not upon speculation, but upon the History of Religions and from the pen of one who is a recognized scholar in that field." R. E. E. Harkness
+ Crozer Q 7:108 Ja '30 500w

"A competent scholar in the field of the history of religions and a thorough student of modern psychology, he is also, fortunately, both a poet and a mystic. . . The result is a work which is almost unique in the way it couples sympathy for traditional religious forms with aggressive insistence on the need today for a new religious technique." J. S. Bixler
+ Int J Ethics 40:561 Jl '30 930w

"The author displays everywhere the deftness and generalizing skill of the artist as well as the sound grasp of the competent scholar, and he carries out his task without a trace of the sometimes subtle but none the less distressingly evident partisanship of most Western incursions into the field of comparative religion. . . But there is no book at present in our libraries with quite its combination of stimulating virtues. For the breadth of its sweep, for its consistent adherence to the humanist approach, for its sympathetic appreciation of even the crudest forms of religion and its scrupulous fairness toward all the world-religions, as well as for its challenging portrayal of the contemporary religious crisis, it can hardly afford to be left aside by those who wish to think sanely about religion." E. A. Burtt
+ J Religion 10:408 Jl '30 870w
Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee
Outlook 154:110 Ja 15 '30 120w
Reviewed by C. S. Brown
Survey 64:243 Je 1 '30 420w
World Tomorrow 13:280 Je '30 220w

HAYES, CARLTON JOSEPH HUNTLEY. France, a nation of patriots. (Social and economic studies of post-war France) 487p $4.50 Columbia univ. press
914.4 National characteristics, French. France—Nationality. Education—France. Propaganda 30-4234

Prepared under the auspices of the Columbia University Council for research in social sciences, Professor Hayes' book is primarily a scientific, unbiased study that seeks to describe the national psychology of France and how it is communicated. The Church, the educational system, the government, the press, and other agencies, according to the author, aid in building up and carrying on the traditions of loyalty and patriotism that are so indubitably characteristic of the psychology of the French.

Reviewed by Paul van Dyke
Am Hist R 35:876 Jl '30 700w
Reviewed by F. L. Benns
Ann Am Acad 150:297 Jl '30 300w
Booklist 26:352 Je '30

"It is the careful digest of a prolonged inquiry made in France by a very competent staff. It is ably edited; it is chockfull of detailed information, and that information is remarkably accurate—in nearly five hundred pages I could find barely a dozen slips, and not one of them of vital importance. Yet Carlton Hayes has an ax to grind. In terms of the seminar room, Hayes is a secondary authority." Albert Guerard
+ — Books p10 Mr 16 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p4 F 19 '30 700w

"An index and a wealth of references make it as valuable to the student as it is fascinating to the ordinary reader. Professor Hayes is to be congratulated on the success of some arduous research." W. H. C.

+ Cath World 131:502 Jl '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

Reviewed by L. R. Gottschaik

Hist Outlook 21:289 O '30 450w

"The volume is a little dry; it sparkles neither with great originality, nor has it great depth, but inasmuch as Professor Hayes's purpose is to inform the reader, to give him accurate and well verified facts, the book achieves its purpose. The most interesting part of Professor Hayes's work is his analysis of French patriotism." Alexander Nazaroff

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 2 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:55 Je '30

St Louis 28:145 My '30

"Professor Hayes has worked with perfection, but history, I believe, is not a science and could only be so considered were the human element entirely eliminated. While his book is excellent, some of the facts have either already been altered by time or else are lacking in nuance. It would be difficult, however, to say too much in praise of the author's understanding. He has followed so faithfully the trend of events and watched so closely the psychology of peoples that his conclusions can scarcely be called his own but rather the evidence of facts themselves. With perfect fairness, he neither embellishes nor obscures his facts." Bernard Faÿ

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1121 Je 14 '30 950w

"It is an able, impartial and informing exposition of what may be called patriotic propaganda. Though Prof Hayes is the author, the work was compiled cooperatively."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 1200w

Reviewed by H. McD. Clokie

Survey 64:323 Jl 1 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Jl 31 '30 320w

World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 60w

HAYNES, ANNIE. Who killed Charmian Karslake? 279p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

30-6808

A beautiful American actress accepts an invitation to Lady Moreton's houseparty at Hepton Abbey. The night following the ball she is killed and her sapphire luck-piece stolen. Scotland Yard detectives discover thru neighborhood inquiry that the girl, known as Charmian Karslake, was really Sylvia Gosset, whose childhood had been spent in that part of England. Other facts concerning the private life of the actress are brought to light, which, coupled with subsequent testimony, solve the case.

"Aside from naming Richard Penn-Moreton's American father-in-law Silas P. Juggs, Miss Haynes has turned out a very creditable piece of detective fiction."

+ Bookm 71:xxix Ap '30 80w

"Inspector Stoddart proves himself an able deducer, and it all ends most excitingly. A well built jigsaw." Will Cuppy

+ Books p16 Mr 16 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 250w

N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:547 Mr 2 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1098 D 26 '29 180w

HAYNES, FREDERICK EMORY. Criminology. (McGraw-Hill publications in sociology) 417p $3.50 McGraw

364 Crime and criminals 30-15949

"This volume follows fairly closely the organization of criminological material that has now become almost traditional. It deals separately with juvenile offenders, criminal law and procedure, beginnings of punishment, the rise of the modern system of imprisonment (which is a fairly new way of handling offenders), introduction of the idea of reformation, inmate self-government, county jails, probation, parole, prison labor—and so forth. Those poetic punishments of the Middle Ages—the difference between the Auburn and Pennsylvania systems of prisons—Lombroso's neat notion that there was a physiological criminal type—and more recent scientific studies of criminals; these, too, are included. In the main the book is a review of what others have said and written."—Books

"Written in an interesting, readable style, the book is scholarly in the best sense. It rides no hobbies. The presentation is clear and concise, temperate in judgment, and sound from the standpoint of criminological science and also from that of penological practice. A unique and valuable feature from the standpoint of the student and the teacher is the list of 'topics for investigation' at the end of each chapter. Of outstanding merit are Chapter VII on Juvenile Offenders and Chapter XII on Inmate Self-Government in Prisons." J. L. Giffin

+ Ann Am Acad 151:289 S '30 280w

Booklist 27:51 O '30

"Professor Haynes's book is illuminating in spots, but it is too eclectic a product—too much a collection of quotations—to present a clear, first-hand view from the author himself." W. D. Lane

— + Books p17 N 9 '30 500w

St Louis 28:207 S '30

HAYNES, MERRITT WAY. Student's history of printing. (McGraw-Hill vocational texts) 118p il $1.40 (7s) McGraw

655.1 Printing—History 30-8039

"Traces the history of printing from the earliest times to the present, in chronological order, giving the principal dates, personages and events in the development of the art. Intended for the use of students in schools, apprentices, and for young workers in printing works."—Pratt

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

Pratt p19 autumn '30

"Merritt Haynes is the happy possessor of a practical knowledge of printing with a long experience as an educator. The combination is responsible for a book of knowledge concerning the history of printing which every school print shop and every printer should own."

+ School Arts M 29:x My '30 80w

HAYWARD, WALTER BROWNELL. Last continent of adventure; a narrative of gallant men & bold exploits in Antarctica. 339p il $3 Dodd

919.9 Antarctic regions 30-12967

A narrative of the adventures of the indomitable men who have invaded the last great mass of unexplored land—the desert continent of Antarctica. The exploits of Scott, Shackleton, Amundsen, Mawson, Byrd and Wilkins are told in this stirring volume.

Booklist 27:22 S '30

"His is, in all respects, a useful and timely book." C. L. Skinner

+ Books p2 Je 22 '30 450w

Boston Transcript p1 My 31 '30 480w

"Mr. Hayward has done an excellent piece of work in assembling the achievements of the Antarctic explorers including Admiral Byrd, in a spirited and informing narrative. Mr. Hayward, who has sympathy and imagination, misses nothing of interest in the record of Antarctic adventure. He is fortunate in his treatment, for it is a man's book as well as a boy's book; indeed, it has a universal appeal." H. E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p12 Je 1 '30 1850w

HAYWARD, W. B.—Continued
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30
Pratt p31 autumn '30
St Louis 28:217 S '30

"Hayward displays a fine knowledge of the widely varying aims of those who figured in the history of Antarctic exploration. Unlike most popular writers he gives full due to men like Wilkins and Mawson, who did their wonderful work without an avalanche of newspaper publicity. His understanding of Byrd's work, in revolutionizing the technique of polar exploration as well as in gaining actual results in the field, reaches far beyond the usual sentimental poppycock about the intrepid dash to the pole." Earl Hanson
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1141 Je 21 '30 220w

HAZARD, MRS LUCY LOCKWOOD, ed. In search of America. 586p $3.75 Crowell

810.8 American literature—Collections. United States—Civilization 30-11483

The selections of which this book is made up have been chosen not so much for their literary value as for the light they throw on American life. In biographical revelations of American characters, in historical studies of the American past, in folk song and story, in regional fiction and poetry, in criticisms of American culture a background is provided for the study of the genius of America.

Booklist 26:387 Jl '30

"The critical attitude which the book as a whole inculcates would be sounder if it were based on more than surface examination. However, a bright circus-parade of folk-lore, local color, and eccentric character passes to catch the attention of unwilling youth, and there are extensive bibliographies of easily accessible books."
+ — Bookm 71:xix Jl '30 180w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p9m My 24 '30 100w

"An unusually fine anthology of American material, which she presents with excellent introductory paragraphs."
+ Outlook 155:189 Je 4 '30 130w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

"While the total impression is somewhat confusing, most of the selections have some merit or representative quality."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 24 '30 120w

HAZARD, ROBERT. Hacking New York. 213p $1.75 Scribner

917.471 Cab and omnibus service, New York City 30-11415

Short, vivid narratives and anecdotes drawn directly from the author's nine years' experience as a New York taxi-cab driver. Mr Hazard tells how he got into the hacking business, describes some of his first calls, throws a good deal of light on the taxi-cab racket, and sketches thruout many amusing incidents concerning his job and the people with whom it brings him into contact.

"Mr. Hazard surprises us. He does not tell all he might have about the business he has been engaged in, but what he does tell is blessed with a degree of artistry. . . It would have been easy for him to descend to the field of the case history, because he knows quite well what Freud writes about. But he skirts this peril successfully and gives us a book which, while strictly authentic, shows a definite selectiveness. . . It is refreshing to meet a realistic writer who refuses to clutter his pages with superfluous details in an effort to make his point as clear as a gun held against the ribs. Everything is done quite neatly and with dispatch, and it is surprising that, being neat, it can remain true." Ira Wolfret
+ Books p2 My 11 '30 600w

"What the author tells us is exactly what he might have told us had his cab been stalled in traffic, and we, his passengers, had no resource other than to listen to his garrulity. Not only what he tells but how he tells it. There is here not one line of literature, not one line of real revelation, or even of unusual experience." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 200w

" 'Hacking New York' is heartily recommended. It is entertaining, instructive and unfailingly readable from start to finish. Nowadays, whenever we get into a taxi, we look at the name of the driver, hoping that we are in the presence of this gifted author, that we may congratulate him." Edward Hope
+ N Y Herald Tribune p16 My 5 '30 380w

" 'Hacking New York' isn't an epic. Its incidents are just small and everyday; still, you wouldn't think they would happen. Hazard is a born storyteller, especially for his humor and crisp simplicity, and a born racketeer. He tells a hundred vibrating experiences from that man-eating, money-crazy jungle through which New Yorkers pass every day." George Britt
+ N Y Telegram p7 Ap 18 '30 400w

"An edifying book this, for those who ride in taxis. Mr. Hazard has an ingenious and resourceful mind, whether in mechanical tinkering or the use of words, and he tells no end of yarns that are highly entertaining and also most instructive as to the ways of taxi drivers. The book is largely made up of stories of his own experiences with passengers and officials, and because he has a keen and genial sense of humor they are all beguiling."
+ N Y Times p27 My 11 '30 320w

"The splendors and miseries of a taxi driver's life are well set forth in Hacking New York." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 100w
St Louis 28:217 S '30

"These short pieces are well told, cryptic, interesting, but when the author interpolates discussions of the License Bureau, strikes, the economic problems of the profession, bosses, graft, and other weighty factors in the business, he waxes slightly dull."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1034 My 10 '30 200w
Springf'd Republican p10 My 30 '30 360w

"A difficult form of writing is the brief sketch, usually essayed only by adepts. Neat selection of detail, curt force of language, descriptive finesse are necessary. Taximan Hazard possesses these literary attributes."
+ Time p80 My 19 '30 420w

HAZLEWOOD, CRAIG BEEBE. Bank and its directors. 251p $3.50 Ronald

332.1 Banks and banking 29-28950

"It is believed that the present volume presents a complete summary of the knowledge and methods necessary to thoroughly adequate bank direction; that it also pioneers in presenting statistics and tabulations which may help a director better to understand underlying management principles; and that it simplifies the director's task and fully utilizes his experience and judgment." (Pref.) The author was president of the American bankers association, 1928-1929.

"Mr. Hazlewood is doing signal service to his fraternity and the public by writing, out of his rich and successful experience, an elementary book, in most readable language and pleasing style, on the proper conduct of a bank. He touches the weakest feature in American bank administration when he treats the relationship of the directors to the bank; and it would be well for every bank president to provide each of his directors with a copy of this book and see that it is read by them." R. B. Westerfield
+ Ann Am Acad 148:287 Mr '30 1100w
Booklist 26:263 Ap '30
St Louis 28:95 Ap '30

HEADLAM-MORLEY, SIR JAMES WYCLIFFE. Studies in diplomatic history; ed. by K. and A. Headlam-Morley. 312p $3.50 King, A.H. [10s 6d Methuen]

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations. Europe—Politics [30-30418]

"Sir James Headlam-Morley, while historical adviser to the British Foreign Office, wrote a series of studies on diplomatic subjects which were suggested by events of the moment; the present volume comprises [nine] of these essays. The phases of diplomacy discussed range all the way from the more or less abstract problems of arbitration and the reduction of armaments to the very real ones of British policy in Egypt and the acquisition of Cyprus."—Current Hist

Books p16 N 2 '30 180w

"It is the great value of Sir James Headlam-Morley's studies that they seek to crystallize such potent influences in international affairs as the Monroe Doctrine, the fundamental rules of British foreign policy, the problem of Egypt as a highway of the British Empire, and the question of the dual rôle of Britain as a European state and as the head of a commonwealth of oversea nations." D. M.

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 O 18 '30 500w

Current Hist 33:xxiii O '30 250w

"These eight essays are admirable illustrations of the manner in which the statesman may profitably consult the expert. Long and widely known for his historical scholarship, Headlam-Morley has brought to his use of documentary material a breadth of judgment and a critical view, with both urbanity and candor, which establish confidence in the high quality of his work. It is to be hoped that the influence of his qualities was strong, and may ever remain with those who exercise the powers of diplomacy." L. B. Packard

+ Hist Outlook 21:394 D '30 500w

Reviewed by A. C. Bell

Nation and Ath 48:270 N 22 '30 900w

"The memoranda are exceptionally informing and suggestive. The three papers of 1922-5 on 'The Problem of Security' are especially notable."

+ Spec 144:1012 Je 21 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p487 Je 12 '30 2100w

HEALY, WILLIAM; BRONNER, AUGUSTA FOX; and BOWERS, ANNA MAE. Structure and meaning of psychoanalysis as related to personality and behavior. (Judge Baker foundation) 482p $5 Knopf

131 Psychoanalysis 30-21523

The three collaborators, working their way thru the maze of material that makes up the body of psychoanalytic thought, have made a thoro review of its literature, reduced it to orderly arrangement and provided in outline form a statement of what has been contributed to date in psychoanalysis. On the left hand pages are given the orthodox theories of psychoanalysis, consisting for the most part of Freud's own statements. On the right hand, in smaller type, are presented valuable exegetical paragraphs and various ideas set forth by those who, tho holding to the major concepts of Freud, offer divergencies of theory or practice. In the endeavor to keep their exposition unbiased, the authors have refrained from offering any criticisms or comments of their own. There is a very full index.

"The method of presentation is unique and should be very helpful. It appears that the work has been done according to the best manner of the authors, and apparently gives to students of human problems that long awaited one book on psychoanalysis." J. H. S. Bossard

+ Ann Am Acad 149:sup205 My '30 270w

"The book is splendidly conceived and executed. It constitutes an invaluable source book, not only for psychotherapists, psychiatrists and psychologists, but for any one who wishes to find his way about in the psychoanalytic domain." W. A. White, M.D.

+ Books p1 My 25 '30 720w

"It is not enough to acknowledge the profoundly scientific minds of the authors. The true value of this prodigious work lies in the undissembling fairness and sincerity of the method in which the reader is taken through the well-nigh impenetrable jungle of mechanisms, theories and facts. However there is something lacking in this book, for which no amount of erudition and knowledge of psychoanalytical literature can substitute—clinical psychoanalytical experience." Fritz Wittels

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 1250w

"Not only will it be a guide and reference work to those engaged in actual psychoanalytic practice, but it will serve to remove false impressions of psychoanalysis from the lay mind; and although it is not suited to be a first approach to the subject, it is admirably fitted for sincerely interested readers who have already become slightly familiar with psychoanalysis through smaller and more popular works." Maynard Shipley

+ N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 700w

"A guide, a pathfinder, a Baedeker of the whole psychoanalytical movement. This dictionary of the movement is most useful. It takes up every phase of the subject and gives the definitions and points of view of every prominent lecturer and investigator. It shows just what psychoanalysis has contributed to the study of the mind and behavior in the last fifteen years." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p15 My 1 '30 650w

Pratt p8 autumn '30

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow

Sat R of Lit 6:1157 Je 28 '30 1650w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 400w

"While the greatest value to those already familiar with psychoanalysis will be found in the volume's desirability as a source-book, to which one can turn for information about specific topics, yet for those seeking for the first time a serious understanding of psychoanalysis, its value will be enhanced by steady and consecutive reading rather than by dipping in here and there at random. Start with page one and keep at it. You will be richly repaid." G. K. Pratt, M.D.

+ Survey 65:98 O 15 '30 800w

HEARD, JOHN, jr. John Wheelwright, 1592-1679. 137p il $2 Houghton

B or 92 Wheelwright, John 30-32003

"From scanty records and documents Mr. Heard, in his biography, 'John Wheelwright,' diligently and expertly assembles the life story of an early settler of Boston whose influence upon New England not only was important during his period, but has been of far-reaching consequence in its later development."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 230w

"Wheelwright's vigorous and undaunted personality stands out, important and interesting, in the early history of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and John Heard, Jr., his descendant in the tenth generation, has written in this little book an understanding, sympathetic, but eminently just and very interesting story of his life."

+ N Y Times p34 D 14 '30 380w

HEARNSHAW, FOSSEY JOHN COBB, ed. Social & political ideas of some great French thinkers of the age of reason; a series of lectures delivered at King's college, university of London during the session 1928-29. 252p $3.50 Crofts [7s 6d Harrap]

194 Philosophy, French

These lectures on some eighteenth century French philosophers together form a "study of those intellectual forces that have helped to inaugurate the modern democratic and unbelieving world." An introductory chapter by Harold J. Laski is followed by lectures on Bossuet, Fénelon, the Abbé de Saint-Pierre, Montesquieu, Voltaire, Rousseau, Helvetius and Holbach, Morelly and Mably, contributed by different college professors and lecturers.

HEARNSHAW, F. J. C., ed.—Continued

"From the introduction by Harold Laski to the final chapters on Mably and Morelly every essay is thoughtful, informative, unhurried but not verbose, with the sober grace of expression which British scholars cultivate more successfully than their American colleagues." Albert Guerard
+ Books p21 N 16 '30 550w

"The lectures in this series, whose range and subject matter are precisely described in the rather lengthy title, are so good of their kind that one is tempted to criticize them for not being even better than they are. Mr. Laski's introductory essay, in particular, is so suggestive of philosophical possibilities that we are led to expect from the succeeding discussions rather more than it is their avowed intention to give us. . . Meanwhile, however, we may well be grateful that the narrower aspects of the situation have been dealt with as readably and as accurately as in the essays of this series." A. E. Murphy
+ Int J Ethics 41:270 Ja '31 450w

St Louis 28:259 N '30

Reviewed by E. H. W. Meyerstein
Sat R 150:458 O 11 '30 650w

Spec 144:539 Mr 29 '30 100w

HEATON, KENNETH LEWIS. Character building through recreation; a training course in recreational leadership. (Univ. of Chicago publications in religious educ. Principles and methods of religious educ.) 230p il $1.75 Univ. of Chicago press [8s Cambridge univ. press]

790 Play. Games. Clubs. Church entertainments 29-13021

"[The author] opens his little book on recreation and character by a series of case studies of boys and girls who present character problems. In the following chapters he endeavors to show how many of these problems can be solved or avoided by a carefully planned program of recreation with an idealistic purpose. There are plans for clubs, out-of-door recreation, social parties, and fellowship hours. A chapter on 'Source Materials' and a good bibliography add further value to the book."—Christian Century

Booklist 26:20 O '29

"Kenneth Heaton is the only man in the country who has the distinction of being a full time director of character education in the entire school system of a city, and his work at Pontiac, Michigan, is being carefully watched by many educators. . . Mr. Heaton frankly gives credit to his professors at Boston and Chicago universities for most of the theoretical portion of the book, but in the practical applications he draws upon his own experiences for some original suggestions." F. M. Smith
+ Christian Century 47:1251 O 15 '30 250w

St Louis 27:337 D '29

Survey 63:111 O '29 20w

HEBARD, GRACE RAYMOND. Washakie; an
2 account of Indian resistance of the covered wagon and Union Pacific railroad invasions of their territory. ltd ed 337p il $6 Clark, A.H.

970.2 Washakie, Shoshoni chief. Indians of North America—Wars. Shoshoni Indians. Union Pacific railroad 30-11367

"Miss Hebard fashions from the life story of Washakie, for sixty years head chief of the Eastern Shoshones, an absorbing narrative, which involves the various Indian attempts to resist the White invasions incident to railroad-building and settlement. This old chief was always the government's loyal ally."—R of Rs

"Grace Raymond Hebard is well and widely known as the historian of Wyoming, and for her writings and research among the sources of history." H. L. Scott.
Ann Am Acad 151:304 S '30 420w

"The volume includes material gathered during the last quarter-century from Government documents, reports of Indian scouts and agents and from early settlers who knew Washakie personally. The tardy tribute to an Indian chief who stands pre-eminent as a factor in the development and settlement of the Northwest, and as friend of the United States through the period of the building of the Union Pacific Railroad, is a distinct and important contribution to the history of the Northwest from 1840 to 1900. . . . The book is illustrated with seven especially prepared maps and twenty-two plates, all hitherto unpublished and many from old and rare originals. There is an excellent analytical index." G. H. S.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 800w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 Je '30 100w

HEDDEN, WALTER PAGE. How great cities are fed. (Agricultural commerce and administration ser.) 302p il $2.80 Heath

338.1 Food supply—United States. Farm produce—Marketing 29-28357

An account of the transportation of food products and their distribution in large cities. The author, who is chief of the Bureau of commerce for the port of New York, considers the main features of the modern system of food distribution; terminal handling of perishable food and its costs; the middleman; profits of city dealers; losses due to spoilage; the possibility of public control of the food supply and other phases of the problem.

"The book is well printed and illustrated, and should be valuable to all those concerned with agricultural economics." J. A. Tobey
+ Am J Pub Health 20:680 Je '30 90w

Booklist 26:301 My '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p107 Jl '30

J Home Econ 22:129 F '30 80w

"Mr. Hedden writes in a temperate, judicial spirit that aims to present facts and situations fairly and justly, so that in the solving of the problem the interests of consumers, distributors and producers may all be conserved."
+ N Y Times p21 F 2 '30 220w

Pratt p20 summer '30

St Louis 28:206 S '30

HEDGES, ROBERT YORKE, and WINTERBOTTOM, ALLAN. Legal history of trade unionism. 170p $3 (7s 6d) Longmans

331.88 Trade unions—Great Britain. Labor laws and legislation—Great Britain 30-10582

This brief sketch of the legal history of trade unionism goes as far back as the Elizabethan statutes relating to the regulation of wages and apprenticeship and comes down to the Trade disputes and trade union act of 1927, following the General strike of 1926.

New Statesman 35:194 My 17 '30 200w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

"This is a useful and short account of a very difficult subject."
+ Sat R 149:598 My 10 '30 180w

"This useful, comprehensive and compact book deals with the history of trade unionism down to modern times and refers to all the relevant decisions."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p398 My 8 '30 280w

HEIDEL, WILLIAM ARTHUR. Day of Yahweh. ltd ed 565p $5 Century
296 Jews—Religion. Jews—Rites and ceremonies. Festivals 29-5901
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Dr. Heidel's style is involved, complicating an already complex subject. The material refuses to fall into a logical pattern or move steadily to a conclusion. Above all, the title is a misnomer. . . The book stimulates thought; it points to many an avenue of further research. It may be a confusion of data falling into pseudo-relationship through operation of the simple law of averages, but the material itself is worth having available in the library of the historian, the classicist, or the biblical student." C. S. Knopf
+ — Christian Century 47:435 Ap 2 '30 1400w

"A true contribution to American scholarship." W. N. G.
+ Churchman p4 N 23 '29 900w

"In this book a classicist of international repute has turned aside from purely Greek studies and in so doing has given his fellow-classicists a remarkable example of the rich contribution that a true Hellenist can make in the field of comparative religions. At the same time he has given to the student and teacher of religions an illuminating research and compilation of data in comparative morphology." H. R. Willoughby
+ Class Philol 25:84 Ja '30 1100w
St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

HEINRICH, CARL. Orphan of eternity; or, The katabasis of the lord Lucifer Satan. 303p $2.50 Carrier
30-32139

A satire upon the superstitions, and the codes that have replaced superstition, in modern society. In Book I an enterprising denizen of Hell, one Anthony Thumbcock, wishes to make Hell safe for iniquity by restoring inhibitions and prohibitions. He succeeds, and Satan is outlawed. Book II shows us Satan and his faithful servant wandering thru the earth, and finding little belief there. In Book III Satan, down-hearted, returns to his erstwhile domain and, being refused entrance, becomes—poor Devil—an orphan of eternity until saved by a woman's love.

Books p22 Ap 20 '30 260w

"Mr. Heinrich has chosen to couch his descriptive passages in Biblical English, which he writes delightfully, and in parts 'Orphan of Eternity' rises to splendid utterance, as witness the conversation between Eve and Satan, the speeches of the three wise men (whom most readers should recognize), and the outline of living as practiced on the planet of Paranoia. Throughout most of his book Mr. Heinrich is as mordacious as Swift, but toward the end his admiration and affection for his hero get the better of him, so much so that he has yielded to the temptation of providing a superlatively happy ending."
Nation 130:659 Je 4 '30 200w

"'Orphan of Eternity' is too self-consciously shocking; and though it is often amusing, it is never so amusing as a rereading of 'Jurgen' or 'La Révolte des Anges.' "
— Sat R of Lit 6:785 Mr 1 '30 320w

HEINZ, MAX. Loretto; sketches of a German war volunteer; tr. by Charles Ashleigh. 316p $2.50 Liveright
30-5339

"Another account of modern warfare written out of personal experience. . . It is an almost completely impassive record of days, weeks, months, years, devoted almost as much to being slaughtered as to slaughtering—no attempt at dramatic presentation—intense mainly in the feeling of the inevitability of the fate that has trapped the narrator, his fellows, the men in the opposing trenches—the intensity of bitter, resourceless, endless endurance of the unendurable."—Springf'd Republican

"One calls into question neither the sincerity of 'Loretto's' writing nor the uniqueness of its author's experiences. They must have been unique to him, otherwise he would not have written a book. But, fortunately or unfortunately, it is insufficient to have merely lived through a ghastly or harassing experience to make literature out of it. What is required here as elsewhere is point of view. The smallest happening may grow large in the telling of it or the largest happening may dwindle to the perspective of the commonplace."
— Books p22 Ap 20 '30 230w

"The impression is one of a great deal of violence and bloodshed described very vividly for no apparent reason. A purpose, indeed, is indicated—on the last page the author is threatened by a mob of revolutionaries and remarks: 'So this is the gratitude of my native country.' But that seems scarcely enough to justify 316 pages of closely packed horrors." Clinton Simpson
— Nation 130:330 Mr 19 '30 150w

"In no book on the war has the psychology of defeat been so carefully analyzed at first hand as in 'Loretto.' "
+ N Y Times p8 Je 8 '30 430w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 260w

HELD, JOHN, Jr. Grim youth. 219p il $2 Vanguard press
30-11850

"Short stories of the youngest generation. There's a bitter after-taste to these stories, amusing as most of them are, for they give a true picture, if not a complete one."—Outlook

"He gets his point home so well that one is apt to fling the book into the ash barrel after the fourth story. . . Mr. Held's patter is up-to-the-minute, but it doesn't underline character. It is, therefore, not to be compared to the Americanese of Ring Lardner." John Chamberlain
— + Bookm 71:328 Je '30 330w

"We have moved a long distance from the starlit aspirations of 'Seventeen,' as recorded by Booth Tarkington. Even the frost-bitten sophistication of F. Scott Fitzgerald's adolescents is quaint and outmoded. In the John Held cosmorama, the beginning of wisdom appears to coincide with puberty. By the time these strange beings have reached seventeen their lives have turned to highway dust and cigarette ashes. John Held jr. has set them down without retouching, and the very casualness of his manner contributes in large measure to the forcefulness of the portraits." Lisle Bell
Books p5 Ap 27 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 My 24 '30 120w
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 S 27 '30 180w

"Ten light and rather formless stories of uneven merit. But the illustrations are done in Mr. Held's most endearing manner, and they say all that the context does, and say it better."
+ — New Repub 63:53 My 28 '30 220w
N Y Times p24 My 11 '30 200w

"As a realist John Held Jr. is relentless, but he writes sparingly, letting a few words tell much. His field is his own. He is an uncompromising realist with a sense of proportion, for whom there was a vacancy in the literary world." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p13 Ap 17 '30 350w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 70w

HENDERSON, ARCHIBALD. Contemporary immortals. 209p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton
920 Biography 30-22364

Biographical portraits of twelve contemporary geniuses: Albert Einstein, Mahatma Gandhi, Thomas Edison, Benito Mussolini, George Ber-

HENDERSON, ARCHIBALD—Continued
nard Shaw, Guglielmo Marconi, Jane Addams, Orville Wright, Ignace Jan Paderewski, Marie Curie, Henry Ford and Rudyard Kipling.

Booklist 27:156 D '30
Reviewed by Olga Katzin
Bookm 72:81 S '30 500w
Reviewed by Lisle Bell
Books p5 S 7 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 800w
Current Hist 33:xxvi Ja '31 120w
Nation 131:450 O 22 '30 180w

"Professor Henderson has fervor and gusto and humility, but his studies seem at times to be more enthusiastic than critical." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 120w

"Whether the ten men and two women he has chosen for immortality are rightly chosen is a matter for discussion, but that Dr. Henderson has done justice to each in turn in his manner of presenting them to the public for consideration there can be no question. It is difficult to imagine how twelve brief biographies could be better done. What he has written is both entertaining and informative. To each biography he has allotted about twenty pages, and into these few pages he has packed incisive character studies and always a fair and balanced outline of his character's life work."
+ N Y Times p46 D 7 '30 450w

"We may not always agree with him, but we admire his concise expression and—for a professor of mathematics—his fine journalistic reporting. He knows how to get at the cream of an interview and the gist of a long and profound statement and translate it into comprehensible English." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 D 16 '30 550w

"A dignified, timely, and well-tempered book. To read it is to be made more intelligent, and greater praise than this cannot be given." A. W. Porterfield
+ Outlook 156:145 S 24 '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30
St Louis 28:300 D '30

HENDERSON, HELEN WESTON. Cathedrals of France. 256p il $3 Houghton
914.4 Cathedrals—France. France—Description and travel 29-26887

A guidebook for the tourist, describing the chief points of architectural and historic interest of the most famous French cathedrals and several of the lesser known churches.

Booklist 26:65 N '29

"To Cathedrals of France the author brings experience and wide reading. There is a fund of sound information, admirably digested and presented. Of the one-hundred-and-fifty cathedrals of France, some twenty are described in detail." A. B. Maurice
+ Bookm 70:xxviii O '29 400w

"Not alone the great cathedrals—such as those of Amiens, Beauvais, Reims, Chartres and Bourges—but a score of the less celebrated, though scarcely less interesting, churches are described in this volume. It brings into one book of average size all that the French traveler is likely to require in the way of description and historical comment."
+ Books p10 D 8 '29 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p45 Mr '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:9 F '30
Pratt p23 summer '30

"Miss Henderson has remembered all through her book that a cathedral is not a museum or a show-room, but a place into which people go to meditate or to pray. Consequently she never descends to the kind of chatter that is so tiresome in a guide-book. Her surprise on entering Albi Cathedral is genuine surprise. She is not obsessed with what she has read, or with what she has been told to think, but is making a discovery for herself. Also her writing is free from that other pest of the guide-book—sham rhetoric."
+ Sat R 147:772 Je 8 '29 380w

"Her great merit is that she tells you how to get at them—uncertainty about which has done more to encourage ignorance on the subject than any other cause. In the first place Miss Henderson gives a clear map, in the form of an end-paper, showing cathedral towns only and their railway connexions."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p634 Ag 15 '29 250w
Wis Lib Bul 25:410 D '29

HENDERSON, PHILIP. First poems. 64p $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Dent]
821 [30-31260]

A first volume by a young English poet. The lyrics on wind, cloud, sea and other aspects of nature are for the most part in vers libre; there are longer poems in which the poet reveals a satirical touch.

Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 180w

"Mr. Henderson makes his bow with some confidence. Not often does a first book attract one by its individuality; but here is something quite fresh. Mr. Henderson has still to appreciate the value of staccato in free-verse structure. He has, however, already learned to be unliterary, to use words only when he has brought them to life through patient observation and shrewd feeling. His poems are, therefore, a real experience to the reader, and give pleasure not only for their promise, but also for their accomplishment. He is an artist; and that is rare praise." Richard Church
+ Nation and Ath 47:352 Je 14 '30 100w
Reviewed by Geoffrey Grigson
Sat R 150:181 Ag 9 '30 280w

"There is a very promising touch to some of these free verse poems. Nothing truly outstanding as yet, but experience is related with a certain technical distinction." W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 7:24 Ag 2 '30 30w

"These poems reveal a fine and impulsive sensibility, but one which flows at present too easily into words. Mr. Henderson has yet to learn to deepen his feeling by opposing thought to it and to resist his fluency by opposing form to it. Certainly in his love poems his feeling is intense enough to triumph often over looseness of form and even to create a form of its own, but as a whole his volume reveals rather rich possibilities than complete realizations."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p499 Je 12 '30 280w

HENDRICKS, MEREDITH SHERWOOD. Oxy-acetylene welder's handbook; a complete and practical manual of modern practice. 208p il $3 Acetylene journal pub. co., 608 S. Dearborn st., Chicago
671 Oxyacetylene welding 29-18062

"Up-to-date instruction in equipment, methods, inspection and testing, training of operators, and special applications to tanks, pipes, sheet metal, aircraft, brazing, silver soldering, and cutting. Author is editor of the Acetylene journal."—N Y New Tech Bks

---

"Few engineers will ever handle a welding torch themselves, but yet will find this handbook of value. While it is written in a simple and non-technical manner for use by the practical welder, very little of the information in its 200 pages is of a type to be out of place in the library of the engineer who designs for or specifies welding. Such subjects as welding gases, types of welds, weld inspection and testing, training of operators and welding properties of the common metals, to mention only part of the range of the book, may well be considered necessary adjuncts to the engineer's bag of tricks."
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:690 N '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '30
N Y New Tech Bks 14:57 O '29
Pratt p18 autumn '30
St Louis 28:10 Ja '30

HENDRYX, JAMES BEARDSLEY. Blood on the Yukon trail. 305p $1 Doubleday, Doran 30-31186

A thrilling series of adventures which fall to the lot of Brad Trevis, Alaskan sourdough, as a result of his desire to spare a loved sister the shame and disgrace likely to follow the misconduct of her husband.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 N 30 '30 120w

"This is distinctly a man's book, and should please readers of Curwood and London. The reader is not wearied by sentences telling about the continual fall of the snow, the marvelous scenic beauty of the Yukon country, and so on. This kindly omission and tacit assumption that the reader has an adequate mental picture of the Northwest will appeal to any one who likes to take his he-man tales straight."
+ N Y Times p38 D 7 '30 200w

HENRY, HARRIET. Jackdaws strut. 310p $2.50 Morrow
30-15705

The jackdaw in the story is Stephany Dale, who wanted peacock feathers. She lives in New York, and is determined to purchase money and position, the things that count with her. Nicky loves Stephany—but he is only a poor boy struggling with his first novel. Then Stephany, meeting the wealthy and correct Charles, enters the society of her heart's desire. Charles, however, learns of her lowly birth; and Stephany, once more a jackdaw without feathers, goes back to work and poverty. Nicky, of course, comes along again, romance blooms, and all is well.

Books p15 Ag 10 '30 250w

"The dramatic suspense and the sustained narrative interest which 'Jackdaws Strut' undeniably contains, compensate the reader rather well for the incredibility inherent in the characterization of Stephany Dale."
+ — N Y Times p8 Je 22 '30 600w

"Very juvenile indeed is Jackdaws Strut in which coincidence plays an important part. . . The authoress has facility and is observing." F. L. R.
— + Outlook 155:268 Je 18 '30 180w

HENRY, STUART OLIVER. Conquering our great American plains; a historical development. 395p il $5 Dutton
978.1 Frontier and pioneer life. Abilene, Kansas. Cattle trade 30-9602

A picture of pioneer life along the old Chisholm trail to Abilene, Kansas, sixty years ago, by a man who grew up in Abilene during this period. The author describes the development of the region, the cattle trade, the conflicts between the law-abiding and the lawless, family life, prostitution, gambling, and other inevitable features of western frontier life.

Booklist 27:59 O '30

"It is a personal record well substantiated by quotations from authorities. The fascinated followers of Wild Bill Hickok and the Chisholm Trail will find this an extraordinary bit of Americana."
+ Bookm 71:xxxi Ap '30 80w

"All the old Wild West of the Texan herdsmen of the late '60s has been reconstructed by a writer who has a double advantage in combining careful scholarship with vivid imaginative quality. He paints an unforgettable picture of early pioneer life in the '60s and '70s." Francis Snow
+ Current Hist 32:214 My '30 180w
N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 100w

"Mr. Henry has written a graphic, realistic and dramatic book about this period, seeing in it not merely a local development of spectacular and somewhat evil notoriety but the significance of rival influences at work to shape the future of the West. . . Mr. Henry's abundant and authoritative material might have been a little better organized and his narrative more concise in the telling." F. F. Kelly
+ — N Y Times p5 Ap 6 '30 1250w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger
N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 200w

"An unsatisfactory admixture of historical detail, personal bias, and controversial peevishness. . . Mr Henry's volume is a collection of notes and footnotes, often of interest, but at times set down too much from the personal viewpoint, awaiting further evaluation and integration."
— Springf'd Republican p14 Ap 16 '30 300w

HENSCHKE, ALFRED (KLABUND, pseud.). Incredible Borgias; tr. from the German by Louise Brink. 256p $2.50 Liveright
Borgia family 29-21220

From a prelude that paints the Borgias as descendants of lustful centaurs, the author unrolls this poetic caricature of their wicked careers. Nothing is too bad for these handsome and wilful people to do; in vivid colors, Klabund records the amazing history of Juan, Alexander, Cesare and Lucrezia from the beginning to the extinction of the name of Borgia in Italy.

"Klabund writes of the most notorious family of the Italian Renaissance in a strange staccato style that matches the gorgeous insanity he depicts. Lucrezia, Cesare, and all their kin, like figures in some mad Dance of Death, are fantastic and fascinating."
Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 50w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Books p10 O 20 '29 500w

"The story would certainly not be as interesting were it not for 'Klabund's' style, not unlike Cabell's in part, but mostly straight-forward journalese, packing staggering concept upon staggering concept until the reader, breathless, reads the last page. Who is the writer who can make modern man read from cover to cover without missing a single word? 'Klabund' has made every word count, although several of his blows are below the belt of decency. This is fascinating reading."
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 9 '29 350w

"The author succeeds admirably in making the Borgias thoroughly incredible. Every breath of scandal that blew upon them is here given as gospel truth; every rumor of incest, rape, poison and treachery has its place in this book as authentic. Some of the incidents are true; many are false, but the reader is left no choice. If one takes this book, as it is perhaps meant, purely in the form of entertainment, it is hard to surpass. It is vivid, colorful, fascinating, and once started is difficult to abandon."
+ — N Y Times p4 O 27 '29 550w

HERBERT, ALAN PATRICK. Misleading cases in the common law; with an introd. by Lord Hewart; from the fourth English edition. 236p $1.50 Putnam
827

Mr Herbert, of Punch, pokes fun at several knotty problems of English law and justice in these twenty-one satirized cases. In the mock-trial scenes presented such vital questions as the following are solved: Is it defamation of character to call a lady a highbrow? Under what category does insult fall when played on a graphophone? Is it a free country?

"It isn't every day that a humorist has, or deserves to have, his frivolities introduced by the Lord Chief Justice of England, particularly if his comic barbs be aimed against the law. But A. P. Herbert is a privileged as well as a talented jester, and Lord Hewart is quite right in stating that 'there are no doubt many thousands of distinctively respectable persons who will chuckle and chuckle again and again over the neatness, the deftness and the dexterity—the sense, the satire and the scholarship—of these criticisms wrapped in the pleasant guise of parody.' "

HERBERT, A. P.—Continued
+ Books p20 S 14 '30 250w

"Under all the foolery is a delicious and frank fling at modern justice. Other people than lawyers will enjoy this."
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 320w

HERBERT, ALAN PATRICK. Water gipsies. 414p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Methuen]
30-32905

Jane Bell grew up on an old barge anchored somewhere near Hammersmith. Her ideas of life and love were founded mainly on the movies. Her father, a mild little man, played the cello in the movies, so she knew them well. Jane walked out with Fred, the bargeman, and Ernest, the socialist, but she was in love with Mr Bryan, the artist. Altho she married twice Jane decided that Life was very unlike the movies. But that may have been because Mr Bryan did not fall in love with her; that would have been Romance.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

"It has something of Dickens's spirit, but is amusingly lacking in sentimentality. There is no doubt but that is it a good funny story—but it would be twice as funny in England, where such things as Derby Day and dog racing are a part of the general background. Tragedy is more easily transplanted than comedy. Mr. Herbert has long been associated with Punch. If you like Punch better than The New Yorker, here is the book for you." Esther Forbes
+ Bookm 72:420 D '30 280w

"I think 'Cakes and Ale' and 'The Water Gipsies' the most amusing books which have flown the Atlantic this season. If any one foresees a dull evening ahead and would forestall it and make it one of the bright and joyous evenings of the winter, let him get 'The Water Gipsies.' " Stephen Graham
+ Books p2 N 16 '30 800w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann
Boston Transcript p2 D 13 '30 1800w

"The writing in this book is as felicitous as its title; waterside people have seldom been drawn so delightfully." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:540 Jl 26 '30 170w

"The Water Gipsies is a lovely, most entertaining book."
+ New Statesman 35:370 Je 28 '30 200w

" 'The Water Gipsies,' like J. B. Priestley's 'The Good Companions,' and 'Angel Pavement,' marks a return to the traditional type of English novel, mellow, leisurely, rich in characterization, and in the sense of a time-imbued background. There are incidents which, differently treated, might be melodramatic; but the drama, exciting though it is, is of real life, not of the theatre or the screen. And though there is abundance, there is nothing of sprawl; the composition of the book is firmly knit. Then, too, while the book is a reversion to an old-fashioned type, if you choose to call it so, it is entirely modern in spirit, perfectly unsentimental." L. M. Field
+ N Y Times p7 N 23 '30 800w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 N 14 '30 680w

"Mr. Herbert loves England and he loves particularly its waterways, and there is plenty of both. He loves simple things and makes you love them too, but he sees beneath the surface, and his ever present humor is brilliant and penetrating. There are three classes of books that are widely read: those that everybody praises and nobody enjoys, those that everybody enjoys and nobody praises, and those that everybody both praises and enjoys. The Water Gipsies is in this last class." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:470 N 19 '30 220w

"The industrious foreigner, intent on his search after 'the real England,' would be well advised, both for entertainment's and instruction's sake, to lay aside his 'Forsyte Saga' and discover the water gipsies on riverside nights."
+ Sat R 149:822 Je 28 '30 320w

"His world of Thames barge-dwellers, housemaids, shop girls, ticket collectors and decamping bookies has a Dickensian richness and geniality. But Jane and Lily Bell are creatures of realism and not of Dickensian fantasia. . Mr. Herbert has an affection for silly people. The skill with which he gets into the minds and hearts of the poor in their grotesque pagan world is facilitated by his incapacity for hating, despising or condemning anyone. . . The story is perhaps too level and tideless to be called a great creation." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:1064 Je 28 '30 620w

"Mr. A. P. Herbert has some affinities with Dickens; but let it be emphasized in extenuation that his outlook is modern, and that he has room in his affections for young women who would fail to get a character from the creator of Little Nell. . . In his first chapter he secures his Jane a place in the reader's affections, and she never loses it."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p512 Je 19 '30 650w

HEREDIA, JOSE MARIA DE. Trophies, with other sonnets; now first completely tr. into English by John Myers O'Hara & John Hervey. 241p il $3.50 Day
841 29-25005

"Heredia's one book, 'The Trophies,' comprising sonnets gathered for publication after he was fifty, at once established a reputation which the years have little altered. Early allied with Leconte de Lisle and heading the Parnassians, Heredia found for classical themes and moods, for medieval desires and visions, for modern scenes and moments a fluidity of phrase that makes him perhaps the French master of the sonnet form. The present translation presents the work in a rendering which, allowing for the difference in the languages, preserves much of its chiseled beauty and should make Heredia better known in this country."—Nation

Booklist 26:230 Mr '30

"The biographical and critical introduction is an invaluable and comprehensive account of Heredia's life and art. With the new poems, here offered for the first time in English, the translators are to be highly commended for achieving what appears to be a definitive English edition of Heredia." W. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p8 F 1 '30 500w

"José-Maria de Heredia is perhaps the best example of the poet of even quality; he stored up the work of 30 years until his mature judgment produced a volume containing only his finest writing. His insistence upon the highest standards of workmanship has made his 'Trophies' one of the favorite books which have been translated into foreign tongues."
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 25 '30 220w

Nation 129:560 N 13 '29 120w

"John O'Hara and John Hervey, who have made the present translation, have done an exceptionally brilliant piece of work. . . 'The Trophies' is not a closely knit sequence, and as a whole has not the profundity of 'The House of Life.' Perhaps the sonnet tide had already begun to turn. But José-Maria de Heredia must rank as a great poet and a great sonneteer. And to find him at last in translation is fortune indeed." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p16 Ag 17 '30 320w

"Messrs. O'Hara and Hervey have caught, despite some lapses into an outworn poetic diction, much of the poet's grandeur and splendid skill and their version retains enough of the original perfection of phrase and manner to indicate why de Heredia's single volume has been sufficient claim to fame."

+ N Y World p11m O 20 '29 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

"His two interpreters are rendering a valuable service to French civilization in presenting their translation to an English-speaking public. The volume should bring to readers unacquainted with Hérédia's verse a vision of a new world of poetry and to those more familiar with him a fuller sense of the unique beauty of his creation." S. L. Lavengood
+ Sat R of Lit 7:87 Ag 30 '30 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p8 Ja 2 '30 2200w

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH. Party dress. 343p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-10241

"Nina Henry is an intelligent if rather thoughtless woman of forty, married and with two children, who leads very much the normal life of other women of her class—her husband is a prosperous business man—in a small residential town. She regards her way of living as settled, fixed and final, until she puts on her first real Paris dress, and realizes that she is still young, that she still desires to be loved. That night she meets the embittered Chalke Ewing; at their third meeting he kisses her, and she knows that thenceforth she can be his and his only, whatever the consequences. These are, unfortunately, tragic. . . It concludes swiftly and unhappily, but in the only possible way."—Times [London] Lit Sup

For biographical sketch of the author see Books p1 Je 15 '30

Atlantic Bookshelf p16 Je '30 200w

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. R. Thompson
Bookm 71:327 Je '30 750w

"Mr. Hergesheimer's technical competence, his decorative gift with words, have never been better displayed. Always he has costumed his stories with loving care; and in the present instance, where the party dress really forms the theme of the book, he excels himself." Isabel Paterson
+ Books p3 Ap 13 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p2 My 14 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p11 Ap 19 '30 450w

"The new novel will do little to revive a waning reputation."
Nation 130:604 My 21 '30 260w

"An unpleasing story about unpleasant people. Mr. Hergesheimer writes well and probes skilfully; perhaps the probe is not too sympathetic a weapon to test one's fellows with." K. C. Tomlinson
— + Nation and Ath 47:182 My 10 '30 350w

"Of beauty or glamor in 'The Party Dress' there is not a trace; it is the sort of thing Michael Arlen might write if he decided to tackle Main Street. . . Mr. Hergesheimer is a careful observer. He knows a great deal about the upper middle class in provincial towns—its stupidity and bigotry, its scabrous cowardice. He knows a great deal about women's undergarments, he knows the proper appetizer to use with cocktails, the improper manners of matrons on midnight swimming parties. Unfortunately, about the human heart and the human mind he does not know so much—or if he does, he writes very badly indeed about them." Howard Coxe
— New Repub 62:251 Ap 16 '30 800w

"This is a sad decline for the author of Java Head, but not so severe a fall for the author of Cytherea. One had hopes that that novel was an indiscretion, a kind of self-indulgence, of Mr. Hergesheimer's; but here he is repeating that study in lewd, idle, stupid, wealthy people with the same careful affection."
— New Statesman 35:62 Ap 19 '30 110w

"'The Party Dress' is rather superficial. It is sparkling and gay and tender and romantically melancholy in Mr. Hergesheimer's best vein, but it contains neither the beauty nor the emotional depth of which he has shown himself capable." Margaret Wallace
— + N Y Times p9 Ap 13 '30 650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Ap 10 '30 1050w

"Hergesheimer's most striking quality, his gorgeous sensuousness which expressed itself in a brave and magnificent use of color, has become a noisy smacking of the lips, an oily rubbing of the hands. This book about people who drink too much, play too much, above all, talk too much is an example of what can happen to a fine talent when it is not matched by fine taste." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 154:626 Ap 16 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

Sat R 149:758 Je 14 '30 450w

"'The Party Dress,' as any one who has ever read a paragraph of Mr. Hergesheimer will expect, is far better written than most novels, in a style that is in itself a pleasure. The ideas, though not profound, are interesting. The setting is masterly. The book is eminently readable. But it is a long way below 'The Three Black Pennys' and 'Java Head.'" Basil Davenport
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1007 My 3 '30 320w

"Though we miss the abandon and colour of Mr. Hergesheimer's other books, and could not reread this as we might reread them, it is impossible not to admire the shrewd artifice both in words and character-drawing which the book exhibits. And it does not lack those able evocations of a landscape, or a group of people moving in a spacious scene, to which his earlier books accustomed us."
+ — Spec 145:197 Ag 9 '30 220w

"The primary defect of this novel is, that having stripped his situation to fundamentals, he has found it necessary to supply a great deal of not very interesting padding to make a long novel of it. Perfumes, the colours and styles of feminine dresses and underwear, the intimacies of the bed room, the technical details of golf and bridge—the author seems almost to fondle and appraise these things as one might an antique tapestry or finely woven silk. It is done, admittedly, with a masterly ability, but it becomes, in bulk, sometimes tiresome."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p350 Ap 24 '30 550w

HERMANT, ABEL. Last and first love; tr. by Slater Brown. 384p $2 Macaulay

This novel by a French man of letters, the first of his work to be translated into English, is a satiric portrayal of the upper strata of London society. Lord Chelsea, the central character, is a social poseur and esthete, nearing sixty. Thru his instigation a beautiful music hall singer, Gladys Nilson, and the wealthy young Lord Roxwell meet and fall in love. Chelsea's own affair—his "last and first love"—is the great regenerative influence in his life.

"'Last and First Love' is a very long, tedious book: slow in movement, repetitious in character delineation, and with a most unconvincing denouement."
— Books p15 O 12 '30 280w

Nation 131:631 D 3 '30 180w

"The book has a slightly poisonous flavor. Chelsea himself, though living his orchidaceous life in the immediately post-war world that Aldous Huxley likes periodically to dip into his plot of black bile, bears a surface resemblance to Oscar Wilde." John Chamberlain
New Repub 64:237 O 15 '30 600w

"With his cosmopolitan outlook, gained from long experience in the diplomatic service, and his intimate knowledge of English character and scene, Hermant has achieved a tour de force: he has revealed something of the superficially simple yet profoundly complex and elusive soul of the race that has produced a Shakespeare and—a Mrs. Grundy. . . The value lies in the character drawings [of the book], the subtle development of motives and a style which compounds the qualities of irony, lucidity and emotional intensity."

HERMANT, ABEL—Continued
+ N Y Times p6 O 5 '30 700w

HEROLD, DON. Strange bedfellows; my crazy-quilt memoirs, life maxims and what-not. 250p il $2.50 Farrar
817 30-11603

Essays, sketches, and maxims by an American humorist, with drawings by the author.

"This book contains his epigrams, his likes and dislikes, and there is little of that painful striving to be funny so apparent in many humorous books."
+ Bookm 72:xxiv O '30 100w

"A richly entertaining assortment of humor on such subjects as the joys of small towns, the joys of large towns, dogs, illness, college, fried chicken, marriage, children, teeth, early rising, Aimee Semple McPherson, et cetera."
+ Books p10 My 4 '30 150w
N Y Times p30 D 14 '30 420w
Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 400w

HERRICK, MARVIN THEODORE. Poetics of Aristotle in England. (Cornell studies in English) 196p pa $1.75 Yale univ. press [8s Oxford]
808.1 Aristotle. Literature, Comparative—Greek and English

"This treatise collects all the references to the Poetics in English literature, from Roger Bacon, Ascham, Sidney, and Ben Jonson to Dryden and Rymer, and from Addison to Fielding, Johnson, Coleridge, Hazlitt, Arnold, and Henry Arthur Jones."—Class Philol

Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '30 900w

"It is a faithful and useful compendium. But the results are slight, whether for the interpretation of the Poetics or the development of English literary criticism. Recent fashion has indeed somewhat exaggerated the significance and the influence of the Poetics." Paul Shorey
+ — Class Philol 25:303 Jl '30 380w

HERRIOT, EDOUARD. United states of Europe; tr. by Reginald J. Dingle. 330p $3.50 Viking press [12s 6d Harrap]
330.94 Europe—Economic conditions. Europe—Politics. Europe—Commercial policy. International federation 30-31999

The former premier of France discusses in this book the Briand proposal for a European federation in order to further Europe's position of world leadership, and to meet the threatening commercial powers of America and Russia. M. Herriot outlines the history of the Pan-European movement as a background to the present situation.

"The most valuable parts of this book are those which discuss the economic problems confronting Europe today. In this connection the author quotes at length from a large number of private memoranda not hitherto available to American readers. The work is less satisfactory in its treatment of the relation of the European federation to Russia, the British Empire and the League." R. L. Buell
+ — Books p3 N 30 '30 800w

"Though M. Herriot's book is heavily documented—too heavily documented, since he reproduces declarations without digesting them—it reads like a superficial political discourse, composed alternately of dull, prolix passages designed to give it weight, and outbursts of rhetoric which are unconvincing. . . But the book, despite these faults, is nevertheless valuable, and should be read by all serious students of international affairs." Sisley Huddleston
— + Christian Science Monitor p6 D 13 '30 450w
Foreign Affairs 9:357 Ja '31 350w
Nation and Ath 48:440 D 27 '30 80w

"First, his sincerity is obvious. Second, he has, like his fellow-federationist, M. Briand, a background of practical politics and statesmanship to help him; instead of being merely a book-writing theorist, he was Premier of France, is Mayor of Lyons and has behind him a life-time of political activity to give his theories practical weight. . . Third, M. Herriot is a business man as well as a politician and scholar, which qualifies him to discuss the economic side of the idea of European federation. With this threefold equipment it was obvious that M. Herriot could write a valuable book on European federation. And he has." T. R. Ybarra
+ N Y Times p3 N 23 '30 1600w

"This is the latest authentic summary of the aims and program of the so-called Pan-European movement from the 15th century to the present day." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 82:17 D '30 100w

"Like all Radicals, he will ignore any fact that does not support his theories, and the result is that this book is quite worthless save as an expression of individual opinion. . . If the case for a European federation can find no more skilful a counsel than M. Herriot, it will assuredly go by default, for he here proves himself to be as incompetent an advocate as he was a Prime Minister."
— Sat R 150:644 N 15 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p952 N 20 '30 1050w

HERSCH, VIRGINIA DAVIS (MRS LEE HERSCH). Woman under glass; Saint Teresa of Avila. 314p $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper
Teresa, Saint—Fiction 30-24052

The story of the life of St Teresa of Avila, a woman of sixteenth century Spain, who, after an emotional and romantic adolescence, gave up the life of a worldly woman to become a religious mystic. The background to the novel presents with historical fidelity the politics and religion of Spanish Catholicism at that period.

"Because Miss Hersch writes competently in a pseudo-poetic manner which is unobtrusive enough, one experiences no difficulty in reading what she has written. At times she is graceful, at times acute. She seems capable simultaneously of detachment and reverence. Why, then, does Woman under Glass convey to the reader so little? . . . It must be because Miss Hersch has essayed an art-form and has in no way been successful. If one looks closely at her work one detects a deplorable confusion of styles. She borrows but she makes no attempt to assimilate. Nothing is passed through a common crucible, nothing is created. And what an author fails to create a reader fails to retain."
— + Bookm 72:302 N '30 280w

"Mrs. Hersch has done an intense and narrowed study; the spotlight never leaves her protagonist, but it illumines only Teresa and the people very near to her, a few relatives, some of her spiritual advisers and some of her disciples. . . She does well with the subtle alteration of a highly sexed girl into a Bride of Christ. There is a hint of modern psychology, perhaps in this thesis, but not too much; Mrs. Hersch makes the story of the change tender and moving." Herschel Brickell
+ Books p4 S 21 '30 650w
New Statesman 36:179 N 15 '30 40w

"Again one applauds Mrs. Hersch's choice of subject, and again one must quarrel with her treatment of it. Her style, capable of excellent images, weaves a soft confusion over the definitions and rigors of such austere mystics in art and religion as Greco and Teresa of Avila. Mrs. Hersch has arranged in correspondent mystic phases the realistic successions of a woman's life. In showing Teresa a creature of emotion, she has neglected to convey the sense of how iron that emotion must have been. She was a woman of force and ambition, and these qualities expressed themselves in a vehicle appropriate to her age. Mrs. Hersch has conveyed with more success the interior progress of her subject's mystic personality." Vincent McHugh

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 150w

"The author finds herself in a difficult position. Instead of mastering her subject, the subject has mastered her. . . Instead of writing a rich and well-balanced story about the life of one of the most intelligent—if highly emotional—women of the Renaissance, the author has presented us with a subjective novel which is little more than a garish display of emotion. There is but one incident in the book which rings true and that is the death of Alonso, Teresa's father. It is of unusual beauty."

— + N Y Times p9 D 21 '30 550w

"The theme is presented by Mrs. Hersch in a style that is fluent, rhythmic and colored like a poet's. Both the style and the intimations of the story tend to build up a structure of meaning that is at once devout and beautiful. Sainthood, Mrs. Hersch seems to say, may be appointed of God from the beginning of time, but the stuff He works with and which He shapes and molds, is after all of the earthy." Pierre Loving

+ N Y World p3e O 26 '30 580w

HEWARD, CONSTANCE. Ameliaranne and the monkey. unp il $1.50 McKay [12s Harrap]

29-13370

Ameliaranne Stiggins wanted to act in the movies, but instead she helped Martha the cook at Miss Twitter's house. Then Miss Twitter's nephew brought with him from America a trained chimpanzee, who served tea to Ameliaranne and the five little Stigginses so cleverly that a man came and took a moving picture of them all.

"Somewhat too ambitious in its moral, unless we find it charming that a little girl becomes a movie star on the same bill as a monkey, and so is able to earn enough money to go to the seashore. There's plenty of time for that sort of nonsense when we get older. Text and pictures are quite trite." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 80w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller

N Y World p11m D 1 '29 50w

"An amusing tale to read aloud to small children who will be pleased to find that for every page which is read to them there is a fullpage colored picture."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 D 20 '29 80w

Wis Lib Bul 26:108 Mr '30

HEWART OF BURY, GORDON HEWART, 1st baron. New despotism. 311p $5 Cosmopolitan bk. [21s Benn]

354.42 Great Britain—Politics and government. Legislation—Great Britain. Great Britain—Parliament 29-24336

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by John Dickinson

Am Pol Sci R 24:177 F '30 1500w

Pratt p12 spring '30

St Louis 28:67 Mr '30

Reviewed by R. J. Smith

Yale Law J 39:762 Mr '30 1750w

HEWES, MRS AGNES DANFORTH. Spice and the devil's cave. 331p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-20164

Gathered in Zakuto's Lisbon workship overlooking the harbor are Bartholomew Diaz, Vasco da Gama, and young Ferdinand Magellan, talking of sea adventure and expeditions. The plot of the story that follows centers upon the discovery of the Way of the Spices by an expedition under the leadership of Vasco da Gama. A battle with Venetian pirates adds color and movement to the narrative. Decorations by Lynd Ward.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"All aglow with the pleasure of reading 'Spice and the Devil's Cave,' we hesitate to mention what seems to us a flaw—and that is the lack of humor. We do not have to have our little joke, like our morning cup of coffee, but we feel a little protest against some of the heroics. When a fourteen-year-old reader also notices that not only a kind heart beats in the rough sailor breast of Scander but also a heart of the most delicate and gentlemanly sensibilities, one wonders if he really did get that way." J. H. Thomas

+ — Books p8 O 12 '30 900w

"An ideal answer to the question as to what to give to the boy or girl of the 14-16 year group on whom the ordinary adventure and mystery stories have begun to pall. It is historical fiction, but so successfully has the author brought to us the spirit of the times, so vividly has she shown us the eventual happenings, and so genuine are her people, that one is likely to forget that centuries have elapsed since the fleet of Vasco da Gama sailed into Lisbon harbor on its return from the east." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 O 4 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"Miss Hewes's novel is colorful but lacking in sufficient action for this sort of book. However, I may be growing old and too much drugged with the hour's need of action to appreciate fully a nice, quiet-paced boy's book. The decorations by Lynd Ward are striking." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 100w

Reviewed by E. O'Connor

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

"The drama of her novel is inherent in the material. Just as it has not needed to be 'written down' to the juvenile taste, so it is quite complex and stirring enough to hold the attention of the adult reader. . . Thoroughly immersed in the spirit of her material, Mrs. Hewes has nevertheless selected such tense and revealing episodes that 'Spice and the Devil's Cave,' quite apart from its historical flavor, has a vivid and independent artistic life."

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 27 '30 650w

St Louis 28:303 D '30

HEWINS, WILLIAM ALBERT SAMUEL. Apologia of an imperialist; forty years of Empire policy. 2v 312;357p il $10 Smith, R.R. [42s Constable]

942.08 Great Britain—Colonies. Imperial federation. Great Britain—Politics and government [30-13751]

"Mr. Hewins has had a varied career, and has kept a diary. From 1895 to 1903 he was director of the London School of Economics, wherein he was closely associated with the Webbs. . . He resigned from his professorship, and, from 1903 to 1917, was secretary of the unofficial, but well-organized, inquiry into imperial problems and resources set up by that statesman under the name Seventh Tariff Commission, and afterwards, for some years, its chairman. In 1912 he entered parliament, and, from 1917 to 1919, he was under-secretary of state for the colonies. In these positions he came into contact with many influential men, and he gives interesting pictures of Mr. Chamberlain, the Webbs, Lord Balfour, Mr. Walter Long and many others."—Canadian Hist R.

Reviewed by E. S. Griffith

Am Pol Sci R 24:755 Ag '30 450w

"Parts of his diary are dull, and the book could have been shortened with advantage; but much of it is not only interesting, but valuable to the historian." W. L. Grant

+ — Canadian Hist R 11:266 S '30 380w

HEWINS, W. A. S.—Continued

"The book contains no sustained argument for the author's views, but the protectionist and the imperialist will find, nevertheless, much grist for his mill. The diary extracts, which make up probably a half of the whole, are fresh, pungent and revealing, and throw new light on the personalities and politics of the last thirty years." A. H. Basye

+ Current Hist 33:vi D '30 1050w

"This book ought to have been cut down by at least a volume. There are interesting things in it, but the number of uninteresting things make it almost impossible for anyone to have the patience to find the plums. . . Professor Hewins seems to lack any sense of discrimination between the important and the unimportant."

— + Nation and Ath 46:438 D 21 '29 180w

"Backstairs intrigue in retrospect is neither edifying nor amusing, and of the pulling of wires the author is evidently a past master. . . Instead of lifting the curtain upon the inner history of the events in which he has played so prominent a part, the author is content to fill page after page with accounts of interviews with forgotten statesmen in connexion with problems that have long since ceased to matter; and it is a curious fact that in these discussions it is almost always Professor Hewins who was right, and the others, especially Mr. Bonar Law, who were wrong."

— Sat R 148:482 O 26 '29 600w

"Mr. Hewins has always tended to play a lone hand and his statements about particular incidents must be read with caution, because he had no great liking or respect for any of his leaders except Mr. Chamberlain and—in his later years—Lord Balfour."

Spec 143:828 N 30 '29 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p827 O 17 '29 230w

HEWITT, EDWARD RINGWOOD. Telling on the trout. new and rev ed 216p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner

799 Trout. Trout fishing 30-7764

A revised and enlarged edition of a book first published in 1926 (Book Review Digest, 1926). The author writes from fifty years' experience on many aspects of trout fishing: trout stocking; on the improvement of existing streams and fisheries; suggestions for the increase in the insect food of the stream; experiences on the river Test in England; and a description of actual nymph fly fishing up-stream.

Booklist 26:407 Jl '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p491 Je 12 '30 200w

HEWITT, GRAILY. Lettering; for students and craftsmen. (New art lib.) 336p $6 Lippincott [15s Seeley]

745 Lettering

A master of lettering who has for many years been a teacher of calligraphy is the author of this book on the history of manuscript writing. The volume contains also a technical discussion, with illustrations, of the theory and practice of good lettering from the standpoint of both beauty and utility.

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden

Nation and Ath 48:17 O 4 '30 1500w

"It will be invaluable to the serious student, the connoisseur, and above all, the teacher. In fact it would not be a bad thing were every adult who presumed to teach a child his 'letters' compelled to digest it. . . His book reveals a fine humour, a vast fund of knowledge, and a sleight of hand that, with scarcely a touch, can differentiate between a grave and a gay letter and a downright caricature."

+ New Statesman 36:151 N 8 '30 1400w

"It will richly reward everyone who uses a pen, everyone with an eye for the form of printed letters, every author, even, sufficiently alive to the handicap which makes literature the only art which now possesses no handicraft of its own. . . The legacy of Mr. Graily Hewitt's training and experience is condensed into this beautiful book; a book as good to look at as to read, as practically useful as it is inspiring, and destined, one may hope, to bring back the sense of lettering to a world so long content to suck the meaning of 'printed matter' that it has lost the finer faculty of its eyes." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 150:493 O 18 '30 1300w

HEYER, GEORGETTE. Barren corn. 282p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

[30-10244]

"How Laura Bruton, a middle-class assistant in a Riviera hat shop, who resembled a Luini Madonna, had 'generous curves,' and at 30 was all simplicity, met Hugh Salinger 'one of the leisured class,' how his intentions were strictly dishonorable; how she withstood him and 'the hunger to possess her grew more fierce'; how he proposed, the doubtful acceptance, and its result."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The story is beautifully written, with that smooth precision of Miss Heyer's which seems to be effortless. There is never a word too many. There is never a word too few. Underneath the somewhat cynical style with which she portrays England's Ruling Order, runs the same compelling force which makes her historical romances so unusual. What gives it distinction is that, hand in hand with the romance goes an astonishing outlook on society. The entire novel might be a treatise on socialism, were it not so aristocratic." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 27 '30 1600w

"The heroine, for all the simple faithfulness of her love, is a dull creature and one regrets that Miss Heyer has wasted a pretty talent upon her." V. S. Pritchett

— Spec 144:713 Ap 26 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p436 My 22 '30 320w

HEYER, GEORGETTE. Beauvaliet. 348p il $2.50 Longmans [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-8263

Narrates the adventures on land and sea of Sir Nicholas Beauvallet, a gallant super-pirate, scourge of the Spanish Main, a friend of Drake, and a favorite of Queen Elizabeth. On one of his exploits he captures a fiery Spanish girl and her father, falls in love with the girl, lands her in Spain, and returns in disguise to woo her and carry her off once more, this time to England.

Booklist 27:28 S '30

"A delightful romance, with all the adventure of olden days."

+ Bookm 71:xi Ag '30 80w

Books p16 Mr 30 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p1 Ap 18 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30

"Sir Nicholas is really Douglas Fairbanks, who has quite superseded Byron as a model for heroes. The oaths may be Elizabethan, but the love-making is pure Hollywood, and the characters can scarcely open their lips without breaking into good captions." L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 45:766 S 14 '29 200w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 40w

"Far more of the real spirit of the England of Drake and Raleigh, Grenvil and Frobisher is to be found in this lively, well-written tale of high adventure than is to be discovered in many a more pretentious volume. . . There are plenty of dramatic scenes, as well as a charmingly, genuinely romantic love story, all aglitter with the glow and sparkle and joy of life of that colorful, adventurous Elizabethan England."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 8 '30 520w

"Those who care for grandiose Elizabethan romance should find in this volume several hours of satisfying diversion. . . The historic background is adequately reproduced, and the story as a whole is slightly superior to most of its type."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:809 Mr 8 '30 300w

Reviewed by Alan Porter
Spec 143:344 S 14 '29 80w

"Miss Heyer has produced a pleasing story of great days."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p796 O 10 '29 250w

HEYL, PAUL RENNO. New frontiers of physics. (Appleton new world of science ser.) 170p $2 (6s) Appleton
530.9 Physics—History 30-7852

A discussion, for the layman, of recent developments in the field of physics. Contents: Looking backward; Matter and its structure; Energy and its structure; The correlation between matter and energy; Space and time; Einstein; Gravitation and cosmology; Improvement in apparatus and technique, Reaction of physics upon other sciences; Looking forward. References. Index.

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

"It deserves to be judged as literature rather than as a textbook of science. It is sound and authoritative. It is not technical, although it necessarily uses technical terms. It ignores most of what the textbooks hold and confines itself to the frontiers of present exploration. It no more represents the science of physics than the adventures of Davy Crockett presents the mundane life of New York a century ago. But in no other book is the spirit of the frontier so well conveyed, the breathlessness of an unexpected vista, the tireless daily plod." Gerald Wendt
+ Books p15 Ag 24 '30 500w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:24 Ap '30
N Y Times p18 Jl 27 '30 250w
St Louis 28:209 S '30

"An admirable account of modern concepts in physics. There is also an inspiring chapter on the future of scientific thought."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p463 My 29 '30 80w

HEYWARD, DOROTHY HARTZELL (KUHNS) (MRS DU BOSE HEYWARD). Three-a-day. 301p $2.50 Century
30-10242

The loves and adventures of a vaudeville trio: Jan, the harpist, loved by her two companions; Ricardo, a young composer who played the violin; and Tad, a rich man's son who preferred his flute and gift for entertaining to inheriting millions.

" 'Three-a-Day' is a pleasant, gay, young, tender book. It's just the book for a small-town girl to read. If you're older and want a book that is kind and gentle, or if you want to try to recapture some of the optimism and froth of youth, you may like it, too." T. S. Winslow
+ Books p12 Je 22 '30 720w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 420w

"Dorothy Heyward, the wife of Du Bose Heyward, has written a sprightly and entertaining tale in 'Three-a-Day,' a back-stage yarn of the vaudeville circuits. It makes few pretensions to literary excellence and even fewer to credibility. It is, however, a nicely contrived story, marked by deft characterization and a rich flavor of theatrical goings-on."
+ N Y Times p7 Je 29 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

"Anyone who has ever felt an ambition to learn the mysterious language of Variety (and who has not?) will like this book."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 320w

HICHENS, ROBERT SMYTHE. The bracelet. 379p $2 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Cassell]
30-24349

A story of friendship and betrayal, and of a loyal woman who sacrificed herself for a man who proved to be a cad.

"A deft novel in the characteristic Hichens manner, which is to say that it presents a glittering picture of fashionable London society, wherein people with very intense emotions involve themselves in quite complex relationships."
Books p15 O 12 '30 150w
New Statesman 36:115 N 1 '30 250w
N Y Times p18 N 23 '30 500w

"There is nothing of the warmth of the desert or the desert people in it; it is all cold and foggy and damp and disagreeable and gloomy, both the mise-en scène and its characters. . . The interminably long dialogues, and the fact that the character of Olivia wins little sympathy for her plight, operates greatly in disfavor of the book. However, those interested in English 'society' and its modus operandi may enjoy the many scenes set therein."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:165 S 27 '30 240w

"The bracelet does not come upon the scene till one-third of the story is told, and this first third is undoubtedly the best, for Mr. Hichens succeeds admirably in making the characters of the three protagonists (especially of the man) vivid and the coil in which they involve themselves credible. As soon as the events become sensational, the interest begins to wane—the record becomes one of artfully contrived and somewhat melodramatic happenings or dialogues, circumstantial enough, but only interesting as leading to the solution of a riddle."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p886 O 30 '30 650w

HICKS, FREDERICK CHARLES, comp. and ed.
² Famous speeches by eminent American statesmen. 990p $5 West
815 United States—Politics and government —Addresses, essays, lectures 30-2359

"A large collection of speeches chosen for their quality as public addresses, not as historical documents. Owing to the chronologic arrangement they illustrate the art of adapting public speech to the temper of the time." (Pittsburgh Mo Bul) The compiler is librarian of the Yale Law School.

"Several of the speeches are not 'famous' and many of the speakers are not eminent American statesmen.' Professor Hicks might well have omitted perhaps a hundred pages from his large volume. Even with such elision, however, there would still be left between eight and nine hundred pages constituting a valuable review of highly important phases of American history for the last eighty years. The book is more valuable to a man who wishes to know something about his country than to a man who wishes to learn something about public speaking."
Harvard Law R 43:1336 Je '30 180w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30
St Louis 28:268 N '30

"A reader may miss from the Table of Contents the names of some of the more distinguished American orators, but if he will read the speeches themselves he may be surprised to learn what a substantial amount of real oratory has been delivered during this period. This volume is an effective answer to those who assert that oratory is a lost art. The work is a comprehensive and well chosen collection that should be of real value to the student of the spoken word. An excellent feature of the book is the foreword that precedes each speech." C. L. Lewis
+ Yale Law J 39:1086 My '30 300w

HICKS, FREDERICK CHARLES, ed. High finance in the sixties; chapters from the early history of the Erie railway. (William McKean Brown publication) 410p il $5 Yale univ. press [22s 6d Milford]

385 Erie railroad. Albany and Susquehanna railroad company. Field, David Dudley
29-23873

"These are collected contemporary essays dealing with the great days of the Erie Railroad. Three are narratives by the Adams brothers developing the cause of the Vanderbilt-Gould warfare, the Gold Corner, and the Albany and Susquehanna raid. Four deal with the legal ethics of Jay Gould's lawyers, Field and Shearman, Mr. Stickney appearing as devil's advocate, and Mr. Attorney-General Black and George Ticknor Curtis for the defense."—Harvard Law R

Reviewed by Stuart Daggett
Am Econ R 20:493 S '30 350w
Am Hist R 35:677 Ap '30 420w
Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '30

" 'High Finance in the Sixties' is interesting, not only for its value as a moral sermon or a political tract. As a story of the financial highlights of that racy decade after the Civil War—the 'fantastic era' as some have termed it, or 'the buried renaissance' as Lewis Mumford would have it—it makes spicy reading in the best traditions of the wild west thriller." I. J. Levy
+ Columbia Law R 30:915 Je '30 1000w

Reviewed by J. T. Gerould
Current Hist 31:830 Ja '30 30w

"No more powerful argument than Mr. Hicks' collection of essays can be made for the strengthening of the movement to build up a corporation bar which insists that the job must not only be technically well done, but must also conform to the broader interests of the public. A word must be said of Professor Hicks' graceful introduction. He has contrived in a few skilful pages to set the stage; to introduce the narrators, often in their autobiographical language; to ring up the curtain upon the main drama with a prologue deft, enjoyable, and learned. To the Yale University Press and Professor Hicks, the Bar owes a debt of gratitude; a debt shared (for quite other reasons) by such as enjoy a tale alive with personality, and not unpunctuated by pistol shots." A. A. Berle, Jr.
+ Harvard Law R 43:507 Ja '30 1150w

"Professor Hicks is to be congratulated on the admirable way in which he has collected the materials of a fascinating story."
+ Law Quarterly R 46:251 Ap '30 400w
St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

"Taken together, these papers constitute an admirably lucid, pungent, and thorough history of the Erie during the six years, 1866-72, when the management of that unfortunate trunk line embodied all that was most reckless, brutal, and detestable in American finance."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:974 Ap 19 '30 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p63 Ja 23 '30 150w

HICKS, FREDERICK CYRIL NUGENT. Fullness of sacrifice; an essay in reconciliation. 370p $5.50 (15s) Macmillan

232.4 Sacrifice

"Tracing the various shades of the meaning of Sacrifice through the Old Testament, and showing how much more content it had than merely that of the death of an offering, Bishop Hicks shows how those many meanings can be carried on, and, in one way or another, are carried on in the Christian conception of the Eucharist."—Churchman

"The volume is most painstaking and exhaustive. It will repay the study of anyone who delights in the thought of holiness, and wishes to know more about the ecclesiastical, historical, and theological meaning thereof." H. A. Prichard
+ Churchman p15 N 22 '30 100w

"Dr. Hicks has written a most suggestive and illuminating book, which should appeal in its wide charity and lofty spirituality to theologians of all schools of thought. It gives us a wonderful picture of the ascent of man, from his instinctive offerings at the first 'green altar' to the heights of the sanctified life." Evelyn Underhill
+ Spec 145:418 S 27 '30 500w

"A considerable book on an important subject embodying much thought and research. . . His handling of this problem is thought-provoking. It deserves careful study, and if his lines of argument are accepted, a veritable revolution in popular theology will certainly follow."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p620 Jl 31 '30 900w

HIGH, STANLEY. Church in politics. 276p $2 Harper

261.7 Church and state in the United States
30-15637

Dr High discusses the various political activities of the church, and refutes popular objections to such activity. The book contains chapters on the separation of church and state, the liquor war, God and Mammon, and pacifism.

Booklist 27:186 Ja '31

"Here is a refreshing book. It smashes as straight and sure as a prizefighter's 'left hook to the jaw' at the shameless sham of the present-day attacks upon the Church for being in politics. Of course the Church is in politics! How could it fail to be and not thereby betray the moral and spiritual ideals to which it is committed?" J. H. Holmes
+ Books p3 Jl 6 '30 820w

"Stanley High is no mean fighter on the platform, in the pulpit or in the columns of the Christian Herald and many another journal. He can state his case with great clarity and tremendous energy. No! he is not a fanatic. He is far from the caricature's reformer. He does not hesitate to condemn what he believes is wrong in the church or outside of it." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 730w

Reviewed by J. F. Scott
Current Hist 32:841 Ag '30 300w

"Not all will agree with Mr. High, but his book is to be welcomed as a forth-right defense of the political activities of our Protestant churches. The style is journalistic but the reasoning is cogent." E. B. Chaffee
Outlook 156:190 O 1 '30 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30
St Louis 28:203 S '30
Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 80w

HILL, BRIAN (MARCUS MAGILL, pseud.). Death in the box. 295p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Knopf]
30-9315

Penelope Armstrong, novelist and sensation-seeker, sends an emu as a practical joke to the Dawsons, a young married couple of her acquaintance. The escaped and angry emu having broken up their formal dinner party, John and Beryl Dawson plan a rather gruesome revenge: the placing of an empty coffin in the apartment of superstitious Penelope, for her to discover on her return from an evening engagement. What was meant as a joke turns out to be a tragedy; but a nice old lady and a nice young man do some private detecting, determinine the circumstances of Penelope's death, and reveal the murderer.

Bookm 71:xxix Ap '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 2 '30 120w

"The story has punch and fascination, and one cannot easily put it aside. It has fresh, unusual, and different elements for which the reader of many detective and murder stories will be deeply grateful." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 5 '30 500w

"This is an uncommon sort of thriller, in which the tragedy is heavily diluted with the lightest of comedy. . . Mr. Magill develops his plot ingeniously, and his style is vastly superior to that of the ordinary run of detective novels."
+ New Statesman 34:308 D 7 '29 100w
N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 120w

"Somewhat confused in style, but swift and readable natheless." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:511 Mr 26 '30 60w

Reviewed by Margaret Cole
Spec 144:1058 Je 28 '30 80w

"This is not, strictly speaking, a detective story, still less can it be called a 'thriller'—the writing is too good for that. And yet there is a murder in it, which is ingeniously explained in the end."
Times [London] Lit Sup p1084 D 19 '29 170w

HILL, BRIAN (MARCUS MAGILL, pseud.). I like a good murder. 314p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Knopf]
30-27679

When Molly told her friends that she liked a good murder, she had no idea that Peter's dead body lay in the rear room of the little restaurant where they were dining. A good deal of amateur sleuthing on the part of the victim's acquaintances brings the murderer to light.

"Mr. Magill handles his mysteries with a deft touch and strikes a new note in this vehicle."
+ Bookm 72:xxiii S '30 80w

"The fault of the story is that in the case of the real murderer a motive is lacking until the denouement is practically upon you so you have no fair chance of guessing." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p813 O 9 '30 200w

HILL, MRS GRACE (LIVINGSTON). See Lutz, G.

HILL, HELEN, and MAXWELL, VIOLET. Golden goat. 190p il $2 Macmillan
29-22128

A fairy tale of old Provence. Little Mietto, the daughter of the Count and Countess of Rouchoun, sets out to seek the golden goat. At last she came to Aix and the palace of the king, and saw the festivals and pageants there. And at last she saw, also, the golden goat.

Booklist 26:236 Mr '30

"Troubadours, jongleurs, kings and queens, Christmas feasts and tournaments give a pleasantly medieval atmosphere and there is charm and simplicity in the telling of the story. The wood-block illustrations by the authors are delightful." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p24 Ja 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m D 22 '29 170w
St Louis 28:20 Ja '30

"Perhaps the most charming little book I have met this year. . . Any girl of ten or twelve, or even fourteen, will enjoy the companionship and the adventure of little Mietto." Elizabeth Woodbridge
+ Sat R of Lit 6:575 D 14 '29 200w

HILL, HOWARD COPELAND, ed. Readings in community life. 640p il $1.80 Ginn
353 United States—Politics and government. Social conditions 30-11592

"This volume is intended to provide concrete material for courses in civics and community life. It consists of selections chosen from a wide variety of sources designed to illuminate the main phase of community life. These readings are organized around the following topics: how we live together, the family and the home, the school and education, the church and religion, the neighborhood and the community, our nation and our country, our neighbors in other lands, safe-guarding health, protecting the community from fire, maintaining law and order, providing recreation, planning and beautifying the community, aiding the handicapped, ruling ourselves, making law, enforcing law, applying law, paying the bills, selecting our officials, and being a good citizen. The readings include stories, poems, technical discussions, historical accounts, and observations of human interest."—Am J Soc

"The selection shows excellent judgment."
+ Am J Soc 36:510 N '30 160w

"Readings in Community Life is particularly useful as a companion volume to the textbook prepared previously by the compiler, but it is also thoroughly useful in any junior high school class pursuing the recognized objectives of education for citizenship. The book is not merely an adjunct to a single textbook; it is a compilation of reading matter focused on civic training, and it can stand firmly on its own merits. It is an excellent volume for duplication in the junior high school library." H. E. Wilson
+ School R 38:714 N '30 650w

HILLEBRAND, WILLIAM FRANCIS, and LUNDELL, GUSTAV ERNST FREDERICK. Applied inorganic analysis; with special reference to the analysis of metals, minerals and rocks. 929p il $8.50 Wiley
543.6 Chemistry, Analytic. Rocks—Analysis
29-19421

"This volume of over 900 pages, by chemists of the United States Bureau of Standards, stresses the careful preparation of the solution for the determination that is to be made. Part I deals with apparatus and reagents, common and special operations, and the methods of volumetric analysis. Part II treats of the determination of the elements, the analysis of silicate rocks, carbonate rocks, soda lime glass, and minerals of high alumina content."—N Y New Tech Bks

"The work is superlative in execution, thoroughly up to date, and maintains throughout the high standards originally set by Dr. Hillebrand in his well-known earlier bulletins. It can be unreservedly recommended as being almost a necessity in connection with exact work in the field of inorganic chemical analysis." G. M. Smith
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:744 D '29 500w

"The book appears to have been done with the greatest care, and is replete with literature references covering a wide range of material over a necessarily long period of time. . . Accuracy such as has been attained by the authors can be reached only through constant attention to the minutest details of analytical procedure and technic. It is particularly in these regards that the book is a treasure house of information and experience." S. C. Lind
+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:105 Ja '30 430w

"No one in this country, perhaps in the world, was better qualified to write such a volume than the distinguished senior author with his great analytical experience. His death in 1925 interrupted the work which has now been finished in a most competent manner by the junior author."
+ N Y New Tech Bks 14:51 O '29 (Reprinted from Am J Sci, D '29)
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30
St Louis 28:40 F '30

HILLYER, ROBERT SILLIMAN. Gates of the compass; a poem in four parts together with twenty-two shorter pieces. 83p $2 Viking press
811 31-26054

Robert Hillyer's eighth volume of poetry continues the conservative tenor of his former books, with an increasingly successful manipulation of the longer poem, as evidenced by the title piece of the present volume. Mr Hillyer is assistant professor of English in Harvard University.

HILLYER, R. S.—Continued

"Both his accomplishments and the qualities that have kept him from a wider audience are illustrated by his new book. 'The Gates of the Compass' goes far beyond his previous long poems in both substance and expression, yet it would be far more compulsive if it too did not hang shimmering between tenuity and vitality." Theodore Morrison
+ — Atlantic Bookshelf p50 D '30 320w
Christian Science Monitor p9 N 15 '30 500w

Reviewed by M. U. Schappes
N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 50w

"The impression made by the book as a whole is that here is the work of a real poet, one sensitive to life and doubly sensitive to beauty. . . It is difficult not to feel that with so accomplished a poet as Robert Hillyer the sonnets should not be just a little bit better. One should be able to say of them that they are distinguished, as one may not. But they are so nearly so that they detract only slightly from the excellence of the collection in the aggregate." Percy Hutchinson
+ — N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 280w

"In 'The Gates of the Compass' Robert Hillyer presents his eighth volume of poems. He is an unobtrusive American poet who has been making steady progress with an interesting contemplative gift. Here his long title-poem in four parts is rather dispersed in effectiveness, though it opens and closes well and the author shows a command of cadence that is quite unusual today." W. R. Benét
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:270 O 25 '30 300w

HINDS, ROY W. Man called Eighty-eighty. 302p $2 McBride
30-7558

"The narrator is represented as an ordinary youth; soon after entering prison under a five-year sentence for bank embezzlement, he escapes in company with several other convicts, but he is soon captured. After serving his sentence, he joins a gang that specializes in cracking the safes of rural banks, usually within a couple of hundred miles of New York. Finally he is caught, and we leave him at the beginning of his new sentence, this time one of twenty years."—Sat R of Lit

"This first-person narrative of a crook's doings in and out of prison suffers not a little from a pervading sense of unreality. Whatever its origin and intent, it falls into that vacuous limbo between fact and fiction where so much unskilled writing has its dubious being."
— Books p12 My 4 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 320w

"Whether this is pure fiction or a transcription of a case history, the story has simple directness and verisimilitude. Neither sensational nor rowdy, the style is so naive that every slang expression is carefully explained. Mr. Hinds insists a bit too obviously on prison reform, and bears down heavily on the moral that crime doesn't pay." R. C. B. B.
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 220w

"The book is fundamentally sentimental and romantic. The narrator dramatizes his conduct and is offensively self-righteous; he, too, easily fancies himself the victim of circumstances. His smugness is a strange quality in a convict! The most unconvincing part of the story is the love interest, which suddenly appears toward the end; it has an air of amateurish carpentry that is most annoying."
— Sat R of Lit 6:1113 Je 7 '30 200w

HINE, MURIEL. See Coxon, M.

HINGSTON, RICHARD WILLIAM GEORGE. Instinct and intelligence; introd. by Bertrand Russell. 296p il $2.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Arnold]

591.51 Instinct. Animal intelligence. Animals—Habits and behavior. Insects 29-8570

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Major Hingston is a 'naturalist' who writes in fluent style a book which is best reviewed by reference to the extremely cautious preface written for it by Bertrand Russell. . . The very presence of such criticisms in the introduction may serve as a warning that the reader must proceed at his own risk in accepting without question Hingston's not infrequently startling conclusions. . . There is a wealth of descriptive material in the book, but it is to be regretted that the author chose to illustrate entirely by sketches, without the use of photographs. There is a singular lack of negative evidence, as well as an irritating refusal to define terms, both of which detract from the value of the treatment." J. G. Jenkins
— + Am J Psychol 42:668 O '30 550w
Nation 130:158 F 5 '30 180w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:71 O '29

"His subject matter, little known as it is, stirs the interest profoundly, and the very simplicity and clearness with which he writes give the charm of true art to what might have been merely dry as dust scientific data."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 650w

HINKLE, THOMAS CLARK. Tornado Boy; a horse of the West. 252p il $2 Morrow

Horses—Legends and stories 30-22440

The story of the adventures of a brave horse, who lived in the Western mountains. Tornado Boy was caught in quicksand, stolen by horse rustlers, ate loco-weed, was caught in a cattle stampede, and nearly died of starvation before he reached the end of his adventures.

Booklist 27:212 Ja '31
Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Rather too incredible a hero for adult readers, who would object, also, to the obvious fabrication of events and manipulation of their outcome by superabundant use of such S O S's as 'chance or some good angel,' 'a kind destiny,' 'fate,' and 'some vague instinct.' A youthful reader, however, will find 'Tornado Boy' a satisfactorily exciting tale and will forgive the horse-hero for being so unmitigatedly dauntless."
+ — N Y Times p7 S 7 '30 200w
St Louis 28:275 N '30

HINKSON, MRS KATHARINE (TYNAN). Collected poems. 381p $4 (10s 6d) Macmillan

821

The poems of the Irish lyricist arranged under the following group headings: The old country; Mother and child; Songs of love, life and death; Saints and angels; Prayers and desires; Heaven and earth; In war-time; Birds and flowers and beauty of earth; Legends and fantasies; The tree-lover; Personalia. With an appreciative introduction by the Irish poet, A. E.

"The 'Collected Poems' are distinguished by an even level of attainment, an unhesitating power of communication, and an able certainty of craftsmanship. There is not the delight of a surprised perfection nor yet the disappointment of a spoiled intention. For description she uses the simplest and nearest words; there is no phrase-making, but there is a directness and consequently a lyric quality which is the first achievement of her poetry." James Thornton
+ Nation and Ath 48:sup356 D 6 '30 150w

"Her poetry is remarkable not for its thought but for its consciousness and intensification of what is already poetic about existence. . . No word of hers is not stamped with a quality that is as distinctive as sunlight; and her impressive integrity has never allowed vagaries or experiment to flatter her talent away from its light." Viola Meynell

+ New Statesman 36:sup viii N 8 '30 1050w

"Mrs. Hinkson is distinctly a melodious poet. Lately we have been rereading a good deal of the elder verse and it is certainly beyond argument that the true lyrical quality is what one misses in much contemporary work, and the art that conceals the mechanism of verse by virtue of its fitness. Too often today one is aware of the wheels going round with a frantic buzzing, of effects obviously aimed at and unattained inasmuch as we are conscious of the energy of the intention. . . The music has gone out of a good deal of modern poetry. Mrs. Hinkson uses the traditional forms of verse. She writes simply, sometimes sentimentally, but always as one who is completely at home in her medium." W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 7:370 N 22 '30 750w

HINKSON, PAMELA. Wind from the west. 267p $2 (7s 6d) Macmillan
30-27924

The romance of Solange de Brieuc, descendant of an ancient French family, who was brought up in the strict traditions of her race, and young Peter Quincey of Massachusetts. The scene is laid in Brittany.

Reviewed by Leslie Ault
Bookm 72:419 D '30 150w
Boston Transcript p6 D 10 '30 300w

"Miss Hinkson writes of Solange and her American lover with taste and good sense. Wind from the West is not an original book, nor a subtle book, nor a powerful book, but it will make an appeal to those who like their romance to be romantic and their modernity to come in a setting picturesque enough to suggest 'the olden days.' "
+ — New Statesman 35:338 Je 21 '30 200w

"A charming story, told in a somewhat precious but always lovely style. Miss Hinkson's novel is colorful, vivid, charming and her prose has something of the ghostly grace of music played on muted strings."
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 100w

"Miss Hinkson's style is not realistic; it is shot through with poetic thought and expression, but her pictures are nevertheless good, honest pictures of attitudes and ways of living. . . Miss Hinkson has done a good piece of work in her characterization. She has taken people closed in by a small sphere of life and has made them stand out as individuals. Her story is good, too. Only she has used the same words too many times and the same expressions. She has put into the mouths of characters, totally separated, thoughts and emotions the same, which is all right, but represented by the same symbols, which is too much. The results are devitalizing."
+ — N Y Times p26 N 30 '30 380w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 280w

"This tale of three generations of a French middleclass family is a careful and deliberate piece of work. . . In the later passages the story changes its atmosphere of delicate charm for one of unreality, and Solange becomes rather like a spirit wandering hopefully in a world of shadows."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 230w

HINTON, WALTER. Opportunities in aviation. 255p il $3 Norton
629.13 Aeronautics 29-28958

This book is an answer to a question asked by many young Americans, "how can I get into aviation?" The author tells how students are taught to fly, the cost of the courses of instruction, etc. He then discusses the various kinds of available flying and ground jobs in aviation, opportunities with transport companies, and airport and field opportunities. The final chapter deals with aerial exploration as a field of future opportunity.

Booklist 26:266 Ap '30

"Walter Hinton's 'Opportunities in Aviation' is noticeable on two counts. It is the most up-to-date book in the field, and it brings to bear a fresh point of view." D. G. Lunt
+ Books p8 F 23 '30 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:3 Ja '30

"A book on aviation by an aviator so grounded in experience as Walter Hinton, whose transatlantic exploits have led to the presidency of the Aviation Institute, is a guarantee of the soundness of the facts he has to state. The picture he paints of the growth of the aviation industry, its prospects and its alluring opportunities, is an all-embracing one." T. J. C. Martyn
+ — N Y Times p27 Ja 12 '30 380w
St Louis 28:70 Mr '30

HIRSCH, NATHANIEL DAVID MTTRON.
2 Twins; heredity and environment. 159p il $2 Harvard univ. press [10s Oxford]
575.1 Twins. Heredity 30-18139

"A first-hand study of twins with relation to the relative roles of heredity and environment; accompanied by good resumé of previous work on twins. The author studied the physical and mental characteristics of seventeen pairs of 'similar' and thirteen pairs of 'dissimilar' twins, in all of which the two members of the pair were brought up together. The dissimilarities in such cases must be due to diversity in heredity, and we have thus a means of determining what kind of differences as well as of likeness is due to heredity. . . The general conclusion is that 'the contribution of heredity is several times as important as that of environment.' "—Books

---

"The conclusion on the whole agrees with that of other investigators, and is probably in the main sound. But Hirsch's own investigations would hardly be adequate to prove it." H. S. Jennings
+ — Books p20 N 16 '30 600w
J Home Econ 22:864 O '30 100w
St Louis 28:263 N '30

HITCHCOCK, ETHAN ALLEN. Traveler in In-
2 dian territory; ed. and annot. by Grant Foreman. ltd ed 270p il $5 The author, Muskogee, Okla., Torch press
917.66 Indian Territory—Description and travel. Indians of North America—Government relations 30-31133

This diary covers the observations made by the late Major-General Hitchcock when, in 1841, he was given the duty of investigating conditions among the various Indian tribes in the old Indian territory. He reveals much of the graft and incompetency in governmental management of Indian affairs, besides telling something of the mode of life, conditions and customs of the Indians in that region.

"General Hitchcock was a man of wide and keen intellectual interests, of scholarly attainments and literary taste, and his account in this diary of his observations upon the characteristics, manners and customs, social and economic status and cultural development of the several tribes makes an important addition to our knowledge of these Indians, an original source of information well worth preserving."
+ N Y Times p34 D 14 '30 320w

"We have here a hitherto unpublished report of a four months' tour of inspection among the Five Civilized Tribes of the old Indian Territory, 1842, by an unprejudiced, observant, and scholarly officer of literary taste. It vividly presents the frauds, the factions, the barbarities and humbug of the Indian Bureau of that day, and has therefore been pigeonholed until now."

HITCHCOCK, E. A.—Continued
+ Sat R of Lit 7:510 Ja 3 '31 100w

HITCHCOCK, HENRY RUSSELL, Jr. Modern architecture, romanticism and reintegration. 252p il $5 Brewer
724 Architecture 29-25446

Mr Hitchcock devotes the first part of his book to an analysis of romanticism in architecture, beginning with the middle of the eighteenth century, and ending with the classical and medieval revivals. The second part of the book is given over to a discussion of the new pioneers in Europe and America, leading to the development of modern building. With index and fifty-eight illustrations.

Booklist 26:269 Ap '30

"It is encyclopedic, often acute, thorough. It is our first noteworthy volume on contemporary architecture since Mr. Mumford's 'Sticks and Stones.' " Douglas Haskell
+ Nation 131:207 Ag 20 '30 650w

"Mr. Henry Russell Hitchcock's 'Modern Architecture' is the first work of importance to appear on this subject in English; and it will, I think, rank in scholarship and general grasp with the best works that have so far appeared in either French or German. . . His scholarship combines the historic wealth of the New Traditionalists with the boldness in facing and appraising contemporary fact that characterizes the New Pioneers." Lewis Mumford
+ New Repub 62:131 Mr 19 '30 1350w
Pratt p21 autumn '30
St Louis 28:213 S '30

"As is so often the case in advancing a general theory, particularly one that must embrace many ages and lands, numerous cases are encountered that do not fit the hypotheses, and these must either be overlooked or regarded as unimportant. Mr. Hitchcock does just this. In dealing with the past he chooses as significant only such examples as are convenient. Frequently these are what are generally conceded to be outstanding in their time, but just as frequently they are practically unknown except to specialized scholarship. Thus Mr. Hitchcock's theory becomes little more than a personal opinion, and the value of his book, as an authoritative document, suffers greatly. . . The selective process is even more conspicuous when it comes to more recent architecture. In fact the bulk of twentieth century work, except in Germany, Holland, and Scandinavia, is completely ruled out. . . As it is the book is of little or no real use either to the architect or layman." F. J. Woodbridge
— Sat R of Lit 6:751 F 22 '30 850w

Reviewed by H. W. Corbett
Yale R n s 20:189 autumn '30 350w

HITES, LAIRD THOMAS. Effective Christian college. 259p $2 Macmillan
377 Church schools and colleges. Colleges and universities—United States. Religious education 29-19434

Dr Hites, who is a professor of religion in Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, presents in his book a series of proposals for a more coordinated curriculum for the Christian college, and a reorganization that will promote a spirit of Christian camaraderie between faculty and students.

"Here is a professor of religion in a small denominational college (Hiram) thinking fundamentally of the college as a family, a patriarchal family at that, but who can deny the charm, not to say the naiveté of the concept? And who is prepared to say it may not work? . . . With Dr. Hites's principles few Christian educators would disagree. With his practical program for their realization, there will be wide disagreement. That is as it should be. . . Dr. Hite's principles are sound and they will abide. They will not fall with his practical application of them." W. A. Harper
+ — Christian Century 47:180 F 5 '30 680w

"A sensible discussion by a man who has the qualifications to write such a work, and who takes his work seriously. The book is a real contribution to the study of religious education." J. B.
+ Churchman 140:5 N 23 '29 30w

"This is a book which wins the reader's immediate, whole-hearted respect, and which yet leaves him with a sense of futility and failure. Its argument moves steadily forward upon many remarkably strong and convincing points, but it also has its striking weaknesses. It compels one's admiration because of its complete survey of its chosen field, its exhaustive treatment of the subject, and its meeting of almost every conceivable objection to its thesis; and yet it does not wholly convince." R. E. E. Harkness
+ — Crozer Q 7:109 Ja '30 1000w
J Religion 10:164 Ja '30 350w
Pratt p12 summer '30

HJORTH, HERMAN. Principles of woodwork-
2 ing. 307p il $1.76 Bruce pub.
684 Woodwork (manual training). Cabinetwork 30-7395

"This comprehensive work for schools, as well as for hobbyists young and old, tells about the fundamentals of hand and machine processes involved in cabinet making, with detailed instructions for making some attractive pieces. There are chapters on wood-turning, upholstery, wood finishing, and the properties and uses of various kinds of wood. Over four hundred excellent illustrations. Author is an instructor in the Saunders Trades School, Yonkers, N. Y."—N Y New Tech Bks

Booklist 27:143 D '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:27 Ap '30

HOBBS, SAMUEL HUNTINGTON, Jr. North Carolina, economic and social. 403p $3.50 Univ. of N.C. press
330.9756 North Carolina—Economic conditions. North Carolina—Social conditions 30-16473

Professor Hobbs writes of "the State's physical resources— land, soils, water power, minerals, climate, forests, resorts, fishing, hunting—of its agriculture, population, industry, education, public health and welfare work, State and county government, wealth, transportation, farm tenancy, topography, social and economic characteristics of its several regions. A wealth of classified and tabulated statistics and of maps and charts makes a solid foundation for the work." (N Y Times)

"It contains an amazing amount of information upon all possible phases of North Carolina. It undertakes to give the reader an 'interpretation' of the state, but what he gets is really little more than an inventory."
Books p12 S 7 '30 250w

"This volume was written especially for those who make North Carolina their home, yet it is also sure of a country-wide welcome by telling the economic and social story of this famous State with a completeness which has not hitherto been even attempted." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 650w

"Professor Hobb's book stands out among books dealing with localities because of its author's frankness, his desire to set forth the exact truth and his determination not to admit into his text rhetorical patches or patriotic outbursts. His many years of research into the social and economic conditions of his home State have given him comprehensive knowledge of them, and his purpose is to set it all down with scientific accuracy and impartial statement."
+ N Y Times p5 S 7 '30 380w
Times [London] Lit Sup p825 O 16 '30 600w

HOBBS, WILLIAM HERBERT. Exploring about the North pole of the winds. 376p il $5 (21s) Putnam

919.8 Arctic regions. Greenland—Description and travel. Meteorology 30-7088

Professor Hobbs of the University of Michigan directed three expeditions to the Arctic for the purpose of establishing an aerological station on the Greenland ice-cap—a meteorological base that will furnish accurate weather reports of the polar region. The author describes, in order, the first cruise on the Morrissey in 1926; the second expedition on the Disko in 1927; and the third Greenland expedition, in June of that year, which had a dramatic climax in the rescue of the Arctic flyers, Hassell and Cramer.

Booklist 26:353 Je '30

Reviewed by Barrington Gates
Nation and Ath 47:350 Je 14 '30 150w

"Prof. Hobbs's book is a well illustrated and entertainingly written account. . . On the human side the book is pleasant reading, and there are naturally some exciting adventures to record."
+ Nature 126:271 Ag 23 '30 500w

"In a very interesting narrative he mingles constantly the daily doings and experiences of the personnel of the expedition with explanation of its scientific purposes, the peculiar meteorological conditions which it is their purpose to study, the methods they used and some of their findings. But the scientific side of the narrative is told simply and clearly, with very few technical terms and with such facility in this kind of scientific expedition as makes the story absorbingly interesting."
+ N Y Times p26 Mr 16 '30 470w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 24 '30 800w

Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 3 '30 1000w

HOBSON, MRS CORALIE (VON WERNER) (SARA SALT, pseud.). Joy is my name. 325p $2.50 Brewer [7s 6d Gollancz] 30-8904

Joy is a pretty, but weak and silly middle-class English girl who travels about with Mrs Rice-Pilkington's repertory company. Maurice, the leading man, kisses her, gives her a pair of shoes, and Joy loses her job. She goes to London and makes the rounds of theatrical offices, becomes penniless, and gives herself to a "tired business man" for carfare to go home and see darling mummie, who is ill. But mummie calls her a hussy, and Joy, turned out once more, works as a companion to old ladies in an insane asylum, and then goes back to Maurice.

"This is realism—of a particularly racy and uncompromising variety. Miss Salt is not in the least sentimental about her heroine. She recounts Joy's adventures coolly and baldly, with no attempt at commentary. Her clipped, unadorned dialogue is deftly in character and serves in place of description. She is, obviously, an expert technician. One feels, however, that in her novel emotion is too rigorously controlled—that she has not quite been able to evoke by indirection the full pathos of fumbling and anchorless mediocrity." Edith Walton
Bookm 71:103 Mr '30 230w

"Perhaps Miss Salt chose these singularly hackneyed types and situations in a spirit of bravado. To a remarkable degree she has obliterated the old, dejected pictures and given us fresh, strong impressions of these people, who, after all, certainly exist outside magazine covers and old theater programs. Nevertheless, she has stacked the cards against herself. It is almost impossible to care one jot or tittle what happens to Joyce Raven, especially as the pattern of the story is so familiar that the element of suspense is minimized." William Hood
— + Books p7 F 23 '30 650w

"This slight story of a commonplace little tragedy, told with swiftness and precision, is no less poignant because it contains none of that perverted romanticism by use of which some women novelists think to achieve realism in their 'slices-of-life' fiction. . . In Miss Salt's writing one comes to look for brilliant sentences—sentences that do more than sparkle, for they serve to illuminate the depths of her understanding."
+ Nation 130:276 Mr 5 '30 200w

"This may be an accurate account of how prostitutes are made, but the book falls between two stools—it has neither the interest nor the graces to make good general reading, and it is not sufficiently documented to be of value to the League of Nations." L. L. Irvine
— Nation and Ath 45:830 S 28 '29 320w

"The first two parts of 'Joy Is My Name' are so thin in content, so heavy in phrasing, that they seem amateurish in comparison to the maturity of the madhouse episode, which, in itself, makes the book worth while." W. T.
+ — New Repub 62:81 Mr 5 '30 140w

New Statesman 33:782 O 5 '29 150w

"Miss Salt has the very rare ability to conjure up sympathy for rather unsympathetic characters. . . She makes one share experience as well as watch its cumulative results in her pages. There is rarely a superfluous word in her writing and never an incident which has not been arrived at by the most scrupulous selection."
+ N Y Times p14 F 2 '30 500w

"We do not recommend the spectacle of the girl's futile struggle for survival to readers of tender sensibilities. But in the capable hands of Miss Salt, this essentially simple story of a blighted, stolid, obscure victim of adversity acquires a tragic pathos, a profoundly moving wistfulness surpassed by none of the younger English novelists in more pretentious renditions of the theme."
N Y World p10m F 16 '30 200w

"Sarah Salt's dispassionate observation, her realistic dialogue and her crisp, controlled style make her books good reading."
+ Outlook 154:187 Ja 29 '30 200w

"Miss Salt's book is much more lively and readable than it sounds from the plot. The irony is continuous and effective, the characterization subtle but clear, the dialogue, even at its most dreadful, amusing. As a story 'Joy Is My Name' is a decided success. As a denunciation of human behaviour, of man's inhumanity to woman, it is less convincing." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 148:328 S 21 '29 550w

"It is remarkable that the author has chosen to spend so much cleverness and surface brilliance on such uninteresting characters and situations. It is especially remarkable because, with her finely wrought style and the servant-girl-novel technique she uses so effectively at times, she might have written with a slight change of emphasis an exceedingly fine satire. Instead, she wrings our emotions to no apparent purpose, offering only one or two references to 'sin' in explanation of her reason."
— Sat R of Lit 6:829 Mr 15 '30 400w

"Its simple realism and faithful empty dialogue are the story's chief merits, but the characters who surround Joy, her mother, the actors and actresses, her seducer and the people whom she meets later in a private asylum, are too slight to throw the inevitability of her tragedy into sufficiently strong relief. Her end is merely pathetic." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 143:383 S 21 '29 150w

"It is a sordid and rather unpleasant little story, lacking much of the pungency and clever characterization that distinguished Miss Salt's first novel. The theatrical touring company setting has been freely used in recent fiction, and the present version has an air of being second-hand."

HOBSON, CORALIE—Continued
— Times [London] Lit Sup p764 O 3 '29 350w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON. Economics and ethics; a study in social values; with a foreword by Jerome Davis. (Heath social relations ser.) 489p $4 Heath

330.1 Economics. Ethics 29-15271

Mr Hobson, long recognized as an authority on economical questions, seeks in this volume to show the relationship between economics and ethics. He defines welfare as organic well-being. To secure welfare, he advocates, from the humanist point of view, social control of the machinery of production.

"I know of no other book in which crucial ethical concepts and issues are canvassed with such critical regard to their economic relevancy and promise." T. V. Smith
+ Am J Soc 35:849 Mr '30 320w
Bookm 70:xvii D '29 70w
Reviewed by C. M. Perry
Int J Ethics 40:556 Jl '30 500w

"Mr. Hobson's long career as an outstanding unorthodox economist, his broad studies in other fields of social science, and his lifelong humanistic interest mark him out as the one man best qualified to undertake the pioneer work of bringing modern economics back into fruitful relations with modern ethics." H. R. Mussey
+ Nation 130:273 Mr 5 '30 700w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON. Rationalisation and unemployment; an economic dilemma. 126p $1.75 Macmillan [3s 6d Allen, G.]

330.1 Unemployment. Economics. Income [31-26055]

Mr Hobson contends that the present economic dilemma can be corrected only thru such a "general distribution of income here and throughout the economic system as will place an increased proportion of the purchasing power in the hands of those who will use them in a general raising of the standard of life in the community."

Books p12 D 28 '30 250w

"Mr. Hobson's present book, which constitutes a summary and development of all his previous work in the field, is a bold challenge to comfortable orthodox thought about the business cycle and unemployment; it contains a wealth of practical suggestion of the lines along which social action must proceed if we are to avoid revolution by moving effectively for the elimination of periodic business and catastrophic unemployment." H. R. Mussey
+ Nation 131:414 O 15 '30 1050w
Nation and Ath 48:142 O 25 '30 100w
New Repub 65:146 D 17 '30 150w

"Mr Hobson's analysis, admirably stimulating as it has been, needs pushing a stage further. To the present writer at least he appears, despite the immense value of his contribution, not to have solved the problem because he has stopped short, in his diagnosis, of the thoroughly critical examination of market conditions during a crisis, and in the passage of crisis into that stagnation which involves prolonged and widespread unemployment, a wholesale destruction of potential wealth, and a dangerous deficiency in both spending and saving at once."
+ — New Statesman 35:774 S 27 '30 1050w

"This analysis by a veteran economist of the principal malady of our economic system—read, perhaps, in connection with Stalin's speech to the recent Communist party congress—is highly enlightening as to the most important things that are happening today." Harold Callender
+ N Y Times p1 S 21 '30 1350w

"His ideas about what really creates wealth seem very hazy. Mr. Hobson is strangely muddle-headed when he deals with factors of importance in the creation of wealth." Cyril Martin
— Sat R 150:238 Ag 23 '30 850w
Spec 145:181 Ag 9 '30 1000w

"Mr. Hobson is quite right in insisting on the need of expanding markets to keep pace with increasing productivity; and his book will be useful because the other side of the problem—namely, the need of saving for investment, which is greatly reduced by taxation—is made much more prominent in public discussion. But he is inclined to make too little of saving. Production can no more be left to look after itself than consumption. It is an error to fix an eye on either alone, as economists are apt to do and still more those whose particular interests prejudice them in favour of one or the other."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p647 Ag 14 '30 1050w

HOBY, MARGARET (DAKINS) DEVEREUX SIDNEY, lady. Diary of Lady Margaret Hoby, 1599-1605; ed. by Dorothy M. Meads. (Park Street lib. of diaries, memoirs and letters) 289p il $4 Houghton [15s Routledge]

B or 92 30-30532

Lady Margaret Hoby was an English gentlewoman of some three hundred years ago who lived in the tiny but delightful village of Hackness on the river Derwent. Her wealth made her a prize in the matrimonial market, and she was only twenty-five when, without apparent enthusiasm, she took her third and last spouse. Lady Hoby's diary, which begins a few years after this third marriage, shows that beyond her ability to read and write, she could sing, play the "alpharion," manage her household and estate, keep accounts and had a knowledge of surgery and salves, withal. She was a deeply religious woman. There is a certain sameness about her diary, nearly every entry of which begins with the phrase "after priuat prairs."

"It is a knotty book that is thus presented to us, copiously annotated by a scholar who has never heard the new gospel that the truth is of no importance compared with the readability. Yet as one reads, with due assistance from the brazen notes, the life of the period vaguely unrolls before one. It seems very far off, very shadowy, it has none of the delightful clarity that the new biographers so excel in bringing out of the mists of history; but the crochety old-fashioned reader who likes his history raw will welcome it." A. B. Parsons
+ — Books p19 S 14 '30 600w

"This diary contains much of interest, more especially for anyone with even a slight knowledge of the period. It gives an excellent first hand and natural picture of that part of Elizabethan life which historians often overlook in favor of the spectacular court. The devout and conventional Lady Margaret is a figure well worth understanding. Her life is monotonous but typical, and the details of her activities make pleasant reading. The editing is well done; the notes are excellent and the introduction indispensable to the uninitiated."
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 4 '30 400w

"Lady Hoby's effort might seem a wishy-washy affair were it not for the skill of Dorothy M. Meads, who has arranged the MS. so cleverly by sandwiching it between a brilliantly descriptive preface and wise historical notes of her own. In this manner she offers to the public a human document, a story of an acquiescent soul, self-revealed, who lived a tranquil, placid life in the hearty, heady days of Good Queen Bess. Dorothy Meads's work is of the highest order and the results she has achieved are most gratifying." Rosalind Ivan
+ N Y Times p10 Ag 31 '30 1050w
St Louis 28:301 D '30
Sat R of Lit 7:493 D 27 '30 100w
Spec 145:317 S 6 '30 480w

"Never does this industrious diarist—the first Englishwoman, so far as is known, to seek relief thus artlessly—sketch a single portrait or show a gleam of humor or the mildest appreciation of natural beauty. Mr. Hoby, Lady Russell, Mr. Rhodes, Mrs. Dakins, and the other members of her large family connexion are faceless and voiceless; houses, landscape, towns and journeyings to London are without form and void. Perhaps its very dullness forces the reader into a creative mood, makes him eager to reconstruct the times in which this solemn young woman of twenty-eight moved so priggishly, to discover from the barest hints something more of her character and her daily doings, of her friends, her food, her illnesses and her amusements. Reading her tedious entries soon becomes an entertainment, and indeed the journal is so well presented, with such a very delightful introduction by Mrs. Meads and such excellent notes and amplifications, that it is well worth some effort."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p649 Ag 14 '30 1400w

HODGINS, ERIC, and MAGOUN, FREDERICK ALEXANDER. Sky high; the story of aviation. 337p il $2.50 Little

629.13 Aeronautics—History 29-25910

The history of aviation from its pioneer stages to the most recent developments in aeronautics. The first ten chapters deal with man's earliest attempts to fly, with balloons as a medium. The authors then take up the progress of aircraft before the war. Among the post-war chapters the achievements of trans-Atlantic flights are discussed. The final chapter deals with speculations as to the future of aviation.

Booklist 26:191 F '30

"This is a well-balanced and instructive history of aviation. Both autnors are extremely interested in their subject and have taken great care in the preparation of what can be considered an authentic chronicle as well as a pictorial delight."

+ Bookm 71:xviii Mr '30 100w

"The authors have achieved a straightforward and comprehensive account of the dreams, the efforts, the experiments and failures by which man learned to fly and of the final success of that audacious attempt. 'Sky High' is valuable as history and no less fascinating as a story because it has been done in an unpretentious style and with a touch of humor." Walter Millis

+ Books p12 Ja 26 '30 700w

"'Sky High' is heartily recommended. It is first of all based upon a painstaking investigation of original sources. Secondly, it was composed at a pleasing distance from that earnest and anxious angle that would make us all 'air-minded' to the point of consuming bird seed. And, lastly, it is written with accuracy, clarity and humor. It is an able, alive and interesting account of the development of aeronautics up to this year of grace." D. G. Lunt

+ Books p8 F 23 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

"To the reader who wishes to get a birdseye view of aviation down the ages this is indeed his book; it is instructive and pleasant reading, for it is written with a human touch and from the viewpoint of the man and his craft. To those who are interested in technical evolution it yet serves as an admirable index to a vast subject and supplies a key to the understanding of causes and effects. The book is, in short, an epic of triumph and disaster in the air." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Times p27 Ja 12 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

Pratt p19 spring '30

St Louis 28:42 F '30

Wis Lib Bul 25:408 D '29

HODGSON, LEONARD. Essays in Christian philosophy. 175p $3.50 (9s) Longmans

204 Psychology, Religious. Christianity [30-10362]

Twelve essays, six of which have been previously published, on matters of philosophical and psychological research. Contents: Psychology and religious belief; The self and 'the unconscious'; Sin and its remedy in the light of psychology; The question of freedom; Freedom, grace and providence; Compromise, tension and personality; Birth control and Christian ethics; Original sin and baptism; Sacraments; Authority; The reunion of Christendom; Corruptio optimipessima.

"Whether discussing apparently abstract themes or the difficulties of practical life, his method is always vigorous and unconventional; and he constantly brings together the great doctrines which express the Christian ideal, and the facts of man's everyday experience. . . His conclusion, with its frank acknowledgment of a double standard—'the highest life' and the permissible life is full of charity and common sense, and those who dislike it most would do well to ponder it deeply." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 144:533 Mr 29 '30 450w

Survey 65:240 N 15 '30 40w

"The book has ample justification. There is much careful thought in it, and Dr. Hodgson shows himself to be in the succession of modern Christian philosophers who are able to state their faith in terms to which contemporary thinkers of all schools must give their attention."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p344 Ap 24 '30 650w

HODSON, JAMES LANSDALE. Grey dawn—red night. 307p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-4491

The story of a young Englishman, John Hardcastle, who goes, from a background of adolescence and young love, into war. The major part of the book is concerned with his experiences in service, his sensitive emotional reactions to them, and his death just before a chance came to return home.

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"As a piece of reporting it is, as a whole, creditable enough; people and events are described clearly and occasionally with vigor, and some of the vignettes will undoubtedly make neat pieces for the vast mosaic of the human side of the war which is being created today. But the book lacks that informing attitude, that aura of personality, which lifts such works as 'Good-bye to All That' out of the ruck of war books and puts them in the plane of literature."

+ Books p25 F 16 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '30

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson

Nation 130:330 Mr 19 '30 140w

"Mr. Hodson is at present something of an amateur novelist. He is, we are told, a journalist with experience as a special correspondent, and it is interesting to observe how little help this training seems to be in the art of fiction. . . He has indeed added to our knowledge of the life of the private soldier both in training at home and in the field. He is a writer both too vigorous and too sincere to fail there. But he has much to learn before he writes a novel." E. S.

— + New Statesman 33:713 S 21 '29 120w

"That Mr. Hodson 'saw' the war is evidenced by a very keen aptitude for exploiting its dramatic phases. But that he achieved any perspective on it or on life from the experiences narrated in it, the inner evidence of the book does not show. It is a tailor-made book dealing with a tailor-made hero in all the vast and deadening commonplaceness resulting from his own foreshortened vision." Eugene Lohrke

— N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 700w

HODSON, J. L.—Continued

"It is a capable, vivid, and thorough picture of the life of the British infantryman in 1916. It has its horrors, for no accurate portrayal of war could be without them, but it is not entirely composed of variations on the theme of suffering. The weakest thing about the book is its ending."

+ — N Y Evening Post p7e My 11 '30 550w

"The narrative is good in a reportorial sense; it comprises one more document about the war; but as a work of lasting literary quality 'Grey Dawn—Red Night' is lacking in a number of essentials."

— + N Y Times p14 Ja 26 '30 320w

"Well written, realistic, with a mass of detail well chosen and well arranged—it is to us, nevertheless, just another war book." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 70w

"Mr. Hodson tells a plain story, redeemed from the commonplace by its sincerity and the number and vividness of the war-scenes which accompany it. . . The hero is a likable fellow, but his personality is over-shadowed by his destiny, and his history though a dignified enough contribution to war-fiction, throws no new light on its subject." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 148:396 O 5 '29 420w

"This is one of the best British War novels that have yet appeared. . . It is a very good story, told with that particular type of grimness which we are inclined to associate with the 'Manchester School' of writers, but with touches of humour and a quick eye for detail."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p742 S 26 '29 450w

HOEL, SIGURD. Sinners in summertime; tr. from the Norwegian by Elizabeth Sprigg and Claude Napier. 311p $1.50 Coward-McCann

30-19282

Four young Norwegian students and four girls spend a summer vacation by the sea. They consider themselves seriously intellectual, modern and enlightened and therefore above old-fashioned sentimentality and sex nonsense. But these young moderns fall in love, wax jealous and experience all the age-old entanglements, despite their knowledge of self-deception and psychoanalysis.

"Some very solemn and some very absurd books have been made out of the same materials so delightfully presented here. . . Sigurd Hoel is able to make a delightful comedy out of his observations of this younger generation behavior because he understands it. . . Sigurd Hoel understands young adults—better, I think, than any American novelist who has dealt with the younger generation. He has given, in his Scandinavian setting, a truer account of the young men and young women of these United States than any as yet given by their literary compatriots." Floyd Dell

+ Books p5 Jl 20 '30 1450w

Boston Transcript p5 O 4 '30 180w

"This story is vague, monotonous, and shallow. But it contains some amusing things. It is intended to be a light tale of heavy emotions, but too often it is the tale which tends to grow heavy while the emotions grow silly. Somehow one feels that the Norse don't do this sort of thing very well."

— + Nation 131:187 Ag 13 '30 120w

"Mr. Hoel has a distinctive style, vivid, though at times too jerky for comfortable reading."

+ — N Y Times p7 Jl 27 '30 600w

"The clean, unfailing wit of the author dispels the impression that the book, if not treated as pure comedy, might have created—that of being aimlessly and gratuitously risqué. A sparkling, succulent, sharply pointed and admirably written satire, it should prove a delight to the knowing." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 450w

"Some of their chatter is funny and all of it has the authentic sophomoric touch." F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:466 Jl 23 '30 150w

"Despite the fly-paper title, this is a shrewd and amusing book, even if its wisdom is occasionally diluted by too much talk. Mr. Hoel's book gaily explodes a good deal of bunk about sex, egoism, education, principles, and other popular topics; and incidentally furnishes confirmation of the account of contemporary Scandinavian ethics given in 'Jerome; or the Latitude of Love.' "

+ Sat R of Lit 7:75 Ag 23 '30 280w

HOETZSCH, OTTO. Germany's domestic and foreign policies. (Inst. of politics publications, Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 116p $1.50 Yale univ. press [7s Oxford]

914.3 Germany—Foreign relations. Germany—Politics and government 30-2504

In six lectures delivered before the Institute of politics at Williamstown, 1928, Dr Hoetzsch, professor of history and international relations in the University of Berlin and a member of the German Reichstag, discusses some of Germany's post-war problems. Contents: Europe and Germany since 1918: Rise and structure of the German constitution; Party system and constitutional problems in Germany; What is Germany economically? What is Germany intellectually? Problems of German youth; Germany's position in Europe: Western questions of German foreign policy: Reparations, the Dawes Plan, the Locarno treaties; Germany and organization for peace: The League of nations, and the Kellogg pact; Eastern questions: Germany's relations with Russia and Poland; The eastern frontier.

Booklist 26:308 My '30

"The German conservative, as represented by Dr. Hoetzsch, bears no resemblance to these blustering Pan-Germans of whom we used to read in war-time propaganda pamphlets. His ideal is almost Mazzinian in its emphasis upon the free participation of every individual in a national State life. . . Since he speaks as the representative of a party which, more than any other, has been counted the bearer of the 'revenge' idea in German politics, his words call for careful scrutiny. They show that reconciliation in Europe will be difficult indeed, but not impossible." R. C. Binkley

+ Current Hist 32:15 Ap '30 450w

"Professor Otto Hoetzsch has given one of the clearest and most concise pictures of post-War German conditions, problems, and mentality that has yet appeared. . . Admittedly representing the nationalist conservative point of view, these lectures yet are stamped by a degree of moderation and fair-mindedness that is truly gratifying. It would indeed be a boon if precisely similar volumes, dealing with the other large nations of the world, were written."

+ Hist Outlook 21:138 Mr '30 200w

St Louis 28:148 My '30

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit

Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p360 My 1 '30 1400w

HOFFENSTEIN, SAMUEL. Year in, you're out. 222p $2 Liveright

811 30-7881

Another volume of light, satirical verse, written in the vein of Poems in Praise of Practically Nothing (Book Review Digest, 1928).

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"Mr. Hoffenstein is a poet of parody and pertness whose theme is again in praise of practically nothing . . . He extemporizes upon his own metrical keyboard and he plays upon other poets' reeds; in his own extemporizing upon his own moods he shows himself to be adept in the technique of light satirical verse.

When, however, he attempts to parody another poet and must, therefore, say in the manner of a poet (not himself) what he himself would say, he is likely to betray how far from subtle his use of rhythm and idea may be." E. L. Walton

+ — Books p12 Mr 30 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '30

Nation 131:23 Jl 2 '30 200w

"Here again he is the versatile, accomplished and amusing wit in verse. His tone is always one of genial cynicism not overly pressed. Life is complex and life is amusing and the world is, in general, upsidedown, but this fact makes the world all the more entertaining." E. L. Walton

+ N Y Times p2 Jl 13 '30 700w

"Samuel Hoffenstein's new book of poems contains many witty and sparkling concepts, but it reminds me of a vaudeville program with an outstanding headliner and a lot of cheaper acts." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p11 Mr 10 '30 320w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl

Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 50w

"As a parodist, Mr. Hoffenstein is awkward and crude, achieving at his best only the blunt buffoonery of burlesque. As an ironist, he has not the detachment of unself-conscious humor that would inform his satires with natural grace. They are heavy-footed, one suspects, because they are heavy-hearted. Conversely, he too often mars his finer effects by ill-timed flippancies. He seems to fear the calm and gradual ascent into poetry, continuously (and incongruously) forcing himself to perform grotesque antics in mid-flight, wise-cracking under the strain." J. S. Untermeyer

— Sat R of Lit 6:1107 Je 7 '30 1250w

HOLCK, HAROLD H. G. Diet and efficiency; a five-year controlled experiment on man. (Univ. of Chicago monographs in medicine) 72p pa $1 Univ. of Chicago press [4s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

613.2 Diet. Mastication 30-2489

"The report of a five-year experiment endeavoring to secure 'objective evidence of the alleged effects of thorough to excessive mastication of the food by man,' which was carried out at the University of Chicago under Dr. A. J. Carlson, published as one of the Monographs on Medicine from that institution."—J Home Econ

J Home Econ 22:596 Jl '30 50w

Nature 126:8 Jl 5 '30 220w

"An interesting test carried out by Dr. Holck on himself in order to secure objective evidence of the effects of thorough to excessive mastication."

+ Survey 63:732 Mr 15 '30 30w

HOLCOMBE, ARTHUR NORMAN. Chinese revolution; a phase in the regeneration of a world power. 401p $4 Harvard univ. press [18s 6d Oxford]

951 China—Politics and government. Eastern question (Far East) 30-5261

"The main part of the book is a study of Chinese politics. The other parts are: an epilogue which contains Professor Holcombe's reactions and conclusions; a prologue which is descriptive of one Chinese city's revolutionary life, and characteristic of much of the whole of China; and a series of appendices containing Sun Yat-sen's will, his outline for national reconstruction, a chronology of the Chinese Revolution, the constitution of the Kuomintang, and other documents essential to an understanding of the essential principles of the Revolution."—Am Pol Sci R

"As the result of seven months spent in the Far East, supplemented by extensive and judicious reading and by his ripe scholarship in the field of government, Professor Holcombe has produced, in the opinion of the reviewer, the most competent study that has yet appeared of recent developments and present conditions in China. Many will take exception to Mr. Holcombe's estimate of Sun Yatsen." G. N. Steiger

+ — Am Hist R 36:164 O '30 650w

"The book is splendidly free from tourist prattle, treaty port gossip, and luncheon club entertainment. Free also is the book from propaganda. The reviewer failed to find, even among the citations, reference to anything of a propagandist nature. This indeed is refreshing for books dealing with revolution. The reportorial story of the investigation is informative and complete. It reflects earnest observation of the present and careful study of authors of the first order who have dealt with the fundamentals of the past. It is this characteristic which makes it necessary to describe the book as scholarly. That said, the reader must needs be reassured. Scholarship is present, but it is in no sense a blight." E. D. Thomas

Am Pol Sci R 24:505 My '30 700w

"The present volume is the most valuable of all those which have dealt with the domestic situation in that great country. This excellence is due not merely to the fact that the work is based upon a personal and first-hand study by the author of the events dealt with, but also to the circumstance that these events are objectively evaluated by a scientifically trained political mind. Thus the work, while not without considerable value upon its narrative side, is especially valuable upon its critical side." W. W. Willoughby

+ Ann Am Acad 152:400 N '30 750w

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"Within the limits set by his own interests, which are those of a political scientist, Professor Holcombe has done a penetrating and thorough study of China. As a record of a period in China which is important at least for historical purposes Mr. Holcombe's book is as yet unequaled." Nathaniel Peffer

+ — Books p14 Ap 27 '30 700w

Reviewed by H. S. Quigley

Current Hist 32:1042 S '30 900w

Reviewed by Isidor Schneider

Nation 131:278 S 10 '30 500w

"Among recent books on China 'The Chinese Revolution' is the most thorough and the clearest record of recent political history in China. . . Dr. Holcombe analyzes minutely the successions of governments and the governmental forms which they have introduced or altered. And although he confines himself to the political and legal aspects of the Chinese Revolution, he does not present them as a kind of statecraft mathematics, but gives the reader a full sense of the human struggles and entities from which each political form derives." Isidor Schneider

+ New Repub 63:23 My 21 '30 650w

"This is the most temperate, thorough and understanding examination of the political organization of China that has been made since Henry Kittredge Norton's 'China and the Powers,' and probably the most competent analysis from a pro-Chinese standpoint of the Chinese political revolution that has been written in this country." Gardner Harding

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 16 '30 1750w

"Prof Holcombe's analysis of recent governmental developments in China, the most authoritative and comprehensive that has yet appeared, leaves one feeling encouraged regarding the nation's political evolution." J. D. M.

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Je 19 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p566 Jl 10 '30 160w

"For Americans curious in regard to the rapidly drifting affairs of modern China, Mr. Holcombe has performed an invaluable service in setting forth so clearly the Sturm und Drang in that country during the last two decades. Writing with a non-partisan pen, he has given a reliable picture of the events that followed the abdication of the Manchu emperor. Readers can hardly escape the keenness of his observa-

HOLCOMBE, A. N.—Continued
tion and the candor of his judgments." Ping-Chia Kuo
+ Yale R n s 20:201 autumn '30 450w

HOLDAWAY, NEVILLE ALDRIDGE (N. A. TEMPLE-ELLIS, pseud.). Man who was there. 274p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]
[30-16243]

Montrose Arbuthnot and Sir Edmund King, famous criminal hunters, were on vacation in the Isle of Wight. One morning they stumbled upon a strange situation; the man locally known as Dalton Flyte was found murdered in his bungalow, while on the veranda sat a stranger calmly reading The Golden Treasury. That was enough for the two crime hunters; they remained in the Isle of Wight until the mystery was cleared up.

"All the elements of a good detective plot are embodied in this latest book of Mr. Temple-Ellis."
+ Bookm 71:xx Ag '30 100w

"The slow but sure sleuthing is performed in the midst of mounting interest provided by more clews, more murder and a dash of true love." Will Cuppy
+ Books p13 My 18 '30 200w

"A first-rate fable of murder and other wild doings on the Isle of Wight. The latter part of the book is weakened by too much new stuff sprung on the reader and by the necessity the author is under of turning handsprings to extricate himself from the excellent tangle he had contrived earlier in the story." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m My 24 '30 110w

"Here is mystification plus. It is all very well for an author to keep his readers in the dark up to a certain point, but they should be entitled to a convincing explanation in the final chapter."
N Y Times p24 Je 1 '30 80w

"Very ingenious is the story, and very good reading—exciting, scary, and well put together." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 50w

" 'The Man Who Was There' gets off to a very slow start, but after the first hundred pages increases its pace and turns out to be a better than average detective story." R. I. Center
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1077 My 24 '30 70w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 180w

HOLLAND, CLIVE. Things seen in Belgium. (Things seen ser.) 158p il $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Seeley]

914.93 Belgium—Description and travel
[30-24137]

An account of Belgium, its people, historic cities, beautiful buildings, art treasures, and a description of the picturesque Forest of the Ardennes. There are many illustrations, an index and a map.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30
St Louis 28:271 N '30

"This study of Belgium presents towns of the coast and some of the western war front, giving their past and present story so interestingly that prospective visitors to Belgium might well include it in their preparatory reading."
+ Spring'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 100w

"This is an interesting little volume by an author who has seen many things in many lands. It is cheap, well-produced and well-illustrated. . . The author knows Belgium, its people, and its history well, and within the limits prescribed by the series, he has written an interesting and useful little book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 100w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI. Vocational psychology and character analysis. 409p $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

150 Psychology, Applied. Characters and characteristics. Mental tests 29-29230

A revision of two earlier volumes by the author, Vocational Psychology, and Judging Human Character. Dr Hollingworth in this volume treats comprehensively the recent developments in the field, including special vocational tests and the modern psychographic method.

Reviewed by C. L. Stone
Am Econ R 20:548 S '30 250w

"This volume should prove to be of exceptional interest both because of the interesting theoretical discussions which it contains and because of the practical and concrete character of its points."
+ Am J Soc 36:508 N '30 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30

"The book has an excellently articulated skeleton and is easy to use; it is an excellent debunking encyclopedia of vocational practice, and a valuable corrective for the drunken promises and pseudo-mysteries of the false prophets." Florence Becker
+ New Repub 63:79 Je 4 '30 460w
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 15 '30 60w
Sat R of Lit 6:882 Mr 29 '30 500w

Reviewed by Daniel Bloomfield
Survey 63:726 Mr 15 '30 270w

HOLLIS, CHRISTOPHER. American heresy. 324p il $3.50 Minton [8s 6d Sheed]

973 United States—History. United States—Politics and government. State rights. Jefferson, Thomas. Calhoun, John Caldwell. Lincoln, Abraham. Wilson, Woodrow
30-9118

Within the framework of four historical essays on Jefferson, Calhoun, Lincoln and Wilson, a young Englishman offers an interpretation of the course of democracy in the United States. His thesis is that the state as conceived by Jefferson was primarily agricultural and safeguarded by the doctrine of state rights, that the Jeffersonian state perished with the destruction of the state unit in the Civil war, and that the United States has since been only a name. The concluding essay on Woodrow Wilson is marked by strong bias and an undisguised dislike.

"This volume is one of the most grotesque travesties on historical interpretation that has been foisted on a gullible public in recent years. The garbled inaccuracies, the accumulated misinformation and the slap-dash style tend to obscure for the reader the outlines of the heresy, but it is, in a general way, that the agrarian democracy of Thomas Jefferson disappeared during the Civil War and was replaced by a centralized, industrialized state dominated by wealth. Unfortunately Mr. Hollis succeeds in making even this commonplace appear extremely dubious, and if the 'heresy' were to rest upon his evidence orthodoxy would have an irresistible appeal to all reasonable men." H. S. Commager
— Books p10 Ap 27 '30 650w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '30 1800w
Cath World 131:634 Ag '30 200w
Nation 131:159 Ag 6 '30 280w

Reviewed by Hazelton Spencer
New Repub 63:78 Je 4 '30 420w

"Mr. Hollis writes lucidly and accurately, and at times brilliantly. The material as a whole is beautifully ordered, in the most provocative book of its kind that has appeared in this country in many a year." Allen Tate
+ N Y Evening Post p6s Mr 1 '30 900w

"Witty it certainly is, witty to the limit, and in spots it is penetratingly wise. Even those who think Mr. Hollis is too brash with his conclusions and too infallible with his dogmas ought to enjoy his raciness and to be struck by his occasional wisdom. When he is wise, he is wise about things concerning which most American writers—Mr. Hollis is English—are irritatingly thickheaded." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 6 '30 1450w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 120w

St Louis 26:294 S '28

"His creed adds a force to his opinions which makes them very persuasive. . . A strong bias in the mind of an historian is once more proved to be a means to make past events and dead people come to life again."

+ Sat R 144:776 D 3 '27 700w

"If a brilliant style were the only qualification necessary for such a task Mr. Hollis would have been conspicuously successful. As it is, his 'superior person' attitude vitiates his book from first to last. When we find him saying that 'there can be no doubt that very soon no one will be left who has heard the name of Herbert Spencer,' and describing Mr. Arnold Bennett as a half-educated man who, 'as everybody knows,' cannot think, we are not surprised later at the impertinence of his prediction that by our children's time Woodrow Wilson will have reached the 'ultimate refuge of oblivion.' Mr. Hollis shows, too, a carelessness about facts which makes it impossible to regard this volume as a serious contribution to history."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p81 F 2 '28 160w

HOLLIS, CHRISTOPHER. Monstrous regiment. 250p $2.50 Minton [7s 6d Sheed]

942.05 Roman Catholic church in England. Great Britain—History—Elizabeth, 1558-1603. Elizabeth, queen of England. Reformation—England. Great Britain—Religion 30-31727

A partisan of Roman Catholicism writes this survey of Elizabethan England at the time of the Reformation. Mr Hollis decries the "monstrous regiment"—Elizabeth's counsellors—scorns Elizabeth's religious policies, and exalts Mary, queen of Scots.

"A great deal of scholarship has gone to the making of this wearisome and humourless book; nor is it until the last chapter that the reader will find his patience rewarded."

New Statesman 34:238 N 23 '29 650w

N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w

St Louis 28:64 Mr '30

"Mr. Hollis's book is avowedly partisan. But this in itself does not fully explain the mingled praise and blame with which it has been received. Thus one writer has found it fatiguing and humourless, another witty and bright. The truth is there is much to be said, as usual, on both sides, but it should be emphasized in advance that Mr. Hollis's book is to be read. It is clever and very readable."

+ — Sat R 148:730 D 14 '29 700w

Reviewed by Frederic Milner

Sat R of Lit 7:38 Ag 9 '30 1150w

"Mr. Christopher Hollis, the dashing author of Dr. Johnson and of The American Heresy, could be trusted to provide us with good reading in whatever he wrote; but Mr. Hollis is not, first of all, an author. He is, first of all, a Roman Catholic, and his study of Elizabethan England adds one more volume to the vast literature of the counter-Reformation. Mr. Hollis is a delightful writer. To call him a disciple of Mr. Chesterton would be at once flattering and unfair. . . It is stimulating to have the story of Tudor England retold from the Catholic angle."

+ Spec 143:780 N 23 '29 330w

HOLLISTER, PAUL, ed. American alphabets. ^{2} 120p il $7.50 Harper

745 Alphabets. Lettering 30-28756

"Mr. Hollister has selected eleven American designers of letters, and has shown numerous examples of their work. He has written a sprightly introduction, and equally sprightly biographical notes on the designers. The men whose work are represented are Bernhard, F. G. Cooper, O. Cooper, Dunn, Dwiggins, Foster, Goudy, Jensen, G. and L. Rosa, Sinel and Teague."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 27:195 Ja '31

"This is the skeleton of a most provocative and stimulating book. The study of letter-forms alone is a fascinating sport, and when it leads to reading in works on calligraphy one gets to the very core of the history of culture. The latest chapter in the story of the alphabet has not yet been written, but Mr. Hollister, in his nimble copy-writer's style, contributes a chapter on American letterers which contains a few excellent notes for it. . . It is to be regretted that Mr. Hollister did not include both more men and more alphabets, and that he did not expand his comment on the individual alphabets to include a note about each."

+ — Bookm 72:xxi D '30 280w

"The only flaw in a useful and informative book is the extreme thickness of the paper. Half as thick would have been twice as acceptable."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:316 N 8 '30 350w

HOLMES, ARTHUR. Mind of St Paul; a psychological study. 263p $2 Macmillan

225.92 Paul, Saint 29-21156

This psychological study of the mind of St Paul provides a character analysis of Saul the Hebrew, an account of his conversion, and a description of the processes by which he built up his new faith, especially the place of reason in that process.

Boston Transcript p10 N 2 '29 280w

"The book is most interestingly written, and is a most excellent example of the psychological biography which is popular today. Moreover, it is well balanced. Dr. Holmes is not a mechanist, a behaviorist, a Freudian, or any other sort of one-sided psychologist theorist. He has no hobbies to ride, but from a psychological point of view takes a broad view of everything he discusses. However, one must raise the question of the value of such a study." C. A. Ellwood

+ — Christian Century 47:305 Mr 5 '30 700w

"Much in the book is highly interesting and to me quite unknown. But final judgment as to its contribution as a study in psychology must come from the professional psychologist. It is perhaps not unfriendly to suggest that the author's knowledge of psychology is probably more profound than his knowledge of Paul. The fundamental difficulty in this volume, and it is shared by most psychological studies of Biblical characters, is an unwarrantable use of the sources. To treat the Biblical narratives as if they were clinical reports may be highly diverting, but it is dangerous in the extreme." M. S. Enslin

— + Crozer Q 7:242 Ap '30 900w

"It must be confessed that the book is a disappointment to one who is historically or scientifically minded. All of history presents no more fascinating case for psychological analysis than the case of the apostle Paul before and during and after his Damascus road experience. The well-equipped student of mental phenomena has here the opportunity to make sound and significant contributions, not only to an understanding of Paul's religious development, but also to an understanding of the origins of gentile Chrisianity. Professor Holmes has much of the equipment necessary to make just such a contribution. His excellent analyses of psychic phenomena prove his competence as a descriptive psychologist. But when it comes to the explanation of Paul's conversion experience, Professor Holmes loses his scientific nerve and fails to apply in any thoroughgoing or consistent manner the techniques of which he is master." H. R. Willoughby

— J Religion 10:597 O '30 950w

HOLMES, ARTHUR—Continued
"The author makes a vigorous and on the whole satisfactory defense of the reality and value of Paul's religious experience. It deserves an honorable place in the ever growing literature about this amazing and fascinating figure." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 155:28 My 7 '30 80w

HOLMES, EBER. Rose garden primer. 208p il $1.75 De La Mare
716.2 Roses 30-7627

A handbook for the amateur or beginner at rose growing. Contains chapters on the origin and early history of the rose; varieties of roses for various purposes; the making of a rose garden and its care; propagation of roses; roses for every state in the union; insect diseases and pests; calendar of operations for temperate sections; roses for the small garden; and questions and answers.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

HOLMES, FREDERICK LIONEL. Abraham Lincoln traveled this way; the log book of a pilgrim to the Lincoln country; foreword by Glenn Frank. 350p il $4 Page
B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham 30-11177

"Mr. Holmes sets out in his car to visit all the places made 'holy ground' by the great Emancipator. From birthplace to tomb each scene of action great and small, is sought to yield its answer to the mystery of greatness. There are brief descriptions of places and things, but one does not go far before he discovers that the author carries with him much more than he finds. Every spot suggests a story to the mind steeped in Lincoln lore and stands transformed before the eyes of a worshiper. Tumbling old buildings become holy temples; dirty streets yield inspiring thoughts; and even the noisy wholesale district of Chicago breathes again the atmosphere of the Republican convention of 1860. It is ever the pilgrim at the shrine."—Books

Booklist 27:25 S '30

"This is a different kind of Lincoln book, but it is too much like others we have had of late. It adds little to a real understanding of the man. It only turns his earthly haunts into shrines. If that be a service, it is well rendered." Avery Craven
— + Books p9 Jl 13 '30 600w

"Notwithstanding the thousands of Lincoln books already published and the stream of them that continues to come forth, there should be a definite place, and one of some little consequence, in their ranks for this modest volume so modestly presented by a newspaper man of Madison, Wis. For it really does something for Lincoln that no other book has ever done, and any student of his life and personality will be helped to understanding by its narrative." F. F. Kelly
+ N Y Times p26 N 16 '30 750w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. Palestine to-day and to-morrow; a gentile's survey of Zionism. 271p $2.50 Macmillan
296 Palestine—Description and travel. Palestine—Race question. Zionism 29-24352

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:199 F '30
Bookm 71:vi Je '30 120w
Boston Transcript p3 Ja 18 '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '30

"Here is a book which contains a great deal of sound sense with a considerable admixture of nonsense. Mr. Holmes took a fresh mind to his task, and he seems to have seen as many things and to have talked with as many people—Arabs, Jews and Englishmen—as could have been expected in a visit of three weeks. He writes attractively, though in a rather sentimental way, and he sets down his impressions of the conflict of races and personalities with a bewildering display of impartiality."
+ — New Statesman 35:126 My 3 '30 1000w
St Louis 28:37 F '30

"His impressions are necessarily superficial. Mr. Holmes, after a few days in Jerusalem and a hasty motor tour round the Zionist colonies, concluded that the British officials were anti-Zionist, but such a judgment has no intrinsic value."
— Spec 144:578 Ap 5 '30 260w
Times [London] Lit Sup p327 Ap 17 '30 700w
Wis Lib Bul 26:99 Mr '30

HOLMES, OLIVER WENDELL. Dissenting opinions of Mr Justice Holmes; arr. with introd. notes by Alfred Lief; with a foreword by George W. Kirchwey. 314p $4.50 Vanguard press
342.73 United States—Constitutional law 29-30420

This selection from the dissenting opinions of Justice Holmes reveals the philosophy of a keen and original mind, the opinions of a legal pioneer in liberal thought who has extraordinary knowledge of the workings of social and economic forces, and a style of charm and dignity with passages indicative of a fine literary and artistic appreciation.

Reviewed by E. S. Corwin
Am Pol Sci R 24:780 Ag '30 320w
Booklist 26:189 F '30

"If good wine needs no bush, surely the opinions of Mr. Justice Holmes need no such wretched editing as that committed here. Yet the good wine has a flavor that no bush can spoil, and it is better to have it served badly than not at all. Lay readers should welcome this opportunity of confirming the judgment of the initiated that Mr. Justice Holmes is supreme and almost unique among those who wear the robe." T. R. Powell
+ — Books p18 Mr 23 '30 900w

"One need not be a student of the law and its so-called technicalities to read the book with absorbing interest."
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '30 460w

"Objections on the score of the one-sidedness of a book devoted to dissenting opinions are silenced, or at least pretty well subdued, by Mr. Kirchwey's Foreword. The arrangement of the opinions, editorial work on them, and the introductory notes are done by Mr. Lief. In the notes he endeavors to give a sufficient account of the issue and of the majority opinion to enable the general reader to understand what the case is about and to apprehend the substance of the argument which Mr. Justice Holmes is combatting. It is a difficult task to do this adequately in notes averaging from one-half to three-quarters of a page each. Yet, in the main, they are fairly satisfactory." N. T. Dowling
Columbia Law R 30:587 Ap '30 820w

"While these opinions have not the force of law, they have had nevertheless a profound effect in determining public opinion." J. T. Gerould
Current Hist 31:830 Ja '30 20w

"This book is a unique tribute of a kind that has never been paid, as far as I know, to any judge of the United States, not even to John Marshall. In one volume there have been collected here the dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice Holmes, with enough of his majority opinions to make clear his position. The value of such a compilation should lie far beyond considerations of convenience. It must be not only a recognition of the great rôle which Justice Holmes has filled but also a means of continuing and increasing his influence." William Seagle
+ Nation 130:157 F 5 '30 800w

"This book, the record of the life work of a brave legal pioneer, is commended not only for the force of its substance but for the charm of its form. The flavor of belles-lettres, natural enough in a son of the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, everywhere pervades his legal writings. The dull and technical citation of cases yields to passages which show a rare sensitiveness to beauty and appreciation of art and literature. A copyright case contains revealing references to Goya, Degas, Manet. A case involving the price of theatre tickets furnishes an opportunity to contrast American culture with that of France." J. P. Pollard
+ N Y Times p4 D 1 '29 1000w
St Louis 28:38 F '30

"Here is a case study of a remarkable man from his own lips. A reprint of his pronouncements on actual cases preserves the flavor of reality, of actual contest, of the clash of interest. But, more important than all, it discloses the man himself and his fine distinctive style, rich in epigram and allusion, the style of a judicial essayist unrivalled to-day unless perchance by his admirer and disciple, Cardozo. The book does have, however, the pre-eminent defects of the case method,—lack of both economy and completeness in presenting the subject. . . An expression of these doubts is intended not as condemnation of the present volume but is a result of a fear lest it may not do full justice to the man and his work." C. E. Clark
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:581 D 21 '29 2200w

Reviewed by Hastings Lyon
Survey 64:43 Ap 1 '30 650w

"This is its value: it can be read, as it was written, one opinion at a time. Holmes has said that one can see no further into a generalization than his specific facts will allow. A youth once brought to me a letter of introduction from a well-known poet: 'I like this chap; he makes me say the kind of things I like to hear.' You will, if you are of the elect, read Holmes. He will make you think the kind of things which you like to turn over in your mind." W. H. Hamilton
+ Yale R n s 19:611 spring '30 2700w

HOLMES, W. GERALD. Plant location. (McGraw-Hill industrial management ser.) 275p il $3 McGraw
2
658.21 Industries, Location of 30-17060

"As stated in his preface, 'The book is the outgrowth of the author's experience in plant location in the interests of both the manufacturers and the community.' The book is divided into three parts, the first of which, Choosing the General Territory, treats of markets, raw materials, transportation facilities, freight rates, fuels and power, labor and wages, laws and taxation, and such miscellaneous factors as climate, water resources, and building costs. In Part II, Choosing the Particular Community, [is a] discussion of community attitude, civic aspects, government and taxes, and other civic data. Part III, Choosing the Site, is short . . . showing the factors actually to be considered in selecting the best plant site among those that are available." —Chem & Met Eng

Booklist 27:54 O '30

"The book outlines admirably the problems necessary to be solved in locating a new plant or relocating an old one. Because he is not wedded to any preconceived theoretical ideas, the author has not attempted to prove his theses by any bias of presentation. It is a straightforward, readable, and comprehensive exposition of the factors that govern plant location, well worthy of a place on the desk of the plant engineer and the executive." C. W. Cuno
+ Chem & Met Eng 37:503 Ag '30 420w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:68 O '30

HOLT, HENRY. Ace of spades. 300p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Harrap]
30-7108

Was the Ace of Spades, clever international crook, a man or a woman? And did he, or she, kill the beautiful dancer Gloria Castello in her sumptuous hotel suite in London? With her last breath Gloria had gasped something about green, car and bury, and following up these clues Andy Collinson, crime specialist of the Daily Budget, beat Scotland Yard in locating the Ace of Spades.

Bookm 71:xx Je '30 50w

"You will be kept mildly excited while reading this one, which rates B plus." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 70w

"Although the reader is denied knowledge of the separate links in the chain of evidence and has to follow the astute reporter in the dark, the mystery is sufficient inducement to read on."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Je 5 '30 180w

HOLT, WILLIAM STULL. Bureau of the census; its history, activities and organization. (Inst. for government research. Service monographs of the U.S. government) 224p $1.50 Brookings
353.8 United States.Bureau of the census
29-21694

"This timely volume gives an excellent survey, wholly descriptive in character, of the history of the decennial census and of the activities of the Census Bureau and its present organization. It has a bibliography of twenty-three pages."—Am J Soc

Am J Soc 35:866 Mr '30 50w
Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 150w
Pratt p11 autumn '30

HOLZWORTH, JOHN MICHAEL. Wild grizzlies of Alaska. 417p il $5 (21s) Putnam
599.7 Bears. Photography of animals. Mountain sheep. Caribou 30-23333

Mr Holzworth has shot many grizzly and brown bears with his camera, and this book, with its numerous illustrations, represents the considerable and valuable information concerning bear life, temperament, and habits which the author has gathered, together with notes on mountain sheep and caribou. Mr Holzworth photographed most of these grizzly and brown bears on the southeastern Alaskan Islands.

Booklist 27:192 Ja '31

"His book is replete with thrilling close-ups of big bears, with intimate personal contacts when bear and man are literally face to face. He is above all else a friend of the bear and no one can read his book without being impressed by this fact. Add to this quality a love and appreciation for the natural beauties of Alaska, and an ever present sense of humor, and we find that this champion of a threatened species is well equipped to plead his case." H. E. Anthony
+ Books p10 O 26 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 300w
St Louis 28:292 D '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p1002 N 27 '30 450w

HOOKE, SYLVIA DENYS. Aubrey Dene. 304p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans
[30-5250]

Sir Denis Aubrey of Aubrey Dene was a stern, proud man, whose chief loves in life were his son and the Dene. When his son was killed in the war and misfortunes came upon his beloved home Sir Denis almost gave up his hope. But a kinder fate was reserved for him and the Dene was saved.

"'Aubrey Dene' while it has a rare warmth and moments of beauty, attempts to touch upon too many vital griefs. It spills too much heart's blood. It lacks the restraint and the coherence which would have sent it kiting to high places."
— + Books p17 Je 22 '30 550w

HOOKE, S. D.—Continued
Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30
New Statesman 34:706 Mr 8 '30 180w

"The book is written in a clear, competent style; in the dark, poignant hours of Sir Denis's fears for Aubrey Dene and Leonard there is keen and penetrating anguish; and although the war section is too long (for it adds little which has not already been stressed), the symbol of the old Tudor manor in relation to England of the past and today makes it very suggestive reading."
+ — N Y Times p9 My 11 '30 500w

"It is obvious that sincere feeling and an undoubted literary gift have gone to the writing of this sombre novel; one's quarrel with it is that the author loads the dice too heavily against her characters, and that, despite the beauty of certain descriptive passages, she tends too often to substitute mere vehemence for the simplicity that comes from genuine strength."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 13 '30 220w

HOPE, FIELDING. Mystery of the House of commons. 305p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Selwyn]
30-12523

When five British M.P.'s are murdered, one by one, things begin to look a bit serious—especially since the deceased members of the House are all Socialists, and a general election is impending. Then Scotland Yard, assisted by a young M.P. who is in love with the daughter of one of his murdered colleagues, gets on to the trail of Baron Rostoff, a wicked Russian Bolshevik, and after many harrowing pursuits and escapes the villain is cornered.

Bookm 71:xviii Ag '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 My 25 '30 130w

"The tale of this mystery will no doubt engross many readers. It belongs, however, in the second rather than the first class of mystery stories."
— + Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 260w

"It must be one of the most fatuous detective stories ever written. The excuse for it is that it deals with a General Election, and that its unique badness makes it, at any rate for those who do not often read detective stories, extremely funny."
— New Statesman 33:318 Je 15 '29 200w

"It is a promising beginning for a mystery thriller, but the solution imposes too much of a strain upon the reader's credulity. If the deeds described in this book were possible, the world would no longer be safe for democracy or for anything else."
— N Y Times p24 Je 1 '30 120w
N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p540 Jl 4 '29 150w

HOPKINS, ERNEST MARTIN. Education and
2 life. 53p $1.50 Houghton
370.4 Education—Addresses, essays, lectures
30-30688

A lecture on the value of higher education delivered by the president of Dartmouth College.

"In this little essay the social implications of education are analyzed as well as the individual's own problem of self-discovery through education; philosophers of life and education, as well as laymen, will find the discussion worth their reading." E. F. Brown
+ Current Hist 33:iv D '30 100w

"Though little is said that is new or vitally suggestive, the calm thoughtfulness with which President Hopkins approaches his duties as a college president is illustrated in the pages of this lecture."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 D 31 '30 280w

HOPKINS, LEVI THOMAS. Curriculum principles and practices. 617p il $2.75 Sanborn 375 Education—Curricula 29-13014

"The book is divided into two parts. Part I is devoted to a consideration of the underlying principles of the curriculum; Part II, to the procedure used in its construction. . . The various steps in curriculum construction are presented in tangible, concrete form. Planning the administration of curriculum revision and methods of installation of new courses of study are discussed."—School R

"The author's aim appears to be completeness rather than simplicity. There is no sifting of materials. The author's treatment of minor problems is exhaustive but not always discriminating. The number of main and secondary steps proposed by the author makes the process of curriculum-making appear more complex than it really is. The detailed treatment is a finely spun, philosophical discussion, which is too involved for the busy teacher or administrator." Henry Harap
— + El School J 30:387 Ja '30 1000w

"The book is an interesting, readable, and teachable treatise. Throughout every chapter is reflected the personality of a dynamic, aggressive educational leader, who is thoroughly familiar with the most intimate details of school work and yet does not indulge in professional jargon or pedantic expressions to convey his point of view." R. A. Davis
+ School R 38:147 F '30 600w

HOPKINS, MARK. Early letters, and others from his brothers and their mother; a picture of life in New England from 1770 to 1857. 365p il $4 Day
B or 92 New England—Social life and customs 30-6998

These letters of Mark Hopkins, American author and educator, with those of his brothers and their mother have recently been discovered. They were written between the years 1770 and 1857 and give an intimate picture of the Hopkins family and the beginnings of the career of Mark Hopkins as teacher and president of Williams college.

"No name is attached to these letters as that of editor or compiler. They carry their own internal evidence of their authenticity, however, and make a valuable addition to the list of source-books in American history." F. P. Stockbridge
+ Bookm 71:122 Mr '30 470w
Reviewed by H. F. Whicher
Books p18 F 23 '30 1000w

"It would seem that these belated letters must waken a renewed interest in the lives of these two brothers, who, each in his individual way, left an indelible impress upon the standards of the scholastic and daily life of Williams College." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p4 F 19 '30 1150w

"Outstanding in interest throughout the volume are the letters of Mark's mother. Some of the most vivid mirrorings in the book of the customs and spirit of the time are in her letters. But all of the letters are rich in that respect. Especially revealing and psychologically significant is the unconscious picture they give every now and then of the people of their period reveling in and exploiting the emotions produced by bereavement. Apparently it was proper a hundred years ago, whatever other emotions were repressed, to indulge in grief and condolence, at least on paper, to the last limit of expression."
+ N Y Times p23 F 16 '30 1000w
Pratt p36 summer '30

"A welcome supplement to existing biographies of the renowned president of Williams college. The letters are a collection of family letters, rather than of letters by Mark alone, and they throw more light on the composite Hopkins's character than on the character of Mark."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 9 '30 1100w

^{2} HOPKINS, ROBERT THURSTON. Old windmills of England; introd. by Arthur Beckett (Eng title: Old watermills and windmills). 245p il $6 W. F. Payson, 598 Madison Av, N.Y. [16s Allan, P.]

621.45 Windmills

"Mr. Hopkins writes of the windmills, the watermills and the ancient forge mills that he has found and studied in many counties of England, even, indeed, in London, tells their stories, quotes poetry about them, discusses their beauty, their mechanism, their use as dwelling houses, the mysteries that sometimes are entangled in them, and the personalities of millers he has known."—N Y Times

"Mr. Hopkins' book tells not only its own delightful story, but it evokes many a memory of the famous men who walked the London streets and along the lovely English countryside, when above them the long-silent sails of vanished windmills turned busily." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 550w

"The only fault that can be found with his book is that he has not made his windmillian pilgrimages far enough afield. His preoccupation with the home counties has made him oblivious to some really fine extant wind and water mills in the northern and western counties."

+ — New Statesman 36:368 D 27 '30 200w

"Mr. Hopkins feels for his subject an affectionate tenderness, keen and warm, but imbues all his text with a touch of emotion and so adds to the human interest that constantly allures him. The illustrations, almost fifty of them, are from drawings, old prints and photographs."

+ N Y Times p5 D 28 '30 250w

HORLER, SYDNEY. Lady of the night. 307p $2 Knopf [3s 6d Hodder]

30-19937

"'Lady of the Night' gets its title from beautiful Valerie Insall, who slips into Gerald Holiday's compartment on a northbound Riviera express, places in his charge a card case containing mysterious documents, has—though involuntarily—another woman murdered in her stead, and leads our hero into all sorts of peril in France and England."—N Y Evening Post

"A shocker of the violent school, this one aims at racking the nerves of the reader rather than securing his implicit belief." Will Cuppy

Books p10 Ag 10 '30 150w

"Mr. Horler's people are still pretty stiff, though I think he has improved a lot since the first of his books I ran across, 'False Faces,' back in 1926. Perhaps in a few more years . . ."

— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 100w

N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 150w

^{2} HORN, HENRY HARCOURT. Handbook of law for women. 183p $3 Grafton press

396.2 Woman—Legal status, laws, etc.

29-25465

"A member of the Minnesota Bar here provides, not a law book, but a guide to law as it affects the rights of women, their real and personal property, and some of their special activities and interests; 'a brief synopsis of the law as to adoption, contracts, guardianship, support, marriage, divorce, wills, and thirty-six other subjects. How a woman may make her own will. How she may probate a small estate. Rules for the formation of a club or society.'"—J Home Econ

Booklist 26:263 Ap '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p40 Mr '30
J Home Econ 22:223 Mr '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30
Pratt p13 summer '30
St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

HORN, JOHN LOUIS. Principles of elementary education. (Century educ. ser.) 394p $2 Century

372 Education, Elementary. Education of children

29-8233

An introductory textbook. Part one covers the development of the American school system; part two, the relation of the school to civil authority; part three, the curriculum, methods of instruction, and individual differences; part four, the organization of instruction; part five, administrative details.

Cleveland Open Shelf p116 S '29

"In attempting to include such a variety of material within 388 pages, the author imposes on himself difficult tasks of organization and presentation. At times evidences of the difficulties come between the reader and the content. It is as if the author himself were aware of his ambitious undertaking and, fearful of losing his reader, were seeking by force of repeated outlining and summarizing to maintain contact. The effects of limited space are frequently noticeable in the necessarily abbreviated treatments of important topics. . . Perhaps the greatest weakness of the book, however, is its apparent indifference to the scientific movement in education. . . The author's emphasis on functions and purposes in elementary education rather than on less essential aspects is wholesome and effective. It is in these last respects that the textbook makes its largest contribution." W. A. Brownell

— + El School J 30:155 O '29 750w

HORNER, ISALINE BLEW. Women under primitive Buddhism: laywomen and almswomen. (Broadway oriental lib.) 391p il $5 Dutton [15s Routledge]

294.3 Women in India. Buddha and Buddhism. India—Religion

[30-32282]

In this inquiry into the position of women prior to Buddhism, and during the rise of the Buddhist religion, Miss Horner proves that women's status greatly improved with the advance of Buddhist propaganda. In part one she discusses the mother, the daughter, the wife, the widow, and the woman worker. Part two is concerned with the religious life of women: the orders of almswomen.

"Her book is the product of laborious scholarship, and if the presentation lacks something in liveliness, it is at least thorough, and is on publication, the standard—and only—reference work on the subject." W. N. Brown

+ Books p10 N 23 '30 600w

"The book is a valuable footnote to the history of Indian religion."

+ New Statesman 35:388 Je 28 '30 180w

"The subject has never before been treated so comprehensively, and the descriptions of life within the Order of Almswomen is fascinating reading. . . Mr. Horner's work is printed and bound with the care and attention to detail which distinguishes the 'Broadway Oriental Library,' and his text is a model of good scholarship."

+ Spec 145:171 Ag 2 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p558 Jl 3 '30 200w

^{2} HORRIGAN, OLIVE KATHERINE. Creative activities in physical education; correlated and integrated games and dances from many countries. 147p il $2 Barnes, A.S. & co.

796.1 Physical education and training. Games. Dancing

29-21182

"Describes and illustrates the types of activities which may be integrated and correlated with the units of work in the school program, both in classroom and on the playground."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

HORRIGAN, O. K.—Continued

"The classroom teacher is kept in mind also and is given excellent material in verse, music, and directions for dancing and games, as a basis for trying out each of the suggestions offered. In addition, very comprehensive references are given in each connection. The whole book is made attractive by clearness, practical understanding of the teacher's problems, and a delightful sympathy with a child's imagination." L. L. Meanes

+ Am J Pub Health 20:229 F '30 180w

Booklist 26:269 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

HORTON, WALTER MARSHALL. Theism and the modern mood; with an introd. by William Adams Brown. 189p $2 Harper

211 Theism. Humanism. God 30-8490

Professor Horton, in rejecting humanistic religion, offers in this volume of theistic theology a refutation of the humanist position, and postulates at the same time a need for the God of human experience and of Christian faith.

Booklist 27:137 D '30

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes

Books p14 My 18 '30 320w

"A brave attempt to come to a critical understanding of humanism, to dethrone it, and to set in its place a workable and reasonable theism. The work is not ponderous, but brief, timely and admirably executed. It cannot but prove reassuring to those who have witnessed the armies of theism falling back before the advancing hosts of humanism. And it may serve to bring back God to many who have surrendered to the logic of the humanists, for it is this very logic which the author attacks most vigorously." W. W. Wimberly

+ Christian Century 47:754 Je 11 '30 1350w

"This is an example of beautiful bookmaking. The wide margins and the artistic typography are attractive. A very minute index makes the book quickly serviceable when a reference is desired. The literary workmanship of the author deserved the aid of the printer's art. It is not often that a difficult and perplexing theological problem is presented so clearly, while yet revealing the mastery of philosophical questions involved." M. G. Evans

+ Crozer Q 7:398 Jl '30 370w

"Professor Horton gives us not only the results of his reflection, but, considering the small size of the volume, a surprising amount of insight into the processes which led to his conclusions, and a large body of material for the reader to work on himself. At the same time the book is notable for its stylistic qualities. In aesthetic sensitiveness it is worthy of a place beside the works of such able 'humanist' writers as Krutch, Lippman, and Bertrand Russell." J. S. Bixler

+ J Religion 10:439 Jl '30 950w

"Professor Horton has written a careful and scholarly book. It will add much light to the current theological controversy and will be gratefully received by many thoughtful laymen who would not care for technically theological books." Reinhold Niebuhr

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 450w

"Dr. Horton states the case for theism with great clarity and power. It is the best answer to humanism which has yet come from the camp of the theists. We recommend it very highly." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 154:592 Ap 9 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:202 S '30

Reviewed by A. C. McGiffert, Jr.

Sat R of Lit 6:1175 Jl 5 '30 630w

"Mr. Horton has written an able book and one which anyone interested in the religious problem of the modern age may read with profit." R. N.

+ World Tomorrow 13:346 Ag '30 420w

HORVATH, FERDINAND HUSZTI. Captured! 299p $2.50 Dodd 30-18195

The author, a young Hungarian officer in an Austrian regiment, tells how he and the remnant of his company were captured, in the spring of 1915, by a superior force of Russians, and taken to a prison camp. The story is mainly concerned with the details of that captivity, including the passionate love affair of the young lieutenant and a Russian woman, which was terminated by the author's escape from the camp and his eventual return to his own country.

Bookm 72:vi O '30 100w

Reviewed by Lambert Davis

Books p16 S 14 '30 350w

"A good old-fashioned example of Hearst Sunday feature-writing. Lieutenant Horvath does not allow a little thing like war to interfere with his ability to make love to the ladies. His affair with the wife of a Russian official is priceless. His generalities concerning the Revolution of 1917 are irresistibly comic and always inaccurate." Horace Gregory

— Nation 131:71 Jl 16 '30 70w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 100w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman

N Y Times p5 Ag 3 '30 400w

"The book is vivid enough while it dwells upon experiences at the front and in the prison camps, experiences ugly, heart-breaking, mind-dulling as they were on every front. But toward the end a love story is inserted, clumsy and tiresome. The author of Captured, a painter, now living in New York, writes in popular-magazine style." F. L. Robbins

— + Outlook 155:307 Je 25 '30 150w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

"'Captured!' is a grand tale of battle, adventure, love, hardship, impish gaiety, and passion. The scenes of a soldier's life are vivid in color, rich in frank detail, unsparing in their occasional grimness, invariably picturesque." Emerson Taylor

+ Sat R of Lit 7:54 Ag 16 '30 300w

"In the main the narrative has a matter-of-fact and plausible tone, but is not exceptional either in revelation or treatment."

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 70w

HOSIE, DOROTHEA (SOOTHILL), lady. Portrait of a Chinese lady and certain of her contemporaries. 404p il $5 Morrow [21s Hodder]

915.1 China—Social life and customs. Women in China 30-7308

The writer is an Englishwoman born and brought up in China and a lover of the country and its people. Her portrait of a Chinese lady is drawn from life and from intimate acquaintance with the original, Mrs Sung of Shanghai, a charming young mother and representative of the new China, educated partly in America. The background of the picture, of which Mrs Sung is the center, is the daily home life of modern China, revealed sympathetically and humorously, by means of dialogue, reminiscence and anecdote.

Booklist 26:308 My '30

"It is a great pity that Lady Dorothea Hosie, in her Portrait of a Chinese Lady, allows her personal attitudes to saturate a book which is otherwise fascinating. . . She does not attempt a coherent story but, through incidents which pleased and interested her, and through the friendships which she made, she renders a vivid and sympathetic account of China today." K. G. David

+ — Bookm 71:235 Ap '30 230w

"Lady Hosie has had rare opportunities to know what she calls 'my dear China,' and she tells her stories with humor and with sympathy. One may learn much of China from her. But hers is, after all, the China that a missionary sees. She is amazed to discover the virtue and the strength of character that can reside in a Chinese who has known Christianity for only one generation." Lewis Gannett

+ — Books p4 Mr 9 '30 500w

Reviewed by T. S. Lester
Boston Transcript p4 Ap 5 '30 1250w

"Lady Hosie's method is to dissolve problems into stories. The varying attitudes to marriage, children, education, careers, fashion, and the gradual Westernization of the country are illuminated by a rich current of reminiscence flowing from the intimate experience and wide travels of a lifetime. Lady Hosie has not only seen much, but has seen more and understood more than most people would have done under the circumstances; and without being exactly profound, she discloses an extremely interesting personality herself." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 1 '30 600w

"Her book is full of charming incidents, pleasant anecdotes, and delightful personalities, chatty and eminently companionable. It is occasionally gushing; and it is disposed to be rather too trusting of Westerners living in China. One seems to feel in her account an unconscious championship of the Western missionary and teacher caste to which she belongs. However, the sincerity of her love and understanding of the Chinese cannot be questioned."
+ — Nation 131:133 Jl 30 '30 180w

Reviewed by William Plomer
Nation and Ath 46:648 F 8 '30 600w

Reviewed by Isidor Schneider
New Repub 63:24 My 21 '30 140w

"An interesting and enlightening and often amusing book."
+ New Statesman 34:342 D 14 '29 250w

"Here is no formal exposition on religious, political and social conditions in present-day China. We have instead, a deeply human document, brimming with sympathy and understanding, full of vivid and moving experiences that take us from the humorous pranks of children, the quaint exploits of simple peasant folk. the intimate chatterings of mothers confiding their domestic problems to each other, to instances of self-sacrifice and heroic fortitude." Dino Ferrari
+ N Y Times p3 Mr 16 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Nathaniel Peffer
N Y World p5m Je 29 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30

Reviewed by A. T. Hobart
Sat R of Lit 6:1202 Jl 19 '30 900w

"Lady Hosie has great qualities of head and heart. She might, and she may, write a masterpiece on her subject, but only when she is able more sternly to edit, select, revise, compress. This book is a collection of incidents, well described and vivid in themselves, but insufficiently connected. Yet we commend it wholeheartedly, for it is the work of a cultured mind with a true knowledge of the life and language of China."
+ — Spec 143:670 N 9 '29 270w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 8 '30 300w

"The book will not only appeal to the foreigner who has lived in China, it will delight and instruct the general reader. The twenty-four illustrations are admirably reproduced from excellent photographs, and if the book were twice its length it would not be too long."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p885 N 7 '29 1200w

HOSKEN, CLIFFORD JAMES WHEELER (RICHARD KEVERNE, pseud.). Man in the red hat. 314p $2 Harper [7s 6d Constable]
30-21869

A genuine Gainsborough, the Man in the red hat, is discovered by Mark Wickham in the old-fashioned home of the aged and eccentric Miss Buckingham. It develops that a group of swindlers is also interested in the painting, and in other treasures housed there as well. Mark, aided by Miss Buckingham's young companion, Joan, and his elder partner in business, Jabez Dawes, brings the swindlers to justice and saves the masterpiece.

"A well-told story by a polished writer."
+ Bookm 72:xxiii S '30 80w

"The special merit of this tale lies in the whopping surprise that lies just inside the paper seal—and it has plenty of other virtues as well, such as good English, human characters and oodles of suspense. In fact, we nominate 'The Man in the Red Hat' for a prize of some kind." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 S 7 '30 120w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s S 6 '30 30w

"The book is extremely well done." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 200w

"There are some very amusing and very real people in it—miles ahead of the dummies of the average detective yarn." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 80w

"[The author] knows how to tell a good story and, though at times one's powers of deduction feel cheated, The Man in the Red Hat is excellent reading. It is original to find a detective story whose mystery is solved without the intervention, either adventitious or disastrous, of a professional detective."
+ — Spec 144:634 Ap 12 '30 80w

"[The author] writes pleasant, straightforward English. . . 'The Man in the Red Hat' is no book for those who like a murder on every page, but there are humor, sense and observation in it, and one character at least, an old wine-merchant who turns himself into a most unofficial detective, belongs to a larger world than that of the mystery novel."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p373 My 1 '30 180w

HOSKEN, CLIFFORD JAMES WHEELER (RICHARD KEVERNE, pseud.). Shadow syndicate. 319p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Harrap]
30-12524

Roger Eade, a young novelist, went to sleep on an Embankment bench, was mistaken by a kindly stranger for a tramp and offered a job, which he accepted to satisfy his curiosity. The experiences in which he became involved in the employ of Ringman's, a shady company of transport contractors, smugglers and general conspirators, make an exciting mystery-adventure story.

"A very lively and readable yarn."
+ Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 29 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 23 '30 500w

N Y Times p18 Jl 13 '30 300w

"The story is well told, interesting, lively, though the inordinate amount of hokum practiced by the furtive malefactors to conceal their sinister activities seems to overload the action with unessential incidents and details."
+ — N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 100w

"A good, swift-moving, exciting tale." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 100w

"A mystery tale that really mystifies."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p193 Mr 6 '30 200w

HOSKINS, HALFORD LANCASTER. European imperialism in Africa. (Berkshire studies in European hist.) 118p $1 Holt

960 Africa—Colonization. Imperialism
30-21508

Deals, briefly and compactly, with European penetration into Africa, the partition of Africa, and the problems and difficulties that have arisen because of this imperialism.

HOSKINS, H. L.—Continued

"Its only claim to distinction is that it compresses into 100 pages what other men put into 500. Assuming that it is worth while to do this type of writing, it may be said that, on the whole, the present volume admirably succeeds in carrying out the ambitions of its editors." R. L. Buell

Christian Science Monitor p7 N 1 '30 350w

"Given the limitations imposed by the conditions of publication, Professor Hoskins has produced a very readable volume, to which he has appended a limited bibliography. It may prove a happy solution to those instructors of orientation courses who have had difficulty finding a survey, sufficiently brief but inclusive, of the white man's intrusion in Africa." A. C. F. W.

+ Hist Outlook 21:341 N '30 180w

HOSTETLER, LAWRENCE A. Art of social dancing; a text book for teachers and students. 140p $2 Barnes, A.S. & co.

793.3 Dancing 30-19862

"A successful teacher of ballroom dancing analyzes the four basic factors of such dancing as poise, position, relaxation, and ability to lead or follow, applying these to dancing in general as a development of walking and then to the waltz, fox-trot, tango, and their variations."—J Home Econ

Booklist 27:56 O '30

J Home Econ 22:866 O '30 50w

"Mr. Hostetler writes clearly and simply and out of extensive practical knowledge, so that his little book should be helpful to inexpert dancers."

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 10 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30

HOUGH, LYNN HAROLD, ed. Whither Christianity. 304p $3 Harper

230 Christianity 29-25590

A religious symposium in which fifteen ministers and scholars contribute individual essays that discuss the rejuvenation of Christianity in the light of modern progress.

Booklist 26:222 Mr '30

"That the work is ably done goes without saying. But it has the fatal flaw of being an interpretation not of religion but of Christianity. These clergymen-scholars have fallen into the old tradition of regarding Christianity as synonymous with religion and thus in spite of themselves have written an apologetic of the Christian faith. . . As a specimen of what can be done in the way of rejuvenating theological senility the book has its interest." J. H. Holmes

— + Books p25 Ja 26 '30 280w

"Here mingle in holy converse fifteen learned doctors of divinity to orient Christianity to contemporary intelligence. They demonstrate that it is now possible for the first-class Christian minister and the first-class professor of philosophy to shake hands and make up; that it is advantageous for the first-class Christian scholar to make common cause with his first-class scientist neighbor; that the first-class Christian preacher may reach out for the helpful companionship of his friend the first-class instructor in behavioristic psychology. . . The value of the book is enhanced when it is remembered that the authors are every one immediately in touch with life in the sectors where the fighting is the heaviest." Frederick Kuhns

+ Christian Century 47:114 Ja 22 '30 1600w

"One misses in this form of writing by American collaborators what he finds in that same form among their neighbors in England, namely, the urge of a common mind, a common faith, a common will, and a common love. Nevertheless, we have in this volume, Whither Christianity, some brilliant writing, some aflame with the genius of the Spirit. The chapters by Richard Roberts, Miles H. Krumbine, and Gaius Glenn Atkins are only lesser classics in virility of thought, in comprehension of the problems and in the simplicity and beauty of style." S. B. Meeser

+ Crozer Q 7:121 Ja '30 380w

"The tone of the book is one of expressed convictions rather than of tentative weighing of alternatives: clearly all the writers feel under pressure to meet demands for definite guidance. But the essays are, on the whole, characterized by fairness and restraint, and one is impressed throughout by the writers' sense of larger problems beyond, forbidding dogmatism, despite a few sweeping generalizations." E. E. Aubrey

+ — J Religion 10:431 Jl '30 750w

Living Church 83:840 O 18 '30 300w

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 8 '30 50w

"Here is a source book which should be read by those who assume that the ministry is not alive to the problems of this generation." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 153:638 D 18 '29 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30

St Louis 28:64 Mr '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p900 N 6 '30 950w

"The tone of Whither Christianity is not always as close to the problems of everyday life as one could wish, for often that vital concern with humanity which is the breath of religion seems lessened by theoretical discussion. Much of the book, as probably intended, is for the intellectual environment and the academic mind. As such it succeeds, and the dominant impression is of big men who write splendidly." T. K. Noss

+ World Tomorrow 13:184 Ap '30 420w

HOUGHTON, CLAUDE, pseud. See Oldfield, C. H.

HOULT, NORAH. Closing hour (Eng title: Time, gentlemen! Time!). 347p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-5537

William Carmichael, London solicitor, is gradually failing in business. To escape the growing reproaches of his wife, who has two children to clothe and feed, he patronizes with increasing zeal the corner pubs, till closing hour sends him staggering homeward. The antipathy between Carmichael and his embittered wife, and the crushing effect of family dissension and poverty on the sensitive minds of the children, are sympathetically narrated in this story of middle-class English life.

"The virtues of the book, despite their paucity, are real enough: Miss Hoult's style, clear and pointed and fluent, is worthy of commendation; her familiarity with life from a masculine point of view is unquestionably distinctive. But the novel remains valuable solely for its style. Mere realism, no matter how photographic, is not enough. The Closing Hour lacks purpose and plot and that discipline of structure which gives finish to a story and satisfaction to a reader."

+ — Bookm 71:109 Mr '30 300w

"It is a praiseworthy purpose, setting on paper the sordid dull lives of ordinary, dull persons. But if the attempt succeeds, a sordid, ordinary, dull book may be the result. If 'Closing Hour' is occasionally boring, the fact may be attributed to a too faithful presentation of boredom."

— + Books p10 Mr 30 '30 450w

"There is neither beginning nor end to this brilliantly worked-out study. It gets nowhere. But it is very much worth while for the powerful illumination which it throws on the mediocre souls of its characters, as well as for the keen observation which supports its extraordinary descriptions."

+ Nation 130:334 Mr 19 '30 160w

"There is no reason why a dull, sordid story about commonplace, unhappy people should not become a good novel. If the author allows his own mind and imagination to permeate the subject, the sordid is illuminated by implied contrasts, and the creation of an artistically satisfying work made possible. But nothing of this sort happens in 'Time, Gentlemen! Time!' It makes a better tract than novel; I would almost as soon spend a week-end with the Carmichaels as re-read it." L. L. Irvine

— Nation and Ath 46:707 F 22 '30 240w

"There are many notable studies in alcoholism from Zola's L'Assommoir to Mr. Beresford's The House in Demetrius Road and Aumonier's Three Bars' Interval: but we know no book which conveys so well the fantastic, the warm makebelieve of drunkenness as this powerful, fair, and most unexpectedly generous book of Mrs. Hoult. . . Mrs. Hoult never lapses from a level of accomplishment that is, if anything, higher than that she showed in Poor Women. Yet Time, Gentlemen! Time! is not so satisfying a book as Poor Women, for it is really a study in a form of servitude the variations of which take the novelist into a fantastic region where life suspends its ordinary rules, and yet never takes on the charm or the colour of a fairy-story."

+ — New Statesman 34:578 F 8 '30 380w

"Miss Hoult has more than a remarkable sense of character; she makes us participate in life through her insight into manners also, through her use of detail and her command over dialogue. The whole Carmichael household is set before us and is forever there; the scenes of Willy and his friends in the pub, with their windy, drunken, sententious speculations on life, have no false notes. It is a wonder that a woman could have written them —for better scenes of the same kind we must go to James Joyce, whom, in their sure knowledge of the Irish temperament, they suggest. . . On its own level 'Closing Hour' is pretty nearly perfect." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p2 Mr 16 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Marie Luhrs

N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 240w

"The book has the unity of a short story—indeed, it is really a short story, expanded into a novel. It is beautifully constructed, and though apparently realistic in treatment, it has that independence of the temporal and the particular which belongs to all true works of art. It points no moral, though it seems inspired by a conviction in the author's mind that men must drink and the women must weep." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 149:238 F 22 '30 250w

"The book has a great deal, but it wants something. It wants progression and concentration. As it is, 'Closing Hour' is static rather than dynamic, and sometimes tragic, but more often depressing."

Sat R of Lit 6:1015 My 3 '30 550w

"Miss Hoult's book is entirely without false emphasis and ranting denunciation. Her prose is as sly as a needle. That atmosphere of sordid, quarrelling domesticity is obtained with a simplicity and humour of observation, that are the tokens of a very gifted intuition. . . In spite of the quality of its substance, however, the book is unsatisfactory as a novel. There is the material for two good short stories in Time, Gentlemen! Time! but not the cohesion of a novel."

+ — Spec 144:205 F 8 '30 400w

"Miss Hoult's method does not allow for investigation of sordid depths of human nature which fascinate more modern writers. She is essentially a moralist rather than an inquirer, and is content to show us with tragic inference the dull hatred and vacant contempt of a harassed woman for the wretched father who has failed in his trust."

Times [London] Lit Sup p120 F 13 '30 500w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE. Cornered poets; a book of dramatic dialogues. 256p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Cape

822 [30-11500]

"Mr. Housman, the prolific English playwright and poet, has here returned to the short dialogue, partly authentic, mostly invented, that is designed as a portrait. . . Carlyle and his wife receive from John Stuart Mill the confession of the accidental burning of the borrowed manuscript of 'The French Revolution.' William Blake puts his patron in his place, throws two redcoats over a fence, and recites one of his prophecies. Wordsworth, in the company of Lamb, Keats, and others, receives a foolish admirer. Burns, sitting on his cutty-stool in the kirk after being publicly rebuked for fornication, soliloquizes on life, love and the devil. Gray falls asleep in Stoke Poges churchyard and the 'rude forefathers' rise from their graves. Ninon de Lenclos mocks and instructs an evangelist and says farewell to her last lover. John Donne converses with the carver of his effigy."—N Y Evening Post

---

"Many readers will find this the most delightful of Mr. Laurence Housman's books. The stuff of it is peculiarly his own, happily combining the two main interests of his previous work—the supernatural and the historical." Garreta Busey

+ Books p5 Je 29 '30 650w

"Seven clever and whimsical plays."

+ Christian Century 47:690 My 28 '30 100w

"Mr. Housman's endeavor, in which he is usually successful, is to present his subjects as they actually were and to make them speak in their own authentic voices. His dialogues, which are nearer to true drama—with stage directions, entries and exits—than is usual in this genre, are also contributions to biography, the sort of biography for which we care nowadays, which is less a record of facts than an interpretation of character."

+ Christian Science Monitor p14 N 16 '29 350w

Nation 130:713 Je 18 '30 180w

Reviewed by C. A. Smart

N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 500w

"The book is not likely to attract the general reader or to hold him long if he comes upon it. But for those of philosophic curiosity, and those for whom the literary bijou is something to be sought out and prized, 'Cornered Poets' is a rare combination of playfulness, intelligence and compositional fastidiousness."

+ N Y Times p4 Mr 2 '30 700w

"It is perilous business to try to catch in a few pages the character of a man who has poured forth his own soul in many a volume. The reader always has his own ideas, and the dramatist cannot allow his imagination free play. Probably Housman has done the thing as well as it is likely to be done. The plays are interesting, and in each of them there is at least a touch or two that is illuminating. The volume demands, of course, comparison with Landor's 'Imaginary Conversations.' I prefer Housman, but I am willing to praise the book much more generously than that." Granville Hicks

+ — N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 200w

Pratt p28 autumn '30

"These [dialogues], with the exception of one on Gray, which an overstressed churchyard fantasy causes to fall loose, are all finished, well-balanced pieces, penetrating swiftly to the heart of their subjects and carrying the reader with them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 10 '29 850w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE. Little plays of St. Francis, a dramatic cycle; pref. by H. Granville-Barker. 308p il $2.50 Cape

822 Francis of Assisi, Saint—Drama

"These eighteen one-act plays, the work of an eminent English poet, illustrate the more

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE—Continued
dramatic episodes in the life of Francis of Assisi. . . The book as a whole forms what might almost be called a novel in dramatic form, so numerous and indissoluble are [the] threads which bind episode to episode throughout. The same characters and the same fibers of dramatic narrative are begun in one play, developed in several succeeding plays and brought to fruition in yet another."—N Y Evening Post

"These are plays to read with quiet pleasure and to stage with tender care and skill." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p23 S 15 '29 130w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 31 '29 330w

"I do not know that anything in this field has ever been better done; nor, while still under the spell from reading these dramatic renderings of episodes from the life and legend of St. Francis, do I see how anything of the sort ever can be better done."
+ Christian Century 46:967 Jl 31 '29 90w

"Mr. Housman has a fine feeling for the dramatic quality of an incident and he has handled the history and legend of St. Francis with a delicate accuracy. . . He has evolved from a combination of history and legend a very appealing and consistent and credible figure of the saint." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 20 '29 400w

"They are not pretty-pretty plays dealing with saints' legends; they have substance and significance. Moreover, they have literary excellence; they are well written, and they display the poetic as well as the dramatic imagination. In this day, when the prevailing creed divorces the stage from literature, these plays should be given a chance." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p11m D 29 '29 520w

"Mr. Housman mingles his facts and fictions excellently. . . What keeps these playlets from complete success is their language, not their conception. Their author relies too often on stock poeticisms, on epithets and locutions. The tone is both high and flat and this lack of authentic speech makes the conversations theatrical instead of dramatic. In spite of this, the passages move; a quiet drama, inherent in the theme, unfolds in violence and grows in reverence. It is at least, a recognizable Saint Francis Poverello that emerges from the over-ornate pages."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:95 Ag 31 '29 330w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE. Turn again tales. 280p il $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Blackwell]

Fairy tales

Seventeen fairy stories, each story illustrated by a different artist. Contents: The open door; Right-about-face; Little-and-good; The ass's mouth; The cuckoo whose nest was made for her; The house lady; A gander and his geese; Busybody land; Wish to goodness; Etheldrinda's fairy; The boiled owl; A thing to be explained; The promise of beauty; Aunt Rhoda and the riddleman; Biddy O'Bride; Cotton-woolleena; The story of the Galleenys.

Boston Transcript p4 N 22 '30 350w

"Some of the stories in this volume have the charm and romance that we associate with Laurence Housman's fairy tales, but on the whole they seem more prosaic and made-to-order than his other stories. The size of the volume and the fact that each story is illustrated by a different artist create the impression of a Christmas annual, and one misses the distinction and beauty of the two volumes, 'A Doorway in Fairyland' and 'Moonshine and Clover,' with illustrations designed by the author and engraved in wood by Clemence Housman." A. T. Eaton
— + N Y Times p33 N 30 '30 80w

"Turn Again Tales are perhaps almost too subtle, but they have real enchantment and will be appreciated by the right kind of parent as well as the right kind of child. The illustrations by various artists are charming, especially those by Marian Allen of 'the gander and his geese.'"
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p986 N 20 '30 80w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE, ed. War letters of fallen Englishmen. 318p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Gollancz]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918

A collection of letters, or excerpts from letters, written during the World war by young Englishmen, all of whom were killed and nearly all of whom were under thirty years of age when they died. The term Englishmen is applied to soldiers from all parts of the British Isles and the overseas dominions, even including one American, who fought under the British flag.

"Excellent, truth-telling letters. A private view of England's war now that 'information of military value' is obsolete." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 47:677 Ag 30 '30 1100w

"In Mr. Laurence Housman's book we get what, after all, I must call the real thing. Here are letters written actually on the very front of war. I am no more patriotic than other Englishmen, but I consider the little book a marvelous record of our race. Modern critics, from Mr. Bernard Shaw and Mr. Wells downwards, may sneer at our education, our public schools and old universities, but the great majority of these youths were the product of our public schools and old universities, and if our critics cannot recognise their beauty of mind and nature, their interest in the world, their restraint of fear, their easy companionship with all classes, and even their knowledge and love of the best literature, our critics need no longer be regarded as judges of good or bad." H. W. Nevinson
+ New Statesman 35:649 Ag 30 '30 1100w
Spec 145:sup461 O 4 '30 320w

"The whole book, for which Mr. Housman and his helpers deserve the fullest response, is of such a quality as to stir the remembrance of 'the hope and promise of youth, which the wastefulness of war has carried away.'"
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p693 S 4 '30 1650w

HOUSSA, ARMAND JOSEPH HENRI. Physics and chemistry applied to flour milling. 207p il $2.40 Longmans [6s Arnold, E. & co.]

679 Chemistry, Technical. Flour-mills
[Agr30-579]

A volume prepared primarily for students of flour-milling, giving just enough of the essentials of organic chemistry and the simpler laws of physics to meet the students' needs. The author is connected with the Battersea Polytechnic Institute.

N Y New Tech Bks 15:20 Ap '30
St Louis 28:212 S '30

HOUSTON, FRANK FITZHUGH BUCKNER (FITZHUGH BUCKNER, pseud.). Hooper dooper! 319p $2 Barse & co.

30-12694

"On their way out to California by motor car, a pair of rather unabstemious young men mix their drinks with a certain amount of philosophy. Along the route they pick up a third young man who is searching for a long lost sister. And since one of the original pair is on his way to see a long lost mother they have something in common besides their capacity. Their first stop is at Tia Juana, the escape valve of the thirsty, and here they begin to pick up the trail. Their quest for missing relatives and for adventure takes them through Hollywood, Santa Barbara and Carmel, and the deeper they penetrate into California the more strange are the sorts of people they encounter."
—Books

"'Hooper Dooper' is somewhat baffling as a novel, but it parades the most motley assortment of human beings which has elbowed its way into recent fiction."
Books p12 Je 29 '30 250w

"The author proves himself capable of depth and much understanding of human nature, a welcome addition to his biting humor, blatancy and vivid imagination. Beneath the raucousness there is a wistful note, a wish for the return of the childhood belief in the beauty of the world. His young men are very, very human, but honest. His young women are equally honest, but not as sympathetically drawn." M. F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 300w

"The two young men ran into more adventure than they wanted, and considerably more than the author knows how to handle in the form of a novel. The writing is raw where urbanity is needed, and bizarre in many passages that might better have been narrative unadorned. The result is an exasperating potpourri of episodes about titled old baggages, raucous young hussies, feverishly aimless young gentlemen, and other phenomena of the undisciplined imagination."
— N Y Times p16 Jl 20 '30 250w

"Fitzhugh Buckner has apparently written 'Hooper Dooper' with the purpose of producing something original. He has certainly accomplished that much, though it cannot be said that he has made originality very significant. The work is described as a 'drinking tour of the West,' and that about covers the matter."
— Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 150w

HOUSTON, MARGARET BELL (MRS M. L.
2 KAUFFMAN). Lanterns in the dusk. 86p $2 Dodd
811 30-25269

Lyrics and ballads, including several ballads of the Mexican border, by a Texas poet, granddaughter of General Sam Houston.

"There is something rather spritely about many of the verses in 'Lanterns in the Dusk.' Perhaps there is in them something of the free air of the prairies of Texas, perhaps it is because Miss Houston has relished the flavor of border balladry. Other verses of elves, apparently but not necessarily for children, have a highly engaging whimsy." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 120w
St Louis 28:290 D '30

"The portrait of an author still living, even when she is charming looking and a granddaughter of General Sam Houston, should never be the frontispiece to a new book of poems. It is not good book-making. Miss Houston's more subjective poems are not unusual. She is better at the descriptive ballad." W. R. Benét
— + Sat R of Lit 7:270 O 25 '30 50w

HOUSTON, PERCY HAZEN, and SMITH, ROBERT METCALF, eds. Types of world literature. 1200p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran
808.8 Literature—Collections 30-14227

"Under the headings Epic and Romance, Tragedy, Comedy, The Lyric, The Tale, History, Biography, The Letter, Literary Criticism, Satire, Political Ideas, and Philosophical Discourse, are grouped generous selections from over a hundred and thirty writers from Homer to Croce."—Bookm

"The selections are excellently chosen, from both the historical and the critical point of view, and with the introductory essays, which are compact, accurate and well-balanced, they form an 'outline' of literature worth ten popularizations. The general reader may make as good use of the book as the college classes for whom it is primarily intended."
+ Bookm 72:xv O '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 320w

"It is remarkably full and should be of great value." F. L. R.
+ Outlook 155:189 Je 4 '30 40w

HOWARD, JAMES LELAND. Seth Harding, mariner; a naval picture of the revolution. 301p il $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]
B or 92 Harding, Seth. United States—History—Revolution—Naval operations. Confederacy (frigate) 30-10940

The biography of Seth Harding, a captain in the Revolutionary navy, who—while not so colorful a figure as John Paul Jones—had his own Yankee successes and mishaps and served his country with unfailing loyalty.

"In the main the narrative consists of contemporary materials and explanatory comments. Occasionally these are interspersed with conversations of Harding that bear all the earmarks of modern manufacture. Advantage was taken of the opportunity afforded by the conversations to improve on the old commodore's rather illiterate English. While Mr. Howard was not always able to fill in the gaps where the records failed him, there is good evidence, derived in part from his excellent bibliography, that he industriously tried to do so." C. O. Paullin
Am Hist R 36:207 O '30 350w

"The book while carefully written seems ill-proportioned, with more than half as many pages of index as text, and suffers from a lack of focus, as though the author were uncertain of his aim in writing it. But there is no doubt that it contains much matter that will prove valuable to students of Revolutionary times." R. L. Roe
+ — Bookm 71:558 Ag '30 280w

"Many picturesque anecdotes enliven the book, which is far from the usual documentarily dry reading. But many people will find most interest in the sixty-odd pages comprising the private journal appended to the volume. Therein Captain Harding's personality is most clearly revealed."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 4 '30 750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p518 Je 19 '30 270w

HOWARD, SIDNEY COE. Half gods. 203p $2 Scribner (7s 6d)
812 30-8628

A play figuring the new woman in her struggle for freedom, which ends with the old solution: return to the man she loves and to their children.

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p13 My 4 '30 50w

"So grotesquely does he overstate his case, so obviously is he speaking like a dyspeptic who has been kept waiting for his morning coffee, that even the husbands are embarrassed by the tactlessness of their champion. Irritation seems, moreover, to have robbed Mr. Howard of his skill as well as of his sense of proportion, for he not only states his platitudes with intemperate vehemence but states them clumsily as well. Certain brief, clear-cut incidents and occasional flashes of pointed dialogue are the only things which testify, even momentarily, to the talent he has allowed to be obscured. The piece as a whole, vacillating between shrill almost hysterical earnestness and slapstick farce, flounders like the work of an amateur." J. W. Krutch
— Nation 130:52 Ja 8 '30 650w

Reviewed by Lafe Donaghy
Nation and Ath 47:354 Je 14 '30 30w

"As a farce, Mr. Howard's play is lacking in action; as a comedy, it is too farcical. If his purpose was primarily to entertain—the noblest purpose of them all—why so much argument? If his purpose was edification, why so much haphazard amusement? There is altogether too much sound and fury, signifying—well, not a good deal." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p8 My 31 '30 140w

"Bright lines. Retorts that any husband would be glad to make to a wife. Vastly amusing. Wholesomely entertaining. But it is, I firmly believe, founded on what this husband believes to be a falsehood." Bellamy Partridge

HOWARD, S. C.—Continued

+ — N Y World p10m Ap 6 '30 270w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30
Sat R 150:155 Ag 2 '30 350w
Springf'd Republican p14 My 28 '30 100w

HOWE, MARK ANTONY DE WOLFE. Bristol, Rhode Island; a town biography. 173p il $2.50 Harvard univ. press [10s 6d Oxford]

974.55 Bristol, Rhode Island. De Wolf family 30-20103

"A history of one of the old seaports of New England which celebrates its two hundred and fiftieth anniversary this year. Its slaving, privateering, whaling, sea-trading days are over, and it now turns out rubber shoes and cup-defenders for a living."—Sat R of Lit

"This biography of the town of Bristol, written for the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its founding, is fairly unique among town histories. Mr. Howe, well known today as a Bostonian, belongs to Bristol not only through his own early residence there, but because his ancestors played so large a part in the development of the town. The designation of 'town biography' is an accurate one. Throughout the book we are made to feel that the town has a character of its own and a right to a life-story."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 250w
N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 200w

"This little book frankly stresses 'local phenomena in which I lay some claim to an inherited or other direct interest.' In short, the writer's concern with Bristol is primarily the interest of a modern in the home of his ancestors. If it is 'a study in mingled piety and worldliness,' it is chiefly a study of those qualities as exhibited by one family connection, whose founder came to Bristol sixty years after the founding of the town. . . These questions of inheritance are always fascinating—and insoluble. They come often into Mr. Howe's engaging chronicle, a pleasant book to read and a comely book to put on the shelf. There are some excellent pictures of British Bristol houses and Bristol worthies."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:168 S 27 '30 420w

"Mr. Howe makes an illuminating and readable condensation of history and legend. As he says, Bristol has its own individuality. The full social history of New England is yet to be written and for its understanding the lives and interests of typical or exceptional communities must be understood."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 1200w

"A simple, agreeable and, in many ways valuable, little volume."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p815 O 9 '30 250w

HOWE, MARK ANTONY DE WOLFE. Yankee ballads. 47p il $2 Washburn & Thomas

811 30-9533

"Twelve semi-historic stories of early New England told in rhyme and illustrated by spirited silhouettes."—Pratt

"They all are genuinely amusing, even as they are occasionally genuinely stirring. There is probably only one way in which they could reasonably have been written, and Mr. Howe has hit it." C. B. P.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 29 '30 300w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p16 Ag 17 '30 220w
Pratt p28 autumn '30
St Louis 28:215 S '30

HOWELL, ALFRED BRAZIER. Aquatic mammals; their adaptations to life in the water. 338p pl $5 Thomas [22s 6d Bailliere]

599 Marine fauna. Fresh-water fauna. Mammals. Vertebrates—Anatomy. Adaptation (biology) 30-17410

"Mr. Howell has taken all the aquatic mammals for his province, but has concentrated principally upon such forms as seals and whales, which are truly and not merely occasionally aquatic, and in which specialization for an aquatic life has completely altered the generalized mammalian form. . . He begins with a discussion of the mechanics of swimming, and then groups the aquatic mammals according to their natural position, briefly discussing theories of descent."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"There are several unusual features about Dr. Howell's volume, and all are excellent. In the first place, it is one of those rare but much-needed books which put structure and adaptation before taxonomy. . . It is divested as much as possible of technical terms, so that any whale-minded layman of intelligence may read and understand. Nothing of accuracy and thoroughness has been lost, however, and the simplicity and originality of the text is enhanced by the illustrations." William Beebe

+ Books p9 Ag 31 '30 550w

"This book is necessary to libraries and will be useful to anatomists, for they will find in every section theories with which they disagree. They are possible explanations inserted by the author to stimulate his readers, and they are successful."

Nature 126:307 Ag 30 '30 280w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

"Mr. Howell, who is lecturer in comparative anatomy at the Johns Hopkins University, has written a valuable book for the biologist, and one which will be of interest also to the general reader who cares for natural history."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p462 My 29 '30 250w

HOWES, EDITH. Long bright land. 207p il $2.50 Little

398 Folklore, Maori 29-18883

A book of Maori folk tales, telling the story of man's early life in the world and the creation of New Zealand, the "Long bright land." Of special interest is the group narrating the adventures of little Maui, the Hiawatha of the Maori.

Booklist 26:166 Ja '30

"The new volume is better than Sir George Grey's old book, for Edith Howes has done the difficult thing. She has allowed the story to tell itself as such stories should always be allowed to do. And the illustrations of Dorothy Lathrop are worthy of the tales and will satisfy the heart of any child." T. A. Harper

+ Books p6 Ja 5 '30 800w
St Louis 27:316 N '29
Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 80w
Wis Lib Bul 26:44 Ja '30

HOWLAND, HEWITT HANSON. Dwight Whitney Morrow; a sketch in admiration; with an introd. by Calvin Coolidge. 91p $1.50 Century

B or 92 Morrow, Dwight Whitney 30-12585

A brief appreciative sketch revealing the qualities of mind and character which have made Mr Morrow such a conspicuous success in each of the various fields of public service he has entered.

Booklist 27:62 O '30
Bookm 71:viii Jl '30 80w
Books p13 My 11 '30 280w

"This is a delightful little book, not only for its subject, which is fascinating, but for its style, which is a pleasure in itself." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 7 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

"Although Mr. Howland's short account of Mr. Morrow's life and achievements is, as he frankly says in his subtitle, 'in admiration,' it is not offensively so, being, indeed, written with admirable restraint and in thoroughly good taste."

+ N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 350w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"This is an ideal biography of a living statesman. It contains the essential facts of the record. It includes sufficient appraisements of Morrow's character at various stages in his career to enable us to judge the impressions of his fellow workers. The story is woven together simply, clearly, and readably. And above all, the author does not permit himself a single word of 'blah.' "

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1075 My 24 '30 320w

HOYLAND, JOHN SOMERVELL. Case for India. 173p il $2; $1.35 Dutton [4s 6d Dent]

915.4 India—Politics and government. India —Religion. Great Britain—Colonies [30-15568]

Writing after fifteen years of work in India and close contact with Indian students, the author presents what he believes to be the true Indian point of view upon that country's relations with England and its probable future.

"Whoever is truly anxious to understand the puzzling cross-currents in India today cannot do better than to read this interesting little volume of less than 200 pages, containing the essentials of both English and Indian viewpoints. The author has spent more than fifteen years in India in educational and relief work and knows the country and its people thoroughly, and his impartial and valuable account of the conditions existing today enables one to appreciate how difficult it will be to harmonize the hopes and desires of two cultures so diverse." Dorothy Cole

+ Christian Century 47:1039 Ag 27 '30 320w

"Mr. Hoyland's book contains a great deal of interesting exposition and comment in regard particularly to the religious aspects of Indian life, but as a whole it is too plainly written to a brief to be very convincing as regards its main object. The problem of the Native States is not faced at all, nor in reality—though it is often referred to—is that of Hindu-Moslem rivalry. . . His book is not likely to prove very helpful to his cause. Indian Nationalism has a better case than he has stated."

— New Statesman 34:96 O 26 '29 350w

"Mr. Hoyland's services to India entitle his opinions to respect, and one cannot but recognize the sincerity and sympathy with which he writes, but some of his conclusions are open to question. . . The book is worth reading as a statement of the mistaken idealism of many fervent Indian patriots; intentionally or not, it makes their misjudgment clear."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p255 Mr 20 '30 320w

"Clearness, precision, accuracy, proportion, and intimate understanding characterize The Case for India. . . The author's knowledge has that quality of thoroughness and humanness of touch that makes his summaries and generalizations peculiarly dependable. Most heartily do we commend this book which in its realm and within its scope is the best we have seen." F. V. Slack

+ World Tomorrow 13:229 My '30 280w

HOYT, HELEN (MRS W. W. LYMAN). Leaves of wild grape. 112p $2 Harcourt

811 29-21802

The subjects for Miss Hoyt's lyrics in this volume are gathered from the intimate excellences of a woman's life: love, childbirth and motherhood.

Booklist 26:306 My '30

"Helen Hoyt's prodigal use of color has always fascinated me; at the same time I feel that her emotional extravagance needs a little fastidious pruning. Her verses are tender, intimate, often charming; but sometimes they become little more than sweet sentimentality." Ruth Lechlitner

+ — Books p21 F 9 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p3 D 28 '29 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p24 F '30

"The triumph she attains to in the first section of 'Leaves of Wild Grape' is in a kind of impersonality. A less accomplished poet might have made these poems so personal that we could read them only with a certain embarrassment. . . The poems grouped around the child do not seem to me to come out of as deep a life as the poems in the first part of the book. Some are charming, but there are some that have a touch of sentimentality—something remarkably absent from the poems in the first part. Perhaps the difference is that between being possessed and possessing." Padraic Colum

+ — New Repub 62:132 Mr 19 '30 600w

"The present writer finds himself unable to grant that Helen Hoyt is truly a poet, and precisely for the reason that her poems remain personal, that she is unable to pass her own experiences, her own sensations, her own mental reactions through such a transfusing and transforming fire of imagination as to universalize them."

— N Y Times p45 D 1 '29 380w

"I do not feel that Miss Hoyt has in any one of her poems said her last word, made her final interpretation. Though they bear the same burden, each poem has the effect of being a fragment. It is only when a group of them are considered together that they attain their best effectiveness. The repetition of these simple sincere little songs, with their skillful use of repetition and free verse cadence, their accumulation of sex symbolism, builds a unique, and to me, successful poem—something akin to a modern song of songs. Her greatest danger is rhythmic monotony; a danger which she is usually able to avoid. Her greatest virtue is her effect of complete sincerity and freshness." Margery Mansfield

+ — Poetry 36:346 S '30 900w

"In our opinion the maturity and accomplished versification of 'Leaves of Wild Grape' surpasses anything Helen Hoyt has done heretofore. It is a fine presentation of normal, healthy emotion; it has its roots in the common experience of all normal women. The phrasing does not often impress with unusual brilliance, but the cumulative effect of the book is impressive." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 6:589 D 21 '29 240w

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

World Tomorrow 13:232 My '30 80w

HOYT, HENRY FRANKLIN. Frontier doctor; with an introd. by Frank B. Kellogg. 260p il $3.50 Houghton

B or 92 Frontier and pioneer life 29-24167

The autobiography of a physician who started his practice in Deadwood in the seventies and later moved down into the Texas Panhandle. There the doctor turned cowboy and made friends with Billy the Kid and Jesse James. For a while he became a bartender, and later served as postmaster in Las Vegas, New Mexico, where he joined the Vigilantes. In 1898 Dr Hoyt received a commission as major and chief surgeon of the United States volunteers and served in the Philippines during the Spanish-American war.

Booklist 26:201 F '30

"Like a picaresque novel, like a Wild West thriller, his narrative is full of travels, prospecting, Indians, bad men, shootings, hangings, coincidences and hairbreadth escapes. He seems to be an old hand at telling stories, and often tells them well. Writing as a friend of Billy the Kid, he gives the most reasonable account of him that I have seen."

HOYT, H. F.—Continued

+ Bookm 70:vi Ja '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p27 F '30

"This narrative of days in the Northwest and the Southwest, away back in the '70s and the '80s, when the frontier was a definite, dramatic, picturesque, dynamic and deadly region, makes a contribution of real interest and value to the story of that unique section of our American history. Moreover, it is highly entertaining."

+ N Y Times p46 D 8 '29 650w

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"Dr. Hoyt writes easily with good powers of description. His story is interesting and enjoyable as a straightforward narrative of personal adventures. A clean, honest man has told a reminiscent story well."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:808 Mr 8 '30 260w

HUBBARD, CLARENCE CUSTER. How to clean rugs and upholstery fabrics. 364p il $7.50 Rug cleaners inst. of Am., 225 W. 34th st., N.Y.

648.5 Cleaning. Rugs 30-13974

"A handbook for the trade but containing many sections of interest to students of textiles and household management. The introductory chapters deal with the development and classification of floor coverings, serviceability of fibers, and effects of service conditions, after which come the more technical discussions of the materials, processes, and equipment used in commercial cleaning establishments."—J Home Econ

"All available information about rug cleaning that can be written down seems to have been gathered by the author and here placed in systematic arrangement. . . This book will stand high as a reference book. It is a valuable compendium of acquired facts. The best cleaning plants are coming rapidly under technical control and this book will find an honored place in their working libraries. The author has done pioneer work in this and other of his publications and has broadened the foundations for technical control in progressive plants." E. B. Leary

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:1023 S '30 320w

J Home Econ 22:863 O '30 80w

HUBBARD, RALPH. Queer Person. 336p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-21954

The story of an outcast Indian boy, called Queer Person because he was a deaf-mute. He wandered into the camp of a band of Pikuni when he was about four years old, and was finally befriended by an old woman, who was almost as destitute as he. The Indians regarded him with suspicion, but the chieftain would not allow Queer Person to be molested. The boy grew to manhood, and proved his bravery, finally taking his place as a great leader.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

"Mr. Hubbard for the last few years has been special instructor in Indian lore to the Boy Scouts of America, which perhaps accounts for the occasional disturbing sense one gets in the story of an eye on the audience. The last chapter is an anti-climax, a bit sentimental, less vigorous than the chapters that have gone before, certainly less Indian and just a trifle condescending with its appeal to the 'dear reader,' but these faults do not occur elsewhere, and on the whole 'Queer Person' is a fine story. Harold von Schmidt, the illustrator, has helped materially to make 'Queer Person' one of the distinctive books of the year. It is a long time since we have seen such interpretative illustrations as vigorously drawn." Jacqueline Overton

+ — Books p8 O 5 '30 1150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

"This is not an ordinary Indian story by any means—there is about it a tenseness, a fervor, which makes it most unusual. The presentation of unfamiliar Indian customs and the keen characterization of many original figures arouse deep interest."

+ Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 100w

HUBBARD, MRS THEORODA (KIMBALL), and HUBBARD, HENRY VINCENT. Our cities, to-day and to-morrow; a survey of planning and zoning progress in the United States. 389p il $5 Harvard univ. press

710 City planning. Cities and towns—United States. Regional planning 29-25174

City improvement from the points of view of efficiency and utility is the subject of the book, in which the authors give the results of their survey of 120 cities and a number of metropolitan regions. They take up the legal and administrative background of scientific planning; municipal commissions and agencies; state organizations, technical procedure; street and traffic plans; parks and recreation; etc. The shortcomings of the present and the possibilities of the future in city planning are discussed in concluding chapters.

Reviewed by C. E. Eliot, 2nd

Am Pol Sci R 24:767 Ag '30 350w

Booklist 26:269 Ap '30

"These authors have not only summed up all of the available material on city planning as it now stands in the United States. They have given us a well-organized, well-illustrated, well-indexed volume that will put students of the American city in their debt for many years." Joseph McGoldrick

+ Hist Outlook 21:88 F '30 550w

Reviewed by Lewis Mumford

New Repub 61:332 F 12 '30 380w

"Professor and Mrs. Hubbard have made themselves authorities in the field by long study. In preparing their book they had the able assistance of Mr. Howard K. Menhinick, who visited about 120 cities and some fifteen counties or metropolitan regions. The result, so far as present-day community planning in the United States is concerned, is definitive." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p5 Ja 5 '30 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

Pratt p21 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:31 D '29 100w

St Louis 28:103 Ap '30

Reviewed by L. D. Lasker

Survey 64:102 Ap 15 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p183 Mr 6 '30 120w

HUBBARD, WYNANT DAVIS. Bong' kwé. 249p il $2.75 Doubleday, Doran

Buffaloes 31-552

A story about buffalo life in Africa, supposedly told by an old hunter, Shamanyati. He describes the life of the strongest of the buffalo, Bong'kwé; his birth, how he joined the herd, how he was attacked by wild beasts, and finally how he was killed by Shamanyati in a fight which nearly proved fatal to the hunter.

"Not since the publication of 'Bambi' has so moving a tale of wild animal life been told. To us, the life-story of Bong-'Kwé, 'great in his strength, and even greater in his death, a lonely, monstrous creature, superb in his self-reliance,' is the more powerful, the more provocative." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 26 '30 700w

"The story is simply told as from one hunter to another. But Shamanyati's observations are so complete that they approach the scientific rather than the fictional. They form an interesting document for those who have already some knowledge of animal life."

+ N Y Times p38 D 7 '30 180w

"It is not a commonplace book, for its author (Harvard athlete, hunter, immunologist, naturalist, explorer) is an authority on animal psychology, and a keen and sympathetic observer. His eight illustrations in pen-and-ink are ruggedly individual and full of character, and his book is a mine of information. . . As a picture of the veld, 'Bong' Kwé' is packed with vivid detail, and highly informative. As a story, it clanks."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:460 D 13 '30 300w

HUDDLESTON, SISLEY. Between the river and the hills; a Normandy pastoral. 316p il $3.50 Lippincott

914.42 Normandy—Description and travel. Normandy—Social life and customs 30-29659

Mr Huddleston, an English writer who has lived most of his life in France, writes (in the manner of Daudet's Lettres de mon moulin) about his little house and the Normandy village in which he lives. With 34 illustrations from photographs.

Booklist 27:202 Ja '31

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 72:xvii N '30 480w

"The reader in search of 'atmosphere' will find plenty in this sympathetic study of one nook in the French countryside. Its charm is strong enough to overbalance frequently the author's irritating habit of repeating phrases and his fondness for platitudes." R. C. B. B.

+ — N Y Evening Post p5d O 11 '30 100w

"Mr Huddleston has put something into his book that is not personal, not subjective, something not easy to capture, not easy even to find. He has found it because he has lived in France for many years and this land has become his own, and he has captured it through virtue of being really a writer. That something is Normandy, the Normandy of the Normans, the rural Normandy of today. The Norman people live in Mr. Huddleston's book, hard and ruddy like their own apple's flavor, distinctive and tart, yet, paradoxically, sweet withal." Katherine Woods

+ N Y Times p22 N 30 '30 700w

"Mr. Huddleston knows his village of Ste. Ursule so well that it is not difficult for him to make us share his enthusiasm for its life and inhabitants. The matter of Mr. Huddleston's book is not very profound, nor does he find anything very striking to say about Normandy or life in general despite his tendency towards philosophical digression, yet it reads pleasantly and accomplishes its purpose of acquainting us with a number of things dear to the heart of its author."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:401 N 29 '30 320w

HUDDLESTON, SISLEY. Europe in zigzags; social, artistic, literary and political affairs on the continent. 354p il $5 Lippincott [21s Harrap]

940.5 Europe—Politics. Europe—History—20th century 29-29235

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:199 F '30

"The book is highly informative, the range of topics immense, the commentary on life and letters seldom inadequate, mostly excellent." Eric Strong

+ Books p12 Mr 2 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p75 My '30

"The amount of new information or amusement which the book actually conveys is exceedingly small. Anybody of average education who has at all followed the course of events in recent years will have surprisingly little to learn from Mr. Huddleston about politics and nothing at all about literature." William Plomer

— Nation and Ath 47:22 Ap 5 '30 800w

New Statesman 34:576 F 8 '30 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:7 Ja '30

St Louis 28:51 F '30

"So good a political journalist as Mr. Huddleston has shown a poor regard for his reputation in turning out such a book as this. Expensive and pretentiously produced, it contains an irreconcilably incongruous mixture of purple passages in true Hollywood vein, inferior guidebook descriptions of European scenes, flimsy chat about celebrities together with a considerable quantity of illuminating discussion of the political problems and personalities which the author really knows something about."

— Sat R 149:240 F 22 '30 350w

"In spite of the ordered appearance of regular chapters as regularly subdivided, his narrative is rambling, turning inconsequentially aside to consider the personality of D'Annunzio, Naktkultur in Germany, or the psychological distinctions between Latin and Teuton. But the stories of statesman and conference, of artist and café, are interspersed with generalizations which, when true, are illuminating, and when false provoke a contradiction equally illuminating. And the whole gives a picture of a part of Europe which could not, perhaps, have been given in any other way."

+ — Spec 144:337 Mr 1 '30 850w

Times [London] Lit Sup p225 Mr 20 '30 1250w

HUDDLESTON, SISLEY. What's right with America; a record of a tour in the United States with political, social, economic and literary comments. 252p il $2.50 Lippincott [10s 6d Harrap]

917.3 United States—Description and travel. United States—Civilization 30-26617

In these travel notes Mr Huddleston steadfastly avoids the flaws in American life and centers attention on the things which he found here to admire—architecture, newspapers, trains, food, manners and culture, the industrial revolution, the equality of classes and sexes. Even prohibition comes in for praise.

Booklist 26:391 Jl '30

"It would be ungrateful of us not to accept Mr. Huddleston's bouquet. But is it all for us, we ask. All these wax peonies and tin geraniums? Life is not in them; life is somewhere else, in Ohio or Paris or Times Square or in the black towns of Pennsylvania, an affair of dung and daisies, neither 'right' nor 'wrong,' but alive. The most industrious journalism of this sort cannot seize upon its quality. Life does go on in the United States of America, but this statement of Mr. Huddleston's open-mouthed admiration cannot help us toward its secret." Vincent Sheean

— Books p10 My 18 '30 650w

"With a vivid and vital vocabulary, a piquant and lively style, with a sense of humor as well as insight he enters sympathetically into American life at its best. He does not slop over nor get unduly eulogistic, but he likes us, our prosperity, our camaraderie, our informality, our informal and hearty hospitality, and he says so like a gentleman." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

New Statesman 35:598 Ag 16 '30 800w

"Mr. Huddleston visits the chief American cities, travels over long stretches of the country, studies various manifestations of life, in the universities, in aviation progress, in the increasing interest in literature, in the influence of radio, motor car and cinema and so on, shrewdly and acutely observing, commenting and for the most part admiring, thus making his book in its general aspects an ordinary account of travel. But he never forgets for long his interest in the economic phenomena."

+ N Y Times p14 My 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:22 My 7 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

Pratt p31 autumn '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

Reviewed by Osbert Burdett

Sat R 150:151 Ag 2 '30 1150w

HUDDLESTON, SISLEY—Continued
Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Sat R of Lit 6:1191 Jl 12 '30 950w
Special Library 21:264 S '30

"His mood throughout is that of a man who has determined to see nothing but good in the country he is discussing, and who accordingly omits or extenuates everything that is inconsistent with the belief that they do things better in America. His book is not the fruit of an attempt to see both sides, and to weigh the pros and cons with a view to the formation of an impartial judgment. He never goes below the surface. One is glad to be able to commend this book for its readable style. But the book as a whole is too thin and superficial to accomplish the purpose its author had in view."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p799 O 9 '30 1050w

HUDSON, STEPHEN, pseud. True story. 565p $3.50 Knopf [8s 6d Constable]
30-9307

"For some years Stephen Hudson has been writing a series of novels, each of which was a separate panel in the experience of Richard Kurt and characters significant through association with him. With this volume Mr. Hudson makes a bid for a wider audience for his chronicle by bringing together four of the earlier volumes, rewriting them sufficiently to fuse them into a whole and give them a single sharp focus. The opening section presents, through the sensitive use of the first person, the childhood and adolescence of Richard. . In the second section, Richard meets Elinor Colhouse, an impecunious, coldly ambitious American débutante, and is inveigled into marrying her. The rest of the novel is devoted to their life together, one of conflict, misunderstanding and finally unconcern. In the end, in a section which returns to the technique of the first, he is at last leaving Elinor, but it is a gesture which comes tragically too late."—New Repub

Booklist 27:29 S '30

"From the artistic standpoint the story is not without symmetry of structure and a certain beauty born of economy, bareness, lucidity and precision. However since the author's interest seems to be mainly in motivation and in the relation of cause and effect, the thought of the book deserves most attention. While Mr. Hudson seldom rises above the welter of chaos which he presents, seldom gives evidence of having any norm, any constructive and positive conception of central values, it seems to me that he has made a reasonably faithful study—like most modern novelists—of a naturalistic psychology fertile in despair, of a stale eccentricity. It is the old story of the Shelleyan 'I-loved-I-know-not-what.'" H. H. Clark
+ — Bookm 71:541 Ag '30 950w
Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 500w

"'A True Story' is a long book, subtle and intricate. Its merit lies above all in the exquisite accuracy of its atmosphere, the cleanness and lucidity of its prose, the acidity of its family portraiture."
— + Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 26 '30 650w

"The largeness of Mr. Hudson's canvas is admirable, though his is the genius of the tapestry-worker rather than that of the painter. The design is drawn, but the work remains unfinished. The rich, subsidiary, enfoliated pattern has tempted him to his undoing. Faithfully has he worked at his back-ground, stitched into life with consummate artistry the men and women that inhabit the outer world of his hero. The most important character, Richard Kurt's mother, important because of her influence upon her son, remains unworked, left perhaps until last because that was to be the chef d'oeuvre, and then not done at all." K. C. Tomlinson
+ — Nation and Ath 47:86 Ap 19 '30 280w

"The pathos of a wasted life has seldom been studied more carefully than in this clear, effective portrait of a defeated man. Now that the chronicle of Richard Kurt has been given its final form, Stephen Hudson appears even more certainly than before as a novelist with a powerful, original and individual talent." W. B.
+ New Repub 62:307 Ap 30 '30 340w

"No one can possibly mistake the absolute authenticity of Richard's own narrative. . . When, however, Mr. Hudson elbows his client out of the box, at once the hand of the advocate appears and tilts the picture a little to one side. Not only do we lose Richard himself in the impression which his counsel is trying to give of him; we even get an obviously biassed view of the personalities who are affecting his life."
+ — New Statesman 34:848 Ap 5 '30 1350w

"Obviously this theme, which has furnished a motive for dozens of commonplace novels of the younger generation, cannot be called original. But the story itself is both original and interesting, because of the beauty and ease and clarity of the style in which it is presented, and because of its severe objectivity. Here is no wandering among labyrinths of broken sentences, no idle floating upon the stream of consciousness, no painful unraveling of obscure symbolism. The spiritual odyssey of Richard Kurt is a simple and straightforward narrative, powerfully and bitingly sincere." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 650w

"Stephen Hudson is one of the most accomplished novelists of our time. He has probably done as much as any living writer to perfect the form of the novel by achieving a technique that presents with extraordinary lucidity and precision the flowing series of causes and effects that is at the heart of the novelist's eternal major problem—character development. With the publication of 'A True Story' he should attract the greater audience that he merits, both for his story and for his manner of it." C. G. Poore
+ N Y Times p9 My 18 '30 700w
Reviewed by Gertrude Diamant
N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 480w
Pratt p38 autumn '30

"To a small group of readers, this book will make a great appeal. It is an austere book, but a rich one; it is full of characters and incidents, and all is green and vital growth, or it would have been pruned away with the rest. Besides its fulness and vitality, it has a moving, even a haunting quality that is hard to account for. Part of the secret is in the style, which has an exquisite lucidity like the finest glass, whose beauty is to be invisible." Basil Davenport
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1189 Jl 12 '30 900w

"One would like to praise this book because there is some excellent work of a very subtle order in it, but I leave it with a general impression of flat-footed truth paddling where it ought to have plunged, and a feeling that, having severe notions on Richard's wealth, Mr. Hudson has written an admonitory pamphlet on the young man's life and family, rather than a story." V. S. Pritchett
— + Spec 144:538 Mr 29 '30 500w

"Taken without any reference to earlier books in which the same characters appear, 'A True Story' evidences a marked failure of proportion. For the characterization upon which the story depends for its chief interest we have nothing but praise. Richard Kurt may not be a man for whom we can feel any particular admiration, but the memory of him will remain as the personality of someone whom we have known with a great intimacy."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Mr 27 '30 650w

HUEFFER, OLIVER MADOX. Some of the English; a study towards a study. 320p $3 Appleton [10s 6d Benn]
914.21 National characteristics, English. London—Social life and customs 30-25506

Mr Hueffer, the brother of Ford Madox Ford and author of French France, writes in Some of the English his observations upon the characters and scenes in Romwell, a South London suburb. He reflects upon the daily life of the people, its romance, amusements, necessities, sorrows and businesses, and describes in particular certain individuals of his acqaintance.

"Altogether it is a pleasant book with something or other to tickle one into thought in every chapter, and considerable information about the unselfconscious part of England's proletariat in the teething stage." A. B. Parsons

+ Books p7 Jl 27 '30 670w

"Twenty-seven papers in which Mr. Hueffer lightly touches upon some of the human ways and foibles that are as conspicuous here as in England. He discusses people, places, things and ideas with a keen mind and a light and facile pen. In him we find at his best the essayist who lives in a world of activities, of theories and practices which he does not hesitate to reprehend as well as to praise."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 2 '30 680w

"Mr. Hueffer has written a very shrewd, very entertaining book. A long absence from England has enabled him to approach his subject with the fresh curiosity of a well-equipped foreigner, unhampered by those national and racial prejudices which too often confine the foreigner to external impressions and perilous guessing."

+ New Statesman 35:344 Je 21 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 600w

Reviewed by Austin Hay

N Y Times p4 Ag 31 '30 1150w

St Louis 28:271 N '30

Reviewed by Osbert Burdett

Sat R 149:733 Je 7 '30 850w

"However little we may be like one another on the outside, we are all much the same underneath, if the right appeal is made to us. Mr. Hueffer's discovery of this in 'Romwell' makes his book valuable as well as entertaining. He got to the 'insides' of its inhabitants. He saw with his fresh eyes (after living long abroad) a good deal that will be new to most of his readers."

+ Spec 144:1013 Je 21 '30 800w

"The results of Mr. Hueffer's observations, being both just and amusing, are well worth reading, though at times the amplitude of his style seems to call for the pruning scissors. . . His unvarying and kindly humanity is the quality which keeps this book alive on every page. One feels that he enjoyed his friends and that they enjoyed him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p505 Je 19 '30 980w

HUESTON, ETHEL (POWELSON) (MRS E. J. BEST). For Ginger's sake. 317p $2 Bobbs

30-23197

"Another chapter in the life story of Ethel Hueston's charming heroine, Ginger Ella Tolliver. Daughter of an Iowa minister, product of a Middle Western parsonage, Ginger Ella is none the less a thoroughly spirited and modern young person whose reckless escapades lead us quickly through an unusual succession of alarming situations."—N Y Times

"Mrs. Hueston is herself a minister's daughter, and herself possesses the parsonage background. Her atmosphere in this story it would be tactless to question, but the hint may be still, despite the heroine's maturity, dropped that 'For Ginger's Sake' is for juvenile minds."

Books p26 O 26 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 300w

N Y Times p24 S 21 '30 150w

HUESTON, ETHEL (POWELSON) (MRS E. J. BEST). People of this town. 320p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Heinemann]

29-20020

"The story of a minister's wife who has for twenty years accepted the hostile attitude of her husband's congregation because her ideals of beauty and freedom have been at variance with their own narrower ideas, but who at last prepares to leave her home and take up life where she left it at her marriage. Naturally her conduct is considered scandalous. The parishioners refuse to permit their children to be taught music by so abandoned a woman. This refusal cuts off a very necessary source of income, and but for the kindly intervention of that fate which watches over heroines this one might have had to return home in defeat. But as it is she is able to return in honor, if not triumph."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:161 Ja '30

"The book, though light, is very plausible."

Bookm 70:xxv F '30 40w

"The tale moves easily, perhaps too easily. Some of it is too sweet, some of it unnecessarily sentimental, such as the filial piety which prompts the daughter to become engaged to the man who has endangered her mother's reputation. Even if the writing is stupidly facile there is a certain sincerity in this novel. It will probably be relished by women who do their own cooking and like it."

— + Books p24 D 1 '29 150w

"This is not so absolutely respectable for your grandmother's birthday as the 'Ginger Ella' tales, because there was that unfortunate matter of poor, dear, little Nancy's ancestry, but for the most part this is the sort of story which you really want when you say, 'Oh, why don't they write any more the kind of book one can give away for Christmas!' "

Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 400w

N Y Times p24 Mr 9 '30 250w

"Within the rather narrow limits that Ethel Hueston imposes upon herself she manages to get a sense of life into her work, and her characters, although many of them are obviously conventional types which she moves about for the benefit of her story, take on the semblance of reality in their activities and conversations."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:721 F 8 '29 360w

Times [London] Lit Sup p481 Je 5 '30 200w

Wis Lib Bul 25:373 N '29

HUGHES, LANGSTON. Not without laughter. 324p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

30-19627

Sandy, son of Annjee and no'count, blues-singing Jim-boy, and grandson of good old Aunt Hager, grows up in a small Kansas town. Sandy's aunt Tempy has become a very proper person, aping the ways of white folks and scornful of "niggers"; his young Aunt Harriett is a talented and gay little girl who takes what she wants of pleasure and earns vaudeville success as a blues-singer. Sandy himself is the only one of the family ambitious to finish his education and really do something to help his race.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"In this first novel Langston Hughes, already distinguished for his volumes of poetry, achieves the difficult equilibrium of showing Negroes who are essentially human beings. . . But 'Not Without Laughter' should not, I think, be called 'The Negro novel.' It has no need to trade on the color of its characters or the race of its author. Because it is a story of a little boy growing up in a Negro family, with an outlook which no white reader could experience in full for himself, but more especially because it is written with understanding, tolerance and beauty, it lays special claim to the attention of those who love life and its mirroring in fiction." Mary Ross

+ Books p5 Jl 27 '30 1200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p148 D '30

" 'Not Without Laughter' is not without defects of style and weaknesses of structure. The first third of the novel, in fact, arrives at its points of interest with a pedestrian slowness; after that it picks up tempo and plunges ahead. Unfortunately, there are no great situations in the novel, no high points of intensity to grip and overpower the reader. But 'Not Without Laughter' is significant despite these weak-

HUGHES, LANGSTON—Continued
nesses. It is significant because even where it fails, it fails beautifully, and where it succeeds—namely, in its intimate characterizations and in its local color and charm—it succeeds where almost all others have failed." V. F. Calverton
+ — Nation 131:157 Ag 6 '30 630w

"Hughes has come to closer grips with this material than have his white contemporaries. He has made it live as of itself, without resort to artifice or literary stratagem. . . 'Not Without Laughter' is very slow, even tedious, reading in its early chapters, but once it gains its momentum it moves as swiftly as a jazz rhythm. Its characters, emerging ever more clearly and challengingly as the novel proceeds, give it this rhythm."
+ N Y Times p6 Ag 3 '30 520w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"Mr. Hughes has steered an excellent middle course between the sentimental and the sensational approach to coloured America, and although he scarcely disguises his attitude towards the social disabilities of the negro, the novelist never degenerates into a propagandist. His character-drawing, too, is admirable, and the only defect in the narrative is that, towards the end, it tends to be too uneven in its detail."
+ — Sat R 150:288 S 6 '30 200w

"It is a subtly simple book, at times bordering on the biblical in the directness of its narrative, and giving one the pleasant impression of listening rather than following with the eyes. Its strength lies in this simplicity, in its author's unflinching honesty, and in his ability to make the reader feel very deeply the problems of his characters." Herschel Brickell
+ Sat R of Lit 7:69 Ag 23 '30 950w

"A much quieter and more reflective study of the negro mind than any we have met in recent years. The boy [Sandy] is a charmingly drawn portrait, unexaggerated and full of character. Apart from Sandy, however, it is the figure of old Aunt Hager, drawn with admirable strength and tenderness, that dominates the story."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 2 '30 450w
World Tomorrow 13:520 D '30 350w

HUGHES, MARY VIVIAN. America's England. 342p il $2.50 Morrow [6s Dent]
914.2 England—Description and travel
30-10485

The author of "About England" (Book Review Digest, 1928) has written this guidebook especially for the use of Americans in England, which attempts to supply connecting links of interest between England and America. There are chapters on the lives, activities and remaining monuments of the Cabots, Ralegh, Henry Hudson, the Pilgrim fathers, William Penn, Governor Oglethorpe; and some literary links including Chaucer, Shakespeare, Dr Johnson, Wordsworth and Dickens. There are four chapters on London, its churches and statues, and walks in London.

Booklist 26:353 Je '30
Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiii Jl '30 150w

"For Americans who desire to examine England in a sort of botanizing spirit, this is the ideal guide. Mrs. Hughes writes for the traveler who enjoys tracing American history back to its English sources, she is continually pulling up the flowers of legend and of literary association in order to call attention to their trans-Atlantic nodules."
Books p11 Je 1 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30
Reviewed by H. D. Ziman
Nation and Ath 47:623 Ag 16 '30 180w

"Mrs. Hughes has succeeded in providing a unique sort of guidebook especially for the use of Americans in England. Those who have read her previous book, 'About England,' will know that she writes with charm and with frequent little touches of humor and that she is most industrious in the collection of unhackneyed material of human interest about the localities which she describes. . . For any one interested in tracing what Mrs. Hughes describes as the deep running and twisting of the roots of American history and of the personal history of individual Americans in the soil of England her book will be invaluable as a guide and aid in an English sojourn."
+ N Y Times p23 Ap 20 '30 420w
Pratt p30 summer '30
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"The writing is lively and the narrative is never dull, even in description of the stock pieces of the guide-book's repertory. The text is lightened by a large variety of out-of-the-way scraps of knowledge and dark corners of topography. Throughout the book the contrast between American and English habits and traditions is made much of, with an engaging modesty in presenting the home point of view."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p489 Je 12 '30 200w
World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 80w

HUGHES, RUPERT. George Washington. 3v v 3, The savior of the states, 1777-1781. 820p $5 Morrow
B or 92 Washington, George (28-5760)

This third volume in Mr Hughes' biography of Washington deals with the most important period of his career, covered by the years 1777 to 1781. Washington's greatness as a general and statesman during the Revolutionary period is emphasized by the biographer in contrast to the greed, incompetence and weakness of his fellow countrymen in that period. Much of the value of Mr Hughes's biographical contribution to studies of Washington lies in the fact that he strips his hero of the halo of legend.

Booklist 26:277 Ap '30

"The volume is intensely interesting and at the same time curiously variable. Critical of his subject to the last degree, Mr. Hughes is even more so of the men around him. Like the chameleon, he takes color from the ground he traverses. . . He is to be respected for vast research and an earnest desire to make the man greater by depicting him minutely as human. This is his apologia for saying much that floats away in the end." D. C. Seitz
+ — Bookm 71:112 Mr '30 580w

"With each successive volume of his biography Mr. Hughes has gained in understanding, in clarity of judgment, in scholarship and in literary grace. This work, which at first aroused mainly the indignation of professional patriots and the supercilious wonder of some professional historians, has now justly earned the encomiums of all students of history, of all lovers of truth." H. S. Commager
+ Books p4 F 9 '30 1750w

"Whatever virtues or defects Mr. Hughes shows as a journeyman writer of salable fiction, in his work on Washington he has risen to real heights. No honest critic can possibly see anything in his volumes, so far issued, but a grave, honorable and deep appreciation of a great character, coupled with a scrupulous fairness to all who came into contact with Washington. One may or one may not take issue with certain details, but one cannot honestly speak of Mr. Hughes's attitude as a biographer except in terms of praise." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 15 '30 1800w
Reviewed by A. S. Sherwood
Christian Century 47:1187 O 1 '30 320w

"Opinions about this book will vary as widely as they have with regard to the other volumes of the series. The advocates and connoisseurs of 'de-bunked' history will rise to proclaim it the finest life of Washington ever written. The 'patriots' of a certain type will denounce it with equal vigor as totally libelous and shameful."
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 1 '30 750w
Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 30w

"It is highly probable that the national reverence so long accorded Washington's name as 'the Savior of the States' will remain unimpaired by the verbal onslaughts of Mr. Hughes and other representatives of the 'debunking school' of modern biographers. Mr. Hughes has dug into the old records and musty tomes of Revolutionary days with marvelous patience and astonishing perseverance. He has seemed always bent on finding the disagreeable, scandalous and derogatory phases of Revolutionary annals and personalities, but when all his voluminous revelations are reviewed and weighed in the balance, the figure of Washington, even in Mr. Hughes's own opinion, emerges with a new majesty, making us realize, more than ever before, both his personal greatness and his matchless statesmanship." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 32:2 Ap '30 520w

"In the third volume of his admirable and monumental biography of Washington, Mr. Hughes maintains the high standard of the previous volumes, and continues his devastating work with the myths. It is an appalling thing that we have had to wait for a novelist's study to get the truth about Washington. Mr Hughes seeks to dig a great figure out from the debris of fancy and fable, and, in doing so, has destroyed many a pallid myth and been roundly abused for his pains. But he has accomplished one thing which is quite sufficient—he has given us the most thorough and scholarly biography of Washington yet written." C. G. Bowers

+ Nation 130:248 F 26 '30 800w

"This distinguished biography gains steadily ing, keen, engrossing book. This book will not displace for the interested reader those two fine biographies by Shelby Little and W. E. Woodward; but, henceforth, no man may dare to speak or write on Washington without having read Hughes and read him thoroughly." J. H. Preston

+ New Repub 62:334 My 7 '30 380w

"This distinguished biography gains steadily in narrative momentum, in reality of background and in clearness of character portrayal with each successive volume. . . This interpretation of Washington, the man who became great, has brought down on Mr. Hughes torrents of prejudice. But it is wholly sound; more than that—for those who wish more—this version of the 'Savior of the States' is probably the greatest tribute that any biographer has given him." Allen Tate

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 520w

"The present volume may be considered as possessing a distinctive merit beyond the former ones, interesting though they were and valuable for some of the material presented. As he proceeds with his work, Mr. Hughes acquires greater poise in the field to which he has almost abruptly transferred himself from his earlier vocation of writing fiction." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p3 F 23 '30 2100w

"Mr. Hughes's book, packed as it is with direct statements that challenge countless other statements made in accepted histories, becomes a highly sensational contribution to the valuation of Washington and his times. It is not scholarly and it is not even-tempered; the author is entirely too eager to prove his premise. It is, however, intensely interesting, and its conspicuous iconoclasm puts Mr. Hughes once more in the front line of attack in the historical controversy." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p12 F 7 '30 550w

"Hughes is no Strachey but he is a popular historian of the highest type. Detached and keen, he impresses more by those qualities, and by his patience and thoroughness, than by brilliance. His Washington is on the way toward becoming a standard biographical work."

+ Outlook 154:267 F 12 '30 300w

"The new book is the most convincing demonstration ever given of Washington's right to be remembered as the 'Savior of the States' in the Revolution. The author believes that the destinies of the infant republic were literally in his hands for four years. It is not as if Congress might at any stage of the war have displaced Washington from the chief command and given the post to another. Long and diligent research has convinced Mr. Hughes that such an action would have meant only irretrievable ruin to the American cause." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:21 Mr '30 950w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 550w

World Tomorrow 13:314 Jl '30 750w

Reviewed by R. H. Gabriel

Yale R n s 19:594 spring '30 150w

HUGHES, RUPERT. Ladies' man. 465p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hurst]

30-12294

The astonishing career of Jamie Darricott was cut short by a death as spectacular as it was baffling. Dressed in gorgeous carnival costume and pushed by unseen hands he went hurtling down from a top story window of a New York hotel while a Broadway crowd gaped below and in the ball room the carnival grand march waited for the man who was to have led it. More than one person had said "Somebody ought to kill Jamie Darricott," and this lurid story of his life shows good reasons why.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

Bookm 71:xvii Jl '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p13 My 18 '30 150w

"It is the stuff movies are made of, with gorgeous pageants, wild doings in night clubs, lovely gowns that need three of four pages for their purchasing and donning and neither subtlety nor consistency of characterization to hamper its adaptation to the screen. It is written in Mr. Hughes's unfortunate later style, hysterically at the top of his voice." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 100w

"There is plenty of action in the story, and there are some lively pictures of New York night life, but the element of suspense is almost completely lacking."

N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Je 26 '30 120w

HULBERT, ARCHER BUTLER. Soil; its in-
[2] fluence on the history of the United States; with special reference to migration and the scientific study of local history. 227p il $2.50 Yale univ. press [11s 6d Oxford]

973 Anthropogeography. Man—Influence of environment. Soils 30-30109

A discussion of the influences of the soil on American settlement and expansion, comprising a survey of the New England colonies, the migration to the Mississippi, and the later movement from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast.

Booklist 27:200 Ja '31

"Mr. Hulbert makes here a new and valuable contribution to the story of American settlement and expansion and opens a door upon a rich but hitherto unworked field of our historical studies. . . Although Mr. Hulbert's book hardly does more than sketchily outline his theme and suggest its possibilities, it is a fascinating volume because of its different viewpoint and the new light it sheds upon familiar facts."

+ N Y Times p20 O 26 '30 450w

"Even if Mr. Hulbert cannot wholly substantiate his text he has accumulated a mass of stimulating material for the American reader interested in geography and early history."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1071 D 11 '30 180w

HULBERT, WINIFRED. Cease firing, and other stories. 127p il $1.50 Macmillan

League of nations—Stories 29-15128

Eight short stories, each of which has, as characters, young people of a different nationality who find themselves face to face with a problem that involves their nation and international relations. The collection is written to teach boys and girls something about the work of the League of Nations in a concrete and interesting way.

Booklist 26:237 Mr '30
St Louis 28:220 S '30

"Miss Hulbert has chosen her stories with a keen sense for the dramatic and has told them in such a way as to give one a feeling of breathless adventure. Miss De Lanux, in spirited, direct, thoroughly modern illustrations, increases this feeling of lively interest." F. B. Boeckel
+ Survey 63:230 N 15 '29 450w
Wis Lib Bul 26:44 Ja '30
World Tomorrow 13:348 Ag '30 50w

HULL, HELEN ROSE. Asking price. 370p $2.50 Coward-McCann

30-11285

Oliver Gilbert wanted to be a poet; but he became infatuated with the beauty of Audrey and married her. After the honeymoon Audrey turned out to be a hard and practical young woman who was much more interested in Oliver's earning money and becoming the respectable head of a department in the college where he was teaching. So Oliver conformed, like wax in Audrey's hands; and for the sake of the three children that came, kept his nose to the grindstone, while he hated and feared his wife. But Olive, the youngest child, grew up to be like her father, with a real individuality amounting to genius; and he, loving her, handed on to her the torch of his lost youth and aspirations.

For biographical sketches of the author see N Y World p10m My 4 '30; and Wilson bulletin 5:114 O '30

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"The book is well and graphically written, crowded with fine characterizations, with excellently contrived and effective incidents. Yet it is not wholly rounded or convincing. A glint of humor, which it lacks, or a tinge of irony, or even the admission of another side to the unbalanced equation of Oliver Gilbert's life, might have imparted to it a quality of enduring satisfaction." Margaret Wallace
+ — Bookm 71:331 Je '30 230w

"Miss Hull, with a quality which seems to me the finest achievement of Sinclair Lewis's novels, has given a fair slice of experience as it comes, tragedy and comedy all mixed together, no mere diatribe against middle-class marriage as such, or the comparative merits of husbands and wives. She is not trying to 'show up' shortcoming according to a preconceived pattern, though she enjoys a neat thrust at provincialism where she finds it." Mary Ross
+ Books p7 Mr 30 '30 1050w
New Repub 62:335 My 7 '30 120w

"Miss Hull has done a superb study of a man whose ambition is not strong enough to resist the corrosive effect of marriage and who is yet sufficiently sensitive to be conscious of it. . . The picture of Olive as a child, of her instinctive understanding of the state of warfare between her parents and her passionate and secret alliance with her father, is especially moving. Throughout the story, Miss Hull never compromises with sentimentality." Gertrude Diamant
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 500w
N Y Times p8 Ap 13 '30 550w

"Miss Hull's writing is restrained, but not without force. She has gathered many notes from the book of life and set them down in their proper relations." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Mr 28 '30 600w

"A reekingly sentimental tale on a trite theme, so ably written that it holds the interest from first line to last."
+ — Outlook 154:544 Ap 2 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30

"Miss Hull has succeeded admirably in what she has tried to do, so admirably that one cannot suppress a wish that the attempt had been more ambitious." Basil Davenport
+ Sat R of Lit 6:868 Mr 29 '30 400w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 350w

HULL, WILLIAM ISAAC. India's political crisis. (Johns Hopkins univ. studies in hist. and political science. Extra volumes. New ser.) 190p $2 Johns Hopkins [9s Oxford]

954 India—Politics and government. Political parties—India 30-5050

The object of the book, as stated in the preface, is to present a detached, historical account of the events leading up to India's political crisis of 1929, and to interpret in a nonpartisan manner the aspirations of the various political parties as to India's future.

Reviewed by Franklin Edgerton
Am Hist R 36:164 O '30 380w
Reviewed by H. E. Wildes
Ann Am Acad 151:303 S '30 220w
Booklist 27:23 S '30

"The positions and the personnel of all Indian parties are clearly stated. There is no rhetoric, no denunciations, no coloring from the author's own opinions, whatever they are, but a scholarly exposition of the situation up to and including 1929. It is an almost indispensable book of facts for those who want to know just what has happened up to date and to form some reasonable estimate of what is about to happen in India."
+ Christian Century 47:499 Ap 16 '30 200w
Reviewed by Charles Johnston
Current Hist 32:408 My '30 650w

"A most interestingly written and attractively bound volume."
+ Hist Outlook 21:342 N '30 150w
Reviewed by Austin Robinson
Nation and Ath 47:175 My 10 '30 200w
Reviewed by Charles Johnston
N Y Times p1 Ag 3 '30 280w
Pratt p33 autumn '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:18 Mr '30 100w
St Louis 28:114 Ap '30

"On the whole, the picture he gives is remarkably free from those larger inaccuracies which often are noticeable in the case of a newcomer who has to decide on the spot the proportions to be given to different contending parties. He maintains an impartial attitude toward all the parties concerned at the different gatherings, and has keen sympathy as an idealist with the impatient doctrines of the Left as well as with the more cautious doctrines of the Right. It is only in minor details that the book is defective—such as the inaccurate spelling of Indian proper names and some of the facts regarding the historical situation in the past. . . The book can be strongly recommended as a valuable document on Indian affairs today, written at the very centre of the struggle." C. F. Andrews
+ World Tomorrow 13:136 Mr '30 550w

HUMBLE, HENRY WILBUR. Cases on conflict of laws. (Nat. case bk. ser.) 2d ed 750p $5.50 Callaghan

347 International law, Private. Conflict of laws 29-17294

"In this second edition, which appears six years after the publication of the first, the author has added a chapter on Taxation, consisting of seven cases. Forty cases included in the first edition have been discarded and replaced by approximately the same number of cases, decided since 1921. No other changes have been made either in the contents of the casebook or in the arrangement of topics."—Yale Law J

"In an effort to make the Conflict of Laws a living rather than an academic subject, the author has used a great number of recent cases. But it seems questionable whether the added interest of these decisions outweighs the considerable pedagogical sacrifice involved in the omission of many of the older and more fundamental ones. And to initiate a study of the subject with a series of cases on the vague principles of 'comity' and 'public policy' seems open to criticism."
— Harvard Law R 43:518 Ja '30 120w
Yale Law J 39:447 Ja '30 60w

HUMPHREY, ZEPHINE (MRS WALLACE WEIR FAHNESTOCK). Beloved community. 270p $2.50 Dutton
818 30-15825

Short stories and essays concerning life and the people who live it in the author's "beloved community," which is presumably Dorset, Vermont.

Booklist 27:20 S '30

"Reading a book by Zephine Humphrey is equivalent to being inoculated with the germ of village yearning. She has the faculty of presenting life in a tiny community in the Vermont hills in so appealing a guise that even a Broadway racketeer—if one of her books should fall into his hands—might begin to doubt the satisfactions of his hard-boiled existence."
+ Books p14 Je 29 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 800w

"This is essentially a book of reflection, meant for a leisure hour when one can afford spiritual contemplation. Although 'The Beloved Community' may at times savor of sentimentality, the vivid enjoyment felt by the writer for her place of abode is worth noting—and emulating. There is enough and to spare for fretful whiners in isolated spots whose flair for life has vanished."
+ N Y Times p19 Je 15 '30 280w

"The essays will add to [the author's] already considerable stature as a writer of fine prose in the tradition of the great naturists, and as probably our most gifted contemporary writer upon the theme of spiritual experience in communion with nature." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:187 Je 4 '30 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 280w

Reviewed by S. N. Cleghorn
World Tomorrow 14:27 Ja '31 280w

HUNA, LUDWIG. Bulls of Rome (Eng title: Borgian bull); tr. by Madge Pemberton. 309p $2.50 Brewer [7s 6d Jarrolds]
Borgia family—Fiction 30-8906

The first of a trilogy of romances concerning the private life of the illustrious Borgias. The novel paints the corruption of Pope Alexander and his court, the gross and passionate excesses of his son Cesare, and the amazing Lucrezia with her numerous lovers.

"As history 'The Bulls of Rome' is just nonsense. As romance it glowers and gloats and raves and at times positively welters."
— Books p22 Ap 20 '30 280w

"The story is hectic in the extreme. Its principal purpose seems to be to shock the reader by the presentation of the crimes of the court of Pope Alexander VI."
— Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 260w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
New Repub 63:106 Je 11 '30 130w

"A cheaply sensational, sentimental, sententious historical novel of the Borgias—Alexander, Cesare, Lucrezia—a welter of Renaissance blood and thunder in a German beer barrel." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 120w

"The present volume is interesting reading, but makes no contribution of particular value to literature or history."
+ — N Y Times p9 Je 1 '30 300w
Times [London] Lit Sup p396 My 8 '30 200w

HUNA, LUDWIG. Star of the Orsini; tr. by Madge Pemberton. 301p $2 Brewer
Borgia family—Fiction 31-604

The second volume of the trilogy about the Borgias. It follows the adventures of the beautiful Tiziana di Calvi, describes her escape from the amorous advances of Cesare Borgia, her love for Cardinal Orsini, and the tragic outcome of that love.

"The story, set against a background rich with historical figures, moves swiftly and colorfully in the Sabatini tradition."
+ Bookm 72:vii N '30 80w

"Huna writes in the modern rhythm, and does not resort to archaic effects in speech or treatment. This is a distinct advantage; 'The Star of the Orsini' is derivative but not documentary."
+ Books p12 Ja 4 '31 120w
Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 300w

"The whole is a pretty confection of sentimentality and romanticism. . . The Borgias make their entrances and exits to thunder offstage and everything is awfully dramatic."
N Y Times p32 D 7 '30 450w

HUNT, EDWARD EYRE. Audit of America; a summary of Recent economic changes in the United States. 203p $2 (10s) McGraw
330.973 United States—Economic conditions 30-5552

"Mr. Hunt has prepared an admirable summary of the trends in American life which were presented with such exhaustive detail in Recent Economic Changes in the United States. He analyzes present economic conditions and their development. He points out that this country has undergone vital changes in production, industrial (and agricultural) financing, management, distribution and consumption, and indicates some of the problems confronting labor—the relationship of wages to wants, technological unemployment, and organization of workers."—Bookm

"The summary is in no sense a substitute for the original and is not intended to be; for one thing, there is not a single statistical table in the volume. But what is lost for the specialist is gained for the layman. The volume is concise and readable, and withal contains an excellent index." H. B. Davis
+ — Am Econ R 20:277 Je '30 280w
Am J Soc 36:508 N '30 150w

"The limitations inherent in such a condensation are obvious. The bare statement of fact separated from the sustaining evidence and statistics is hardly an adequate treatment even for one who runs and reads, though it undoubtedly serves to indicate the general nature of the report proper. As an adjunct or a preliminary to the main work, the Audit of America is justified. Granting the deficiencies of abbreviations, Mr. Hunt's summary is a good one."
+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:327 My '30 100w

"What the summary has gained in compactness it has lost in thoroughness. Obviously, that is no fault of the author, but of his task. Even the original study, with its wealth of detail and its frequent profundity of analysis, left one not quite satisfied in his search for a complete understanding of the more significant changes which have come about in American economic life in the last decade. The newer volume, inevitably in its condensation, leaves the reader more at sea. Students will do well to turn to the original. To those who seek information rather than understanding, the smaller volume may serve a useful purpose." G. W. Stocking

HUNT, E. E.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 151:291 S '30 320w

Booklist 26:342 Je '30

Bookm 71:vi Ap '30 150w

Books p16 Je 15 '30 100w

"Mr Hunt appears to have done very capably and smoothly his task of reducing and summarizing the original report into less than one-fourth of its number of pages."

+ N Y Times p28 Mr 16 '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

Pratt p9 summer '30

"Nowhere else are these tremendous changes so well described in brief compass." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:18 Ap '30 230w

St Louis 28:131 My '30

Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 150w

HUNTER, DARD. Papermaking through eighteen centuries. 358p il $17.50 Rudge

676 Papermaking and trade. Water-marks 30-14991

A larger and more comprehensive edition of the author's former work, published in limited form in 1923, entitled Old Papermaking. The present volume "aims to give the bibliophile an insight into the methods used by the old makers of paper, especially after an introduction of printing from movable types, and to interest the etcher, the engraver, and the printer, as well as those engaged in the paper and water-marking trades." The volume, which deals with the appliances, methods and materials from the earliest times to the beginning of modern methods, is illustrated profusely.

Booklist 27:54 O '30

"Every phase of papermaking by hand is thoroughly covered in this book. Mr. Hunter is probably the best informed student of papermaking in America today, and so he writes authoritatively. With its index this book is perhaps the most valuable reference work on hand-made paper available. But, in addition to its intrinsic importance to the student and bibliographer, it is so entertainingly written as to interest the layman and book collector who regard papermaking casually as part of the art of the book." Paul Johnson

+ Books p14 O 26 '30 500w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:36 Jl '30

"It is an interesting story, interestingly told. Mr. Hunter makes no pretensions to literary style, yet his book is that kind of reading which leads one along the routes of his studies and illumines the rise of the great industry of papermaking." George French

+ N Y Times p4 O 12 '30 950w

Pratt p20 autumn '30

"Mr. Hunter is probably best qualified of any one in this country to write such a book. He is not only a student of the craft, but best of all he is an able paper maker himself, having worked at the vat, and having also printed, in type made by himself, a shorter treatise called 'Old Papermaking.' . . We commend this volume as one which should be in the possession of all printers and book collectors. It is a volume of very considerable importance, not likely to be soon superseded, and the pictorial material here assembled is unique."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:45 Ag 9 '30 800w

HUNTINGTON, CHARLES CLIFFORD, and
2 CARLSON, FRED ALBERT. Environmental basis of social geography. 499p il $4 Prentice-Hall

573 Anthropogeography. Man—Influence of environment. Physical geography 30-3657

"This book is prepared in accordance with the 'modern viewpoint that geography is concerned with the relations between man and his environment.' The authors regard this relation as reciprocal and as differing at different times and different places since both man and his environment are subject to continual change. Among other topics this text considers 'Nature and Classification of Geography,' 'Location as a Geographic Factor,' 'Man's Environment,' 'Weather and Man,' 'Lands and Their Utilization,' 'Water and its Utilization,' 'Social Factors in Environment,' and 'The Geography of Civilization.'"—Am J Soc

"The style is simple and readable, but the authors have not substituted entertainment for discipline. The text should be cordially welcomed by college teachers of elementary geography." A. B. Wolfe

+ Am Econ R 20:703 D '30 950w

"The discussions are very readable, concrete and amply illustrated with charts, maps, and photographs. This volume converges on the field of interest of the sociologist and admittedly deserves study on his part."

+ Am J Soc 36:510 N '30 200w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

HURLOCK, ELIZABETH BERGNER. Psychology of dress; an analysis of fashion and its motive. 244p il $3.50 Ronald

391 Fashion. Clothing and dress 29-27918

"The author discusses such problems as what constitutes fashion, what motives are at the bottom of its rise and fall and whence they come, what influences have sometimes caused it to stand still and what others are powerful enough to send it racing along like mad, what forces are exerted upon it by sex and by age, what martyrdoms have been suffered by its devotees and what influences have tried to reform its extravagances. . . One very suggestive chapter considers the importance of fashion as a mirror of the times."—N Y Times

Reviewed by C. L. Stone

Am Econ R 20:351 Je '30 400w

Reviewed by Kimball Young

Am J Soc 36:319 S '30 350w

"The analysis of the motives behind fashion is not very penetrating. On the descriptive side the book is much richer; it provides entertaining illustrations of styles, and traces many of them to their historical sources. There is a bibliography, but none of the statements in the body of the text is specifically documented, with the result that the book takes on a popular character. The profusion of concrete instances will give the student an indelible impression of the erratic course of fashion, but the teacher will need to deepen at many points the analysis of its origin, spread, and decay." G. W. Allport

+ — Ann Am Acad 148:306 Mr '30 220w

Booklist 26:263 Ap '30

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 8 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

"A welcome pioneer volume in a field important to students of social psychology, dress design, and the economics of clothing. Illuminating also to the general reader who has not considered the relation between fashion, social history, and economic development."

+ J Home Econ 22:222 Mr '30 60w

"The author, who is an instructor in psychology in Columbia University, has given her theme such distinctive treatment that it makes it at once more comprehensive and more searching than have been other books of similar purpose and gives it also a stronger appeal of current interest. . . Miss Hurlock's book leaves on the reader a much deepened impression of the wide and exceedingly varied importance of this one element in human life."

+ N Y Times p18 D 22 '29 380w

"This book is probably too good to become a best seller, but the adventuresome soul who explores it will be richly rewarded." F. A. Fall

+ Outlook 154:389 Mr 5 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30

St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

HURN, PHILIP DUTTON, and ROOT, WAVERLEY LEWIS. Truth about Wagner. 313p il $3 Stokes [7s 6d Cassell]

B or 92 Wagner, Richard 30-11151

Based upon a collection of Wagner letters and papers made by an Englishwoman, the Honorable Mrs Burrell, and only recently brought to light. The purpose of this volume is to reveal what the authors believe to be the truth about Wagner's relations with his first wife, Minna Planer, and his second, Cosima von Bülow, as well as his affairs with Jessie Laussot and Mathilde Wesendonck. The effect of the testimony is to establish Minna's position in Wagner's life and to discredit Cosima.

"There can be no question about the importance of the new Wagner material, but it is a pity that it should have first been given to the public in such an incomplete form and in a book which is confused, formless, and in many other ways absolutely unsatisfactory." Grenville Vernon

— Bookm 71:233 Ap '30 550w

"Sheer blunders aside, Messrs. Hurn and Root have seemingly written in the first flush of excitement over matters that have been familiar to the rest of the world for many years and very thoroughly discussed and interpreted. Thus their book amounts to a reckless, unbridled piece of special pleading. Personal bias rather than judicial calm seems to rule their handling of evidence." Peter Bowdoin

— Books p13 My 11 '30 1050w

"There are some errors which are patent; there are passages that show the writers' technical unfamiliarity with Wagner's work. There is, nevertheless, much that is interesting in this biographical structure. But the advisability of caution on the reader's part in refashioning his ideas of important passages in Wagner's life in accordance with this book is obvious." R. A.

— + N Y Times p9 O 12 '30 500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 Ap 1 '30 850w

"Musically inclined readers who enjoy gossip about personalities will find much to interest them in the book."

Outlook 154:545 Ap 2 '30 100w

Spec 144:sup387 Mr 8 '30 650w

Springf'd Republican p12 S 17 '30 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p117 F 13 '30 800w

HURST, A. H. Bread of Britain. 79p $1 (2s 6d) Oxford

338.1 Grain trade—Great Britain [30-17923]

"The author of this book is a man of long experience as a merchant in the grain trade; and his argument is a sustained plea for State control of that trade."—New Statesman

Reviewed by H. A. Innis

Canadian Hist R 11:272 S '30 230w

"His thesis is preposterously wrong." C. R. Fay

— Nation and Ath 47:116 Ap 26 '30 380w

New Statesman 34:605 F 15 '30 1000w

"This thoughtful exposition of the British side of the farm relief question should be carefully studied by proponents of farm relief in the United States. Consuming countries do not propose to submit to price-fixing and price-pegging policies at their expense. Great Britain will no doubt study means to resist and nullify efforts of the Farm Board that attempt to create farm prosperity at the expense of British consumers."

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 27 '30 420w

"The book is an objective study, and a useful handbook for politicians, economists, and journalists of whatever shade of opinion they may be."

+ Spec 144:172 F 1 '30 550w

"The author has set forth in this instructive little book details of his long experience in the grain trade with a clearness and impartiality that will be valuable to anyone wishing to make himself familiar with the points for and against drastic changes in the system of buying the overseas wheat necessary for the requirements of the country."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p123 F 13 '30 200w

HUSSEY, CHRISTOPHER. Tait McKenzie; a sculptor of youth. 107p il $10 Lippincott [25s Country life]

735 McKenzie, Robert Tait. Sculpture 30-10379

A sketch of the life, and an analysis of the work, of Tait McKenzie, Canadian sculptor of Scottish parentage, who is now an athletic director and supervisor of the physique of students at the University of Pennsylvania. The importance of his sculpture, the author points out, lies in the fact that it takes as its subject and purpose the athletic ideal, expressing it in classical form. The book contains many full-page photographic reproductions of the sculptor's best work, divided into three groups: the athletic sculpture, the war memorials, and portraits and medals.

Booklist 27:62 O '30

"An understanding and comprehensive view of the work of a man whose sculpture has grown out of his career as scientist and surgeon."

+ Bookm 71:xix Jl '30 120w

Christian Science Monitor p5 Mr 8 '30 900w

"Although his sculpture does not go far beyond a plastic equivalent of the slow-motion cinema, McKenzie brings to it an impeccable anatomic observation, and his accuracy gives a faithful and inspiriting interpretation of athletic effort and well-organised physique. But Mr. Hussey, with his purple patchwork, exaggerates when he says that the sculptor is 'one of the outstanding formative influences of the world to-day.' It is more probable that the surgeon has been the greater benefactor. . . Besides the athletes and prominent figures of American history he has also accomplished several large-scale war memorials, of which two are on this side of the Atlantic—the Cambridge memorial and the Scottish-American memorial at Edinburgh. On the technique of this kind of work, his biographer is most illuminating."

New Statesman 34:448 Ja 11 '30 550w

"An admirable tribute to a great American artist. Externally it is a fine piece of bookmaking, doing credit to the house of Lippincott, and internally the narrative is both interpretation and intelligent appreciation of a high order. The fine photographs and drawings illustrate excellently that McKenzie is able to 'translate athletic actions into plastic beauty;' they also show that he can infuse into stone and bronze apprehension, eagerness, alertness, effort and all those expressions ordinarily prohibited to the sculptor who has concentrated on repose as best suited to his medium." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m F 16 '30 700w

Pratt p22 autumn '30

"It is impossible to read Mr. Christopher Hussey's Tait McKenzie without sharing his enthusiasm. He does not claim for McKenzie's art that it possesses the specialized aesthetic significance of some modern work. But he warms to it on other grounds—its universal quality, its unabashed exultation in the beauty of humanity, its classic intention—and is himself so clearly moved by these elements in it that we are moved by them in sympathy. . . Mr. Hussey writes with an admirable sincerity and tenderness that give a character to his whole study. The volume is excellently and copiously illustrated."

+ Spec 144:129 Ja 25 '30 220w

HUSTON, JOHN. Frankie and Johnny; il. by Covarrubias. 160p $4 Boni

812 30-29282

A play in three scenes founded on the popular song Frankie and Johnny. The book includes a sketch on the St Louis version, giving the story of the original Frankie, and several other versions of the ballad called usually Frankie and Albert.

HUSTON, JOHN—Continued

"This book is not a Huston book; it is a Covarrubias book. There is very little that can be said in words of Mr. Covarrubias's illustrations. To describe them requires both line and music. They should be seen and sung. For they are perfect as illustrations of 'Frankie and Johnny,' drawn, somehow, in a sort of barroom baritone, magnificently appropriate to the song which they illustrate. Johnny and Frankie will live henceforth in the form, and with the soulful eyes, given them by the Mexican artist."

+ Books p7 O 12 '30 300w

N Y Times p12 N 30 '30 380w

"In the play Huston has tried to carry out the events of the song. But, unfortunately, such explicitness ruins the subtle—in a manner of speaking—insinuations of the song. There is this to be remembered about the Tenderloin of the nineties—it is romantic and colorful only in the limbo of history. In actuality it must have been a dirty, insufferably dull affair. But what is important for us in tracing this legend is its authenticity. We have here an excellent example of the making of folklore." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 S 30 '30 600w

HUSTON, MCCREADY. King of Spain's daughter. 331p $2.50 Bobbs

30-5933

"In this story of Shields Reyburn, 'a business man with the soul of a poet,' we have the tale of the modest and intelligent wife who throughout her husband's mad fling of silliness and infidelity is but waiting for him to return to her."—N Y Times

"It is a study of the compromises which men and women are forced to make between their ideals and their dreams—a sustained, illuminating and satisfying piece of fiction. Behind its central theme, the background has been projected with much skill."

+ Books p20 N 16 '30 250w

"A thoughtful novel is this, and given a diversity of appeal by many characterizations besides that of its chief actor."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30

"It is a pity to feel obliged to apply to the story the test of reality and to say that it seems wholly fantastic and improbable; that it could not, and should not, be true."

— N Y Times p7 Mr 16 '30 280w

"This is a nice piece of writing, clear, crisp and lucid—almost too crisp and lucid in some of its lovemaking. There is a Galsworthian flavor about the whole performance, a nicety, a sureness, a clarity of design. And there is a relationship between author and character such as has usually existed between the author of the 'Forsyte Saga' and the creatures of his imagining." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 220w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 320w

HUTCHINSON, ARTHUR STUART-MENTETH. Book of Simon. 99p il $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder]

136.75 30-33688

Six chapters on the idiosyncrasies, grave and gay, of the author's small son, Simon.

"It is one of the most beautiful love stories Mr. Hutchinson ever has written and one that he will never be able to write again. In giving to the world the story of Simon, the most astounding hero of all his heroes, he has forever closed the door. Simon will be his most charming hero and there will never be another like him." W. H. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '30 300w

"Simon is the, apparently, very, very, engaging small son of the author of 'If Winter Comes.' At least, Mr. Hutchinson has found him so very engaging and irresistible that he has been moved to write these six rhapsodic chapters about the 'astounding life,' 'astounding mind,' 'astounding beauty,' and so on, of 'my son.' But he has endeavored to camouflage his feeling by caricaturing it and making the book, as a whole, an ironic lampoon of parental adoration of infants."

N Y Times p27 N 23 '30 200w

"It will charm you, or bore you, in the same degree that stories about other peoples' youngsters charm you or bore you. Always with the reservation that Hutchinson does write appealingly." Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 N 21 '30 80w

"I have known a youth leave home and uncomfortably travel in freight cars for no other reason that that his mother would not take down off the lobby wall an enlarged photograph of himself dressed in a lambskin and carrying a lily, with 'Mother's Sweetheart' written across the frame. The little lustrous pearly, pearly honeycomb and the baby angel and its nightgown ought to be good for a much more vehement outburst." Rebecca West

— Outlook 156:452 N 19 '30 1100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 20 '30 80w

HUTCHINSON, PAUL. The united states of Europe. 225p $2 Willett

330.94 Europe—Politics. Europe—Economic conditions. Europe—Commercial policy. Reconstruction (European war)—Europe

29-29832

Mr Hutchinson, the managing editor of The Christian Century, has compiled this book from a series of his articles, in journalistic style, which appeared as the result of interviews with the prominent men of Great Britain, France, Germany and other European countries. M. Briand is said to have originated the "United States of Europe" campaign at the Geneva conference, the political features of which are based on the American conception of federalism. Mr Hutchinson explains the plan for the proposed U. S. E.

Am Pol Sci R 24:518 My '30 80w

Booklist 26:299 My '30

Books p10 Ap 6 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 480w

"Written in journalistic style and brief summary form, it is nevertheless broad and comprehensive. Always direct and suggestive, it is just the form in which the first approach to the subject for an American reading audience should be made. Historians and economists, with their more exhaustive and cautious but often labored post hoc contributions, have much to learn from books like this." H. C. Hubbart

+ Christian Century 47:52 Ja 8 '30 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

R of Rs 81:12 Ja '30 240w

St Louis 28:114 Ap '30

Spec 145:141 Jl 26 '30 150w

Reviewed by J. B. Matthews

World Tomorrow 13:182 Ap '30 280w

HUTCHINSON, VERONICA SOMERVILLE, ed. Chimney corner poems. 115p il $2.50 Minton

808.1 Children's poetry 29-19559

Poems for children selected from modern poets, such as Walter de la Mare, Mary Carolyn Davies, Vachel Lindsay and Nancy Byrd Turner; from such older poets as William Blake, R. L. Stevenson, Eugene Field, Christina Rossetti, etc.; and from nursery rhymes.

Booklist 26:75 N '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '29

" 'Chimney Corner Poems' is artfully illustrated by Lois Lenski in a manner imitative of children's single-line drawings." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 129:596 N 20 '29 20w

"From Rossetti, Stevenson and Greenaway down to Sandburg, Morley, de la Mare and the rest, she has selected with care and excellent taste." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p11m D 29 '29 80w

"It would be impossible to praise too highly the selections, pictures and style of the Chimney-corner Poems—its poems range from William Blake to Dorothy Aldis, and the pictures, whether in color or line, are beyond words charming." H. M.
+ Poetry 36:289 Ag '30 50w

"The poems in the anthology are intelligently chosen for the youngest generation of readers. They are mostly old anonymous favorites and fresh modern poems. There's nothing stereotyped about Miss Hutchinson's choices. She does well. But we do not like Lois Lenski's illustrations inside the cover. The colored ones are watery and the space is cluttered with intricate details that are beyond a child's powers of concentration." Jean Wheeler
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:424 N 16 '29 100w
Wis Lib Bul 25:326 O '29

HUTCHINSON, VERONICA SOMERVILLE, ed. ² Fireside poems. 147p il $2.50 Minton
821.08 Children's poetry 30-25181

A collection of poems for older boys and girls, in which are brought together many famous and well-known poems, and some not so well-known, but all delightful.

Booklist 27:213 Ja '31

"A fine book of real poems is this collection made by Veronica S. Hutchinson and illustrated by Lois Lenski, whose inimitable drawings mark the poems and impress them upon the memory. Good judgment has been used in the choice of poets, and fine discrimination in the poems selected."
+ Boston Transcript p4 D 10 '30 250w

"Miss Hutchinson has shown her excellent taste even in the number of her selections. There has been just enough. And how easy it is for an unwise arrangement to fade even a good selection! But here the old mingles with the new and Blake and Herrick are set beside De la Mare and Colum and are as weighted with early dew. Spring rests on the book and on the imaginative and frolicsome drawings by Lois Lenski that accompany nearly every poem and blossom in bright, pale colors in the five full-page illustrations." Elizabeth Coatsworth
+ Sat R of Lit 7:324 N 15 '30 250w

HUTCHINSON, WILLIAM THOMAS. Cyrus Hall McCormick; seed-time, 1809-1856; with a foreword by William E. Dodd. 493p il $5 Century
B or 92 McCormick, Cyrus Hall. Harvesting machinery 30-30678

The history of the McCormick reaper is traced in this biography of Cyrus McCormick. Mr Hutchinson tells of the controversy over the claims of rival inventors, follows the development of the great Chicago plant, and describes the industrial improvements which the McCormick reaper brought about.

Bookm 72:v D '30 100w

"The volume is a model of what a business biography should be and shines by contrast with most of the success stories and eulogies that are foisted upon us as biographies of business men. Yet the book is not without defects. The enormous mass of material at Professor Hutchinson's disposal was doubtless a temptation impossible to resist, yet it is a pity that the story could not have been compressed within the limits of a single volume. . . The documentation, too, while a refreshing contrast to many recent biographies, has been carried too far. Yet these are distinctly minor faults in a book of outstanding merit and it would be ungenerous to emphasize them. Professor Hutchinson's first volume is one to excite universal satisfaction." H. S. Commager
+ — Books p6 Ja 4 '31 600w

"The history of the counter-claims of other inventors, the patent suits, and the quarrels between patentees is told here at enormous length and in wearisome detail; the general reader will balk at it. While the book purports to be a biography, it has hardly any human interest. It does, however, give a glimpse here and there of the labor situation in the old time." R. D. T.
— + Outlook 156:467 N 19 '30 180w

"It is not merely thorough but a little too thorough, heaping detail upon the subject until it sometimes disappears as beneath a snowdrift; it is not merely scholarly but a bit too scholastic—many pages have as much footnote as text, or more. Apart from the shortcomings, the book is a model of what business biography ought to be, and almost never is. It gives us a history of the reaper that seems absolutely conclusive." Allan Nevins
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:426 D 6 '30 1350w

HUTCHISON, GRAHAM SETON (GRAHAM SETON, pseud.). W plan. 306p $2 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Butterworth]
30-2372

Duncan Grant, a young Scottish colonel, is sent by plane behind the German lines, disguised as a dead German officer, Muller, (inventor of the secret W plan) and in the rôle of spy endeavors to learn the complete contents of the plan. Luck is with Grant in his dangerous exploits; he succeeds in getting the papers, and saves the English from an attack that might have wiped out their entire forces.

"For its authentic backgrounds and exciting quality most readers will be ready to forgive the awkward narrative manner." Will Cuppy
+ — Books p15 F 2 '30 100w

"The quiet, unexaggerated way in which the story is told, and the calmness of the style, unheightened by hyperbole or overstatement, make it even more exciting than many of the more highly colored books about the great war." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 600w

"Here is a really capital spy story, and an unusual one, especially unusual in its refusal to gloss over the unpleasant side of the business. . . There is some rather careless writing, but the pace is swift, the incidents deftly devised, and the surprises decidedly numerous."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 19 '30 600w

"A swell war-adventure story." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 40w

"If not always convincing, the tale rolls along at a sufficiently rapid rate to satisfy the most voracious reader. Graham Seton spins a good yarn if you are not too insistent upon realism with your war." Eugene Reynal
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:716 F 8 '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 150w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Brief candles. 320p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Chatto]
30-20167

Three short stories: Chawdron, The Rest Cure, and The Claxtons, and a novelette, After the Fireworks. Huxley's malicious satire, his consummate psychological analysis of character and his witty sophistication find ready outlet in Chawdron, the fatuous millionaire and his kittenish little Nemesis, Miss Spindell; in the vegetarian Herbert and Martha Claxton; in childish Moira Tarwin and her Italian lover, Tonino; and in the affair of a middle-aged novelist, Miles Fanning, with Pamela, an adoring young English girl.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

Reviewed by H. H. Clark
Bookm 71:438 Jl '30 1200w

"These stories offer plenty of wit, much expert psychological surgery and the usual quota of pithy dissertation. It is a pleasure and a stimulation to read them. They succeed in giving the reader a sense of superiority, which for no good reason triumphs over the sicken-

HUXLEY, A. L.—Continued
ing suspicion that he himself is being laid by the heels. In fact, judged by almost any standard but the one set up by Mr. Huxley's previous work, they are first rate." M. C. Dawson
+ Books p3 My 25 '30 850w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 500w

"The book is one of the two events of the year among volumes of short stories to me. 'Laments for the Living,' by Dorothy Parker, is the other." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Jl 26 '30 180w

Reviewed by Henry Hazlitt
Nation 130:654 Je 4 '30 800w
Nation and Ath 47:383 Je 21 '30 220w

"Mr. Huxley's excessive mental brilliance blinds him, I am afraid, to the fact that his mental development is arrested. This book of short stories is very cheap, and too often very nasty. . . [It] shows him at his most trivial."
— New Statesman 35:218 My 24 '30 220w

"'Brief Candles' adds nothing to Huxley's stature and but one story to his reputation. It bears all the marks of an in-between volume. That it contains much assured writing and some effective wit can be taken for granted; that is the least one expects of Huxley, whose progress must be measured less in literary terms than in intellectual ones. This book about clinches the fact long pretty evident, that he will never be a creative novelist of great importance, for his interests have grown steadily more those of the commentator and critic." Louis Kronenberger
N Y Times p4 My 18 '30 900w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p16 My 16 '30 800w
Sat R 150:58 Jl 12 '30 200w

Reviewed by L. W. Dodd
Sat R of Lit 7:19 Ag 2 '30 400w

"I doubt if there is another living novelist as capable of taking in so much at a glance. Brilliant though [After the Fireworks] is, Mr. Huxley is inclined to overcrowd his clevernesses. He insists on dragging ordinary characters up to his own intellectual level and this results in a certain falsity of conversation so that we are, as it were, perpetually being forced to listen to Mr. Huxley making smart conversation with himself. There is no such blemish in the story of 'The Claxtons.' The Claxtons are better than anyone else in the book: they are perfect cock-shies for a malicious author and Mr. Huxley is a very good shot indeed." B. E. Todd
+ — Spec 144:873 My 24 '30 350w

"It is difficult to say anything new or illuminating about Mr. Huxley. His bewildering cleverness, his deadly intelligence, his extended culture, his cosmopolitan wit, are matters of common agreement and continue to impress us in much the same way as the acrobatics of the bicyclist on a tight-rope. We know he won't fall; but still we crane our necks upward with bated breath. The trouble with Mr. Huxley is that he can't afford to fall. The height is too dizzy. No air-pockets are allowed for in his cosmogony. But still, the dizzy height rises no further than the roof of the circus-tent. . . Brief Candles is as diverting, as full, as rich, as gritty, as disillusioned, as the previous works of Mr. Huxley. And that is saying a great deal." V. Sackville-West
+ Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p432 My 22 '30 750w

HYDE, MARK POWELL. Singing sword. 248p 2 $2.50 Little 398 Ogier the Dane 30-25450

The story of Sir Ogier the Dane, and his companions Roland and Oliver, in the days when Charlemagne was warring with the Saracens. The singing sword was Courtain, the famous Damascene sword, won by Sir Ogier from the Indian Prince Caraheu.

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

"Few writers have the power to set a whole group of characters in motion. This was Howard Pyle's great gift, for we do not think of his books in terms of single characters, not even in the case of Robin Hood himself, but as a whole company of clearly differentiated, well-characterized individuals whose reality to us depends largely upon their effect upon each other. Though his characters are less completely drawn, Mark Powell Hyde has something of this power to make a group of characters and a period come alive, and it is this which makes 'The Singing Sword' stand out among the recent stories with a historical or legendary background." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 250w
St Louis 28:275 N '30

"It is designed for boys in their early 'teens, but it ought to charm any reader who is willing to become as young as the thirteenth century." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 230w

HYDE, ROBERT. Winds of Gobi. 164p $1.75 Brewer
30-8167

Eight short stories of the Orient, written in the Chinese manner, marked with poetic delicacy and gentle satire. The author has studied Chinese at the University of California and familiarized himself with the spirit and charm of Oriental literature.

Booklist 27:29 S '30
Bookm 72:xiii O '30 80w

"The atmosphere of these stories is as softly fragrant as a cup of Chinese tea sipped slowly; but it is the flavor of their humor that lingers longest in the mouth—a humor akin to the sly darts of Robert Nathan." Laura Benet
+ Books p29 Ap 13 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 480w
Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30

"The writing, here and there, is good enough to make one hope that some day Mr. Hyde himself will be able to laugh at its present caprices." Isidor Schneider
— + New Repub 63:24 My 21 '30 110w

"A book of delicately conceived stories. Mr. Hyde has attempted an idiom to approximate a literal translation from the Chinese. The result is often charming, but also it is often precious, and precious to an annoying degree. Quaintness and charm are too expensive if the price be unreadable English." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 100w

"The texture of these tales resembles the smooth skin of the plum mentioned in one of them. They are exquisitely delicate; yet the web of their construction is made up of threads that are like taut silver wires for sureness. Only the discerning will value them as they deserve."
+ N Y Times p8 My 25 '30 270w
Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 40w

HYDE, STACEY WILLIAM. Blackleg. 312p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans
[30-3769]

Fred Raingall, a labor leader in Browton, a small English industrial town, heads the workers in a strike. The strike is broken by blacklegs, but Raingall refuses to go back to work and suffers unemployment. When he does return home he finds that his wife is dead from privation and that his children have accepted the factory terms against which he fought.

"A story following fairly obvious lines, but moderate, well-phrased, and sometimes moving, a book to be respected for its quiet network of a man's factory and home life."
+ New Statesman 34:741 Mr 15 '30 30w

"This book is so full of direct and implicit argument that it is impossible to deny that it is propaganda as well as a powerful and moving story."
Spec 144:1019 Je 21 '30 200w

"Black factory smoke and narrow shabby streets tempt many novelists to define industrial squalor in terms of sensationalism, but Mr. Hyde's sincerity saves him from mere grimness and his preoccupation with human character causes him to avoid an abstract conflict between the claims of Capital and Labour."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p252 Mr 20 '30 200w

I

ICONOCLAST, pseud. See Hamilton, M. A.

ILF, ILYA, and PETROV, EUGENE. Diamonds to sit on; tr. from the Russian by Elizabeth Hill and Doris Mudie. 280p $2 Harper [7s 6d Methuen]

A Russian comedy of errors in which a widower searches the whole of Russia for twelve chairs, in one of which his mother-in-law had hidden the family diamonds.

Bookm 72:xiii O '30 100w
Boston Transcript p3 O 18 '30 420w
New Statesman 35:284 Je 7 '30 230w

"Under Soviet management a 'side-splitting farce' becomes an object of social utility at the expense of its literary qualities. When the authors merely depict the humorous sides of life and people, they are witty and entertaining and some of the situations they portray are highly comical. It is regrettable that they could not confine themselves to their literary task. The book is well translated." Nicholas Sergievsky
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 550w

Reviewed by Alexander Nazaroff
N Y Times p23 S 14 '30 180w

"The suspense is well sustained, and although here and there the narrative becomes more riotous and disconnected than even a farce has a right to be, we imagine that few readers will resist the temptation to discover how it all ends. But the setting is more significant than the actual story. The authors have a bent for the droll and sardonic, which is very adequately exercised in their descriptions and asides."
+ Sat R 150:85 Jl 19 '30 200w

"It is a genuinely amusing story, spiced with a pretty turn of satire and more than a trace of malice; the humour, in fact, innocent on the surface, is often of an extraordinarily biting kind, and the grotesque situations frequently verge on tragi-comedy."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p512 Je 19 '30 320w

ILIFF, ROY MILTON. In the red. 327p $2 Stokes
30-19626

Ernie Baird was a "mama's boy." His mother, selfish and ruthless, had demanded his entire devotion and commanded his actions, from babyhood to young manhood. Ernie, whose sensitive, dreaming soul and real talent might have developed in a different environment, grew up a weakling and a failure. His last hopeless gesture is one of reckless despair in the face of tragedy.

"In this first novel we are privileged—and the word is no mere courteous formality—to become acquainted with a brilliant new American talent. . . The story of Ernie's continual renunciation and the events in the boy's life which make it psychologically compulsory is told with sympathy, even with the ostensible villains; with wise irony and an almost embarrassing veraciousness, as if the author might be writing from specific memory. . . Iliff has made an appreciable contribution to the better understanding, by the laity at least, of such mysteries as casual sex education and the influence on children of obscure psychic disabilities in parents." J. K. Atkins
+ Books p6 Ag 24 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 230w

"That this is more than the story of thwarted genius is to the credit of the author's gift of observing the significant words and gestures of people. His dialogue is admirably suited to the transcription of the heart-rending minutiae of the struggle of natural wisdom with conventional morality."
+ — N Y Times p6 Ag 24 '30 500w

"The most charitable thing one can say about the book is that it is charged with energy and that it includes many pithy truths. But these truths are served on such a soiled and untidy platter that one's appetite is taken away."
— Sat R of Lit 7:129 S 13 '30 400w

IL'IN, MIKHAIL ANDREEVICH. See Ossorgin, M., pseud.

I'LL take my stand; the South and the agrarian ² tradition, by twelve Southerners. 359p $3 Harper

917.5 South—Social conditions. South—Economic conditions
30-30595

Twelve Southerners, members of the "Nashville group," are convinced that the agrarian way of life should be encouraged and protected from the increasing encroachments of modern industrialism. The contributors to this symposium on behalf of the traditional Southern mode of life are: J. C. Ranson, Donald Davidson, F. L. Owsley, J. G. Fletcher, L. H. Lanier, Allen Tate, H. C. Nixon, A. N. Lytle, R. P. Warren, J. D. Wade, H. B. Kline, and Stark Young.

Reviewed by Virginia Moore
Books p21 N 30 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Arthur Krock
N Y Times p3 Ja 4 '31 850w

"This symposium is the most audacious book ever written by Southerners. Important as a vigorous declaration of social protest, it is even more important as a prescription for current economic evils. Its earnestness, intelligent treatment of profound questions, its note of determined conviction touched with emotional zeal, will make it an exciting experience for Southerner and non-Southerner alike. The superficial reader may regard it as the swan-song of the Old South; the more excitable reader may suppose that it marks the reopening of the Civil War; but the calmer reader will see in it the newest phase of Reconstruction: the reconstruction of the entire framework of American society on the basis of an agrarian policy suggested by the small farm of the old Middle South." W. S. Knickerbocker
+ Sat R of Lit 7:467 D 20 '30 1650w

IMAGIST anthology, 1930; new poetry by the imagists; forewords by Ford Madox Ford and Glenn Hughes. 229p $3.50 Covici [6s Chatto]

821.08 Imagist poetry. English poetry—Collections
30-11058

Includes work by Richard Aldington, John Cournos, H. D., John Gould Fletcher, F. S. Flint, Ford Madox Ford, James Joyce, D. H. Lawrence and William Carlos Williams.

"The best things in the miscellany are six slight but exceedingly dexterous and pointed and sophisticated sketches in vers libre by D. H. Lawrence. Hardly typical of their maker, their quality is a fine wit; and the loves they pierce and fix upon the wall for exhibition emanate from neurotic vanity rather than passion. Ford Madox Ford's 'Winter-Night Song' combines wit and passion to the confounding of the reader. The rhythm is infectious, and the orchestration thoroughly smart." Austin Warren
+ Bookm 72:193 O '30 1300w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory
Books p18 Ap 13 '30 1000w

IMAGIST anthology, 1930—Continued
Reviewed by E. L. Walton
Nation 130:603 My 21 '30 370w

"D. H. Lawrence's [contributions] are slight, clear-cut, and rather fun; the sort of thing, in fact, that a great poet might dash off as a joke in a spare couple of minutes. Most of the volume, however, is sad work. It is enlivened by a good deal of Mr. Richard Aldington, the Ethel M. Dell, as he may be called, of 'modern' poetry; a writer fascinating, not so much for his badness as for his incredible simplicity . . . The best things in the anthology are the graceful poems of H. D."
— + Nation and Ath 47:768 S 20 '30 600w

"The publication of another Imagist anthology, after an interval of thirteen years or so, is a gallant and delightful gesture. As Mr. Ford observes in his amusing preface, much literary debris has gone under bridges in those thirteen years. And here, on the other hand, is Imagism, which, if it is no longer living in any profound creative sense, is at any rate still alive in tradition." Conrad Aiken
New Repub 62:333 My 7 '30 400w

Reviewed by John Crawford
N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 850w

N Y Times p11 Jl 13 '30 400w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

Pratt p28 autumn '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

Reviewed by John Piper
Sat R 150:292 S 6 '30 600w

IMREY, FERENC, and PALEN, LEWIS STANTON. Through blood and ice. 353p il $3.75 Dutton

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives. European war, 1914-1918—Siberia. European war, 1914-1918—Prisoners and prisons. Bolshevism—Russia 30-9211

The author is a Hungarian artist who during the war was in service on the eastern front fighting Russians. After receiving several wounds in action and being captured by the enemy, he was sent to a Siberian prisoners' camp. His harrowing experiences, hardships, attempted escapes and other Siberian episodes are described; and the latter part of the book is given over to certain phases of the civil war between the Reds and the Whites in Russia.

Books p11 Ag 3 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 300w

"The faults of the book are in the presentation. There are loose ends; many things are confused which could have been clarified with a sentence. Possibly the collaborator should be blamed for this. Certainly he is to be blamed for one of those oh-so-arty introductions and for a pretty terrible first chapter which apparently was written to show that Imrey is an artist and a sensitive man. He's all of that, and more; he's a strong, sane man as well, and he emerges from his own always modest story a very likable, very sympathetic character." John Dorman
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 450w

N Y Times p9 Je 15 '30 450w

N Y World p11m Ap 20 '30 180w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

Reviewed by Stanley Went
Sat R of Lit 6:1105 Je 7 '30 250w

IN spite of all rejoicing; a soldier's diary of the Great war; with an introd. by Henry Williamson. 260p $2.50 Duffield

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 29-16938

An account of the daily incidents of a soldier's life recorded by a young Englishman who served thru practically the whole of the war. He entered as a private, and was later transferred to the Royal flying corps.

"'In Spite of All Rejoicing' derives its interest less from what it has to report about the war than from its value as an exposition of race psychology. . . It gives factual substantiation to the Raleighs and Osbornes who fought a gentleman's war, stuck it through because it was the sporting thing to do and never permitted themselves to talk or even think much about it." Lambert Davis
Books p26 Ap 13 '30 380w

"The colorless perfunctory record is of value as a document, but unfortunately the reading public wants its emotional direction more obviously indicated. The book has had a good and reasonable vogue in England. Undoubtedly there were many people who found it nearer to their hearts and minds than the record of a coal miner or poet. It should be read here, not in the light of other books, but for itself. It is a new piece for the far from complete mosaic." C. B. P.
Boston Transcript p3 Je 21 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

Nation 130:739 Je 25 '30 100w

"As a story it stands out from the deluge of recent war writing, good, bad and indifferent, by virtue of the candor and simplicity which is its strength. . . The value of this diary is that it reveals outward events as passed through the lens of the inner man. . . 'In Spite of All Rejoicing' is a book that has made its mark in England and deserves the distinction. It promises little for the future writing of its anonymous author, for it is not a literary work in any sense. But it is complete in itself, and that should suffice for any one." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 600w

"A beautiful, true book—'so balanced, so vivid, so simple, so readable,' entirely as Mr. Williamson says it is—a plain, nature-loving, life-loving and life-giving 'account,' unembitteredly, inconspicuously humorous; 'In Spite of All Rejoicing' carries almost all there was of romance and beauty and camaraderie in the war. In its quiet way, a rather incomparably powerful document (the author sketches and sings between his pot-shots at 'the enemy'). L. C. Woodman
+ N Y Times p6 My 18 '30 950w

"The diary is profoundly impressive, made so by its perfect simplicity."
+ Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 80w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

"Another anonymous book, but about the authenticity of it there can be not the slightest doubt. There is tragedy in plenty, but humor, too, and there is the lack of rancor towards the enemy and the sympathy for him that characterizes almost all the war stories by actual combatants." Stanley Went
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1105 Je 7 '30 320w

INGE, WILLIAM RALPH. Christian ethics and modern problems. 427p $5 Putnam [15s Hodder]

261 Christian ethics. Sociology, Christian 30-29541

Dean Inge discusses the relation of Christian ethics—as exemplified by the books of the New Testament—to modern civilization, "in so far as Western culture is moulded by conscious ideals."

"One thing can be safely said about Dean Inge, he cannot be dull. He is as clearly-cut an individual, and individualist, as we could find in our time. He is very liberal in his theology, but is totally free from the sentimentalism in which so much of religious liberalism feebly and fragrantly expires. . . The book is the effort of an honest man to apply to present problems the ideals of the Christian religion.

In so great a task no teacher can be infallible." W. L. Sullivan

+ Books p12 Ja 4 '31 600w

Reviewed by Samuel Harkness

Christian Century 47:1485 D 3 '30 1050w

Reviewed by James Thornton

Nation and Ath 48:48 O 11 '30 600w

"Dr. Inge's reputation as a journalist will doubtless be enhanced by this book; he has reached a certain standard from which he now, alas! seems unlikely to move. There is a specious parade of learning in the work; the parade has much of the stage army about it. The scholar with a new idea does not disseminate it by scissors and paste-brush, the chief instruments that seem to have been used by Dr. Inge. It is probably not an exaggeration to say that one-third of the book consists of quotations, without recourse even to the subterfuge of oratio obliqua."

— New Statesman 35:710 S 13 '30 1750w

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

N Y Evening Post p5d O 4 '30 550w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 O 19 '30 1350w

"His knowledge of history, combined with his acceptance of science and his willingness to face the real facts of modern life, give his words weight." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 156:350 O 29 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

"His book is one for which hundreds have been hungry, and if its spirit—its conclusions on practical points are secondary—pervaded our pulpits, the cinemas might be less crowded and the churches full. Dean Inge would be sure of his welcome but for one established fact. The only infinite capacity of mortal man is for ingratitude." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 150:376 S 27 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill

Spec 145:386 S 20 '30 850w

"There is never a trace of clerical mannerism in his utterances; familiar words, as he uses them, wear no tiredness; they seem to be always in training. . . It must be said of this book (which incidentally shows an extraordinarily wide range of reading and a telling power of quotation) that readers of the writer's other works will find in it a good deal that is familiar to them already; but it can be none the less welcome for that."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p711 S 11 '30 2150w

INGE, WILLIAM RALPH. Social teaching of the church. (Beckly social service lecture, 1930) 111p $1 Abingdon press [2s 6d; pa 1s 6d Epworth]

261 Sociology, Christian 30-24939

"This little book contains the Beckly social service lecture delivered by the Dean of St. Paul's before the Wesleyan Methodist Conference in 1930. This lectureship is an English foundation established five years ago whose purpose is 'to set forth the social implications of Christianity and to further the development of a Christian sociology.' Coming to his conclusions after a general discussion of the relation it is possible to discern between the teachings of the New Testament and modern social conditions and of its historical vista, Dean Inge says that 'every citizen has a duty to try to form an intelligent opinion on social questions and a right to express that opinion and to persuade others to adopt it.' "—N Y Times

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

N Y Evening Post p5d O 4 '30 420w

"Dean Inge's address deals with his usual frankness and straightforwardness with the attitude which he thinks Christians ought to take and hold toward social and economic questions. His discussion of this matter is a very timely pronouncement and as interesting and applicable in the United States as in England."

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 31 '30 380w

St Louis 28:288 D '30

INGRAM, KENNETH. Modern attitude to the sex problem. 158p $2 Stokes [5s Allen, G.]

176 Sex

Differences between the Victorian and the modern sex codes are discussed. It is the author's belief that free love, which necessarily places emphasis upon the sexual rather than the spiritual, should be replaced by a new type —bi-sexual in character, and based primarily on mental affinity regardless of sex.

"The book is a statement from the right wing, but with a difference. The calm, judicial treatment of many vexing problems makes the author's choice of terms all the more regrettable. Surely it is no longer permissible to libel the lower orders of creation by designating man's sexual impulses as animal." Lorine Pruette

Books p17 My 18 '30 600w

N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 220w

"Although Mr. Ingram says little in his book that has not already been said in effect many times, in this country alone, by Havelock Ellis, Edward Carpenter and the host of less eminent writers who published their ideas during the short period after the War when Freudian psycho-analysis was so popular, it is still a book worth reading. The really disappointing thing about the book, and the reason why one would hesitate to put it into the hands of young people who might otherwise benefit by it, is the author's own attitude towards sex. Mr. Ingram sees it as a frivolous pastime."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p463 My 29 '30 400w

INMAN, SAMUEL GUY. Trailing the conquistadores. 236p $1; pa 60c Missionary educ. movement

972.9 West Indies 30-22086

A brief survey of the history and present conditions of Santo Domingo, Haiti, Cuba, and Porto Rico. Mr Inman is (1930) secretary of the Committee on cooperation in Latin America and instructor in international relations at Columbia university.

"Here in small compass is a great deal of authentic information about the Caribbean Islands." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 550w

"The criticism will inevitably be expressed that in 'Trailing the Conquistadores,' Samuel G. Inman has resorted to the melodramatic in historic comparisons in order to emphasize his chosen point. No one is better informed as to contemporary conditions in the Caribbean than he; none can write more vividly of the long record of cruelties and oppressions which the people of these islands have endured. Yet there are those who will feel that a parallel between the savageries of Cortez, Pizarro or Sir Henry Morgan in the West Indies and the occupation of Haiti or Nicaragua by United States marines is a trifle overstrained." W. J. A.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 21 '30 300w

"Professor Inman has written an interesting book, but the title is misleading, and the work contributes little that is new to the nearly generation-old discussion of the United States imperialism in the Caribbean." A. C. Wilgus

Hist Outlook 21:337 N '30 480w

N Y Times p18 Jl 20 '30 250w

St Louis 28:270 N '30

World Tomorrow 13:525 D '30 30w

INNIS, HAROLD ADAMS. Fur trade in Canada; an introd. to Canadian economic history; with a pref. by R. M. MacIver. (Oliver Baty Cunningham memorial publication fund) 444p il $5 Yale univ. press [22s 6d Oxford]

338.1 Fur trade—Canada. Canada—Economic conditions. Canada—History. Northwest, Canadian—History 30-14672

Following the author's previous volume on the fur trade of Canada, published three years

INNIS, H. A.—Continued
ago, the present book completes his conspectus of the industry, showing against the historical background the social and economic significance of the fur trade in the general life of the country.

Reviewed by H. U. Faulkner
Am Econ R 20:717 D '30 550w

"A most interesting and engrossing story of a Canadian industry that has been prized more commonly as part of the romantic atmosphere of Canada, and that now appears to be rather the very solid foundation upon which the Dominion has been built. Dr. Innis's work is no superficial study leading to conclusions based largely upon his own preconceptions. On the contrary, it is documented with a completeness that leaves nothing to be desired, and that fills one with astonishment at the tremendous research that must have gone to the preparation of this work, a work, too, that, despite its economic point of view, will be found to be very readable by many who are not economists." L. J. Burpee
+ Am Hist R 36:177 O '30 1000w

"This is one of those books, written largely for academic consumption, which one wishes might immediately be rewritten for the general public. When Professor Innis forgets for a moment that the eagle eyes of his colleagues are upon him, ready to catch him in the first slip in fact or error in deduction, he writes with real zest. From the point of view of the ordinary reader the volume suffers from what might be called a surfeit of information, though obviously there cannot be too much information for those who are mining for facts."
+ N Y Times p9 S 28 '30 750w

"Professor Innis in a learned and admirably worked out, if occasionally too ingenious, book has earned our gratitude and made us realize what Canada owes to the fur trade."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p584 Jl 17 '30 1350w

INNIS, HAROLD ADAMS, ed. Select documents in Canadian economic history, 1497-1783. 581p $4 Univ. of Toronto press

330.971 Canada—Economic conditions
30-11351

"This collection of documents is intended to supply material for the student of the economic development of Canada from the earliest colonial time till 1783. The documents relate to the fishing, including whaling, and the fur trades. They contain not only descriptive material but many interesting side lights on the commerce incidental to the trades mentioned, as well as the colonial systems of France and England and the mercantile ideas of the time."—Am Econ R

"There is a short introduction to the book and even shorter prefatory remarks at the beginning of each group of documents. Little or no attempt has been made, unfortunately, in these introductions, to give an outline of the history embedded in the documents. For the general reader, the volume would be more valuable if a longer and more systematic introduction had been included. There is appended to the volume a select bibliography of economic historical books for the period subsequent to 1783, and this should be particularly useful to students and librarians." W. W. McLaren
+ — Am Econ R 20:277 Je '30 300w

"Mr. Innis has not only a keen eye for illustrative material, but he has a knack of selecting both economically and interestingly. Of course some of his materials must be familiar, but there is hardly a page without novel matter of both intrinsic and contributory interest. It is greatly to be hoped that, as he goes on into the more complex Canadian, North American, and world economic relationship of the years after 1783, Mr. Innis will be able to keep up the high standard he has set for himself here." J. B. Brebner
+ Am Hist R 35:882 Jl '30 850w

"There is one feature of the volume, which is a matter of considerable surprise, and that is the lack of an index. This is compensated in no adequate measure by an exceptionally full table of contents. The omission must militate against the extensive use of such a volume as a source of varied and detailed information for the relatively extensive field covered. Otherwise, the volume is to be highly commended as furnishing a valuable and permanent contribution to the more readily available sources of Canadian history." A. Shortt
+ — Canadian Hist R 11:152 Je '30 650w

"The collection as it stands is comprehensive and complete. There are no important omissions. There are some minor typographical errors, but they are not misleading. The whole collection is a monument of careful painstaking scholarship, which leaves all students of Canadian economic history permanently in the editor's debt." W. A. Mackintosh
+ J Pol Econ 38:724 D '30 650w

"Except that a few of the extracts from early memoirs, reports, letters, business records, &c., would be easier to read if slightly more of the contexts had been given, the book is admirably adapted to its purpose. Much light is thrown on the social life and especially on the hardships of the early French settlers in Canada; and all students of economics will be interested in some of the documents here quoted which illustrate the effects on the general development of Canada, of the predominance of the fishing industry of the Maritime provinces and the fur trade of New France."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p193 Mr 6 '30 270w

INSKEEP, MRS ANNIE LUCY (DOLMAN). Child adjustment in relation to growth and development. 427p il $3 (10s 6d); school ed $2.50 Appleton

136.7 Child study. Growth. Psychology, Physiological
30-10821

A consideration of the growth and development of the child with special reference to his adjustment during school years. The child's body, mind and emotions are given successive study in the book. Dr. Inskeep's work is intended chiefly for those giving courses in child behavior and for groups in parental education.

Booklist 27:186 Ja '31

Reviewed by Emanuel Blum
Books p15 Ag 3 '30 50w

"Although there is little new in principle in Mrs. Inskeep's treatment, there is a freshness in point of view and an ability to summarize the results of the scientific investigations of others that compensates for the oldness of the basic ideas."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 200w

"The author has included a large amount of concrete data to provide a basis for her discussion and has also used good illustrative material throughout the book. Any teacher of educational psychology or school hygiene will find it well worth while to examine this book." G. T. Buswell
+ El School J 31:75 S '30 450w

J Home Econ 22:596 Jl '30 70w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

"For the preparation of her volume Dr. Inskeep has read innumerable references in the various fields of child study. She has set herself a high aim giving the reader more than a mere glimpse into the fields of medicine, physiology, psychology, sociology and anthropology. Few will deny that she has covered most comprehensively the literature that has a bearing on the mental and physical adjustment of the child. Unfortunately she shows a lack of clinical understanding in many of her pages. Such mistakes are hard to excuse. There is on the other hand a great deal of valuable information in this volume. Dr. Inskeep has attempted the almost impossible task of collecting, arranging and classifying the biological literature published on the growth and development of the child. She has also made it her task to apply the information collected to the every day management of the child in the home and in the school." Grete Seham

+ — Survey 64:440 Ag 15 '30 680w

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS. 3D CONFERENCE, KYOTO, 1929. Problems of the Pacific, 1929; proceedings, Nara and Kyoto, Japan, Oct. 23-Nov. 9, 1929; ed. by J. B. Condliffe. 697p $5 Univ. of Chicago press [22s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

915 Pacific ocean. East (Far East). International cooperation 30-17730

"This bulky but not unattractive volume contains a summary of the discussions at the third conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations, held at Kyoto and Nara last autumn, together with 15 monographs and documents dealing with subjects considered at that gathering and some 60 pages of appendices relating to the organization and proceedings of the Institute. In the summary Dr. Condliffe has condensed into a connected and readable narrative of 244 pages the discussions at 44 round-table meetings and 8 general sessions. These cover 7 major groups of topics: 'The machine age and traditional culture,' 'Food and population in the Pacific,' 'Industrialization in the Pacific countries,' 'China's foreign relations,' 'China's financial reconstructions,' 'The problems of Manchuria,' and 'Diplomatic relations in the Pacific.' "—Am Econ R

"The monographic section, which forms the bulk of the volume, contains a wealth of factual material relating to the Far East, much of which is of an economic character and is not as conveniently available elsewhere. Value and interest are added to the book by the facts that its contributors include representatives from all the Pacific countries, except Soviet Russia, whose problems are discussed, and that the delegates were entirely unhampered by diplomatic or other official restrictions in expressing their opinions." V. S. Clark
+ Am Econ R 20:491 S '30 500w

"The material on Manchuria alone would make a sizable volume, and no comparable statement of recent conditions in that disputed land is so accessible. That so controversial a subject could be discussed by Japanese and Chinese in the old capital of Japan is a tribute to the fine spirit of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Four maps and an index add to the usefulness of the volume." P. J. T.
+ Am Hist R 36:213 O '30 650w

Reviewed by E. C. Wynne
Am Pol Sci R 24:1032 N '30 680w

"Those wishing to gain a comprehensive insight into the conditions and, equally as important, the states of mind touching the problems of the Pacific area—an insight from all the angles involved—will find this symposium, because of the comparative absence of personal bias, more valuable than most books on the subject written by individual authorities. Dr. Condliffe, the research secretary of the Institute, has done a careful and painstaking piece of work." J. W. Johnson
+ Ann Am Acad 152:406 N '30 220w

"The Institute of Pacific Relations is an amazing institution, which produces an amazing amount of information. When it is not in session its members are at work, all around the Pacific, digging up curious statistics—about wheat growing in Australia, Chinese immigration into Manchuria, cotton mills in Shanghai, the food supply in Japan and such. Some of these [discussions] are a little hazy in summary, but students of the Manchurian problem will find here material nowhere else available. The statistics on cotton mills in China, showing no increase since 1926, are also striking."
+ Books p11 Jl 27 '30 160w
Canadian Hist R 11:361 D '30 350w
St Louis 28:231 O '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p595 Jl 17 '30 220w
World Tomorrow 13:474 N '30 180w

IRVINE, ALEXANDER FITZGERALD. Fighting parson. 289p $3 Little [12s 6d Williams & Norgate]

B or 92 30-10518

The autobiography of Alexander Irvine who from a childhood spent in dire poverty in Ireland, came to be a student at Oxford and Yale, a minister, and assistant and friend to Dr Percy Stickney Grant. Part of the material in this book has appeared previously in the author's "From the bottom up" (Book Review Digest, 1910).

Booklist 27:25 S '30
Bookm 72:vi S '30 80w

"What is new in the book is the story of Irvine's services as a 'morale-raiser' at the front during the war, his similar services in England and Ireland after the war, the renewal of his wanderings back to this country and elsewhere after peace had set in like some kind of dreadful torpor, and a bit of mellowing philosophy at the end as the author realizes at seventy years of age that his pilgrimage is approaching its close. The war story is one to stir the heart. There is nothing just like it, for the reason that there was nobody in France like Irvine." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p20 Ap 27 '30 950w
Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:10 Je '30 80w
St Louis 28:218 S '30
Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 23 '30 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p744 S 25 '30 950w

IRVING, WASHINGTON. Bold dragoon, and other ghostly tales; sel. and ed. by Anne Carroll Moore; with decorative diversions by James Daugherty. 240p il $3.50 Knopf

Five stories selected from the works of Washington Irving, and edited for young people by Miss Anne Carroll Moore. The stories are: The bold dragoon; The devil and Tom Walker; Wolfert Webber or Golden dreams; Guests from Gibbet Island; and Dolph Heyliger.

Booklist 27:108 N '30

Reviewed by K. G. Landon
Bookm 72:247 N '30 180w

"Here is Irving at his gay and rowdy best; here is Miss Moore in the role of triumphantly understanding editor; here is James Daugherty with a whole gallery of pictures which, at the moment, I can only describe as better than most of the Old Masters I have met. A learned friend tells me that these drawings for 'The Bold Dragoon' constitute 'a spontaneous piece of pictorial interpretation' of the most exalted kind; and the fun of it is, they are also the gayest, tenderest and heart-warmingest pictures you'll find in a month of Sundays. I think you will not need my word for it that Anne Carroll Moore has murdered none of Washington Irving's darlings. She comes to him, as aforetime, as a collaborator and a ministering angel rather than as one of those friends in human form who monkey unduly and from malice aforethought with other people's copy." Will Cuppy
+ Books p8 O 19 '30 1200w

"The stories in this collection have been edited so that their wit and charm gleam through a text unhampered by too many digressions. The editor has been ably abetted by the illustrator, James Daugherty."
+ Nation 131:560 N 19 '30 100w

" 'The Bold Dragoon' will be a satisfaction to all lovers of Irving, and in making these stories available in such an inviting form, both editor and publisher have earned the gratitude of boys and girls as well as that of older people interested in their reading. . . In the illustrations, as in those for the 'Knickerbocker New York,' James Daugherty is at his best." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p30 S 28 '30 360w
St Louis 28:275 N '30

"All of Irving's best wit and verve are here, and Daugherty matches him line for line, with

IRVING, WASHINGTON—Continued
swift, wild rhythms, uproarious caricatures, fearful and wonderful conceptions of 'Discord,' 'The Agreement with the Devil,' 'Gossip,' etc." L. H. Seaman
+ Sat R of Lit 7:476 D 20 '30 600w

IRWIN, MARGARET E. F. (MRS J. R. MONSELL). None so pretty. 274p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Chatto]
30-8260

A love story of the time of Charles the Second in which a joyous young girl, brought up with little sense of responsibility, is married at seventeen to a loutish husband. In her search for romance she meets and loves a young gallant of the court, but her happiness is of short duration. The story was suggested by the epitaph on an old tombstone.

Booklist 26:397 Jl '30
Bookm 72:xi S '30 100w

"There is no obviously painted scenery in 'None So Pretty.' Miss Irwin knows her period so well that she can reproduce it with no apparent effort. She writes of seventeenth century life in England as naturally as a modern novelist does of this age. Although it offers no depths to fathom, 'None So Pretty' is an altogether pleasing book. Miss Irwin has the sure touch of an artist with all her characters from Diggory, the dairy boy, to Charles the King, and her warm sympathy communicates itself to the reader. She has a charming humor of observation and comment which runs quietly through the story." Thayer Hobson
+ Books p3 Mr 23 '30 800w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 370w

"Nancy Pretty—'None So Pretty'—never quite comes alive. So we are never in sympathy with her during her struggles as we should be if we understood her better. The author has done better with the portrayal of the minor characters. The simple-minded nurse and the bombastic mother are vividly drawn, and Bess, the rival of Nancy, is the most convincing character in the book. Miss Irwin has a smoothly flowing style."
+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 100w

"The story is bright, interesting, and unconventional." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:19 Ap 5 '30 220w

"It is a fresh and touching story, sharply characterized, in which the historical setting is subordinate to emotional values. This is a slender but ingratiating tale, written with considerable stylistic skill." E. H. Walton
+ New Repub 63:134 Je 18 '30 120w
New Statesman 35:16 Ap 12 '30 180w

"An unusually readable historical novel, very much novel and almost no history." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 100w

" 'None So Pretty' is beautifully written. It seeks the clarity of crystal. Its imagery is concrete, arresting. Its illusions are fathomless—a composite of gayety and sadness that the reader cannot dispel."
+ N Y Times p22 Ap 27 '30 500w
N Y World p11m Ap 20 '30 180w

"By no means faultless in construction, but a delightful book to read. It is a deft blend of bitter romance such as might be set in any world and authentic seventeenth century scenes which recall Orlando in atmosphere and style. It is absorbing, moving, exquisite; written with insight, ironic fancy, wit and artless artifice."
+ Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 80w

"The story is so skilfully unfolded and has such definite dramatic quality that it lives on in the mind long after the book has been finished. It is a merciless tale of merciless days, but it comes very near home when it forbears to draw the startlingly wide comparisons between present-day conditions and those of the times with which it is concerned."
+ Sat R 150:92 Jl 19 '30 100w

"Miss Irwin, with her unescapable, because unrealized, twentieth century preconceptions, thinks of herself as explaining a problem of seventeenth century conduct, and the resulting picture has in places an air of self-conscious quaintness and archaic masquerade which is destructive both to profound portrayal of character and to genuine realization of the past. Miss Irwin's novel is entertaining, deftly, and even brilliantly, written, with many admirable pages, but it fails to achieve completely either of the ends (the realization of a past life or the presentation of some eternal aspect of human conduct free from adventitious circumstances) for which the historical novel may properly strive." Garrett Mattingly
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1188 Jl 12 '30 450w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Spec 144:538 Mr 29 '30 130w

IRWIN, WALLACE ADMAH. Days of her life. 329p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Heinemann]
30-10088

Emma Beecher grew to young womanhood in a western mining camp. She had known all that poverty and ugliness could do—and marriage with Sam Oliver, a clever gambler, seemed a way out. Sam deserted Emma shortly before her baby was born, dead. Thru the kindness of an old friend, Bob Mills, Emma found work in Jacob Auerbach's curio shop in San Francisco. He was a fine person, but an invalid. Emma cared for him in a motherly way, and married him. Then Leonard Boyd came into her life—but because she was bound by duty and conscience to her invalided husband, Emma sacrificed herself, and Boyd went on his way.

Booklist 26:398 Jl '30
Bookm 71:xiv Je '30 70w

"This is one of those good old-fashioned endurance test novels. . . Mr. Irwin is conscientious and sound, but never dramatic. The humor which has endeared him to many of us for a generation is not permitted to decorate this story." D. F. Gilman
— + Books p7 Ap 13 '30 850w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann
Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 1700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

"The much-married Emma and her oddly assorted parcel of lovers are unconvincing creatures. . . As a panoramic glimpse of the past, the book is excellent—full of color and stir. One can afford to overlook its defects as a novel of character." E. H. W.
+ — New Repub 63:215 Jl 9 '30 150w

"There are moments in The Days of Her Life which remind the reader of Sister Carrie; but they are moments only, for, as yet at any rate, Mr. Irwin has none of Dreiser's capacity for urging on the steady march of circumstance to an unwavering climax."
New Statesman 35:596 Ag 16 '30 230w

"An immensely hopeful novel, it is an affirmation of free will, a denial of defeat, an assertion of the power of faith. As such, Mr. Irwin has made it an artistically convincing argument. But, first of all and perhaps more significantly, it is a good story, the colorful, picaresque history of an unusual woman who seems thoroughly credible and convincing."
+ N Y Times p8 Ap 20 '30 500w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 154:626 Ap 16 '30 220w
Times [London] Lit Sup p701 S 4 '30 300w

ISEMAN, JOHN W., and TAYLOR, SLOAN. Book of airplanes. 135p il $1.50 Oxford
629.13 Airplanes. Aeronautics—Juvenile literature
30-8470

A history of airplanes for boys, profusely illustrated with color plates, half-tones, and line drawings. Important dates and names are linked with interesting events that boys will remember.

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Bookm 70:444 D '29 30w

"The book emphasizes the importance of aviation in these times and as such is a good guide to aviation as a vocation. For those interested in gliders there is a chapter on this subject."
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 30 '29 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '30

"The insatiable demand for books on airplanes continues, and Lieutenant Iseman and Mr. Jackson have here made a welcome contribution to an absorbing subject. Profuse illustrations add to the worth of the book, but the paper and binding are inferior."
+ — Nation 129:601 N 20 '29 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

R of Rs 81:10 Ja '30 80w

ISRAELS, JOSEF. Rebecca the wise. 313p $1
² Doubleday, Doran

30-32337

A young Jewish girl comes from Oklahoma to New York and gets a job in a newspaper office. She believes that she has put her race and background behind her, falls in love with an Irish newspaper man, and marries him. Rebecca soon realizes her mistake, however, and a return visit to her parents brings her to a better understanding of herself and her destiny.

"Mr. Israels writes with charm, and displays a maturity and sincerity which are promising in a first novel."
+ Books p10 D 28 '30 250w

"The characters are real, but the arbitrary plot forces them into acting unnaturally. The style, extremely colloquial and sometimes vulgar, is facile and unfaltering."
— + N Y Times p33 N 16 '30 320w

ISTRATI, PANAIT. Thistles of the Baragan; tr. from the French by Jacques Le Clercq. 184p $2.50 Vanguard press

30-7109

"The Baragan is a great tract of barren land in Rumania that bears nothing but thistles. Every year by certain seasonal winds, all the heads are broken off and blown rolling hundreds of miles across country. Boys, exhilarated by the rushing wind, often choose one thistle-head and race it across the plain. The story is of the simplest. The hero is a boy in a community that suffers hideous privations. He and his father make an attempt to better things at least by undertaking the hard journey to find a market for the fish that is rotting uneaten. He runs away, follows the thistles, and is taken in by strangers in a community as poor as that of his parents. Sparks of discontent fly about the country and flare up in a peasants' revolt, which is stamped out with great brutality. The boy must set out, spurred by the thistles, across the plains again."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:64 O '30

"When he leads us through the immense steppes of the Baragan, through its thistles and sands and winds, he is poetical. When he describes the humble occupations of the Rumanian peasants and artisans, the joys and sorrows of reaping, fishing, cart making, he is moving. But when, in numberless passages, he argues social and political problems with the shallowness of a pamphleteer, he is tiring." Eric Strong
+ Books p10 Ap 20 '30 420w

"There is here that quality so persistent in the literature of older lands, especially that given forth by those who dwell near the soil—a sombre realism, a hopeless acquiescence akin to fatalism and yet not entirely that. . . Only the exquisite beauty of style and setting could compensate for the hopeless pessimism of the theme." G. R. B. R.
+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 17 '30 570w

"It is probably more nearly accurate than many so-called histories, and it is ostensibly innocent of any novelistic plot-weaving. But the reader will find it more difficult to abandon unfinished than any of the 'sealed' mystery stories which a prominent American publisher is issuing."
+ Nation 131:48 Jl 9 '30 150w

"If you like to read about poor peasants who are rich in customs, background and local color, if you like lively descriptions which have an authentic ring to them, this book will interest you. The translation is sometimes obscure and never equal to the merit of the story." C. A. C.
+ New Repub 62:227 Ap 9 '30 140w

"Panait Istrati has something of Gorki's power to evoke precise images; like the Russian writer, too, he achieves pathos and intensity through a clean and sparing use of words. The pictures of the peasantry are vivid; individual portraits of characters who emerge but for a moment, persist long in the memory." Pierre Loving
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 5 '30 750w

"The simple story is splendidly told. The overpowering hardness of the peasants' life at its very best is presented with inescapable power and a wealth of poignant detail (as, for instance, the gigantic effort to save enough money for a horse and cart, a horse and cart so feeble that both collapse in their first journey)."
+ N Y Times p6 Mr 23 '30 340w

"His is a book which one cannot read too often."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:930 Ap 12 '30 450w

J

JABOTINSKY, VLADIMIR (ALTALENA, pseud.). Judge and fool; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks. 348p $2.50 Liveright

Samson, judge of Israel—Fiction 30-3766

"'Judge and Fool' is a translation from the German of a novel dealing with the life of Samson. It presents a Samson of conflicting qualities: a judge in Dan, the reverse in Philistia; a man beloved by most women; a man of astonishing contradictions in his own disposition; a man whose judgment and the ethics of whose exploits are questionable in the light of modern thought, no matter how they were regarded in his time."—N Y Times

"Mr. Jabotinsky, the well known Zionist politician, has brilliantly accomplished what all the rest of us Old Testament novelists tried, with varying degrees of unsuccess, to do. He has accomplished several things, but the first and greatest of them (the first duty, and the hardest, of every historical novelist) is this: He has re-created the past, made the world of three thousand years ago as real, as exciting, as bitter to the modern reader as it was to the people who lived in it. . . The book is in the grand manner, but there is nothing inflated about the style—only a becoming gravity, and at the same time a fluency and smoothness quite remarkable in a translation." Elmer Davis
+ Books p3 F 2 '30 1300w

"'Judge and Fool' is a novel which will probably shock some, amuse others and interest those who enjoy seeing an author's inventive proclivities given excellently controlled rein. Certainly it must have given Mr. Brooks, the translator, many happy hours, for he has done his work very well."
Boston Transcript p2 F 12 '30 480w

"It has good pace as story, a colorful projection of the decadent Philistine background, and the blemish of a too conspicuously calculated bawdiness." Leonard Ehrlich
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 40w

"An ability to give events vivid expression in few phrases is combined with a like skill in presenting the contradictory and changing manner of the Philistines toward Samson. they are first his friends, then his enemies, then both at one time. It is a well-nigh incomprehen-

JABOTINSKY, VLADIMIR—Continued
sible situation, and is perhaps explained only by Samson's own disposition and acts, which provoked equal like and dislike. Those readers who want the orthodox story of Samson will quarrel with the excursions from and additions to biblical fact; but those who enjoy fictional dramatization of historical figures will find 'Judge and Fool' an excellent example of its kind."
+ N Y Times p19 Mr 2 '30 420w

"With painstaking care, after obviously extensive research, Herr Jabotinsky has recreated the life of Samson's time in grim Dan and gay Philistia. In a brilliant way he weaves the product of this research into his story so that it adds tremendously to the reality of the picture without ever intruding, as is often the case in the use of such material, as pure scholarship heavily cluttering the stage set for drama." Jonathan Daniels
+ Sat R of Lit 6:753 F 22 '30 600w

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSALL. Inner sentinel; a study of ourselves and of something more. 183p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hodder]
201 Religion 30-25728

Essays concerned with the philosophy of religion in which Dr Jacks pleads for the virtues of courage and fortitude in the present day of intellectual bewilderment and conflict.

"This latest volume is in essence a fine distillation of the wisdom of the years of one who has lived purely, thought sanely, and believed sincerely all his days. Dr. Jack's tone is invariably moderate and urbane. He speaks no extravagance, as he feels no rapture. Much of a seer, he is little of a prophet. Yet if I were to describe the faith that I believe will endure after the hectic denials of our time have passed I could find no better expression of it than in the one set down in these modest pages. Here is a religion that is as reasonable as science and as rare as saintliness." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p18 N 9 '30 350w

"His idea of what he considers and terms 'The whole man,' his mental, physical and spiritual attributes, is very beautiful and well maintained throughout the book." L. C. Amory
+ — Churchman p5 N 1 '30 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1000 N 27 '30 1250w

JACKS, LEO VINCENT. Xenophon, soldier of fortune. 236p $2 (8s 6d) Scribner
B or 92 Xenophon 30-11154

A popular narrative of the life and adventures of the Greek soldier and historian.

Booklist 27:25 S '30
Bookm 71:viii Jl '30 80w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 600w

"Here is a livelier book about Xenophon than Xenophon himself ever wrote, though one with some of the same qualities of clarity and admirable organization of details into a coherent and unimpeded current of narrative. Xenophon comes to life very vividly in these pages."
+ Christian Century 47:531 Ap 23 '30 150w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
New Repub 63:106 Je 11 '30 110w

"A lively—sometimes perhaps too lively—account of one of the most famous feats of war ever accomplished, and a life of the man with whose name that achievement will ever be associated."
New Statesman 35:420 Jl 5 '30 220w

"It is a biography as brilliant as it is terse and comprehensive, one that will make the man and his day gloriously and humanly real to any modern reader." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 50w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:68 O '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 250w

JACKSON, ANDREW. Correspondence; ed. by John Spencer Bassett. 6v v 4, 1829-1832. 508p $4.25; pa $3.25 Carnegie inst.
B or 92 (26-7292)

"In contrast with the third volume of Professor Bassett's Correspondence of Andrew Jackson, in which were contained the materials for a period of eight years, the fourth volume covers but four. Except for a few months, these coincide with the first presidential term of General Jackson. . . For the Eaton affair, so fraught with political significance, the documents bulk to a larger extent than for any other subject. It is made clear that Jackson's defense of Mrs. Eaton was to a degree an aftermath of the attacks which had been made upon Mrs. Jackson. . . Of the new sources of material upon which the editor has drawn for the contents of this volume, there may be noted especially the papers of Anthony Butler, in the possession of the University of Texas, and the papers of Edward Livingston."—Am Hist R

Reviewed by St G. L. Sioussat
Am Hist R 35:380 Ja '30 1100w

"If the letters in this volume do not exhibit him at his best, either as statesman or a political leader, they do contribute to a clearer vision both of Jackson and of his period. The person most brightly self-illuminated besides Old Hickory himself is John Randolph of Roanoke." H. I. Brock
+ N Y Times p39 O 20 '29 650w

JACKSON, GEORGE GIBBARD. Hobbies for boys. 244p il $2 Lippincott [6s Low]
790 Amusements 30-27096

Twenty-five chapters on hobbies for boys whose pocket money is limited. Some of the subjects considered are: writing as a hobby; how to run a magazine; keeping pets; building a model junk; steamships as a hobby; framing pictures and the aquarium as a hobby. The author is English and the book is English in tone.

"A valuable accompaniment to vacation; the range is uncommonly wide and the instructions do not involve much expense—indeed most of the hobbies call for very little."
+ Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 20w

"The author actually talks to [his] reader in a manner of camaraderie rather than in a dictatorial way. The reader [is] made to feel (and this point will be especially attractive to the young and inexperienced makers and doers of things) that each enterprise described is not a far-fetched vagary of the imagination, but a fait accompli which has been undertaken and carried through by others, and is, therefore, altogether possible." Kitty Gause
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1119 Je 7 '30 300w

JACKSON, GEORGE GIBBARD. Romance of the sea. 312p il $2.50 Stokes [7s 6d Jenkins]
910.4 Seafaring life 30-20646

Accounts of mysteries and adventures, old and new, which have taken place on the sea. Separate chapters are given over to clipper ships, famous steamships, tramps and derelicts, warships, submarines, whaling vessels, diving, rescues and warning lights, historic wrecks, lost treasure ships, etc.

"Mr. Jackson writes in an easy, popular vein, and his book has some pleasant line-drawings as illustrations."
+ New Statesman 35:124 My 3 '30 50w
N Y Times p3 Ag 10 '30 300w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"If this was meant to be a juvenile sea history without tears it could be recommended; but savouring as it does of an attempted, if unconscious, emulation of such writers as Mr. Keble Chatterton on the same subject, it falls lamentably short. It lacks style, also that necessary quality vulgarly termed 'pep' with which a collection of historical facts needs to be imbued. . . On the other hand, the public who would be attracted to the title-piece because of a life's professional association with the sea and the pleasure of reading about things familiar, would be rendered impatient by the author's waste of words and inability to leave his mark on facts which would be just as romantic in the form of an official log."

— Sat R 149:632 My 17 '30 120w

"Mr. Jackson shows that he is capable of writing a book of permanent value, but he has not here taken the trouble to do it. Much of his book is like the talk of a man who is well up in his subject, but does not carry details in his head. This is well enough in casual conversation, but a book demands more trouble. Mr. Jackson has little sense of time, and frequently omits dates. . . With all its shortcomings the book is interesting and carries the reader along."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p448 My 29 '30 350w

JACKSON, GEORGE GIBBARD. Romance of the submarine. 244p il $2.50 Lippincott [6s Low]

623.825 Submarine boats. Submarine warfare 30-23413

A history of the evolution of the submarine from its earliest beginnings, with an account of some submarine exploits in the World war.

Booklist 27:143 D '30

Spec 144:534 Mr 29 '30 80w

"The value of his book would have been enhanced by the inclusion of an index, while more space might perhaps have been devoted to the work and exploits of submarines during the War and their general effect upon the campaign. Well illustrated, however, the volume will interest those who require a non-technical yet accurate account."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p302 Ap 3 '30 320w

JACKSON, GEORGE GIBBARD. World's aeroplanes and airships. 244p il $2.50 Lippincott [6s Low]

629.13 Airplanes. Airships 30-23793

A story of modern aeronautical achievement which takes up the evolution of aircraft and airways, exploration by air, famous Atlantic crossings, etc. The book, written in simple and graphic terms, should have a ready appeal to boys interested in the subject.

Booklist 27:143 D '30

"There are some excellent illustrations, both in colour and in black-and-white, and a full account of British aircraft construction which should do much to acquaint the public with what is being done in this vitally important industry. But when Mr. Jackson goes further afield he is not always trustworthy."
+ — Spec 144:910 My 31 '30 200w

"Mr. Jackson, writing simply and graphically for boys and girls, gives them everything they want except the rudiments of flight. He sees to it that the famous tales are told freshly, without sensationalism and with a shrewd regard for their bearing on the acceleration of transport and communication."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p392 My 8 '30 100w

JACOB, HEINRICH EDUARD. Jacqueline and the Japanese; tr. from the German by S. H. Cross. 149p $2.50 Little

30-9243

The events of the story take place in Germany during the panic of 1923. Rudolf Jaenicke, a musician of note, is reduced to directing the orchestra in a second-rate Berlin theater; his wife Jacqueline, a beautiful woman of noble birth, sings in the same theater. Even then they are forced to rent a room in their apartment to a Japanese scholar. To the scholar and his countrymen Rudolf and Jacqueline owe their ultimate peace, after a rather harrowing psychological experience.

"Herr Jacob rhapsodizes about the virtues of the Japanese ethos. His novel, in spite of some poetical passages, is so lachrymose, so painfully mystic, that one is amazed to learn that critics like Stefan Zweig, Bruno Frank and Max Brod have praised it highly."
— Books p16 Ap 20 '30 250w

"After reading it, one is puzzled that such a combination of wit, knowledge, sensitiveness and flexible style should have produced, with all its straining, nothing better than this book, which interests us too little and stirs us only faintly." Isidor Schneider
— + New Repub 63:24 My 21 '30 160w

"As simple as it is suggestive and compelling and profound. It is beautifully and delicately written. Not a word is out of place, and not a word is superfluous. But the total effect transcends both the incidents of the story and the mechanics of its form."
+ N Y Times p6 Mr 23 '30 700w

JACOBI, ELIZABETH PONGRACZ. When I was a girl in Hungary. (Children of other lands bks.) 142p il $1.25 Lothrop

914.391 Children in Hungary. Hungary—Social life and customs 30-12231

The author's recollections of her childhood in Hungary. Her days were spent partly on her grandfather's estate at Puszta-Eörs, partly on the famous Lake Balaton, and partly in the Transylvania hills, and she gives good descriptions of the manners and customs of all these localities.

Booklist 27:32 S '30

"The book might well find a place on the child's bookshelf for its information. By following little Böske through her escapades, the child reader assimilates facts about the customs of the people."
+ Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p128 S '30

"Described with a zest and a pleasure of recollection that is communicated to the reader. The result is an unusually vivid picture of a little-known and picturesque country which boys and girls of 9 to 12 will enjoy."
+ N Y Times p12 Ag 31 '30 100w

St Louis 28:220 S '30

"The author shows a vividly entertaining style and the ability to recapture and describe childhood events with understanding."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 100w

JACOBS, CHARLES PELTON (CHARLES PELTON, pseud.). Joyous betrayal. 332p $2 Day

30-25310

The triangle situation in this novel is made up of Simplicimus (David) Harney, son of an Indianapolis professor; Dot, the pretty but shallow and catty girl whom he married in haste and regretted at leisure; and Minta, courageous and honest, who loved Simplicimus and suffered in silence.

"Because of its English mannerisms, its dips into snobbishness, its frankness (brought in, it seems, sometimes merely for the sake of 'modernity'), and the unreality of most of its characters in an American scene, 'Joyous Betrayal' left this reviewer cold. And it is a pity, because, whenever Mr. Pelton forgets his responsibilities as Novelist, he writes simply, convincingly, and well."
— + Books p32 D 7 '30 350w

"It is pleasant to have a Middle Western city treated neither as Main Street nor as the gi-gantic symbol of an industrial civilization, but as the natural setting for an American novel about Americans."

JACOBS, C. P.—Continued

+ N Y Times p16 O 26 '30 220w

JACQUEMAIRE, MME MADELEINE (CLEMENCEAU). Life of Madame Roland; tr. by Laurence Vail. 345p il $4 (18s) Longmans

B or 92 Roland de la Platière, Mme Marie Jeanne (Phlipon) [30-24832]

A biography of the "queen of the Girondists" and one of the outstanding figures of the French revolution. The work is detailed and scholarly, and quotes much from Mme Roland's memoirs and contemporary records.

Bookm 72:80 S '30 500w

Reviewed by R. T. House
Books p5 Ag 17 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p4 N 29 '30 350w

"One could wish that Madame Clemenceau-Jacquemaire had devoted more space to the relations of Buzot and Madame Roland, as the dénouement of her book is hurried and out of proportion to the rest. Her work is well documented and very readable; it is also well translated."

+ New Statesman 35:770 S 27 '30 1350w

"This life of Mme. Roland . . . follows closely upon the heels of Catharine Young's biography, 'A Lady Who Loved Herself.' . . Mme. Clemenceau-Jacquemaire's work belongs to an older school of biography. It is mellower than Miss Young's story and deals less in personalities. It places proportionately less emphasis upon Manon's girlhood and devotes more space to her activities as the wife of Jean-Marie Roland. The material has been largely drawn from original sources and is carefully and fully annotated. The English is smooth and readable." M. W.

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 220w

Reviewed by Howard Devree
N Y Times p9 S 7 '30 700w

"The book offers most refreshing intelligence, is so documented that, as to the facts, it is as authentic as a death-mask, and Laurence Vail's translation is better than the proof-reading." A. W. P.

+ — Outlook 155:669 Ag 27 '30 320w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:17 O '30 80w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

Sat R 150:496 O 18 '30 200w

"Madame Clemenceau-Jacquemaire writes of Madame Roland as though she had created her, as though she were the heroine of her novel, instead of the celebrated victim of the Reign of Terror, who went three quarters of the way with the revolutionists, stepped back, and was guillotined. To say that the biographer draws on her imagination is not to suggest for one moment that she invents or falsifies her material; she uses it, not to reiterate history, but to confront the reader with the complex problems of a very unusual personality."

Spec 145:357 S 13 '30 280w

"There is evidence in the narrative to suggest that Madame Clemenceau-Jacquemaire is not as familiar with that inextricably complicated and most dramatic period of the Revolution as she is with Madame's emotions during those years. She is inclined to appraise the events between the declaration of war and the May-June insurrection of 1793 in the manner of her heroine. In presenting the life-story of Madame she is her advocate. She keeps this side idolatry, for a time, full of admiration, though now and again critical; yet in the end she allows herself to be fascinated, deeply moved by the sequel to Madame's aspiration and frantic endeavour. Such fascination may tend to produce a most readable, a distinguished book, as here; but it troubles the historian and occasionally hampers the psychologist."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p724 S 18 '30 1550w

JAFFE, BERNARD. Crucibles; the lives and achievements of the great chemists. 377p il $5 Simon & Schuster

925.4 Chemistry—History. Chemists 30-16955

"Crucibles" is the history of chemistry told in biographies of the great chemists, from Bernard Trevisan (1406-1490), who exhausted all the arts of alchemy to find the philosopher's stone, to Langmuir who invented the gas-filled tungsten lamp. Contents: Bernard Trevisan; Theophrastus Paracelsus; John Joachim Becher; Joseph Priestley; Henry Cavendish; Antoine Laurent Lavoisier; John Dalton; John Jacob Berzelius; Amedeo Avogadro; Friedrich Woehler; Dmitri Ivanovitch Mendeléeff; Svante Arrhenius; Marie Sklodowska Curie; Joseph John Thomson; Henry Gwyn Jeffreys Moseley; Irving Langmuir.

Booklist 27:15 S '30

Reviewed by Irving Astrachan
Bookm 71:568 Ag '30 400w

"There are lapses in scientific accuracy, though of no importance. The biographies cannot be compared with those we have of our great political figures and writers, but this is unquestionably due to the small amount of material available. None of these men was a public figure. They lived largely in retirement, and what is known of them is relatively scant. The book adds nothing to this knowledge, but such was not its purpose. By introducing to the public mind these lifelike pictures of great chemists, 'Crucibles' will play an important role in the wider appreciation of science." Gerald Wendt

+ — Books p3 Je 15 '30 1180w

"The author displays profound scholarship in his chosen field combined with a faculty for painstaking, accurate research. The English is clear, concise, varied and noticeably lacking in scientific subtleties. The volume is adequately provided with portraits and diagrammatic illustrations." M. C. K.

+ Cath World 131:755 S '30 380w

"This reviewer ventures a prediction that in its later career Crucibles will be even more widely read than Paul de Kruif's 'Microbe Hunters,' one of the most successful semi-popular treatments of a scientific subject." T. R. Olive

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:504 Ag '30 300w

"The saga is exciting and Mr. Jaffe has told it with distinction. 'Crucibles' certainly does 'humanize' the knowledge of chemistry." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 Je 14 '30 550w

"Mr. Jaffe's technique is to be commended for deviating from the customary collective biography. What it lacks in dignity of chronological recital, it gains through the interest-compelling treatment of dramatic facts in the hands of a good reporter."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 26 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '30

"The book is well printed and well put together, but it deserves illustrations very much better than those which it has. Jaffe's book is evidence of a growing interest in the history of chemistry, and is itself entertaining. It will stimulate interest in chemistry and will promote appreciation of the value of research. It ought to be in every high-school library." T. L. Davis

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:917 Ag '30 520w

Reviewed by Benjamin Ginzburg
New Repub 64:107 S 10 '30 140w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30

"It may fairly be said that given the method, which he did not invent, Mr. Jaffe has done an excellent job. He has shown that chemistry is both human and adventurous. He will probably create a desire in many of his readers to know more about chemists on the one hand and chemistry on the other."

+ — N Y Times p12 Je 15 '30 950w

"Although this reviewer dislikes and disbelieves in the present substitution of personality sketches for history, this method of popularizing information (not 'humanizing knowledge') is so generally practised that even a dissenter must consider such books as Crucibles for the earnest efforts that they are. Crucibles is competently, often vividly, written. It is full of original characters and of exciting events and the scientific information which is deftly worked into it is undoubtedly accurate." F. L. R.

+ — Outlook 155:268 Je 18 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"The book is a novel attack on the problem of expounding science, consisting of a series of biographical sketches of outstanding and interesting leaders in research, with notes on their contemporaries and memoranda of what each has done. We might call it biographical notes strung on threads of the history of chemistry. Or may be vice versa. The result is an interesting book." Ellwood Hendrick

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1171 Jl 5 '30 1250w

"If we accept the fact that Jaffe's book treats lightly of immense fields of modern chemistry, and is by no means the whole story, that there are dozens of other interesting chemists' lives which could be written in the same manner, then we can commend it for what it does accomplish. In so far as the present reviewer has knowledge of the history of chemistry, Jaffe is generally accurate in his facts both chemical and biographical. We can agree to the interesting and easy style of the book. An adequate bibliography of sources is provided." C. S. Leonard

+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 1800w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:41 O 1 '30 280w

JAIS, REGINA. Legendary Germany, Oberammergau and Bayreuth. 206p il $2.50 Dial press

914.3 Germany—Description and travel. Oberammergau. Bayreuth 30-19859

A record of "places visited and things seen" on a trip thru Germany. The itinerary covered Cologne, the Rhine journey, Bonn, Mainz, Heidelberg, Baden-Baden, the Schwarzwald, Munich, Nuremberg, Nördlingen and Rothenburg. There is a chapter devoted to the Passion Play at Oberammergau, and one to Bayreuth.

Booklist 27:152 D '30

"The author is the conventional tourist, traditionally pleased, impressed and thrilled by the traditional attractions."

Books p14 O 26 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"A book which gives you rather a good idea, although it is pretty sentimental and has some attempts at fine writing that might better not have been made." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 155:507 Jl 30 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

JAMES, EDWIN OLIVER. Christian faith in the modern world; a study in scientific theology. 259p $3 Morehouse [7s 6d Mowbray]

230 Theology

Dr James considers first the problems that the physical universe create for religion; then the Bible, the chief Christian dogmas, and the place of the church and the sacraments in the modern world. Each chapter is provided with a bibliography.

"Dr. E. O. James would help forward the reconciliation of full Christian theology with modern thought, and has produced a short text-book full of facts and ideas, which will be found invaluable in study-circles, such as the Lambeth Report encourages us to set up. . . As we should expect from an anthropologist, Dr. James's chapter on Magic and Religion is particularly good; and may be compared with Dr. Pringle-Pattison's more elaborate but disappointing and conventional treatment of the same subject." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 145:418 S 27 '30 220w

"In attempting to cover so large a ground the author tends to become obscure, and a certain complexity of style does not tend to lucidity."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p499 Je 12 '30 280w

JAMES, HENRY, 1879-. Charles W. Eliot, president of Harvard university, 1869-1909. 2v 382;393p il $10 Houghton

B or 92 Eliot, Charles William 30-29682

A biographical study of the great American educator based upon letters, documents, and the author's personal contact over a period of years with his subject. Henry James (son of William James) has sought not only to show the development of Charles W. Eliot's character and ideals, which were exemplified in his great work for Harvard University, but to reveal the human side of the man. A bibliography of Eliot's principal writings is appended.

Reviewed by T. R. Powell

Books p3 D 14 '30 2150w

"Mr. James brings out with amazing clarity each phase of an extraordinarily many-sided character. He relieves the natural heaviness of the inevitably academic and educational records with well chosen letters and anecdotes, all illustrative and revealing. The various elements are cleverly dovetailed so that the story reads smoothly and consecutively, with its central character progressing steadily in the comprehension and understanding of the reader. This is a biography that will satisfy Harvard men, who, because of their instinctive conviction that President Eliot's life was a part of their own, constitute themselves the severest critics." W. D. Orcutt

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 8 '30 2900w

"Mr. James pretends very little to that omniscience which, especially in recent years, has been the conceit of biographers as well as of novelists and theologians. He finds, instead, that Eliot was a very curious and mysterious fellow, full of inexplicable talents and equally inexplicable stupidities, and prudently leaves him at that. . . If he was not really great, then he was nearly so. Mr. James has made an interesting book about him, and deals with him honestly and sensibly." H. L. Mencken

+ Nation 131:617 D 3 '30 1100w

Reviewed by John Bakeless

N Y Evening Post p5d N 8 '30 800w

"This work is based on personal contacts over a period of years, on a mass of documents the richness of which is revealed by the appendix, and on hundreds of letters, many of which illuminate the narrative. But the work is more than the biography of a man, albeit one of the most notable figures of his time. It is the romance of education as education evolved under the guidance of the man who was Harvard's president during forty years. Henry James's 'Life' is likely to stand as the definitive biography. It is such a book as Eliot would have liked to see written about himself—dispassionate, thorough, and making clear to a later generation not only his vast and revolutionary work in the field of higher education but also his intellectual individuality, uprightness and impartiality."

+ N Y Times p1 N 16 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p3e N 2 '30 550w

"Background is used only to give emphasis and to throw light upon the delineation of Eliot's character and the study of his achievements. Letters and other private papers are freely used, and the picture presented has charm as well as force."

+ Outlook 156:509 N 26 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:6 D '30 200w

JAMES, HENRY. Letters to A. C. Benson and
2 Auguste Monod; ed. by E. F. Benson. ltd ed 126p $6 Scribner [15s Mathews]

B or 92

"These Henry James letters are a small batch addressed to Arthur Christopher Benson, left

JAMES, HENRY—Continued
over from the Lubbock Collection. There is also one side of a correspondence with Auguste Monod, who proposed to translate some of [James's] short stories."—Nation and Ath

---

"The collection will be welcome to lovers of the great stylist as a fresh example of his more intimate manner and as further evidence of his love of friends almost perfectly balanced with devotion to art." Garreta Busey
+ Books p2 D 21 '30 550w

"Some of the letters to M. Monod are in French of a simplicity and clarity which show that even Henry James could not write like Henry James in that language."
Nation and Ath 48:168 N 1 '30 100w

New Statesman 35:740 S 20 '30 500w

Reviewed by Osbert Burdett
Sat R 150:319 S 13 '30 900w

"To literature and to friendship Henry James devoted his great brain and heart: here we have both displayed with a rare dignity and balance. He was a frank as well as an enthusiastic critic of his friend's work. 'In general I feel a certain desire to screw you up just a peg higher. . . to make you squeeze your subject a little tighter, press on it with a little harder thumb.' But no extracts can give the inimitable flavour of this correspondence: after reading it one has a feeling that life has been enriched by contact with a noble mind."
+ Spec 145:467 O 4 '30 200w

"Those for whom Mr. Percy Lubbock's edition of the letters of Henry James is the most precious of letter-books will welcome this slighter volume; for, though the cream of this particular correspondence was skimmed off for the grand collection, what remains is delightful enough to deserve separate publication."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p749 S 25 '30 850w

JAMES, NORAH C. To the valiant. 260p $2.50 Morrow

30-3866

Fred and Lucy, farm laborers, fall in love, marry and go to live in London. The grinding poverty of city life is theirs, and their three sons, Robert, Benny and Sammy grow up under this sordid condition. Benny, made blind in childhood by an accident, is cared for and protected by Robert. Sammy steals an automobile and is later sent by his brothers to a cleaner environment in Canada. Then Benny and Robert unfortunately fall in love with the same girl, Rita, but Robert refuses to declare his love for fear of hurting his blind brother's chance for happiness. He becomes engaged to Lucy, a cheap, gold-digger type, who immediately transfers her affections to Sam upon his return from Canada and runs off with him. Benny becomes aware of Robert's renunciation, refuses to accept it and takes upon himself the heartbreak of losing Rita.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"There is vitality and intelligence in Miss James's writing. Her world is closely observed and vividly recorded, but artistically her second book is less interesting than 'Sleeveless Errand.' " Garreta Busey
+ — Books p2 Ja 26 '30 650w

Reviewed by H. F. McDade
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 11 '30 2000w

"About eight months ago Miss James crashed the ranks of the best sellers with a first novel, 'Sleeveless Errand.' It was about as dismal a picture of a degenerate society as our present crop of disillusioned novels has produced. Now, mirabile dictu, Miss James offers as sane and wholesome and courageous a book as one could wish. How can you explain the same fountain sending forth such sweet and bitter water? The probability is that the publisher, having secured a wide hearing for Miss James through her sensational first novel, is now willing to tempt fortune with this much better book which, although written first, was regarded as too decent for a first approach to the public."
+ Christian Century 47:243 F 12 '30 150w

"The book is quiet, not dramatic, not shot with color, not striking for brilliancy or wit; thus it harmonizes with the characters and the theme. The short sentences, the simple style, the unstrained tone are like the simple emotions and inherent convictions of Fred and Lucy and their children. Miss James's ability to adapt her style to her material is one of the most promising indications of her artistry, just as the range of her sympathies gives promise of future achievement."
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 15 '30 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p46 Mr '30

"It is a fine situation, powerfully conceived. Miss James has worked out its possibilities with a delicate and exacting imagination. There are simplicity and strength in her craftsmanship, and a severity of purpose almost masculine. Nevertheless, one feels a certain failure in the novel. The situation as Miss James has outlined it was pregnant with a tragedy which she fails to accomplish, with an unrealized level of bleak and naked human conflict." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Times p7 Ja 5 '30 700w

"It is a simple and moving story, quietly and beautifully told."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1034 My 10 '30 320w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 230w

JAMES, PHILIP. Early keyboard instruments, from their beginnings to the year 1820. 153p il $8.50 Stokes [30s Davies]

786.1 Pianoforte. Harpsicord. Musical instruments—Makers [30-28594]

"The history of the spinet, harpsichord, and other early keyboard instruments, with a list of their makers. The illustrations are of the finest examples in the museums and private collections in Europe and America."—Publishers' Weekly

---

"This beautifully produced book is illustrated with sixty-five photographic plates of clavichords, harpsichords, dulcimers, virginals, spinets and other keyboard instruments from museums and private collections in England and abroad. It also has an excellent bibliography, and the letterpress is by Mr. Philip James of the Victoria and Albert Museum. Mr. James has written an admirable historical essay on the development of keyboard instruments from the time of the Greek mathematician Ctesibus of Alexandria."
+ New Statesman 35:626 Ag 23 '30 450w

"The illustrative plates of this book have an attraction of their own and will be admired merely as reproductions of objects beautiful in themselves. . . These things, however, are not chosen merely for their beauty but for some special appositeness to the subject-matter of the text, the interest of which is greatly enhanced by its references to the several plates."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p586 Jl 17 '30 550w

JAMES, WILL. Lone cowboy; my life story. 433p il $2.75 (8s 6d) Scribner

B or 92 Cowboys 30-20657

The autobiography of a cowboy who became artist and author. Will James tells in his cowboy vernacular, and with illustrations from his own pen, the story of his wanderings as a little boy under the guardianship of Bopy (a Canadian trapper, Jean Beaupré) and of the early development of his love of horses and his desire to draw them. At Bopy's death the boy goes on his own, and soon grows up to be a tough young rider and cowpuncher. Will James adequately sketches the events of his life on the range, and tells how he finally won success as an artist.

Booklist 27:101 N '30

Reviewed by Lynn Anderson
Bookm 72:82 S '30 320w

"I've read about everything of his and I've seen most of the drawings. Until 'Lone Cowboy' came along 'Smoky' was my favorite. But 'Lone Cowboy,' as far as I'm concerned, is the best thing he ever did. The drawings in this book are pen-and-inks. Some of the best James ever did." Ross Santee
+ Books p1 Ag 3 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 400w

"There is reality and strength and an out of doors cleanness about 'Lone Cowboy.' It is as authentic a picture of the 'wild' west of the last thirty-odd years as has ever been set down, probably. . . Mr. James writes just as a cowboy talks. That is what gives tang to his writing. But what gives it vital substance is an undeniable reality, an honesty that is the essence of fineness." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ag 2 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '30

"There is a distinct flavour of the American magazine of twenty-five years ago about all his drawings, and he is at his best when he is least conscious of them. His horses stand and charge and rear most realistically, for he knows the form not so much by looking at it as by sitting on it. . . There is something decidedly attractive about Mr. James's manner, and as soon as a reader has got into his stride he is apt to go on to the last page without a stop."
+ New Statesman 36:60 O 18 '30 380w

"Before the reader gets through with this book he will have a thorough understanding of the American cowboy. Herdriders the world over are picturesque and romantic persons, the Mexican vaquero, the Argentine gaucho or the Australian bush ranger. Perhaps the American cowboy is the most picturesque of all. At least, here he is in the flesh and blood—the lone cowboy." R. F. Harrel
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 900w

"One gets from him the 'feel' of desert and prairie as many men must have experienced it, but as very few indeed have been able to express it. The result is a book to treasure and to return to whenever one wishes to be convinced all over again that there are open spaces and that in those open spaces men are men." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p5 Ag 10 '30 1100w

"It doesn't matter how a man uses words provided he's got a story to tell. . . The ranch brings a whole vocabulary with it. . . The whole picturesque use of an English language such as Shakespeare never knew or dreamed of flows through the writings of Will James." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 Ag 2 '30 1000w

"The story has fine things in it, and should be read for its native flavor, its grasp of life and its marvelous descriptions of horses. The drawings of animals are alive and interesting, but the drawings of the human beings are dreadful! That is as it should be, when one considers!" B. W.
+ Outlook 155:629 Ag 20 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

Pratt p35 autumn '30

"If there is anywhere a cowboy saga, we have it here." W. B. Shaw.
+ R of Rs 82:14 O '30 280w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"Doubtless Mr. James has in places touched up his materials a bit, and invented a little romance when his story seemed to lack it; but doubtless also his narrative is essentially true. . . Altogether, it is a highly unusual book. The text alone would make it that, and the illustrations are a valuable addition to the text. Merely as a story, it will awaken the spirit of the boy in every adult male. But it is a great deal more than a mere story; it is a revelation of the continued existence in the West—down to 1914 at least—of much that most Americans supposed had forever passed away on our continent." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 7:38 Ag 9 '30 1300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p824 O 16 '30 450w

JAMESON, STORM (MRS GUY CHAPMAN). Decline of merry England. 320p $3 Bobbs [10s 6d Cassell]

942.06 Puritans. Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603. Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714. Church and state in England 30-32125

"To prove her contention that with the rise of the industrial middle class to power in the Puritan Rebellion the ease, spaciousness and gusto of English life were lost, Storm Jameson paints an honest and hearty picture of Elizabethan England, with special emphasis on some of its great figures."—Outlook

Boston Transcript p1 D 13 '30 700w

"As a novelist, Storm Jameson is admirable. As an historian, she has much to learn—but she will not learn it until she can approach her material with an open mind to see what it can teach her instead of with a closed mind looking only for data with which to prove a point." W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:1416 N 19 '30 800w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden
Nation and Ath 47:765 S 20 '30 1150w

"Miss Jameson writes as the literary artist turned historian, with a passionate conviction which gives her book the intensity and clarity of drama."
New Statesman 36:210 N 22 '30 500w

"Here we have a historical study of the kind that makes one sit up and take notice. It is a colorful, eloquent and logically convincing development of the thesis that to the triumph of the Puritan ideal in the twilight days following the Elizabethan age 'may be traced many of the ills of modern society.' . . Storm Jameson has handled her subject with a sure hand, in a rich, colorful style and with compelling interest of presentation." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 500w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p12 D 14 '30 1600w

Outlook 156:469 N 19 '30 80w

"A thoughtful and stimulating essay. The author is to be congratulated on the production of a sincere and well-documented book."
+ Spec 145:741 N 15 '30 200w

JAMESON, STORM (MRS GUY CHAPMAN). Voyage home. 296p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-2679

The second book of a trilogy the first of which was "The lovely ship" (Book Review Digest, 1927). Mary Hervey continues to head the shipbuilding firm of her father but as middle age advances she begins to feel that she has missed happiness in her family. She is a successful business woman, but one by one her children elude her. Turning to her husband she finds that he cannot return her belated love.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"Miss Jameson has an excellent narrative style and a lovely penchant for sub-aqueous tints in her descriptions. She can 'tell' with the best of them, but she fails to 'show' in a dramatic sense." John Chamberlain
+ — Bookm 71:102 Mr '30 500w

"'The Voyage Home' has rich material with curious half lights reflected. It has a sketchy shape, with gaps where careful sewing is needed. Despite slips and slackness, however, you find distinction. When you read 'The Voyage Home' you have met a certain mellowness face to face. Wisdom shines luminous among the pages. The book is like a rather shapeless woman with a lovely expression in her eyes." V. P. Ross

JAMESON, STORM—Continued
Books p3 Ja 19 '30 750w

"The book leaves one strangely unmoved. One feels that the characters' emotions are written about rather than felt. One has to think one's way back into the mentality of that generation to whom the family, that voracious tree, was the basis on which all values depended for their life and justification. 'The Voyage Home' is well-stated family history by a woman with her mind firmly made up." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 450w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:644 F 8 '30 20w

"Unaccountably led off by two pages of comment on the temper of the age, which are purely Virginia Woolf, Miss Jameson's work resumes her own manner thereafter, a manner not lacking in charm of a very fresh kind, and sometimes distinguished by a reputable wit." Vincent McHugh
+ — N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 500w

"There is a fragmentary air about the conclusion of this volume which leaves one dissatisfied, but eager for the volume to come. In Mary Hervey, Storm Jameson has created a fine and recognizable character. There are a depth and insight in her writing which evoke—in Henry James's hackneyed but valuable distinction—the emotion of recognition. She penetrates the obscure corners of human will and motive, and she presents her conclusions in phrases which make even the most familiar objects more real and significant." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Times p9 Ja 19 '30 400w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m F 9 '30 480w

"The book is recommended to all who enjoy an old-fashioned novel of character and social criticism, warm, rich and wise, written with restraint, gracious ease and finish, and illuminated by a deep understanding of human personality and human relations." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:148 Ja 22 '30 250w
Pratt p40 summer '30

"About such people as these it is a pleasure to read; one is always for or against them, never neutral or indifferent. Their defect is (and it is the defect of the whole book) that they are too irresponsible; they have not enough solidity. Miss Jameson calls her book 'The Voyage Home,' but her sense of home—of something stable and abiding, the influence of which operates through the instincts rather than the emotions—is weak." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 149:144 F 1 '30 800w

"It will be seen that 'The Voyage Home' is a second act, a transition between a first act of conquest and a last act of reconciliation; it cannot be called self-contained. But it makes one anxious to read 'The Lovely Ship,' which precedes it, and the book which is to follow it; it gives one the confident hope that the complete work will present a unique and valuable picture of a most masculine society from a woman's point of view."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:880 Mr 29 '30 430w

"An efficient, well-written, and entertaining novel, but too cool by far." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:173 F 1 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p76 Ja 30 '30 420w

JANE, LIONEL CECIL. Liberty and despotism in Spanish America; with a pref. by Salvador de Madariaga. 177p $4 (10s) Oxford
980 Spanish America—History. Spanish America—Politics. Spain—Colonies 30-6818

"A study of the attitude of the Spanish American, no less than of the Spaniard, to politics and to political institutions. The title of the book at once gives a clue to the solution. The cause of unrest, fostered by a spirit of localism, is a clash of ideals, the ideal of liberty and the ideal of efficiency. Their love of personal and of local freedom was born in the seclusion of the provinces of Spain, and later it bred a localism which not only accounted for the divisions of Spanish America after the War of Independence but also produced that political instability which at times expresses itself in so striking a fashion. . . The solution which Mr. Jane gives for these recurring conflicts is the development of communications, of the railways in which Spanish America stands so much in need, and of education, both of which will ultimately break up the spirit of localism."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The author achieves his purpose with a minimum of information and a maximum of surmizing about what, for the purposes of his thesis, he pleases to think are the facts. The argument is eloquently presented, but its willfulness and trifling ingenuity, the gratuitous assumptions, frequent contradictions, dogmatic assertion of highly debatable matters, and consistent exaggeration, leave the reader in a state of dazed exasperation." C. H. H.
— Am Hist R 36:179 O '30 500w

Reviewed by C. L. Jones
Am Pol Sci R 24:1042 N '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

"Certainly the author has proven his contentions to his own satisfaction, but to many of his readers his views will seem unconvincing and even fantastic. Much more study is necessary before it can be said definitely that it was not from outside influence—from France, from England, from the United States—that the modern state systems of Hispanic-America were shaped. To many readers, also, the overstress and repetition of certain expressions will be unconvincing. Because the book is so crowded with interesting statements, one feels the lack of an index. Carelessness is evident in the omission of accents from many Spanish names and words. But despite these defects, if such they can be called, the volume is thought-provoking and should be read by every student of Hispanic-American political institutions." A. C. Wilgus
+ — Hist Outlook 21:396 D '30 480w
N Y Evening Post p8m My 31 '30 50w

"What the reader obtains principally from the book is a really excellent idea of the workings of the Spanish mind, irrespective of liberty and despotism in this world or the next."
+ N Y Times p18 Jl 6 '30 280w
St Louis 28:275 N '30

"It would be impossible to extol this book too highly, and it is not easy to find words in which to praise it enough. No writer of recent times has betrayed so intimate a knowledge of the Spanish character, both in Europe and America, as Mr. Jane, and few authors possess his ability to impart his learning to the reader. Moreover, his style is easy, and the result is a book which should be in the hands of all who are interested in the past or the future of Western civilization." Charles Petrie
+ Sat R 149:425 Ap 5 '30 450w

"Mr. Jane's thesis, which, by the way, he proves up to the hilt, is that Spain's trouble is not, as usually diagnosed, political apathy, but, on the contrary, political idealism . . . Like everyone who comes into contact with things Spanish, he writes con amore, with an enthusiasm which carries the reader away so as to make him feel that he is himself present at this 'spectacle of a race striving whole-heartedly towards a realization of its ideals, of a race content with nothing less than the best.' "
+ Spec 114:sup489 Mr 22 '30 380w

"In writing a book of great value, Mr. Jane has made a thorough and intelligent investigation into the nature of political Spanish America and has explained the nature of the chief general questions of high politics. Too often has this been slurred over in a mere description of the dry facts of Constitutions. Too often has criticism from English or American writers been directed at institutions of a country which regards these institutions not through Anglo-Saxon eyes but through Spanish eyes and with Spanish ideals. Mr. Jane has dealt thoroughly and well with his subject; and the book, devoid of footnotes and an index, is a scholarly work."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1067 D 19 '29 1370w

JASTROW, JOSEPH. Piloting your life; the psychologist as helmsman. 372p $3.50 Greenberg

131 Psychology, Applied Mental physiology and hygiene. Psychology, Physiological 30-13734

"'Piloting Your Life' is frankly aimed at a popular audience, as was its companion volume, 'Keeping Mentally Fit.' Since his retirement from the direction of the department of psychology at the University of Wisconsin Dr. Jastrow has assumed more and more the role of interpreter of psychological findings. These two volumes, growing out of a popular newspaper column, depart from the style of his more scholarly works in increasing simplicity and crispness of utterance. 'Piloting Your Life' has much more content, more 'meat' in it than the earlier work."—Books

Booklist 27:10 S '30

"'Piloting Your Life' is a distillation of many of the aids that biology, psychology and psychiatry have to offer; and it is presented by a man who has arrived at wisdom and richness of life to speak now in favor of the philosophy of courage which he has not merely advocated but exemplified." Lorine Pruette
+ Books p10 Je 22 '30 870w

Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 550w

"Any one looking for a readable discussion of all sorts of psychic phenomena and psychological theories along modern lines will find it here set forth in an unprejudiced and reassuring manner." Isabel Proudfit
+ N Y Times p7 Je 22 '30 530w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:508 Jl 30 '30 100w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

JASZI, OSZKAR. Dissolution of the Habsburg monarchy; a failure in civic training. (Univ. of Chicago studies in the making of citizens) 512p $3 Univ. of Chicago press [13s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

943.6 Austria-Hungary—Politics and government. Hapsburg, House of 29-22812

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by A. I. Andrews
Am Hist R 35:610 Ap '30 800w

Booklist 26:307 My '30

"Mr. Jászi has written an imposing and authoritative work, the most valuable upon the subject in English, both for intelligent analysis and for detailed information. An extensive bibliography and a fairly adequate index round out the book." W. K. Stewart
+ Books p10 Ja 19 '30 950w

"It would be difficult to find any one better fitted to analyze the causes of the monarchy's dissolution than this Hungarian Liberal who studied the problem of Austria-Hungary's sickness for long years before the war and finally became Minister of Racial Minorities in the Cabinet of Count Karolyi." J. F. Scott
+ Current Hist 31:844 F '30 1250w

"Regarded as a history of the gradual disintegration of Austria-Hungary, and as a discussion of the economic, political, and intellectual weaknesses of the monarchy, Professor Jászi's volume must rank high. It is a remarkable study, based upon a wealth of knowledge and thought." W. C. Langsam
+ Hist Outlook 21:86 F '30 620w

"The work is a liberal education in Central European politics, not only of the ante-war period, but of today as well." H. G. Alsberg
+ Nation 130:196 F 12 '30 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30

St Louis 28:19 Ja '30

World Tomorrow 13:232 My '30 140w

JEANNERET-GRIS, CHARLES EDOUARD (LE CORBUSIER, pseud.). City of to-morrow and its planning; tr. from the 8th French ed. of Urbanisme; with an introd. by Frederick Etchells. 301p il $7.50 Brewer [25s Rodker]

710 City planning 29-27594

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"There is very little likelihood that a plan so revolutionary would be carried out, but it has great suggestive value." C. R. Woodruff
-|- Ann Am Acad 149:210 My '30 300w

Booklist 26:149 Ja '30

"A mirth-provoking, thought-provoking book; at times just provoking." Albert Guerard
+ — Books p18 Ja 12 '30 400w

Reviewed by Walter Gutman
Nation 130:130 Ja 29 '30 680w

Reviewed by Lewis Mumford
New Repub 61:332 F 12 '30 480w

"Even if 'the city of tomorrow' were practicable it would be so stereotyped and monotonous as to be very depressing architecturally. Le Corbusier's designs do not spur the imagination or offer any features either pleasurable or inspiring, except cleanliness and mere length and height. Furthermore, his illustrations are almost exclusively very rough and badly drawn pen sketches, or cold stiff diagrams." F. J. Woodbridge
— + Sat R of Lit 6:752 F 22 '30 700w

JEANS, SIR JAMES HOPWOOD. Mysterious universe. 163p il $2.25 Macmillan [3s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

530.1 Physics. Astronomy 30-30954

Some of the most important discoveries and theories of physical science are discussed by the author in the first four chapters of the book: The dying sun; The new world of modern physics; Matter and radiation; Relativity and the ether. In his final chapter, entitled Into the deep waters, he gives his own conclusions concerning the facts presented by modern science.

"The present book is much smaller [than 'The Universe Around Us'] and condenses into its first four chapters a rapid survey of the material presented in the earlier volume, selecting especially those points which form the basis of the author's philosophy. The last chapter, 'Into the Deep Waters,' cannot possibly be ignored by any one who wishes to remain in touch with modern thought." Gerald Wendt
+ Books p3 N 16 '30 1500w

"Doubtless some of his admirers will not applaud his present incursion into the domain of what Dr. David Starr Jordan calls 'sciosophy,' where, as Henshaw Ward would say, 'thobbing' takes the place of realistic discussion of established facts." Maynard Shipley
— Nation 131:653 D 10 '30 1200w

Reviewed by Herbert Dingle
Nature 126:799 N 22 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Benjamin Ginsburg
New Repub 65:111 D 10 '30 1350w

"Sir James Jeans argues persuasively for idealism, but it has yet to be proved that the tendencies in modern physics which lead him to this conclusion are more than temporary. When knowledge has advanced a step further we may find statistical methods abandoned for complete determinism and realism once more rehabilitated. But this is not to deny that Sir James Jeans has written one of the most arresting little books of recent years, a real drama of modern science; its easy-flowing style will make it a favorite book of the layman and its discussion of fundamental problems will give all students of science and philosophy much serious thought."
+ — New Statesman 36:214 N 22 '30 850w

JEANS, J. H.—Continued

"Those readers venturesome enough to follow Sir James in his exposition of this new mystery of the universe will find the maximum of clarity and a rare ingenuity of illustration. Yet the reader, however well prepared, may find himself beyond his depth even before reaching the final chapter entitled 'Into the Deep Waters.' . . For the general reader 'The Mysterious Universe' is an able attempt to make a closed book a little more comprehensible. It is itself the work of a master mind. To those reacting more temperamentally, a futility and irrelevance may be added to a pessimistic strain." Joseph Jastrow

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 600w

"Sir James Jeans has given us a noteworthy book, admirable for its mastery of the subject, its clarity and the philosophical soundness of its conclusions. It has an added interest, which probably never occurred to the author: its close kinship to the recent work of Sir Arthur Eddington. These two knights of the shining telescope stand out among British men of science. Both are in the vanguard of thought; both, though they are masters of mathematical science, can write excellent prose, easily understood by any thoughtful reader; both are popular lecturers." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p4 N 23 '30 950w

Outlook 156:509 N 26 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 83:14 Ja '31 80w

"The scientific philosophy which Plato and Jeans propose, tends to destroy science and lead to its own corruption. The beginning of this process of degeneration is already evident with Jeans. . . It is hardly with a rational or divinely created world that Jeans leaves us in the end, notwithstanding his contention that forms are primary and that God is like a pure mathematician." F. S. C. Northrop

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:481 D 27 '30 3350w

"Even when it is not philosophically enlightening, it is always psychologically interesting to see a distinguished scientist plunging into metaphysical waters in search of a revelation which he may seem to discern in its depths. The conclusion with which Sir James Jeans emerges from his immersion suggests that he has but rediscovered the bone which he happened to be carrying before he took the plunge. It is a pity that an author who commands such authority on scientific grounds should not have recognized that philosophy is as difficult a subject as physics, and deserves to be approached with as much respect." John Pilley

Spec 145:731 N 15 '30 1150w

"It would be difficult to get more real thought packed into such small compass as that of 'The Mysterious Universe.' "

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p970 N 20 '30 500w

JEFFERS, ROBINSON. Dear Judas, and other poems. 129p $2.50 Liveright

811 29-25959

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:151 Ja '30

"Those who care for truth and poetry will make this book their own. Those who do not will scarcely have troubled to read this inadequate praise of it." Babette Deutsch

+ Books p4 Ja 12 '30 1150w

Christian Century 47:757 Je 11 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p105 Jl '30

"The strength of Mr. Jeffers hits you between the eyes. No one can deny his tremendous power, his unique manner, the compulsive force of his narratives, his accurate, sensuous, poetic vision of the lonely acres about his home. His weaknesses come from the same source as his strength, and they are almost equally formidable—a laxity of language; a proclivity for talking symbol, not sense; a scant artistic ruthlessness, particularly in knowing what to leave out; a romanticism gone somewhat rank; an inability to project character, or too loose an ability to project himself." Rolfe Humphries

+ — New Repub 61:228 Ja 15 '30 1350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30

"Dear Judas, is a kind of dilution of The Women at Point Sur. . . Mr. Jeffers' mouthpiece and hero, Jesus, is little short of revolting as he whips reflexively from didactic passion to malice, self-justification, and vengeance. The poem shares the structural principles, or lack of them, of The Women at Point Sur; and it has no quotable lines, save, possibly, the last three, which are, however, heavy with dross. [In] the Loving Shepherdess . . . the events are anecdotal and reversible, and the emotion is lyrical or nothing. . . The poem succeeds in being no more than a very Wordsworthian embodiment of a kind of maudlin humanitarianism—which is a curious but not an unexpected outcome of Mr. Jeffers' sentimental misanthropy." Yvor Winters

— Poetry 35:279 F '30 2080w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

" 'The Loving Shepherdess' is the simplest story Jeffers has written; it is also the most moving. It holds, in a loose pattern, passages of tenderness surpassing the lyrics in which Jeffers qua poet is at his best. It seems to mark a new tendency in Jeffers, in that for once he allows himself to be kind to his subject." Louis Untermeyer

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:942 Ap 19 '30 1900w

Spec 145:sup891 D 6 '30 80w

"The Loving Shepherdess, a tale of the California coast, surpasses in quality of feeling and in the superb simplicity of its utterance, anything that has before come from the pen of Jeffers." P. G. Schindler

+ Survey 64:46 Ap 1 '30 350w

Reviewed by Raymond Kresensky

World Tomorrow 13:90 F '30 400w

JEFFERSON, THOMAS. Correspondence be-
2 tween Thomas Jefferson and Pierre Samuel du Pont de Nemours, 1798-1817; ed. by Dumas
Malone; tr. by Linwood Lehman. 210p $4
Houghton

B or 92 Dupont de Nemours, Pierre Samuel 30-18833

"This series of letters between the third President of the United States and the French economist and philosopher who established in this country the great business which still bears his name, covers the period of a close friendship which lasted from 1798 until Du Pont de Nemours's death in 1817. The correspondence covers a variety of subjects, in which education, economics, and government play a major rôle. The Du Pont de Nemours letters have not previously been printed."—Bookm

Booklist 27:156 D '30

Bookm 72:xxvi S '30 100w

"The sixty letters contained in this volume have that freshness and keenness of interest born of the vitality of spirit of the two men who wrote them, and they are suffused from beginning to end with the romantic nature of the connection between them and their relation to their own times and the years that have followed."

+ N Y Times p18 D 28 '30 500w

St Louis 28:273 N '30

JEFFRIES, GRAHAM MONTAGUE (BRUCE GRAEME, pseud.). Adventures of Blackshirt (Eng title: Blackshirt again). 290p $2 Dodd

29-22049

The man known as Blackshirt was a respectable novelist by day; by night, a gentleman burglar and adventurer. Just for a lark he takes a handful of jewelry from the guests of Sir John Wakefield—only to learn that by depriving a lovely girl, Betty, of her necklace, he has been the source of much unhappiness to her. So the chivalrous Blackshirt personally returns her jewels, which are re-stolen in the excitement that follows the discovery of his presence in the house. The remainder of the story is concerned with Blackshirt's recovery of the necklace for Betty.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p25 O 27 '29 100w

"The story is not superior to the average thriller."
Sat R of Lit 6:640 Ja 11 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p609 Ag 1 '29 220w

JEFFRIES, GRAHAM MONTAGUE (BRUCE GRAEME, pseud.). Through the eyes of the judge. 307p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Hutchinson] 30-14660

The trial of the prisoner in court, with the presentation of evidence and cross-examination, and the verdict rendered, is the method used by the author of this murder tale. Two cousins had grown up, hating each other. Circumstantial evidence indicated that Patrick Spencer was guilty of the murder of his cousin, George Bourne, and so convicted by the jury. But the presiding judge saw more than that: he saw beautiful Giuseppina, who had come every day to court with her brother to follow the trial of her lover. And the judge solved the case.

Booklist 27:31 S '30
Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 My 11 '30 100w

"It is difficult to say why this should not be a better story than it is. Perhaps the trouble is that the judge lacks reality." Dashiell Hammett
— N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 80w

"The finely suggestive denouement provides a conclusion unique in our own knowledge of fictional crime." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 160w

"Allowing for necessary exaggeration this story contains all those characters which the public feel they have a right to expect—a dispassionate Judge with a human side, a cold and merciless prosecuting counsel and, for the defence, one of those theatrical, reckless cross-examiners to whom the conviction of guilty men is, if they only knew it, so largely due. With these and a sullen, self-sacrificing prisoner as his chief characters, Mr. Graeme holds our attention for nearly 300 pages."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p80 Ja 30 '30 250w

JEKYLL, GRACE B. Two boys in South-American jungles; or, Railroading on the Madeira-Mamoré. 167p il $2 Dutton 29-17083

Building a railroad thru the thick of a South American jungle is the theme of the story. Two nineteen-year-old boys, Red and Phil, travel from New York to Porto Velho, and they have many adventures working with the railroad engineers in this strange and dangerous land.

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 152:390 Jl 3 '29 50w
St Louis 28:20 Ja '30

"Vividness marks the writing. Here is dangerous living indeed." T. M. Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 6:426 N 16 '29 70w

"Mrs Jekyll is the wife of a member of the engineering firm which constructed the Madeira-Mamore railroad in the interior of Brazil, and her account of the adventures of Phil and his twin, Reddy, will appeal to girls as well as boys."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 100w

JELUSICH, MIRKO. Caesar; tr. by Bernard Miall. 429p $3 Smith, R.R. [10s 6d Allen, G.]
Caesar, Caius Julius—Fiction 30-31597

A novelized biography which attempts to portray every aspect of Julius Caesar's life, character, and versatile talents and achievements. The author traces the development of Caesar's sensational career from his boyhood days, and the Rome of Caesar's day is well presented as background to the story.

Bookm 72:vi D '30 50w

"Herr Jelusich very nearly succeeds in triumphing over the self-imposed limitations of his method and has written an extremely interesting book. Its faults are precisely those which result from the fictionizing of historical material: artificial drama, arbitrary suppositions, imaginary conversations, 'literary' and often trite dialogue, in short, all the superfluous trappings whereby good biography is turned, out of deference to a ridiculous vogue, into indifferent historical romance. On the other hand, there is more that is sound, well conceived and obviously the product of thorough knowledge and hard thinking." Harry Block
+ — Books p38 D 7 '30 850w
Boston Transcript p1 N 29 '30 600w

"Capitulating hardly ever to the sentimentalities inherent in the form of the novelized biography, Herr Jelusich has made Caesar credible without robbing him of his incredible performance. He has given us Caesar the warrior, the king, the visionary, without destroying our belief in Caesar the man or even Caesar the politician." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 220w

"The book is heavily freighted with Fascist and Germanic propaganda. . . The narrative follows fairly close to that of the Italian historians and is couched in a limpid and sweetish style. The translator has done his best with it, and has succeeded in making it colloquial and fairly lively. It would not be fair, however, to accept 'Caesear: The Man' as an adequate treatment of the age when Rome, the plutocratic republic, was falling into the hands of the Strong Men of their day."
— N Y Times p9 D 28 '30 600w

JENKINS, ALEXANDRA C. Pal, the story of an Airdale; il. by Kurt Wiese. 96p $1.50 (3s 6d) Appleton 30-7746

Pal, an Airedale not long out of his puppyhood, describes his adventures one summer at the lake, where he became acquainted with mice, chipmunks, squirrels, frogs, skunks, and a porcupine. After a strenuous summer he was rather pleased to go back to his city duties as watch dog for his much loved master and mistress.

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ap 19 '30 50w

"This little book, while not in the class with Ollivant's 'Bob, Son of Battle,' is nevertheless, wholesome and kindly in tone and while it will interest dog lovers of 12 and 13, it is simple enough to be read by 9 and 10-year-olds who might find some of the longer and better dog stories too difficult an undertaking." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p16 Ap 13 '30 80w

"With the exception of a few natural history facts about squirrels and bees, etc., which are dragged in, this little book will be found as amusing to the grown-up reader-aloud as to his youthful listeners."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1132 Je 14 '30 130w

JENKINS, DONALD EDWARD. Emmet Thorpe. 263p pa $2 May & co., 755 Boylston st., Boston [7s 6d Macdonald, E.]

A mixture of "German spies, Secret Service heroes, white slavery, kidnapping, dynamite and on up, featuring Emmet Thorpe, a detecting lawyer of Salt Bay, Long Island; Leo Joseph, alias Culclough Majoribanks, an all-round wretch; the Duke of California, a gangster; Dorcas Abbott, of the Massachusetts Abbotts, et cetera." (Books)

JENKINS, D. E.—Continued
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Jl 20 '30 100w

"For the reader who has an admiration for the old dime novel, for the stories of Nick Carter and Dare-devil Dick, 'Emmet Thorpe' will possess a certain interest. There is plenty of action." E. H.
Boston Transcript p3 O 8 '30 450w

"This is a novel in which the characters are as conventional as those in Italian opera and have the same unsurprising views on life and love. The plot, however, is inventive and exciting at times."
+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 17 '30 250w

"Cheerfully casual and active story."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p277 Mr 27 '30 180w

JENKINS, ELIZABETH. Virginia water. 288p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Gollancz]

"Against a London background of drawing rooms and studios the members of fashionably intellectual society deplore the universe. In contrast to these sophisticates, Fanny Arne slips in and out of the maze like a startled nymph. Almost oblivious to the presence of all those gifted people, her whole self is concentrated in worship of the historian, Roger Simon. His complex processes are soothed by her naivete and he graciously encourages her to fall in love with him. That she does, to the full extent of her nature and they go away together, for a discreet idyllic interlude in Paris. Then life resumes itself once more—that is, for Roger, while Fanny, numbed into a state of passive despair, awakes to the echoes of passionate emotion. Subsequently she marries, not Roger, but his nephew Anthony. Her entry into a civilized family under these conditions produces reactions that merge into a pattern minute and finely drawn."—Books

"An unusual novel which smoothly sustains itself by the measures of an intellectual and lyric harmony." Halle Schaffner
+ Books p12 Ap 20 '30 500w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:52 O 12 '29 350w

"Miss Elizabeth Jenkins is what I should call muzzily promising. Her persons are vague, as though seen through a mist, in which indeed they sometimes almost disappear. But the glimpses one does get are enough to make one want to see them more clearly. She would do well, too, to pay more attention to the description of the concrete scene." E. S.
— + New Statesman 34:395 D 28 '29 120w

"For a first book this is an extremely noteworthy production. A little more robustness, a less poetically-misted vision, and a little emendation of her tendency to be grammatically obscure when she is evoking a subtle mood—if Miss Jenkins's next work takes this direction, it should be a volume worth waiting for and a pleasure to read." Lillian Rogers
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1000 N 28 '29 340w

JENKINS, MACGREGOR (RUSTICUS, pseud.). Emily. 296p $2 Bobbs

Dickinson, Emily—Fiction 30-24240

A novel "based on the life and character of Emily Dickinson, the poet. Emily is the daughter of a Massachusetts congressman. Returning from a season in Washington she visits a friend at the vaguely identified town of Phillipston, and falls instantly in love with the pastor of the Second Church, a brilliant young preacher. They meet, confess their instant and mutual love, and separate to face their problem rationally and courageously. His passion is handled by Emily's family with infinite tact; and she is discreetly left and trusted to find her own soul's salvation. And when her lover comes, having shed his cloth, she sends him away again, lacking confidence in the greatness of her own love; and almost dies of heartbreak."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"To read it is like finding The Reveries of a Bachelor with exclamation marks in the margin and a forget-me-not pressed between the pages, or hearing The Maiden's Prayer played by one's great-aunt in a cashmere shawl and black fingermitts."
Bookm 72:xii O '30 230w

"The author, although he sturdily assures us his hero and heroine are in the midst of a devastatingly beautiful romance, continues to write with a pathetic confidence in our imaginations. Emily at the end is no more real than she was at the beginning. She feels herself the center of a drama. But it appears to us no more than the emotional growing pains of any well brought-up girl who has involuntarily selected Emerson's essays as preparation for life." D. F. Gilman
— Books p18 S 21 '30 950w

"The fictionized Emily is a far less vivid personage than the cryptic reality. And in explaining the evolution of the poetess Mr. Jenkins has not succeeded at all. What he has succeeded in doing is to construct, a little awkwardly at times, but with humility and impeccable taste, a rather beautiful love story which ought to be considered on its own merits. Technically the novel is far from good. But the imagined lover is a curiously real and breathing personage, and the novel, with all its shortcomings, has charm." J. F. S.
+ — Boston Transcript p1 O 4 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

Nation 131:450 O 22 '30 220w

"Those who care for the reputation of this poet cannot like what Mr. Jenkins has done. Without the borrowed name, this little story would not be remarkable, but neither would it offend. It might stand upon merits that do not now appear. Of course, every one who reads the poetry and the letters of this poet tends to make his own biography. Each reader makes his own original poet from what he finds in her work; any conception that differs greatly from his own may prove to be distasteful to him and, if he cares greatly, even a little shocking. Nevertheless, Emily Dickinson's poetry and her prose remain—a very solid substance with which all our reconstructions of her life and nature must be strictly compared." Genevieve Taggard
— N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 500w

"Though starting weakly, the story closes with measurable strength. . . The left-hand marriage of fiction and biography, so enthusiastically promoted of late, seems strangely barren. The reason is clear; trammeled by biography, the imagination is prohibited free and virile play. When the real novel of Emily Dickinson is written the reader will be unable to identify the character. He will be aware only of the spiritual magnitude of the immolation."
— + N Y Times p24 S 28 '30 700w

"It was bound to come. And it was bound to be bad. What with Emily Dickinson's 'mystery' being increasingly exploited, with three biographies giving three wholly different and wholly unsatisfactory love stories, with the poet's centenary being celebrated by a mixture of acumen, misunderstanding, and controversy, someone was sure to write a novel 'based' on the life of our greatest woman poet. . . The publishers ask: 'Can it be that this novel comes closer to the center of truth than much designated formal biography?' The answer is No. It cannot be." Louis Untermeyer
— Sat R of Lit 7:424 D 6 '30 1200w

"One feels that it is the popularity of the subject rather than any merit in the story that has brought this book before the public. The author has done little more than put into novel form what has already been done in biography, and the work is unworthy of the subject." F. S. F.
— Springf'd Republican p7e O 5 '30 650w

JENKINS, MACGREGOR (RUSTICUS, pseud.). Emily Dickinson, friend and neighbor. 150p $3 Little

B or 92 Dickinson, Emily Norcross 30-26597

"An unpretentious book by a man who lived in Amherst and knew the great poet well when he was a little boy and she a middle-aged woman. Mr. Jenkins' stories of Amherst, the Dickinson 'mansion' and 'Miss Emily' directly contradict some of the old wives' tales that have grown up to cloud the humanity of the poet."—Outlook

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

"As an actual contribution to our knowledge of the poet, the book has little value. Apart from a few meagre facts, the chief interest of the book is in the half-dozen notes to the Jenkins family; notes whose wilful obscurity serve once more to emphasize the strange psychic trauma that constitutes the mystery of Emily Dickinson."

Bookm 71:336 Je '30 400w

Reviewed by Genevieve Taggard

Books p2 Je 1 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 550w

"Mr. Jenkins has written a delightful, and a salutary, book."

+ Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '30

"His discussions of Miss Dickinson as poet are modest and rather commonplace; it requires no special discernment, for example, to remark that she was 'an artist in words.' His most important contribution to the study of her work lies in his emphasis on the individuality of her most casual acts and her most spontaneous sayings."

+ Nation 130:657 Je 4 '30 230w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch

New Repub 63:211 Jl 9 '30 200w

"It is a sketch of a unique personality done with fidelity, affection and balance. We lay particular stress on this last, for it is not to be gainsaid that Emily Dickinson's whimsicalities laid her open to the charge of eccentricity. Such a portrait as Mr. Jenkins has drawn might easily have assumed the nature of caricature had it been done with less understanding. As it did not, 'Emily Dickinson, Friend and Neighbor,' is a rare biographical fragment."

+ N Y Times p2 My 18 '30 800w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 220w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:22 My 7 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Reviewed by Louis Untermeyer

Sat R of Lit 6:1170 Jl 5 '30 120w

"Those who love this remarkable poet, born exotically amid New England's puritanism and high thinking, will regret that no memories have been recorded by the friends of her youth to match these memories of a youthful friend of her middle age."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 700w

Reviewed by Conrad Aiken

Yale R n s 20:396 winter '31 30w

JENNINGS, HERBERT SPENCER. Biological basis of human nature. 384p il $4 Norton [15s Faber]

575.1 Variation (biology). Heredity. Man—Influence of environment. Eugenics 30-11273

An understanding of human nature based on the principles of heredity is the ultimate aim arrived at in Professor Jennings's study. The new biological idea upon which he founds his conclusions is that the genes are the determining influences in our nature. The author shows how the genetic system operates, its effect upon development, and the relationship between the hereditary genes and environment. The book contains some interesting discussions on the bearing of genetic constitution on the individual and his characteristics, the problem of eugenics, the biological basis of marriage, and the origin of diverse organic types.

"The reviewer can conceive of no class of thinking individuals, not even excluding geneticists, who would not find this volume of extreme interest." A. E. Stearn

+ Am J Pub Health 20:802 Jl '30 500w

"The volume is directed at the general reader and is perhaps, even for that audience, somewhat over-simplified. But there is no sacrifice of accuracy and no tendency toward sensationalism. The discussion at all times is on a decently dignified level. It is a popular work of sound scholarship. It is the first and only book in the field of social biology that has come to the reviewer's attention that he is willing to indorse without reservations and recommend without misgivings." E. B. Reuter

+ Am J Soc 36:498 N '30 280w

Booklist 27:16 S '30

"The style of this book is excellently suited to its purpose. No effort is made toward sprightly or pontifical coloring and there are no unnecessary technicalities of word or phrase. Yet the simplicity and clearness of scientific exposition is exhibited throughout and passages of argument are admirably convincing." H. M. Parshley

+ Books p15 Ap 27 '30 1050w

Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '30 500w

Reviewed by W. P. Lemon

Christian Century 47:965 Ag 6 '30 300w

"The present book is the ablest presentation of the great problem of heredity and environment that I have yet encountered. In addition to the fascinating information it contains, and to the intrinsic interest of its subject matter, there is the constant joy of watching an admirable mind at work. Here is a genuine embodiment of the scientific attitude—patient experiment guided by acute reasoning, extreme caution in drawing inferences. The one fault I can venture to find with the book is a certain repetitiousness; it insists on some of its points too often and at too great length." Henry Hazlitt

+ — Nation 131:181 Ag 13 '30 1450w

"It is written in unsurpassably simple language, it is altogether without the distortions and half-truths so often an inevitable accompaniment of simplifications; the author is as free from an idée fixe as is humanly possible, with the result that every controversial subject is examined with cool objectivity; and the book is the work of an expert in the field." Augusta Alpert

+ New Repub 63:106 Je 11 '30 620w

"Although popular in intent, the book never shirks technical accuracy. It is admirably rich in detail drawn from a variety of studies, and is, moreover, carefully documented. In its demonstration of the variety and complexity of the genetic constitution it becomes epochal: for this is a picture in sharp contrast to that accepted ten years ago, one which has not yet become familiar even to many biologists, although the scientific basis for it has been laid over a series of years by many workers, most prominent of whom has been Professor Jennings himself." Ida Craven

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 480w

"If the reading is carefully done, with no skipping of the more difficult passages, the reader will emerge well-armed against all the fatalists, charlatans and fakers who of recent years have been twisting biological fact to bolster up a pseudo-scientific toryism." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 13 '30 1650w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine

Outlook 155:70 My 14 '30 620w

"It is a book popular in the best sense because while reasonably simple and untechnical, it is free from any of the spurious dressing which some persons mistake for popularization. It is also scientific in the best sense because it is not based exclusively on laboratory study and is cautious in deduction, avoiding extreme theory. On the subjects of heredity and environment it tells the public better than any other recent book of similar type what it is safe for the public to accept."

JENNINGS, H. S.—Continued
+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 10 '30 1050w

"As an investigator of highest repute, as an unprejudiced thinker, as an experienced teacher, Dr. Jennings has written the most significant non-technical book that has appeared on the bearing of modern biology upon human affairs." E. C. MacDowell
+ Survey 65:98 O 15 '30 450w

"Professor Jennings's rather scrappy but well-written and entertaining volume will not, we expect, appreciably increase the number of eugenists, but it is a very convenient and interesting summary of the question as it presents itself at the moment."
Times [London] Lit Sup p794 O 9 '30 2000w

"A gift of the gods for those who want a sane, reasonable, but vivid discussion of biological questions. To anyone even remotely interested in the subject, the book will hold all the fascination of a novel, while maintaining the cautious precision of the scientist." P. L. Clark, Jr.
+ World Tomorrow 13:346 Ag '30 280w

Reviewed by H. W. Haggard
Yale R n s 20:187 autumn '30 650w

JENSSEN, CARLA, baroness. I spy; the true story of a woman secret service agent. 282p $3 Dodd [18s Jarrolds]

B or 92 Spies. Secret service 30-29232

Post-war espionage, which includes the work of secret agents in the prevention of smuggling, narcotic distribution and Soviet activities, is the business engaged in by the narrator, who in this volume reveals many of the methods and dangerous adventures of her work.

"This account of certain adventures in post-war espionage belongs to that lurid limbo where, at least so far as the reader is concerned, the line between fact and fancy is so vague as to be quite invisible. Trader Horn is hardly more fantastic than the author when she tells of her work for the Union of South Africa Intelligence Department, hunting gun-runners among the Zulus and Bechuanas, and her later European exploits in international intrigue—with the aid of 'the poisoned kiss,' a species of knockout drops." Will Cuppy
Books p24 S 28 '30 80w
N Y Times p47 D 7 '30 100w

"This latest book about spies and spying will appeal to the public which likes literature of this kind. Its novelty lies in the fact that the author, who was first an unofficial agent in South Africa and later served with the British Intelligence Service from 1923-1927, writes not of the familiar adventures during the World War, but of present day activities. She intends to make clear that espionage in peace times is almost as prevalent as in war times, and that it is practiced by all European nations. . . She tells her story with considerable skill."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:210 O 11 '30 350w

JEPSON, SELWYN. I met murder. 319p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hodder]

30-22431

One by one, five members of a dinner party meet death. The motive is so puzzling and the murderer so clever that Inspector English is completely at sea, until the unofficial Jupp comes to his aid.

Bookm 72:xxv N '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 12 '30 150w

"This gory tale is told in smooth, even urbane, prose and is as mystifying a yarn as you are likely to find, though the mystification is helped by some slight authorial unfairness and by the utterly inconsistent character of the murderer." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 100w

"This is a first-rate story. It is well written, the suspense is sustained and it offers novelty."
+ N Y Times p18 N 2 '30 220w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e O 19 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber
Sat R of Lit 7:232 O 11 '30 80w

"The secret is cleverly preserved until almost the very end, but enough clues are given for the clever reader to gain an inkling of the truth."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p253 Mr 20 '30 80w

JESSE, FRYNIWYD TENNYSON (MRS HAROLD MARSH HARWOOD). Lacquer lady. 441p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-26050

The background of this historical novel is the story of the annexation of Upper Burma by the British. Fanny, a Burmese girl educated in a Brighton boarding school, becomes a maid of honor at the court in Mandalay. At the same time her English schoolgirl friend, Agatha, marries a young missionary to Burma. A vivid contrast in the characters of the two girls and their reactions to the romantic but pasteboard red-and-gold Burmese life, is drawn against the rule of King Thibaw. Fanny's spurned love for the French engineer, Bonvoisin, plays an important part.

"Here in glowing and convincing colors is a remote corner of recent history, of whose authenticity we are assured. What is remarkable is that the book gives not only a bright picture of strange and enchanting times and places, but also a sense of the reality of the characters who enacted the closing scene of that little country, overlaid and betrayed by the influence of women." Mary Ross
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p30 Ap '30 230w
Booklist 26:204 F '30

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Bookm 71:215 Ap '30 230w

"'Lacquer Lady' is full of might-have-beens. Strange fancies might have lit the exotic background. Stripped of the evidence of research, the simple story might have stood unforgettable. But as it is, the book drowns in a heavy sea of data and description."
— + Books p5 F 2 '30 500w

"The story is told with such intuitive character analysis, such clear understanding of the history it unconsciously influenced, and such brilliant descriptions of city and court, that the novel is not only what a novel should be, first, last and always—a good story—but it recreates authoritatively, a chapter in the development of Great Britain's colonial empire whose 'romance' were else forgotten." Frances Bartlett
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 1500w

"Miss Jesse has told a glamorous tale of life within the palace, of Burmese ways, of the whole gorgeous, light-opera kingdom."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 1 '30 470w
Cleveland Open Shelf p79 My '30

"A good deal of material, some of it extremely interesting, is stitched and pieced together in a patient, conscientious fashion that excites admiration but does not otherwise excite. . . The book is remarkable where it is purely informative, not very remarkable when it deals with the love affairs, marriages and souls of its characters." L. L. Irvine
+ — Nation and Ath 46:403 D 14 '29 200w

"I respectfully submit that historical facts should not be used as the materials of fiction until after they have been used as the materials of history. I further submit that Miss Jesse could have written a book no less interesting from the point of view of narrative, and no less brilliant from the point of view of description if she had confined herself to what is actually capable of being known of these events. But, with so much said, there shall be an end of carping, for she has written a novel that is as brilliant and interesting as one can reasonably require." E. S.

+ — New Statesman 34:333 D 14 '29 800w

"Taking ready made material, setting it out in fine prose and with a fine objectivity, Miss Jesse has produced a book as richly colored as the people with whom it deals. The father of Fanny Moroni was a weaver of velvets, and aptly the author uses the figure of a tapestry ceaselessly being woven by the years to unify the book and to bridge the transitions. The story unrolls from the looms steadily, inevitably; and if it lacks movement, if it has not the breath and living blood of reality, it yet has the brilliance of a procession of ingeniously woven scenes and figures." Lillian Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 1 '30 700w

"In 'The Lacquer Lady' Miss Tennyson Jesse has turned all her powers and opportunities to good account."

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 19 '30 600w

"Miss Jesse has written a gorgeous book. Her historical background is definite and real; her people live."

+ N Y World p10m Ja 26 '30 200w

"A highly readable book which creates interest out of what must be to most readers whole cloth, and sustains it steadily. . . The story is melodramatic, based as it is upon a picturesque and startling series of events, and the general effect of the book is highly exotic. The author has an agreeable literary style, skill in descriptive writing and has the technique of historical fiction at her finger-tips." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 154:148 Ja 22 '30 280w

Pratt p40 summer '30

"The story is almost too strange for fiction; there are many incompatibles to reconcile, many contacts and relationships too fortuitous and fantastic to have more than a decorative significance. But in its other aspects, its atmosphere, its picturesque quality, above all, in its sensitive portrayal of the collision between two civilizations, between England and Burma, the steam-roller and the flower, 'The Lacquer Lady' is fascinating." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 148:731 D 14 '29 500w

"Although the chronicle is too long and occasionally tedious, the conception of the three women as racial types in contrast is always extremely interesting. Miss Jesse has been particularly successful in the handling of the details of life at the Burmese court."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1016 My 3 '30 550w

"The book is remarkable for its character studies of the two girls who are traced remorselessly to old age. With the personages of the native court the author is far less successful, and one has the impression that she has tried to assimilate too much material."

+ — Spec 143:922 D 14 '29 160w

"The facts in themselves make sufficiently good reading. But with mere romance this author has never been content: she cares to analyse the forces at work and to reveal the pattern. It is this power of hers that makes of her novel much more than a lurid Eastern tale."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1026 D 5 '29 800w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

JESSUP, ELON HUNTINGTON. Skis and skiing. 224p il $3 Dutton [4s 6d Hutchinson]

796 Skis and ski running 30-1901

A guide to the art of skiing, for both experts and beginners. Contains chapters on how to buy skis, what to wear, high mountain equipment, skiing contests and how to build skis. Illustrated with plates and many diagrams.

Booklist 26:269 Ap '30

Books p13 Mr 9 '30 100w

"Elon Jessup is an enthusiast upon all outdoor sports, but especially does he seem to love skiing. The little volume contains information for beginners and practical advice about complying with weather conditions that the experienced skier will be glad to have. There is a chapter on contests and another about tumbles and how to take them."

+ N Y Times p11 Ja 19 '30 170w

"All you need to know about skiing appears to be included in Skis and Skiing." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 80w

Pratt p26 summer '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p943 N 29 '28 150w

JESSUP, PHILIP CARYL. United States and the World court; foreword by Elihu Root. 159p $2 World peace foundation

341.1 Hague. Permanent court of international justice. United States—Foreign relations 30-269

A statement of the Senate reservations in regard to the accession of the United States to the World court. The author is assistant professor of international law at Columbia university.

Booklist 26:263 Ap '30

"The author succeeds perfectly in keeping out of his narrative every indication of personal feeling or conviction. He begins with the action of the Senate on Jan. 27, 1926, when it adopted a resolution agreeing to the accession of the United States to the World Court subject to five reservations and three additional qualifications, and from that point tells in detail in a straightforward and very lucid narrative that is stripped of unnecessary verbiage, all that has since happened."

+ N Y Times p18 D 15 '29 320w

St Louis 28:132 My '30

JOAD, CYRIL EDWIN MITCHINSON. Matter, life and value. 416p $6 (18s) Oxford

117 Matter. Life. Worth [30-2638]

"Mr. Joad has set himself the task of outlining a metaphysic which affirms the reality of at least three different classes of entity, matter, life, and objects of value. The first part deals with life and the material world, beginning with vitalism and materialism seen through a statement of the materialist hypothesis and the evidence against materialism. Then the case for pluralism is discussed, and the attraction of monism is confronted with a criticism of monistic theories and the statement of the need for a further factor. . . The second part consists of a discussion of life and the world of value, beginning with aesthetics as the awareness of beauty and ethics as the awareness of goodness."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"To me every page of this redundant book sticks out with escape mechanisms, and the whole is an exaltation uncontaminated by experience and ominous with the problems and the depressions against which it is a reaction and from which it is a flight. And not altogether a natural and spontaneous flight—a wilful one, rather. For the argument does not arise as a conclusion based on discovery and analysis, but as a special plea to vindicate a foregone conclusion regardless of discovery and analysis." H. M. Kallen

— Books p4 F 23 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 F 12 '30 900w

Reviewed by C. D. Burns

Int J Ethics 40:559 Jl '30 300w

"The book is to be recommended, not for its results, but for its vigor in suggesting and sharpening issues and problems. The volume is on the whole well put together, and, if over-repetitious, it is nevertheless lucidly and forcefully written." D. W. Gotshalk

+ — J Philos 27:415 Jl 17 '30 1850w

"It is a useful work; one of Mr. Joad's greatest talents is for exposition, and his survey

JOAD, C. E. M.—Continued
of contemporary theory is both wide and acute. Almost the only philosophers apart from those of the past fifty years with whom he shows a deep and intimate acquaintance are Plato and Aristotle; and his interpretation in modern terms of these two is so original and refreshing that we are forced to regret his apparent lack of interest in other classical European philosophers. Perhaps Mr Joad has wished too much to appear 'up to date': there is sometimes an air of speciousness in his display of learning." Alan Porter

+ — Nation and Ath 46:437 D 21 '29 1000w

"The style of writing is always lucid and pleasant and sometimes eloquent. The views of others are well and fairly discussed. The author's own views are stated modestly without trying to disguise the difficulties involved or pretending that only a fool could think otherwise. Along with these qualities the book has marked defects which appear to be the result of carelessness and haste." A. D. R.

+ — Nature 124:979 D 28 '29 700w

New Statesman 34:sup vii O 12 '29 1000w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill

Spec 143:547 O 19 '29 950w

"Mr. Joad has a compelling style. He leads nimbly on from one conquered point to another, and his own confidence in his thesis is convincing, at any rate for the time being."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p228 Mr 20 '30 850w

JOAD, CYRIL EDWIN MITCHINSON. Present and future of religion. 310p $2 Macmillan [10s 6d Benn]

270.8 Christianity 30-12631

"The purpose of this book is threefold: to give an account of the state of religion in this country to-day, to analyse the reasons for its admitted decline, and to indicate the conditions which must be satisfied if it is to revive." Mr. Joad explains that the writing of his book has proceeded from two deeply held convictions: first that the need to believe is fundamental, and that man's spiritual health suffers if the need is not satisfied; second, that the religion preached by the churches does not satisfy this need to-day, and is likely to satisfy it less in the future.

Booklist 27:49 O '30

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes

Books p14 Je 15 '30 220w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 30 '30 550w

"To the sophisticated in this range of discussion the earlier part of the volume will present little that is new, some things that are superficial, and much that is exaggerated. It seems scarcely a true cross-section of the religion world. In the second part, however, in which the author offers some constructive matter, the reader will find keen reasoning and criticism of many incomplete theories of religion that will do his heart good." S. B. Meeser

+ — Crozer Q 7:530 O '30 320w

"Mr. Joad calls himself a philosopher, but in the name of philosophy one must protest against this kind of writing, which justly provokes the scorn of historians and others, and leads them to think of philosophy as a field where vague generalizations are accepted as a substitute for accurate investigation. Nor can Mr. Joad hope for a favorable verdict on his book as a whole from brother philosophers, for it is a glaring instance of failure of philosophical nerve before the real difficulties of the situation." Leonard Hodgson

— Living Church 83:671 S 13 '30 500w

"Mr. Joad has written a very bright, amusing, and interesting book, but it leaves one slightly puzzled. . . Having told us that religious belief is rapidly on the decline, that the young do not believe in God and do not want to, that the churches are disintegrating and without a future, Mr. Joad suddenly doubles in his tracks and tells us that religion has a great future before it, and that religious belief will become more and more popular and important." Leonard Woolf

— + Nation and Ath 46:578 Ja 25 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Benjamin Ginzburg

New Repub 63:377 Ag 13 '30 1250w

"It is notoriously difficult to state with any approach to clearness what is meant by 'religion.' . . It is, however, reasonable to expect an author to attempt to indicate what exactly he himself means by the word, and to use it with some degree of consistency. Mr. Joad makes no such attempt. . . When he is discussing its present position it appears to mean 'the Churches' or 'the organised religion of the Churches'; when he is discussing its future it becomes the 'political impulse' on the one hand and mysticism on the other. This procedure is certainly confusing. It suggests that Mr. Joad had not time to think with sufficient clearness before he sat down to write this book. There can be as little doubt that it is the product of a serious mood as that it is infected by unfortunately loose thinking."

— + New Statesman 34:580 F 8 '30 700w

Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee

Outlook 156:190 O 1 '30 280w

St Louis 28:203 S '30

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 6:1187 Jl 12 '30 850w

"Mr. Joad's guidance is cogent because it exhibits throughout the difficulties that the guide has overcome in order to reach a conclusion to which he has found himself—as it would seem—more compelled than attracted. The book is in no sense autobiographical; none the less it is the fruit of wrestling." A. S. Duncan-Jones

+ — Spec 144:170 F 1 '30 1050w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 27 '30 550w

"The whole book rings with sincerity, blazes with conviction, and is hard to lay aside. Preachers ought to read it; but they should be cautious in the matter of copying sermons from it. Their laymen are very apt to read it also." C. S. Brown

+ Survey 65:100 O 15 '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p154 F 27 '30 1350w

JOB, THOMAS. Giants in the earth. 155p $2 Harper

812 Rølvaag, Ole Edvart 29-25325

A dramatization of Rölvaag's novel of the same name, in which Beret, the wife of Per Hansa is the central character. The dramatic director of Carleton college, Northfield, Minnesota, has made the stage version, and the play was first produced at the college, under the supervision of Professor Rölvaag himself.

Booklist 26:195 F '30

"The epic battle with the earth never really comes into the play at all. The range of emotions and the mentality of the characters are so limited that it seems doubtful if satisfactory drama can be made out of the immigrant wave which followed such pioneers as the Garlands. After you have read a few of the attempts you are ashamed to look a sack of flour in the face, it apparently represents such dull ignorance and discontent." W. P. Eaton

— Books p20 Ja 12 '30 140w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:39 Ja '30

JOELSON, ANNETTE. Dancing girl of Gilead. 260p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [6s Heinemann] 30-547

In a farm house in the little Karoo in South Africa hung a portrait of an exquisitely beautiful girl in dancing costume, looking much out of place. And just as much out of place the original had been in the days of her residence there. She had come to Gilead, lived among its kindly inhabitants, loved big Petrus Marais, married him and borne his child, and had gone away again leaving Petrus desolate. But that was the way of the dancing girl; she did not belong in Gilead.

"This one romantic interlude in the dull life of the Dutch farmer is beautifully told."
+ Bookm 71:xxiv Mr '30 100w

"A strain of gentle reverence sifts through the book. It gives depth, but not power. It gives sweetness, but not strength."
Books p10 F 23 '30 250w

"This is not a 'large, diffuse picture of life'—but it is a very good small and compact picture, with only a few excellent characters in it, rather than many, many faint and vague ones. It is a simple story told simply, with no abstract analysis of character, a fearless portrayal of human passion, that brings refreshment both in the style and manner and content of the modern novel, and rather reminds us of the stories in the Apocrypha in style and in manner, and even in content." R. C.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 15 '30 550w

"This first novel is neither very good nor exceptionally bad. A strained, incessant striving for effect obscures the value of a story that might have been excellent, and of prose that might have been lucid and refreshingly undecorative. . . The book possesses virtues which justify a reviewer in believing that the author may eventually give us the beauty of which there is here an occasional glimpse. There are, too, flashes of insight and penetration, but they are only flashes."
— + N Y Times p16 D 28 '30 200w

"This story of the South African veld is simply and sincerely written, but it is too romantic an affair to be taken seriously."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p578 Jl 18 '29 200w

JOHANNSEN, ERNST. Four infantrymen; tr. from the German by A. W. Wheen (Eng title: Four infantrymen on the western front, 1918). 220p $1.50 King, A.H. [5s Methuen]
30-9239

"A German private's account of the summer of 1918, when the Germans fought on, apparently knowing they were defeated."—New Repub

"Ernst Johannsen's 'Four Infantrymen' is neither reticent nor hysterical—it is simply sordid and dull. It abounds in detailed descriptions of the physical processes of trench life and the mutilation of warfare that are characteristic of German war books. These are alternated with interminable discussions among the four protagonists as to the nature of God, war, patriotism, and so forth." Lambert Davis
— Books p26 Ap 13 '30 100w

"The conversation in this book is witty, philosophical, cynical but not sophomoric—extraordinarily good, especially in view of the fact that in private life the author is an electrician. His picture of the War is less horrible physically than many others, but the mental state of his characters is as cheerless, fundamentally, as a mental state can be." G. T. Hellman
+ New Repub 62:357 My 14 '30 120w
New Statesman 35:sup xvi My 10 '30 100w

"Here is a war book that is worthy of Remarque. The book's merit does not lie particularly in its horribly detailed pictures of the cruelty and misery of war. . . As a war picture, 'Four Infantrymen' is excellent. . . What here is new is the literal transcription of the bitter criticism of embusqué society which pervaded the front line trenches and which produced revolutions in three of the world's greatest empires."
+ N Y Times p8 My 25 '30 420w

"Once, and once only, does Herr Johannsen give the slightest hint that he is capable of anything but rank blatancy. That occurs on page 120, where, by the juxtaposition of a typical extract from a patriotic war-novel with the blunt reality, he scores a good point. All the rest is inferior Remarque. 'We are a queer lot, us Four,' says one of Herr Johannsen's quartet, and though ungrammatical, he was right. This queerness is made even queerer by the heavy-handed translation."
— Sat R 149:558 My 3 '30 280w
Reviewed by Stanley Went
Sat R of Lit 6:1105 Je 7 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p567 Jl 10 '30 120w

JOHN DEWEY, the man and his philosophy; addresses delivered in New York in celebration of his seventieth birthday. 181p $2 Harvard univ. press [10s 6d Oxford]
B or 92 Dewey, John 30-14296

"In October 1929 Dr. Dewey was seventy years old, and the occasion was used to pay him a tribute such as few men in the world have received, and no other American in this generation. His friends and present and former pupils (the first category includes the others) gathered in New York in three meetings. At one, his contributions to education were discussed, and at another, his work as a philosopher. At the third, a luncheon at the Hotel Astor attended by 2300 persons, the theme was his contributions to general social welfare and he himself was the final speaker. This volume contains nine of the addresses made at these three meetings, the authors being Ernest Carroll Moore, Jesse H. Newlon, Isaac L. Kandel, George H. Mead, Herbert W. Schneider, James A. Angell, Jane Addams, James Harvey Robinson, and Dr. Dewey."—Survey

Booklist 27:62 O '30
Boston Transcript p3 Jl 5 '30 550w
Reviewed by L. M. Pape
Int J Ethics 41:276 Ja '31 450w

"The speeches constitute a worthy tribute to a very distinguished man; and we may add, for the benefit of people who have not read Dewey, that a good general idea of what has been going on in recent years in philosophical and educational America may be gathered from a perusal of these speeches."
+ Nature 126:sup537 O 4 '30 280w
Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 155:227 Je 11 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30
Pratt p34 autumn '30

"The papers vary in quality, naturally; but taken as a whole, they present an adequate picture of Dr. Dewey's work in three great fields of human endeavor; and his own wise, witty, and modest speech at the luncheon in his honor is alone well worth the price of admission. On the whole, this book is compulsory for everyone interested in one of the outstanding figures in present-day American life." Bruce Bliven
+ Survey 64:359 Jl 15 '30 320w

JOHNSEN, JULIA EMILY, comp. Baumes law. (Reference shelf) 189p 90c Wilson, H.W.
343.73 Crime and criminals—New York (state). Criminal law. Crime and criminals—Bibliography. Recidivists 29-22451

Contains debating material on the subject of the Baumes law in New York, which provides a sentence of life imprisonment for fourth offenders. Includes a brief, a bibliography and excerpts from twenty-seven articles on the subject.

Booklist 26:146 Ja '30

"The book contains twenty-seven essays dealing with the problem of recidivism in general and the Baumes Law in particular. These vary from reasoned discussions to rabid advocacies and equally rabid defences. But in the sum total, a fairly accurate picture is presented of the many possible attitudes on the question."
+ Harvard Law R 43:343 D '29 180w
St Louis 27:331 D '29

"A discussion of this law would not seem to be very profitable unless it indicated the fac-

JOHNSEN, J. E., comp.—Continued
tors to be considered in dealing with first and second and tenth offenders as well as fourth. On this point the discussion is weak. However, it must be said in fairness to Miss Johnsen that there is not an abundance of material to draw from, and there is no unanimity of opinion as to a desirable substitute for long prison sentences." Jane Hoey

+ — Survey 65:237 N 15 '30 220w

JOHNSEN, JULIA EMILY, comp. Disarmament. (Reference shelf) 173p 90c Wilson, H.W.

341.6 Disarmament 30-5865

The present volume is intended to supplement the handbook National Defense published in December, 1928. The bibliography is confined, therefore, to references subsequent to those contained in that volume. It may be taken as representative of the problem and discussion of disarmament in its broader sense, as embodied in recent thought. The brief is treated from the point of view of complete disarmament, this proposition having proved of interest to debaters.

Booklist 26:273 Ap '30

St Louis 28:132 My '30

JOHNSEN, JULIA EMILY, comp. Thirteen-month calendar. (Reference shelf) 201p 90c Wilson, H.W.

529.3 Calendar 29-21385

This volume in the reference shelf series contains briefs, discussions and bibliographies on the subject of the thirteen-month calendar.

Booklist 26:148 Ja '30

"The extent of the propaganda behind the movement in favour of a calendar of thirteen months is shown clearly in this volume, which gives in a clearly arranged form a summary of the arguments (for and against) reduced to heads, bibliographical notes, and excerpts from the literature of the subject. This should be found very useful and instructive." H. C. P.

+ Nature 124:978 D 28 '29 550w

JOHNSON, CHARLES SPURGEON. Negro in American civilization; a study of Negro life and race relations in the light of social research. (Am. social science ser.) 538p il $4 Holt

325.26 Negroes. United States—Race question 30-15942

This volume is the result of a conference, in 1926, of a central executive committee drawn from sixteen organizations engaged in Negro social work. The first part, written by Dr Johnson, contains a survey of the industrial and social life of the Negro. Part two, a symposium on various phases of the Negro problem, contains chapters on the Negro in industry, by Niles Carpenter; the health of the Negro, by Louis I. Dublin; biological factors in Negro mortality, by Raymond Pearl; the Negro citizen, by W. E. G. Du Bois; and race relations, by Herbert A. Miller.

Booklist 27:51 O '30

"The volume is a painstaking, comprehensive sociological study with which those interested in the Negro will wish to become acquainted. It makes excellent supplementary reading to that totally different volume in the same field, Charles Weldon Johnson's Black Manhattan."

+ Bookm 72:iv S '30 180w

"I know of no more important recent book on the American Negro than this performance by Dr. Johnson. It is not important because it is a good book. It is important as the most competent example of a certain type of very bad book. It deals with one of our major social issues exhaustively, very ably in its way, with a great air of scrupulous objectivity and 'scientific' modesty, without ever indicating or implying the reason for the problem. . . When you finish this survey, which has been hailed in advance as the Negro Middletown and lists more facts about the economy of the American Negro than any other book, you know no more about his life than you know about American society after you have read the Almanac." Benjamin Stolberg

Books p4 Je 22 '30 1350w

"Here is a volume that will undoubtedly become a classic in its field. Not in a literary sense, to be sure; exhaustive tables of statistics and their interpretation are not readily worked up into creative literature. But it is not too much to say that probably within the next decade few books of importance concerning the American Negro will be written without reference to this monumental source book. . . It is certain to become an indispensable part of the library of everyone interested in social welfare." M. L. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 650w

Reviewed by E. W. Stone

Current Hist 33:xxii N '30 650w

"The volume is almost wholly a factual presentation, and the critical attitude is largely missing. This is to be regretted, as Professor Johnson's calm and scientific approach to the race problem would give especial value to more pointed indications of what is needed to help solve the problems presented. For example, the facts regarding lynching are set forth at considerable length, but one does not learn what lies back of the lynching evil, nor does one have much guidance toward possible elimination of this terrible pastime. In brief, there is no linking up of the economic problems of the Negro, of exploitation North and South, of labor-union discrimination against the Negro, and of the other economic factors largely responsible for lynchings in the United States." Walter White

+ — Nation 131:44 Jl 9 '30 780w

"Here is a larger volume, crammed with figures, not all of them as well digested as one could wish, and not likely to figure in any best-seller list. Yet it is certainly one of the most important books that will be published this year. The publishers announce it as 'a "Negro Middletown" on a national scale.' It is too much the standardized sociological treatise quite to merit this description. But like Middletown it is a triumph of the objective method." R. L. Duffus

+ — N Y Times p3 Jl 13 '30 950w

"An entertaining and informing document. Since the War there have been numerous reports and surveys on the Negro question, but this is undoubtedly the most responsible and comprehensive diagnosis that has yet appeared." Nels Anderson

+ Outlook 156:429 N 12 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

St Louis 28:204 S '30

Reviewed by R. E. Speer

Sat R of Lit 7:248 O 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by Alain Locke

Survey 64:44 O 1 '30 450w

Reviewed by E. R. McKinney

World Tomorrow 13:473 N '30 450w

JOHNSON, FREDERICK ERNEST, ed. See Social work of the churches.

JOHNSON, GERALD WHITE. By reason of strength. 221p $2 Minton

31-26227

Thru the story of a Scotch couple, the Whytes, who came to North Carolina as pioneers, the novel depicts early pioneer life in this part of the country prior to the Civil war; and the chronicle of the family is continued thru the generations that follow, up to the death of old Grandma Whyte.

"Mr. Johnson has made a noble figure of the old woman; he draws her with an affection such as one lavishes upon an actual character. That affection is at once a source of strength and of weakness; for if the woman gains by it, the book loses in richness. It is more like a short biography than a novel—as if some factual knowledge had stayed the author's hand from lavishing too much detail upon the background. But as the biography of an imagined person it possesses tenderness and dignity and it conjures up a picture that is not without beauty." Guy Holt

+ — Bookm 72:451 D '30 180w

"This first novel by a young Southerner who has already displayed marked talents in two biographies, 'Andrew Jackson' and 'Randolph of Roanoke,' is a most engaging book. Looked upon either as a study of a brave woman, who took the worst blows that fate could deal her without flinching, and in whom the wine of life ran strong to the very end of her days, or as a vivid chronicle of early days in North Carolina among the sturdy Scots settlers, it is an admirable piece of work, the writing sound and often touched with beauty, the story well knit, and the spirit refreshingly wholesome." Herschel Brickell

+ Books p6 O 19 '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p148 D '30

"A first-class romantic novel." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 380w

N Y Times p7 N 2 '30 180w

"There is sometimes a feeling in the reading that the book is perhaps too briefly, too compactly, written. Occasionally time seems not to pass but to be merely announced. But far more important than this, Mr. Johnson's work possesses the now rare quality of beauty in piety, lost alike to sentimentalist and scoffer. What Mr. Johnson has written about, he loves. His is a wise, grave beauty and he has made it into a wise and grave and beautiful book." Jonathan Daniels

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:453 D 13 '30 650w

JOHNSON, JAMES WELDON. Black Manhattan. 284p il $3 (7s 6d) Knopf

325.26 Negroes—New York (city). Harlem, New York (city). Negroes in literature and art 30-18832

The story of the Negro in New York City from colonial times to present-day Harlem, "a rich city of a quarter of a million black people who live in the heart of a white city, substantially without race friction." The book has great interest and value as a record of the achievements of the Negro in art, especially music and the drama, and as an account of famous Negro personalties.

Booklist 27:93 N '30

Reviewed by Louis Rich

Bookm 71:564 Ag '30 400w

" 'Black Manhattan' is a book to make black men proud and to make white men wonder. It is a story of the people nobody knows, a history, all but forgotten, that dates back to the first European settlement on Manhattan Island—the record of the Negro in New York, which means, incidentally and by reflection, of the Negro in America. . . Pages in this book are most engaging and surprising history; others are almost sheer poetry." Lewis Gannett

+ Books p1 Jl 13 '30 1250w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 900w

Chicago Daily Tribune p11 O 11 '30 150w

Reviewed by Arthur Warner

Nation 131:353 O 1 '30 420w

"His book is, in fact, a three-part essay, of which the second part, the story of how Negro art forced itself up from the New York Tenderloin, is the most gripping. . . Here begins the kernel of Johnson's book and the best contribution ever made to the history of American Negro art, and especially of the drama. . . This is a book to be read and enjoyed, covering for the most part a field quite new to Americans, and done in genial almost colloquial English, clear in meaning, and exhilarating in tone." Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 950w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

N Y Times p5 Jl 27 '30 1200w

"It is not a deep or inspired social study, but neither is it exacting in what it demands. You get the impression that Johnson is willing to let the reader's opinion of the Negro rest on the record." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 Jl 11 '30 800w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 520w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

Reviewed by R. E. Speer

Sat R of Lit 7:248 O 18 '30 500w

"This is a book to be read and admired, all the more because of its limitations."

+ Spec 145:741 N 15 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p904 N 6 '30 550w

JOHNSON, JOHN BERLIN. Airplane welding. 321p il $3.50 Goodheart-Willcox

629.18 Airplanes. Welding 29-23726

"A practical manual on equipment and methods, materials used in construction, design of welded joints, welding of special metals, and inspection of welds."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '30

N Y New Tech Bks 15:27 Ap '30

St Louis 28:102 Ap '30

JOHNSON, MARY HOOKER. Dean in the high school; a record of experience and experiment in secondary schools. 366p il $3.25 Professional & tech. press, 420 Lexington av., N.Y.

373 High schools. Personnel service in education 29-21499

Miss Johnson, a dean in the Washington Irving high school, New York City, discusses the need for and functions of deans in large city schools—men and women who are free to give sufficient time to the furtherance of moral character building and the management of social and recreational activities.

Booklist 26:102 D '29

St Louis 28:67 Mr '30

"The book is a valuable addition to the literature dealing with the work of the dean and a socialized program for the high school. It can be recommended for principals as well as deans and for all those interested in personnel work." W. W. Haggard

+ School R 38:148 F '30 700w

JOHNSON, OSA HELEN (LEIGHTY) (MRS ² MARTIN JOHNSON). Jungle babies. 169p il $1.75 (7s 6d) Putnam

591.5 Animals—Legends and stories 30-22872

Mrs Johnson, wife of the famous explorer, writes these stories of African animals and their young, as she has observed and photographed them. She tells about the life of Toto, a baby giraffe; Nick, the mischievous young baboon; Bad Boy, young son of Mrs Rhino; Little Orphan, the zebra child; Simba, the baby lion; Fishie, the young hyena; and Suku, the little black boy.

"Mrs. Johnson writes somewhat as she talks in her husband's talking films—very cutely But, for the most part, she tells, in the first person, of her own experiences, and that is something to which children and grown-ups can listen indefinitely. And Miss Flintsch's drawings would give life to any book."

+ Books p10 N 16 '30 40w

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

St Louis 28:263 N '30

"It is to be regretted that the style of writing does not do justice to the subject matter,

JOHNSON, O. H.—Continued
as some of the episodes Mrs Johnson recounts are worthy of far better description. Children are sure to enjoy many of the stories." J. W. Feiss
— + Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 80w

She writes as an American journalist, and is not above the embroidery of purple patches."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p981 N 20 '30 220w

JOHNSON, SAMUEL. Samuel Johnson, president of King's college; his career and writings; ed. by Herbert and Carol Schneider; with a foreword by Nicholas Murray Butler. 4v set $30 Columbia univ. press [£7 7s Oxford]

B or 92 Johnson, Samuel, 1696-1772. Columbia university 29-29591

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by C. F. Thwing
Am Hist R 35:884 Jl '30 900w
Boston Transcript p5 Ja 11 '30 950w

"Dr Nicholas Murray Butler's admirable foreword lends distinction to the entire work. Every person interested in American Colonial history should have access to these volumes."
Hist Outlook 21:89 F '30 520w
St Louis 28:147 My '30
Spec 144:247 F 15 '30 220w

"This well-edited publication will naturally appeal most to readers who are interested in the history of higher education in the United States. But it also deserves the attention of students of the development of philosophical systems, illustrating as it does the spread of those new ideas which ultimately displaced the philosophy that so long held almost undisputed sway over the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 3 '30 1500w

JOHNSON, SVEINBJORN. Pioneers of freedom; an account of the Icelanders and the Icelandic free state, 874-1262. 361p il $3.50 Stratford

949.1 Iceland 30-14677

In commemoration of the thousandth anniversary of the founding of the Althing, or parliament, of Iceland, the author has written this book, which gives a picture of all aspects of the life and customs of the Icelandic people from the settlement of the island in 874 until the union of the country with Norway in 1262-64.

"A clear and eminently readable volume which will serve its purpose in acquainting many Americans with a chapter of history too little known. He is especially at home in presenting the development of the legislative and legal systems in Iceland, as is to be expected from a man who has sat on the Supreme Court bench of North Dakota and is at present legal adviser to the University of Illinois and professor of law at that institution." W. E. P.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 780w

"A splendid account of a superb race."
+ N Y Times p10 Je 22 '30 370w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 Ag '30 280w
St Louis 28:274 N '30

JOHNSON, THOMAS M. Our secret war; true ² American spy stories, 1917-1919. 340p $2.50 Bobbs [10s 6d Jarrolds]

940.485 European war, 1914-1918—Secret service. Spies 29-20596

"Authoritative stories of the war within the war gleaned from documents and post-war talks with high officials in the secret services of both sides, shedding a new and startling light on the drama played by the Secret Service in their part to win the World War for the Allies. Mr. Johnson takes his readers across the Western Front into Germany revealing the hidden lives of our cleverest spies of both sides who fought, oftentimes unaided, to accomplish the almost impossible tasks given them."—Bookm

---

"A vastly informative book showing the mushroom growth of the American Secret Service and the rapidity with which it surpassed the formidable and seasoned German machine."
+ Bookm 71:xvi Mr '30 120w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:27 Mr '30

"A book that holds the attention—none the less so that it is employed with discretion and in a way to avoid offence to readers not American."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p406 My 15 '30 1000w

JOHNSON, VERNON CECIL. One Lord, one faith; an explanation. 208p $2 Longmans [3s 6d; pa 2s 6d Sheed]

282 Roman Catholic church—Doctrinal and controversial works 30-3993

The apologia pro vita sua of Vernon Johnson, known widely as Father Johnson in the days when he was an Anglo-Catholic minister, in which he explains his conversion to Roman Catholicism.

Cath World 130:757 Mr '30 650w

"The chapter on 'The Papacy in the Gospels' will appear, to most Protestant readers, to reveal the full weakness of the Roman contention. But there is an engaging simplicity and sincerity in the author's statement which should win respect and sympathy from Protestants even if it does not carry conviction."
Christian Century 47:338 Mr 12 '30 150w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill
Spec 143:sup681 N 9 '29 600w

"The Confessions of St. Augustine and the Apologia of Newman have become classics of the spiritual life. It is not likely that Mr. Vernon Johnson's story of his conversion will take rank beside them, because it lacks an important quality that the other two possess. But it has an interest at the moment that none can deny. It is an interest that derives partly from the winning simplicity of the writer and partly from the section of religious thought to which he formerly belonged."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1068 D 19 '29 550w
Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

JOHNSON, WENDELL. Because I stutter; with an introd. by Lee Edward Travis. 127p $1.50 (5s) Appleton

616.87 Stammering 30-2661

"The introspective appeal of a stutterer to a misunderstanding and unsympathetic world. It is the subjective phase of this sorrowful affliction and tries to show how stuttering has influenced the life, career and thoughts of the writer."—Survey

---

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

"A unique contribution to speech pathology is made by this little book. . . Having studied psychology Mr. Johnson is able to analyze his own reactions, to seek with surety for deeply hidden motives, to understand and make clear the influence of his environment upon his temperament and of that, in turn, upon his speech disability. And having the native gift of words he is able to discuss and present all this with clarity and conciseness, with eloquence and happy turns of phrase. His book is a human document as appealing to the sympathies as it is informing on the matter of its theme."
+ N Y Times p20 F 9 '30 400w
St Louis 28:136 My '30

"The book is really an autopsychoanalytic study written in a tone of despair tinged with a forlorn hope. Like most stutterers, the author apparently is highly sensitive and this hypersensitiveness is betrayed in his writing. The description of the details indicates a scientific grasp of the subject and the statements made are true, for they are common to all adult stutterers. In dissecting his own case, the author is attempting to present that of every stutterer and make his book the articulate cry of the million or so unhappy victims of this affliction." John Glassburg

Survey 64:103 Ap 15 '30 200w

JOHNSTON, ALEX. Life and letters of Sir Harry Johnston. 351p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Cape

B or 92 Johnston, Sir Harry Hamilton
[30-12477]

"Sir Harry Hamilton Johnston lived such an active, interesting and zestful life as artist, adventurer, explorer, scientist, fighter, colonial Governor, knight of two orders, gold medalist of five societies, free-lance politician, novelist and historian and history maker of Africa that several interesting books might be written about him. Here is such a book by his younger brother, Alex Johnston, who was his private secretary and traveling companion for thirteen years and who has had access to his unused correspondence. This brother's aim, he tells us, was to supplement, not to supersede, Sir Harry's autobiography (published in 1923 under the title of 'The Story of My Life')."—N Y Times

Reviewed by J. E. Gillespie
Am Hist R 35:916 Jl '30 420w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews
Bookm 71:332 Je '30 200w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger
Books p19 Je 8 '30 400w

Christian Century 47:562 Ap 30 '30 200w

"No Life of Sir Harry Johnston could be dull; yet one doubts if his brother was the best possible biographer. There is an element of pomposity in the book, and its definite family hero-worship gives one little chance of making anything more than a series of guesses at Johnston's true character and worth. Most readers will prefer his own autobiography, published a few years ago."
— + New Statesman 34:424 Ja 4 '30 300w

"While [the author's] unfailing admiration for his brother is abundantly shown and there are abundant quotations of praise from others for the man . . . this book is by no means wholly, or even predominantly, written in the vein of a hero-worshiper. Besides giving a fascinating account of the often thrilling adventures and achievements of this remarkable man who was preeminently vivid and versatile, these pages unveil an intimate portrait of the man himself and reveal his strong, sturdy, independent, but friendly and likeable character." G. W. Harris
+ N Y Times p16 Mr 9 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p10m F 16 '30 240w

"Marked by an almost excessive fraternal piety, it will be read with sympathy by admirers of the many-sided genius who is always a hero to his secretary brother; but so far as the essentials of Johnston's full and fascinating life are concerned it adds little to what was already known."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:852 Mr 22 '30 400w

"Mr. Alexander Johnston's biography is disappointing. We could have done with more letters and a more critical review of his brother's life. We can understand his devotion both as a brother and as a secretary, but Sir Harry was sufficiently great to make mere eulogy superfluous."
— Spec 143:497 O 12 '29 900w

"Though the account given of him is inspired, as one would have it, by fraternal kindness and admiration, Sir Harry issues from it as an 'impossible' man in more senses than one—impossible as being abnormal in his demoniac energy and the range of his activities, and impossible as possessing to such a marked degree what had not in his prime yet acquired the complimentary name of 'superiority complex.' "
— Times [London] Lit Sup p756 O 3 '29 1100w

JOHNSTON, HENRY ALAN. What rights are
^{2} left. 177p $2 Macmillan

351.761 Prohibition. Liquor laws. United States. Constitution. 18th amendment
30-25137

An outline of the restrictions placed upon American citizens by the Volstead act, and of the legal rights remaining that pertain to the possession and consumption of liquor.

Bookm 72:xxii D '30 150w

"In spite of a title which leads one to anticipate foolish theorizing Mr. Johnston has confined himself to a simple and reliable recital of the law on national prohibition as it stands at the moment. So far as it goes, the book is excellent. There was room for more detailed analysis than Mr. Johnston gives us. It is to be regretted also that he does not consider plans and possibilities of changing the existing statutes. It is a pity that he has contented himself with what was immediately before his eyes, but it is consoling that his eyes are free from astigmatism."
+ — Books p13 Ja 4 '31 380w

"Unlike nearly all books dealing with the prohibition law and its consequences, this one by Henry Alan Johnston of the New York bar comes as near to being devoid of personal feeling of any sort as could be imagined. For he is not concerned at all with controversy over its success or its failure or with its inherent quality of right or wrong. His sole purpose is to dig out and set forth the exact legal status of the citizen with regard to the amendment and the enforcement act and to assure him what, under them, his rights are."
N Y Times p14 D 14 '30 320w

St Louis 28:288 D '30

JOHNSTON, MARJORIE. Domination; some Napoleonic episodes. 236p $3 Appleton [12s Murray, J.]

B or 92 Napoléon I, emperor of the French
30-19478

An episodic treatment of Napoleon and the personages of his period. Napoleon's ambition to dominate all with whom he came into contact is regarded by the author as his chief characteristic and is made the central point of the biography.

"A readable and likable book. By means of episodes and character sketches, she makes the most of her subject and her own youthful intensity."
+ Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 50w

"The author's subtitle, 'Some Napoleonic Episodes,' is modest. Her episodes are liberally sprinkled with anecdote, and the colorful glow and glitter of First Empire pageantry lends brilliance to pictures of military and courtly glory and costume relief to personalities. It is all readable to a degree and picturesque, but there is nothing especially distinctive about it all."
+ — Books p10 S 21 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 300w

"Miss Johnston cannot be said to give us anything new or even unusual in her work, bringing neither a distinctive approach nor unusual literary gifts to a subject already elaborately documented and overinterpreted." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 80w

Sat R 150:570 N 1 '30 200w

Spec 145:293 Ag 30 '30 150w

"Writing with the vivacity and effervescence of youth, Miss Johnston does not resist the temptation to be brilliant or impressive on every page. The danger of this kind of writing is that it leads the author into propound-

JOHNSTON, MARJORIE—Continued
ing generalizations which have little real foundation, and often enough into dazzling contradictions. . . Of Napoleon himself no clear portrait emerges. His actions are represented as a series of inconsequent episodes in which no design appears."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p584 Jl 17 '30 900w

JOHNSTON, MYRTLE. Relentless. 329p $2.50 Appleton [7s 6d Murray, J.]
30-20599

Oscar Beranger, finding himself a misfit in the civilized world of London, determines to follow his explorer-father's footsteps and joins the Ghoyaks, a tribe of fur hunters in Siberia. He takes with him his wife, Maisie, and infant twin sons. More children are born to them in the Siberian wilderness. Beranger quickly adapts himself to the primitive life, but Maisie longs bitterly for the world as she knows it, and her children inherit this restless, rebellious spirit. Beranger, finally desperate, takes them on a return trip to London. The children, facing for the first time a wonderful world, believe they have been betrayed by their father; and he, broken hearted at his failure, meets death.

"This is an amazing novel, boldly imaginative in conception and filled with sombre intensity. Its faults form with its virtues a series of striking parallels to the work of Emily Brontë. The book is obviously conceived in complete independence of personal experience. The characters have the rigidity, the chiefly symbolic significance of literary effigies kilned solely in the white heat of imagination."
+ Books p21 S 14 '30 420w
Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 450w

"Miss Johnston writes with a bare terseness which can hardly be called style, but the rapidity of the narrative is never allowed to lag. 'Relentless' will, probably, have no place in literature. Among current novels it is more than a little interesting." K. W.
+ — New Repub 64:108 S 10 '30 200w

"Her novel is a jumble of pretentious ideas, sketchily written, and dull where it is not preposterous. The London portions of her novel make one think of Dostoievsky so badly digested as to become a parody of the Russian. The Siberian portions form a romantic phantasy not without a certain charm, like a vague dream which leaves no edge for the memory to get hold of." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 180w

"In spite of the fact that the writing displays singular power and maturity for a girl of 20, there is something unresolved in the larger conception of the character which prevents Oscar from becoming a real tragic figure. It is as if Miss Johnston, zealous to avoid the pitfall of simple autobiography into which so many young writers slip, had resolved to project experience into a far realm and then had found it difficult at that distance to pull the strings that would make her puppets dance to the tunes she called. With these and other weaknesses granted, it is a novel that an author of 20 need not be ashamed of."
+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 31 '30 600w
Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Outlook 156:188 O 1 '30 350w
Sat R of Lit 7:253 O 18 '30 600w

"Miss Johnston's command of language is as yet incommensurate with the remarkable demands of her imagination. However, the story does very nearly come off. It has strength, unity and spirit. Miss Johnston never sinks into the melodramatic, but is expert in the subtleties and pities of the tragic muse." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:538 Mr 29 '30 320w

"Though Miss Johnston's talent is less apparent in the early stages of the book, before she has contrived a situation which she can handle with assurance, the imaginative boldness and originality of her conception deserve to be admired."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p396 My 8 '30 230w

JONES, CHARLES REED. Torch murder; a new Leighton Swift detective story. 255p $2 Dutton
30-17936

The charred body of the murderer's victim, identified as Myrtle Miles Pembroke, is found at Corona dump in Long Island. Among the suspects are the woman's husband, an ex-girl friend, and another man. Leighton Swift, expert criminologist, solves the case in spite of the blunders of Detective Holmes and the police.

Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 100w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Jl 20 '30 120w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 200w

"The question of the identity of the slayer is very well handled and the probabilities are that few readers will spot the criminal even after the second murder has been committed." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p17 Ag 10 '30 80w
Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore
Outlook 155:429 Jl 16 '30 100w
Reviewed by W. C. Weber
Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 20w

JONES, CHESTER LLOYD; NORTON, HENRY KITTREDGE; and MOON, PARKER THOMAS. United States and the Caribbean. (Chicago council on foreign relations. American policies abroad) 230p $1.50 Univ. of Chicago press [6s 9d Cambridge univ. press]
327.729 United States—Foreign relations—Spanish America. Spanish America—Foreign relations—United States. Caribbean sea. Monroe doctrine
30-3200

"The second of a series of small volumes on American foreign policies published by the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations. There are three chapters, one by each author, on 'The Development of the Caribbean,' 'The United States and the Caribbean' and on 'Self-defence and Unselfish Service in the Caribbean.'"—Times [London] Lit Sup

Am Pol Sci R 24:524 My '30 50w
Reviewed by L. J. Ragatz
Ann Am Acad 149:206 My '30 120w
Booklist 26:342 Je '30

"The three writers shed a good deal of light on a vexed and much discussed question. These men know what they are talking about; they are experts on this Caribbean situation. For a careful, clever setting forth of our policy and relations in the Caribbean countries on all sides, it would be hard to find the equal of this discussion and presentation. In spite of the occasional bit of argument by epithet, in the main it is lucid, careful of the facts, broad in scope and then lets the reader form his own decision or opinion." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 12 '30 500w
Chicago Daily Tribune p11 Ap 19 '30 50w

"This book provides an excellent background of fact and opinion, representing more than one point of view, that can not fail to be of value in any consideration or discussion of what is perhaps the major problem perennially facing the United States in the domain of foreign affairs." H. G. Doyle
+ Current Hist 32:13 Ap '30 750w
Hist Outlook 21:298 O '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p194 Mr 6 '30 70w

JONES, CLARENCE FIELDEN. South America. 798p il $6 Holt [21s Allen, G.]

918 South America 30-16378

A regional treatment of the republics of South America, giving their physical and economic characteristics, together with an historical survey of each national entity. There are 334 illustrations and a number of useful charts and graphs, a complete index, and a new enlarged colored map of South America.

"The book is a thorough and scientific piece of work, free of propaganda, and contains a wealth of material for the student of economics and geography and the general reader. It is also to be recommended to the American business man for its sober statements concerning business and trade conditions." G. M. Janes

+ Am Econ R 20:718 D '30 230w

"We have long needed a volume of this character, not only for use in university classes, but also for the enlightenment of that increasing number of persons desiring to know something of the environment of the rapidly developing countries of South America. . . No work heretofore published on the South American countries fills the need which Professor Jones has met. He has given to the world the best presentation that we today possess of the economic background of the civilization of the republics of South America." L. S. Rowe

+ Ann Am Acad 151:302 S '30 180w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 300w

Reviewed by A. C. Wilgus

Hist Outlook 21:336 N '30 200w

Reviewed by Drake Dekay

N Y Times p26 S 28 '30 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

St Louis 28:217 S '30

JONES, DORIS ARTHUR (MRS THORNE). Taking the curtain call; the life and letters of Henry Arthur Jones [with an introd. by Max Beerbohm]. 397p il $4 Macmillan [25s Gollancz]

B or 92 Jones, Henry Arthur 30-25268

This biography of one of England's leading playwrights, written by his daughter, is a contribution to English stage history during the last half century. Long letters from Max Beerbohm, Bernard Shaw, Henry Irving and other famous contemporaries are an interesting feature of the book.

Booklist 27:156 D '30

"His daughter's book explains all, not by criticism of the plays, nor of her father's actions, but by telling, quite simply, the story of his origins, his temperament, his opinions, and quoting freely the innumerable letters he wrote to many men and they wrote to him. There emerges the small, red-bearded, blue-eyed, intensely energetic, intensely earnest and strangely humorless man so many of us Americans knew from his frequent trips to New York—a city he loved. The book is full of letters to and from Shaw, who emerges with new luster, for it is obvious that he admired and even loved Jones, that he steadily tried to prod Jones to keep up, mentally, with the procession, and that he absolutely refused to let Jones's outbreaks against him, in later years, affect his own feelings." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p5 O 5 '30 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30

"In this admirable biography of her distinguished father, Mrs. Thorne has illustrated a running commentary on his private life, dramatic career, and personal character, with a wealth of correspondence. The letters quoted, however, are written to rather than by him; and this reversal of the biographer's usual practice is most effective, for we see the man and his work as they are continually reflected in the judgment of his friends."

+ Nation and Ath 47:382 Je 21 '30 600w

"A volume that is a storehouse of good epistles. There is an admirable series of illustrations to a book which no student of the Victorian and Edwardian theatre can possibly afford to miss."

+ New Statesman 35:185 My 17 '30 1250w

"The work is not confined to a description of the Jones household; it is far more ambitious, no less, in fact than the re-creation of a particularly influential figure as man and artist, and a description of the world in which he played his distinguished part. The second of these tasks, by far the more difficult, she has executed even more successfully than the first, and done it chiefly by allowing Jones and his friends to speak for themselves, through the medium of personal letters." B. H. Clark

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 850w

"Mrs Thorne's book is at once so revealing and so understanding that it is a document of extraordinary interest and solid value." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p13 N 16 '30 1750w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 O 7 '30 800w

"The book abounds in letters from writers, actors and other men of note, and is a welcome side-view of English stage and social life during a long generation. Miss Jones has been wise in painting her father as he was, with his foibles and excitability. Daughter and father loved each other, and to show him as he was makes him more real than any stilted encomium could." R. D. T.

+ Outlook 156:230 O 8 '30 280w

"The life of Henry Arthur Jones was a tragedy not of failure but of declension. He was not of those to whom age brings serenity and forgiveness of the world's follies, and in his elder years he fell upon hard times, more intellectually than financially. . . Mrs. Thorne shirks none of the pitiful detail, and yet while she is frank she is not free. Perhaps no daughter could or should be, but then should a daughter write her father's biography, even when he wishes it? Courageouly she tells the truth about his failures and his failings, but not even that can break the link between them. What Mrs. Thorne really presents is the material for a biographer to work upon."

+ — Sat R 149:760 Je 14 '30 650w

"His daughter has made an admirable biography. Knowing him better and more intimately than any other person now living, she has not let her relation to him obscure the truth. This book combines inner, accurate knowledge with the impartiality of a judge; for most children become the judges of their parents, even though they refuse to hand down decisions to posterity. She has given us the facts in her father's public career; and she has revealed the man as he was, with his faults as well as his virtues." W. L. Phelps

+ Sat R of Lit 7:303 N 8 '30 1050w

Spec 144:867 My 24 '30 800w

"Miss Doris Arthur Jones's edition of her father's 'Life and Letters' is marred by lack of critical detachment. She is fair enough and agreeable enough, but everything is presented from her father's point of view, despite the nervous irritability and emotionalism which his quarrels and literary controversies so often exhibited; Mr Jones is not a man to be presented in this fashion, for he seems less important than he really was."

— + Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 3 '31 1000w

"His battles are fought over again in this Life by his daughter, who does not study the plays nor attempt to estimate her father's position. It is a personal record and admirable portraiture, and those who might think to find merely a cantankerous man will be delightfully surprised to meet an endearing character. We discover that the truculent Jones could not break down the affection of his friends, who to him had no value beside his ideas, no matter how he tried."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p453 My 29 '30 1100w

JONES, ERNEST. Psycho-analysis. (New lib.) 127p 60c Cape

131 Psychoanalysis 30-26633

A brief outline of the history and theory of psychoanalysis in which the science is linked with the developments of other branches of knowledge concerning both human and animal life. The author is director of the London clinic of psychoanalysis.

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 150w

"Notwithstanding all the flood of books about psycho-analysis, many of them of doubtful value, it is a pleasure to welcome this small and unpretentious volume because it speaks dependably, accurately, with authority and is written with notable lucidity—the kind of clearness and simplicity that are born of profound knowledge and appreciation of the ignorance of readers."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 1 '30 200w

St Louis 28:229 O '30

Reviewed by G. K. Pratt, M. D.

Survey 65:98 O 15 '30 220w

JONES, GEORGE MALLORY, and YATES, ARTHUR. Practical and literary English. 458p il $1.90 Dutton [4s 6d Dent]

808 English language—Grammar. English language—Rhetoric

A combined grammar and rhetoric devoted to the history of the English language, the growth of the individual vocabulary, oral English, the beauty of words, effective expression, and the sentence and paragraph in composition.

"There is an abundance of illustrations from the best writers, and forty pictorial illustrations, many of the latter very effective. There are nine useful appendices and a good index. The book will prove useful either in the classroom or individual study."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 21 '29 250w

St Louis 28:48 F '30

JONES, LLEWELLYN. How to read books. 229p $2.50 Norton

028 Books and reading 30-8377

Chapters on the esthetics of reading, addressed to the reader of books with the aim of helping him to enjoy them. Contents: Overcoming space and time; The "kinds" of literature; Æsthetics in general; The novel; The great literary personalities; Poetry in general; How to read poetry; Science and philosophy; First editions and best editions; The book as a physical object.

Booklist 26:339 Je '30

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher

+ Books p12 My 25 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 300w

Chicago Daily Tribune p11 Ap 19 '30 280w

"Mr. Jones's book attempts a cursory consideration of recent developments, such as humanism, which it characterizes as 'a movement of black reaction'; it sponsors in general the proposition that, in order to understand life, we must understand literature; and it develops its thesis in a pleasant and readable style and from a point of view that impresses one as essentially sound even if superficial." S. A. Coblentz

+ N Y Times p16 My 18 '30 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

Pratt p27 summer '30

Reviewed by James Orrick

Sat R of Lit 7:210 O 11 '30 180w

"A more advanced discussion than his 'How to Criticize Books,' and he recognizes that the titles might better have been transposed. The first third goes a bit heavily—for a work of this kind—into philosophy and esthetics, but in the two-thirds where he talks about poetry and literary personalities, he says many fresh and suggestive things. Specially welcome is his invitation to the reader to discover the works of Thomas Love Peacock. There is rather more literary criticism than literary exposition in this volume, and at times Mr Jones provokes disagreement."

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 5 '30 1000w

JONES, NARD. Oregon detour. 283p $2.50 Brewer

30-1935

Creston, a small town in the wheat country of the Northwest, is the setting for this novel about provincial American life. It opens with Etta Dant, a freshman in high school, appraising Florence Larson, the new teacher. We see most of the characters of the book thru Etta's eyes; and her marriage to Charlie Fraser, her placid life in contrast to that of the colorful and tragi-pathetic Peg, and her reactions to the rather drab drama of life in a western farming community, form the materials of the story.

"Despite an awkward beginning, the novel is both convincing and sincere. A vivid, if incomplete, picture of a little-known section of this country."

+ — Bookm 71:xxvi Mr '30 100w

"It is a somewhat sprawling novel in which the center of interest shifts back and forth in a manner which suggests that Mr. Jones does not know exactly where he needs it most. But in spite of its defects of structure it possesses momentum and strength. It indicates that Nard Jones has the essentials of a novelist whose work should take root and bear important fruit."

+ — Books p17 Mr 9 '30 220w

"Mr. Jones is not another Sinclair Lewis, but the skill with which he dissects the hearts of four simple persons caught up in the net of circumstances in which they blindly struggle, indicates that the West has given to America a new writer of ability from whom worthwhile work may be expected."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 250w

"'Oregon Detour,' like most first novels, is not without those faults common to youth and unpracticed craftsmanship. Its grammar is often open to censure, and the story is unbalanced here and there by the introduction of irrevelant and faintly adolescent opinions upon life and literature. Mr. Jones writes with such emotional sincerity, with such accurate and sympathetic observation, that one is never for a moment in danger of losing interest in his story."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 2 '30 370w

"Just a fair to middling first novel of a somewhat thinnish texture that would have made much better grist if it had contained a little more of the wheat." Bellamy Partridge

— N Y World p11m F 2 '29 200w

"Mr. Jones writes with a vigor and gusto, and a lavishness of material, that may well take him far; but at present his work suffers badly from want of organization and design."

Sat R of Lit 6:973 Ap 19 '30 220w

JONES, ROBERT WILLIAM. Editorial page. 185p il $2 Crowell

070 Newspapers. Editorials 30-10828

In a book designed as a college text, the author, after defining the main points of newspaper policy, presents the essentials of successful editorial writing and describes the make-up of the editorial page.

Booklist 27:91 N '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p106 Jl '30

St Louis 28:201 S '30

"The work affords a good condensed treatment." R. W. N.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 31 '30 70w

JONES, RUFUS MATTHEW. George Fox, seeker and Friend. (Creative lives) 224p $2 Harper [5s Allen, G.]

B or 92 Fox, George 30-12246

Professor Rufus Jones of Haverford college, himself a Quaker, interprets the life and personality of the founder of the Quakers, prophet of a new and vital type of spiritual religion.

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes
Books p13 S 7 '30 250w

"Dr. Jones distills into these 200 pages the essence of the man and his meaning. For the reader who seeks to know the essential things about Fox, and to understand his abiding significance, this is the best brief study available."
+ Christian Century 47:598 My 7 '30 230w

"Written in the simple, conversational but brilliant style for which Professor Jones is so well known. With just enough quotations to give his authorities, the author tells the fascinating story of the development of this great religious leader from childhood and youth to old age. And in the unfolding of the tale we discover a man kindly, generous, tolerant, never argumentative and harsh, yet ever staunch in his convictions." R. E. E. Harkness
+ Crozer Q 7:400 Jl '30 300w

Reviewed by R. T. Foust
Living Church 84:51 N 8 '30 280w

"Mr. Jones's conception of him as 'forerunner and champion' of much that is vital in modern religious thought holds sway over the entire book. The author tells the full story of Fox's life with constant discussion and interpretation not only of its every important episode and activity, but also of his ideas and principles and of all the factors and phases of his character. The result is a sort of illuminated portrait that makes its subject stand out, clear and vital, as if lighted from within."
+ N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 350w

"A sympathetic but not biased description of one of the world's great. We recommend it highly." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 155:28 My 7 '30 120w

JONES, WILFRED. How the derrick works. 43p il $2 Macmillan

621.872 Cranes, derricks, etc. 30-11356

Pictures and text describing the parts and operation of the derrick.

Booklist 27:33 S '30

"Wilfred Jones approaches the subject with that same combination of curiosity and poetic reaction to the beauty of the derrick's line that is possessed by his young audience. Do not be frightened away by a dreary-sounding title, for the book is exciting. He describes the construction of the derrick and its many services in building, from the time it arrives on the scene until the eventful hour when its contribution is over and it moves on to the next skyscraper. His explanations have an admirable simplicity that is achieved without any condescension or writing down. Generously supplementing the life story of the derrick are drawings of sheaves and automatic safety brakes, derricks at work, buildings growing from page to page until the last piece of steel has been riveted into place. They are no ordinary, uninspired pictorial representations, but handsome drawings that spur the imagination." Josiah Titzell
+ Books p8 My 11 '30 750w

Reviewed by Padraic Colum
New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 120w

"A beautiful and imaginative picture book. The explanations are clear and simple without being written down. The type, though admirable in appearance, is rather trying to the eye. A book which will appeal to readers from 6 to 60." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 100w
Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 80w
St Louis 28:220 S '30

"A fascinating and accurate account of this modern invention." Rachel Field
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 40w

JONES, WILLIAM TUDOR. Reality of the idea of God. 160p $2 Smith, R.R. [6s Williams & Norgate]

231 God [30-17010]

"The most fundamental of all theological problems is the problem of God. Are we to believe, as some would have us, that God is a 'wish-thought,' a product of the creative imagination, in answer to felt needs? Or can we hold to the validity of the concept? Is there a real, an objective, God, corresponding in some measure to our ideas? This little monograph is in defense of the reality of the idea. Dr. Tudor Jones states his conviction that the time has come for a synthetic view of the problem, taking into account the contributions of the sciences, of history, and of philosophy, as well as theology. The volume before us represents the author's own attempt to make that synthesis." —Crozer Q

"Dr. Jones' book is an extremely well-thought-out expression of the position for religion which need not hide its head in the sands of emotion. It is a splendid hand book for that great host who hestitate to accept religion for fear of betraying their intellect. The chapter on mysticism might have been eliminated." G. A. Cunningham
+ Churchman p5 Ag 30 '30 50w

"We may respect him for his insistence on the reality of the world of spirit, but it must be acknowledged that he does not bring us much help with solving the problem of the relation between the two worlds. The higher religions agree in their faith in the supremacy of the spirit, and mystics will have no quarrel with his conclusions. But it is doubtful whether any non-theist will be converted by the arguments of the author." A. S. Woodburne
— Crozer Q 7:528 O '30 600w
Times [London] Lit Sup p112 F 13 '30 1200w

JORDAN, ELIZABETH GARVER. Night club mystery; the experiences of a highly unconventional young man unexpectedly brought into contact with sinister forces. 314p $2 Century

30-7680

Barry Cabot of Wheaton, Mass., developed a case of hero-worship at the age of nine for a magnificent stranger named J. C. Bleecker, who went fishing with him. Years later, when Barry was a striving young bank employee in New York, he ran across his childhood friend again when J. C. Bleecker, known as Brian Strong, gambler, was framed by the police following a night-club murder. Barry didn't frequent night-clubs, but he had gone to this one to protect young Janet, his childhood playmate, from the very racy crowd of which she had become a member. Barry not only protects his sweetheart, but beats up a few underworld thugs as well, and saves his good friend.

Bookm 71:xxx Ap '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Mr 23 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p8 My 10 '30 280w
N Y Times p28 Mr 23 '30 220w

"Though not exceptional in plot and mystery, the story is strong enough in other departments to provide an evening's diversion."
+ N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 130w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:511 Mr 26 '30 80w

"A well-written and entertaining story about New York night life."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Je 5 '30 220w

JORDAN, MRS HELEN ROSALINE (HELEN ASHTON, pseud.). Dr. Serocold. 305p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Benn]

30-18555

A day in the life of Doctor Serocold, an elderly, patient and kindly country physician. Concerned chiefly with the bodily and personal problems of the patients he visits, the novel begins with the death of an old man and ends with the birth of a child. Against this background is unfolded the intimate drama of the doctor's own life—his work, his disappointments, his sympathies, his fears, and his compensating achievements.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

"It is a first-rate novel with first-rate and unusual subject matter." Leo Kennedy

+ Bookm 72:174 O '30 400w

"It is a novel of beauty and strength inspired by a simple sincerity so convincing that one will not forget the character of Dr. Serocold. And the story itself has the quality of an exciting spiritual adventure. . . Mark Miss Ashton down not only in promise but already in fulfilment as an author who has far more than most to offer the reader of serious fiction." Thayer Hobson

+ Books p1 Jl 6 '30 1050w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '30

"If we learn more about the affairs of some of Dr. Serocold's patients than medical etiquette would approve, our knowledge is due to the doctor's habit of inwardly soliloquising, at great length and very coherently, while taking the patient's pulse or making neat holes in his skull. These too connected thought processes make his portrait a little less convincing than it should be. No one ever thought 'in to himself' quite so coherently as this old G. P. Nevertheless, he is a very real, likeable and sympathetic figure."

+ New Statesman 34:546 F 1 '30 130w

"'Dr. Serocold' is an uneven though fairly superior performance. It is certainly more than the formula novel of a day in a doctor's life which many people might write with a certain amount of medical knowledge and literary talent; it is certainly less than a completely living picture of a doctor who is also a man in a world of patients who are also men and women. But Miss Ashton is, at any rate, most successful where success means the most: in her portrait of Serocold himself. Her chief character is some one we can remember." Louis Kronenberger

+ — N Y Times p7 Jl 6 '30 730w

"Miss Ashton has successfully refrained from making Dr. Serocold a character in the Dickensian sense. His naturalness, his plainness, make him plausible. His patchwork is humdrum, but it means mending lives. The lives he touches, the work he does, lay the foundations for his thinking. He has no other interests. He is the town doctor, who came forty years ago with grand ideas, and somehow or other is still there." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Jl 4 '30 670w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

Pratt p38 autumn '30

"Miss Ashton's merits [are] the flexibility and impartiality of her mind, her good sense and sound judgment, her determination to let life speak through her, not to dictate to it, the care and consideration which she extends to her less interesting and rewarding characters." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 149:173 F 8 '30 350w

"Not in any way a dazzling book, her novel is one that in a season notable for the mediocrity of its fiction is distinguished above most of its fellows by clarity of conception and smoothness of execution. Its appeal, we imagine, will be more especially to the reader of somewhat mature years for whom life has already taken on something of a retrospective tinge. But it should be read with enjoyment by any one who appreciates a craftsmanship that is graceful and honest, a ripe outlook on the routine of living, and a story that out of small incidents carves an accurate cross-section of normal life." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1173 Jl 5 '30 950w

"The book has no plot. It is held together in the doctor's mind, which Miss Ashton has imagined with considerable skill, and it suffers from being seen from his fatigued and undistinguished professional point of view." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 144:244 F 15 '30 150w

"A fine sense of discrimination characterizes Helen Ashton's latest novel. . . The book is at once delightful to read and true to human nature."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 320w

"Miss Ashton writes with a complete knowledge of a practitioner's life and even crowds in a fine description of an operation."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p337 Ap 17 '30 270w

"The details of his calls and his encounters with friends are generally convincing, and enough of them are introduced without strain to give the reader a solid sense of acquaintance with the doctor himself. Yet the book has the effect of a monotone. It may be that the material did not lend itself to such resourcefulness in development as is to be found in Virginia Woolf's Mrs. Dalloway—for Dr. Serocold has a straightforward type of mind conditioned by old professional habits. At the same time it may be questioned whether, even so, ideas would not have fallen upon it with a greater variety of incidence and whether sensations in passing through it would not have been refracted into more colors." Helen MacAfee

— + Yale R n s 20:xviii autumn '30 320w

JORDAN, WILLIAM GEORGE. Book of Job: its substance and spirit. 193p $2 Macmillan

223.1 Bible. Old Testament. Job 29-18536

Dr Jordan's interpretation, while based on a careful study of the Hebrew and English texts, is not a technical treatise, but an attempt to familiarize the layman with the spirit, substance, and literary excellence of the book of Job.

"This study of a book which is one of the literary gems of the centuries is made on the basis of sound scholarship and careful analysis. It is not intended as a technical treatise but rather as an attempt to make the ordinary reader of the Bible familiar with a much neglected book. A brief bibliography as well as substantial footnotes give well established authority for the conclusions which Dr. Jordan reaches. Everyone who appreciates literature of the classic type and desires light upon it will welcome this interpretation of Job."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 14 '29 250w

"Doctor Jordan has admirably attained his purpose. Very simply and lucidly, using suggestive illustrations, he shows the serious need of Biblical criticism, both 'higher' and 'lower.' Those who are interested in great poetry, profound philosophy, and a vital religion, will find in this little volume an illuminating introduction to one of the treasures of the ages." I. G. Matthews

+ Crozer Q 7:139 Ja '30 240w

J Religion 10:155 Ja '30 100w

Pratt p8 winter '30

St Louis 28:36 F '30

JORGENSON, NORA, and JORGENSON, GEORGE ELLINGTON. Circle of vengeance. 253p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-4725

Stanley Bullock, bacteriologist, goes to V lake in northern Wisconsin to investigate the source of deaths in that region due to an epidemic of mouse typhoid. Senator Cameron, who is trying to colonize with immigrants the land he owns there, is at first suspected. Stanley is in love with his daughter Betty. After being captured and tortured to the point of death by a fiendish

Russian scientist seeking revenge for old injuries, Stanley, Betty and the Senator are rescued by Jason, the bacteriologist's trusty companion and gunman.

"Faint praise must suffice for this strange concoction, perhaps the least important thriller in some time, having to do mostly with an outbreak of mouse typhoid in humans." Will Cuppy
Books p12 Mr 9 '30 80w

"The sort of story that is excellent for a couple of hours of rapid reading is 'The Circle of Vengeance.' There are a few mild thrills of horror, and a rather obvious working out of a fairly plausible idea."
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 150w

JOSEPH, DONALD. Long bondage. 325p $2.50 Stokes
30-24844

Lucy's "long bondage" is conditioned by the three men who govern her life: father, husband, and son. As a product of the post-war South, Lucy is a romantic. She adores her father; she marries the man she adores (in spite of disturbing thoughts concerning another man whom she meets on the eve of her marriage); and she adores her eldest son. After many years of inevitable disillusion, she finds herself free of the men who have taken so much from her, and begins life anew with the man she feels she should have married.

Books p23 O 12 '30 350w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 200w

"Lucy emerges as a finely drawn and, for the most part, a credible character. She has periodic lapses into woodenness from the strong and sensitive woman that the reader feels her to be in essence. Again, there are occasional purple passages, resulting in preciosity, in which the author is guilty of overly ornate writing. We question the psychological verity of the niche cut by Bolling in the heart of a woman whom he has seen only once. But Mr. Joseph's rich and evocative prose illumines the protagonists with a color and a warmth that lift much of the book into the realm of memorable writing."
+ — N Y Times p16 O 19 '30 480w

"All this is rather trite stuff, and is not made less so, or more convincing, by the woodeny characters which play out the plot. But the novel has a simple charm of style which dignifies its melodrama, and it is sincere." F. L. Robbins
— + Outlook 156:187 O 1 '30 360w

JOSEPHSON, MATTHEW. Portrait of the artist as American. 308p $3 Harcourt

928 Authors, American. American literature—History and criticism. United States—Intellectual life 30-13382

An outline of the careers of certain American artists, chiefly literary, and their efforts to find personal liberty as expatriates. The author expounds the dilemma of the expatriated artist thru special study of the life and work of Henry James, Whistler, Ambrose Bierce, Henry Adams, Lafcadio Hearn, Stephen Crane, and others.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"Both the lives and the background seem to me to be accurately recreated. Mr. Josephson makes the present grow terrifyingly from the past. James is his central character, of course, in this story of flight, defeat, and somehow triumph, because James was most conscious and less conscionable in his defection. But Melville, Adams, Hearn and Whistler reinforce the thesis, if not with their words, most eloquently, with their lives." Genevieve Taggard
+ Books p3 My 18 '30 1450w
Cath World 132:240 N '30 380w

Reviewed by Johnstone Beech
Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 220w

"I do not find myself in agreement with all Mr. Josephson's portraits and judgments. His personal taste, I suspect inclines him to the precious rather than to the robust writer and his estimates are not unaffected by his thesis. He uses William James as a mere foil for Henry James, and his portrait of Mark Twain is one-sided. But he has given us an arresting history of the American artist, admirably written, full of penetrating criticism; a series of brilliant and absorbing biographical sketches." Henry Hazlitt
+ — Nation 130:627 My 28 '30 1030w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
New Repub 63:131 Je 18 '30 700w

"In some respects brilliant, in most respects carefully thought-out, Matthew Josephson's 'Portrait of the Artist as American' is, despite its obvious debt to the pioneer work done by Brooks, Bourne, Frank, Mumford and Beer, the best work that we have had on American post-Civil War cultural pilgrimages since Mr. Mumford's 'The Golden Day.'" John Chamberlain
+ N Y Times p2 Je 29 '30 1150w

"This book is written with an air of courtly melancholy: an air quite rare in American letters. The style fits perfectly the point of view Mr. Josephson has adopted toward his material and unites the rather scattered facts he presents for the reader's information. It is perfectly clear that this book is in no sense an historico-sociological study of the topic with which it pretends to deal. It is an essay, and one of considerable charm if the reader has a taste for the courtly and the melancholy. But as a reasonable and reasoned study of the artist as American it leaves an immense amount to be desired." C. H. Grattan
+ — N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 300w

"Mr. Josephson's book is well written. There is a tart brilliancy about it that is highly refreshing. It is informative too. And if you delete from the title 'as American' and then make such internal modifications as will be necessitated by this deletion, it is a thoroughly good book. But as it stands it is unfair to this country." A. W. Porterfield
+ — Outlook 155:103 My 21 '30 1100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

"Bringing an intuitive acumen and a gift for eloquence to a sympathetic task, Mr. Josephson has built up a forceful, instructive, and appealing document. He reviews, with well chosen quotations, the lives and plaints of some dozen writers in the literary tradition, that is to say, in the tradition inherited from Europe and since continued on both sides of the ocean. With remarkable congruity the writers chosen for examination have denounced the American 'milieu.'" Harold Loeb
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1041 My 17 '30 3900w

"As a collection of papers about Henry James, William James, Lafcadio Hearn, Stephen Crane, Howells and Henry Adams, Mr Josephson's book is frequently penetrating and usually sympathetic. But in relating these authors to their background it says nothing that has not been said and better said before."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 My 24 '30 1100w

JOSEPHY, HELEN, and MCBRIDE, MARY MARGARET. London is a man's town [but women go there]. 355p il $3 Coward-McCann

914.21 London—Description 30-12978

The authors of Paris is a Woman's Town place a masculine accent upon this book about London—chiefly social London. What to buy in the best shops (patronized by royalty), what are the most exclusive hotels and the most elegant restaurants, and where to find and how to participate in London amusements are discussed in detail. Other chapters deal with boarding houses, schools, the London season and useful miscellany.

Booklist 26:391 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiii Jl '30 320w

JOSEPHY, H., and MCBRIDE, M. M.—Cont.

"It is a good title for a diverting book and fits in very well with the previous volume by the same author, 'Paris Is a Woman's Town.' It was so obvious men go there that the fact wasn't even mentioned."

+ Books p13 Je 22 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"The book will be especially useful for its immense number of addresses of every sort and because of the care the authors have taken to include a wide range of purse possibilities."

+ N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 280w

St Louis 28:244 O '30

JOUVENEL, MME GABRIELLE CLAUDINE (COLETTE) de (COLETTE, pseud.). Mitsou; or, How girls grow wise; tr. by Jane Terry. 162p il $2 Boni

Mitsou, a dancer in a Paris music-hall, meets during the war the Lieutenant in Blue. This is the story of their meeting and their love and the things Mitsou learns thereby.

Bookm 71:x Jl '30 120w

"Madam Colette brings to her stories a full, emotional maturity and a simple, ungarnished reality. If these stories appear flimsy, at times, it is because she has clothed them in light garments. It is because she chooses to present them airily, and not because they lack substance. For hidden away among the folds, you will always find some solid, little truth. . . 'Mitsou' is so delicate, so unstressed, so simple, that you hardly realize how much it moves you until, closing it, you feel that little stab of pain inside you which so often follows your coming face to face with the truth." V. P. Ross

+ Books p5 Jl 6 '30 550w

"The story is delicately written, yet with no sparing of intimate detail. Needless to say, it is especially for the sophisticated."

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 9 '30 200w

" 'Mitsou' is a better book than 'Chérie.' Colette goes quickly and effortlessly to the point she is making, and beautifully as well. Part of the story, the most charming part, is told through letters. Altogether the little volume contains as deft and delicate, and at the same time touching and witty, a story as one is likely to find for an afternoon's entertainment."

+ Nation 131:159 Ag 6 '30 100w

"Turning the light formality of French fiction to her own uses, Colette has colored French prose, for a long time rather grayed by reflections from Parisian streets, with the varied green of provincial gardens. Honest, sensuous and witty, she has produced a solid body of work that owes little to masculine attitudes. Other translations of her books as excellent should not be long deferred." Louise Bogan

+ New Repub 63:375 Ag 13 '30 250w

" 'Mitsou' is a delightful, swift-reading, delicately rendered story, very charming, very witty and very savory." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 230w

"As in 'Cherie,' the handling, at once daring and full of tenderness, lifts the book out of the commonplace."

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 13 '30 250w

"Colette writes of women in love. In this limited field her work is exquisite. She is tender and cynical, ingenuous and worldly-wise. We have read her books with a mounting admiration for her style, which is rich and warm and yet is so deftly moulded and finished that it gives the effect of cool chastity, and with a mounting respect for her understanding of feminine psychology. In Mitsou, both style and content are at the height of their perfection. The story is full of wisdom and pity and this reviewer has found it extremely moving." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:428 Jl 16 '30 200w

" 'Mitsou' adds nothing to the gay, serious or tragicomic literature of Bohemia. Possessed of French vivacity and incisiveness, it still does not rise above the level of a Parisian best-seller, and might be called a sensual-sentimental fantasy."

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p686 Ag 28 '30 220w

JOUVENEL, MME GABRIELLE CLAUDINE (COLETTE) DE (COLETTE, pseud.), and GAUTHIER-VILLARS, HENRY (WILLY, pseud.). Claudine at school. 297p il $2.50 Boni [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-29833

The school days of the clever and precocious Claudine furnish the material for this early novel by Colette. The relationships between the fiery head-mistress, the pretty assistant mistress, the village doctor, and Claudine herself are seen thru the sharp and jealous eyes of turbulent adolescence, and thereby lend to the narrative a note of ironic comedy.

"Madame Colette has written many mellower books since 'Claudine At School,' but none more wickedly candid. Claudine has reached that mad, uncertain moment where she is neither child nor woman, neither innocent nor wise, too much aware, too little experienced. Madame Colette has caught her at this precise period and impaled her, breathlessly alive, upon the pages. Madame Colette does not try to impugn all educational institutions, nor does she make any generalities. In her sly, matter-of-fact and incisive way, she gives Claudine full scope for her curiosity. And Claudine, with her eye for the sinister, is a live, shrewd, clean-cut and imperishable figure of adolescence." V. P. Ross

+ Books p7 N 9 '30 600w

"Every word from Claudine's mouth is so witty and so crushing that Whistler no doubt would have been willing to have it ascribed to him. Though her portrait is somewhat marred because she is obliged by her creator to say so much that is flattering to herself, she is nevertheless a brilliant and amusing little terror."

+ — Nation 131:589 N 26 '30 220w

"One of Madame Colette's happiest qualities is that she has never been afraid of appearing in a disreputable light, and the disarming candor and high spirits which seem to have departed from her more recent works are here to be found in their freshest, most ingratiating form."

+ New Repub 65:146 D 17 '30 100w

"A charming, malicious and sophisticated novel of French schoolgirls and teachers." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 30w

"Mme. Colette is one writer in a thousand. She says things no one else dares say with a gay impudence that disarms the sternest moralist. Her style is delicate, witty, perverse, Gallicly feminine, of a savor so inimitable it is a pity to attempt an English rendering. Excellent psychology here; one realizes that Mme. Colette's brilliant characterization of even the least important figures is due to an almost uncanny psychological insight. To have said so much and implied more on the forbidden subject of sex abnormality without leaving a bad taste in the mouth is indeed a triumph."

+ N Y Times p16 N 23 '30 400w

" 'Claudine at School' contains both cleverness and wisdom." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 O 28 '30 200w

"Some may think the tomboy heroine somewhat precocious in her observations on schoolgirl jealousies, the amorous proclivities of the men connected with the establishment and the truly remarkable behaviour of the mistresses, but she seems to have had good sense besides an opportunely impertinent wit. Daughters of boarding school age, while not hesitating to read this book themselves, may think twice about giving it to father for a Christmas present."

Sat R 150:560 N 1 '30 120w

"Now that 'Chéri' and 'Mitsou' have been welcomed as scandalous but clearly excellent things, 'Claudine,' which is a great deal less moral and far more cold-blooded, will no doubt be equally gladly adopted, though one hopes not by some unsuspecting Mama looking for suitable reading matter for her schoolgirl daughter. The picture of school life in it is far from pleasant as a matter of fact, but there is an unmistakable stamp of truth about it, and the manner of the telling is so expert as to rob it of its sting."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:508 Ja 3 '31 500w

"Claudine at School is brilliantly observed, wittily written, and sparkles in translation, but you had better look through it before giving it as a Christmas present to any schoolgirl of your acquaintance." L. A. G. Strong

+ Spec 145:697 N 8 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1067 D 11 '30 350w

JUDGES, ARTHUR VALENTINE, ed. Elizabethan underworld. 543p il $6 Dutton [25s Routledge]

820.8 Crime and criminals—Great Britain. Rogues and vagabonds. English literature—Early modern (to 1700) [30-29437]

"This, is, in fact, 'A collection of Tudor and Early Stuart Tracts and Ballads . . . dealing with the lives and misdoings of vagabonds, thieves, rogues and cozeners, and giving some account of prison life and the operation of the criminal law.' Harman, Middleton, Greene and Dekker, whose tracts find a place here, were among the contemporary reformers. The editor contributes a pithy and stimulating introduction."—Sat R

Books p16 O 26 '30 550w

"It is interest, half literary and half historical, that one extracts from this charming volume; from the lovely sensibility, between Lyly and Bunyan, of Dekker; from the noble and delicious sermon of Greene's repentant whore." William Empson

+ Nation and Ath 47:444 Jl 5 '30 1100w

"The rogues of the Elizabethan age were unusually happy in their biographers. It has not often fallen to the lot of scoundrels whom even infamy passed by to be chronicled by writers like Middleton, Greene and Dekker. Admittedly, the Elizabethan pamphleteers undertook their work in the interests of reform."

New Statesman 35:342 Je 21 '30 800w

"The robust and picturesque prose of the pamphleteers has been somewhat modernized for easier reading, but not so much as to lose its flavor. A most unusual and interesting book." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:30 S 3 '30 170w

"Here is a volume to delight the hearts of all those who think that one ought to know more about the history of a country than dates and facts about kings, queens, parliaments and battles. True, it only deals with a small part of the community and a particular period, but where the material is at hand (and there is a great deal) we could do with many more books like it." John Piper

+ Sat R 150:206 Ag 16 '30 580w

"Difficult to please would the reader be who does not find something somewhere in this volume to tickle his palate or suit his taste. . . Considered merely as literature these tracts are of infinite charm, so different from the Grub Street hackwork of crime in the eighteenth century. That was coarsely handled and for the most part dull. . . But it is neither for the sake of wordlore nor of letters that Mr. Judges has collected and annotated these eighteen old ballads and tracts and has preluded them with an informed and informing introduction to serve as a backcloth to the scene. He sees in them a valuable sociological and economic quarry and sets them forth as such." M. J. C. M.

+ Spec 145:224 Ag 16 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Nels Anderson

Survey 65:169 N 1 '30 420w

"Most of these pamphlets and other literature of roguery, such as Nashe's novels, have been made generally known by reprints. They have indeed been pretty thoroughly studied for their quality and influence as literature; but we believe Mr. Judges to be the first editor to take them principally as documents in economics and in the history of the criminal law. His large volume is mainly occupied by texts. . . All these he annotates with much learning both in the literary and in the economic qualities of them. And he writes an introduction, which makes of the book, as a whole, a clear and reasoned account of the poverty and roguery of the age, and their causes, and of the efforts made to end them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p651 Ag 14 '30 1000w

JULIAN, BROTHER. Men and deeds; the Xaverian brothers in America; with an introd. by Michael J. Curley. 539p il $6 Macmillan

271.79 Xaverian brothers. Roman Catholic church—Biography 30-17006

In 1854 a mission of the Congregation of the Brothers of Saint Francis Xavier, founded in Holland by Theodore Ryken and known as the Xaverian brothers, started its work in America. This book is a record of its seventy-five years of educational work, with sketches of its pioneers.

"It is a moving story of humble lives, laborious duties, and hidden sacrifice. Brother Julian, skillful wielder of the pen, is properly proud of the work his brotherhood has done in this country in the last seventy-five years for the education of youth; and while some of his readers will regret that he omits any account of the pedagogic methods of the Xaverians, all of them will share his modestly expressed gratification at the success which his self-effacing fraternity has so richly deserved."

+ Books p25 N 16 '30 100w

"A stimulating book for educators, social workers, and all engaged in the field of religions."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 650w

Cath World 132:379 D '30 200w

JUSTUS, MAY. Peter Pocket's luck. 118p il $1.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-21942

The story of a happy, jolly little boy, Peter Pocket, who lived in a cabin in the Tennessee mountains with Granny Messer and his little black dog, called the Pickle Pup.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

Reviewed by A. L. Shea

Chicago Daily Tribune p8 S 6 '30 80w

K

KAFKA, FRANZ. The castle; tr. from the German by Willa and Edwin Muir. 340p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Secker]

30-24952

An allegorical novel in which a pilgrim known only as K. struggles thru a maze of encounters in an attempt to reach the "castle." The book has been called a modern Pilgrim's Progress.

" 'The Castle' is a strangely beautiful novel, beautiful in its prose, in the legend which is its story, beautiful in the subtle relationships of its characters to each other and to the unknown quantity, the Castle, which dominates their lives." Coley Taylor

+ Books p7 S 21 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p5 N 8 '30 550w

"At the end of the book one is so unusually impressed by its solidity of conception and execution that although its inner meaning is still not entirely clear, one feels that with time and reflection one could come to an understanding of every portion of its rich and intricate symbolism." Gerald Sykes

KAFKA, FRANZ—Continued
+ Nation 131:411 O 15 '30 650w

"'The Castle' is so intricate an allegory that even the German editor of this posthumously published story seems in doubt of its actual meaning. English people with 'Gulliver's Travels' and 'The Pilgrim's Progress' as their heritage will feel it hardly worth their while to be led into such a maze for so little reward. The work of Willa and Edwin Muir as translators is excellent: they have given to the book the distinction of good writing, which they affirm exists in the original." K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 47:182 My 10 '30 100w
New Repub 65:117 D 10 '30 80w
New Statesman 35:16 Ap 12 '30 300w

"Kafka's prose is admirably exact and direct and his incidents range from comic through romantic and tragic, with many shifting lights and shades of emotion. But, despite the dramatic interest which the story at times has, despite much beautiful writing, one cannot help but wonder whether the day of allegory is not in the past. The weight of the allegory here is so great that the result is often dullness. . . There are many beautiful passages of narrative here regardless of their interpretation, and one reads the book rather for these than for the allegory."
+ — N Y Times p9 D 21 '30 700w

"The book is an elaborate and, indeed, a tortuous allegory. Kafka gives no hint of this, and the result is that the story at first produces the impression of being an aimless rigmarole. But gradually it dawns on the more than casual reader that there is method in Kafka's madness. The metaphysical implications of the characters and what they do begin to suggest themselves in the most fascinating way."
+ — Sat R 149:453 Ap 12 '30 300w

"This is a book of fine quality, elusive at times in its spiritual implications, but not more so than is proper in a sceptical or agnostic age. Kafka's prose style, a highly individual one, light and flowing and serpentine, is extraordinarily well reproduced by the translators."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p510 Je 19 '30 550w

KAGAWA, TOYOHIKO. Love, the law of life; tr. by J. Fullerton Gressitt; [with a foreword by Rufus M. Jones], and a biography of Mr Kagawa by Eleanor M. Hinder and Helen F. Topping. 313p $2 Winston [7s 6d Student]
177.6 Love 30-5272

The outstanding Christian teacher of Japan defines in this book various forms of love, outlines his views upon the ethics of love, and treats the subject in relation to economics, law, education, art, science and religion. The book is prefaced with a biography of Kagawa and his activities.

"It is in essence a kind of notebook of thoughts, observations, confessions, convictions. But just for this reason is it precious as the unstudied revelation of a soul as pure as the law of love that it obeys and invaluable as a corrective of the organized Christianity of churches and creeds. Here is an Asiatic who has 'found Christ'. . . His book has little literary value, but will be cherished forever as a part of the Scriptures of the race." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p17 Mr 2 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p3 N 30 '29 220w
Reviewed by A. W. Swan
Christian Century 47:1215 O 8 '30 320w
Living Church 83:508 Ag 9 '30 220w
N Y Times p18 Ja 26 '30 500w

"Written primarily for his fellow countrymen it assumes a somewhat unfamiliar form to English readers, but the author shows that he is well informed on the subjects with which he deals and inculcates a Christian view of life in terms which seem likely to commend them to all thoughtful readers, who, whatever may be their traditions and outlook, will find much worth their attention in these pages."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Mr 27 '30 230w
Reviewed by A. D. Moore
World Tomorrow 13:344 Ag '30 950w

KAHLE, MRS KATHARINE MORRISON. Modern French decoration. 219p il $3.50 (15s) Putnam
747 Furniture. House decoration. Decoration and ornament 30-10378

An authoritative discussion of the practical application of modern art principles to home furniture and decoration, concerned chiefly with modern French trends. With 27 illustrations and a preface by M Leon Deshairs of the Paris Musée des arts décoratifs.

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30
Boston Transcript p4 O 18 '30 320w
Reviewed by H. D. Ziman
Nation and Ath 47:802 S 27 '30 350w

"[Mrs] Kahle writes with a sense of proportion and a knowledge of the historical background of what she is discussing."
+ New Statesman 35:286 Je 7 '30 100w

"It is clear and readable, although many of the excellent illustrations will not be new to those familiar with other works on the subject." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 154:629 Ap 16 '30 80w
Pratt p23 autumn '30
St Louis 28:266 N '30
Spec 145:353 S 13 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p919 N 6 '30 220w

KAHLER, HUGH MACNAIR. Father means well. 309p $1 Farrar
30-21777

Belden Plimsoll planned that his daughter Lollie should marry one of the up-and-coming young men employed by the Plimsoll Adding Machine Company. But Lollie had ideas of her own about young men. For some reason she seemed fascinated by Gilbert Dolliver, who was learning to play the bassoon. Fate and coincidence, however, ironically determine the direction of this light comedy on the relations between parents and the younger generation.

Booklist 27:106 N '30
Books p16 O 5 '30 220w

"There is wisdom and a deep understanding of character in this novel, but it is masked by the highly diverting situations and by the light and amusing tone of the conversations."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 450w

"An extraordinarily amusing and complicated comedy of the older and younger generations. Mr. Kahler's story is cut to an old but perennially effective formula, and his wit and gusto lend to it an air of delightful novelty."
+ N Y Times p6 Jl 20 '30 500w

KAHLER, WOOD. Smart setback. 236p $2.50 Knopf
30-27766

"Ryida Wade is bored with life. Her mother is a society leader, her husband a banker. She meets Kent Cranford at a party, and in the course of trying to get him to give her life a plot, becomes his mistress. But Kent's ideas aren't of much use to her, so she finally gives him up and goes into the fashion business in an endeavor to give meaning to life."—Outlook

"It has the genuine flair for style to be found in a Saks show window, deliberately simple, expensive looking, designed for the ensemble, flaunting an unassailable chic. It is not more flimsy than the fleeting gestures and attitudes it captures; it bears as little relation to yesterday and tomorrow. It does no more than catch the rhythm of today's passing seconds, the refractions of today's sunlight upon the city's towers and its shadow across the hearts of their inhabitants. Mr. Kahler reproduces, in his book, the newest fashion for figures, furniture, friendships and philosophy. He has a knowing eye. His book draws the essence from Saks appeal."

+ Books p13 O 12 '30 700w

"A silly, flippant, unimportant book, fulfilling supremely the neglected function of being amusing." Marjorie Johnson

N Y Evening Post p5d D 20 '30 420w

N Y Times p6 O 26 '30 320w

"An entertaining book, and civilized (by which today we mean a bit bawdy), but lacking the high spirits which made Mr. Kahler's first so much fun." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 156:268 O 15 '30 190w

Sat R 150:829 D 20 '30 120w

KAIGH-EUSTACE, MRS EDYTH. Jungle babies; foreword by Kermit Roosevelt; il. by Paul Bransom and Don Nelson. 256p $3 Rand

Animals—Legends and stories 30-21633

"'Jungle Babies' tells the story of numerous exploits in the lives of some well known and other less familiar birds and mammals of the forests and plains of Trader Horn's stamping ground. The histories succeed in carrying considerable information as to the habits of various characters. There are twelve chapters devoted to such diverse creatures as the rhinoceros, porcupine, hippopotamus, hyena, honey guide, marabou, and cheeta, not to forget the inevitable elephant baby."—Sat R of Lit

"Mrs. Kaigh-Eustace, an Englishwoman, adopts the questionable device of personalizing her animals; she tells the stories as if her jungle babies were themselves talking, in the first person. 'I, the porcupine,' 'I, the lion,' 'We, the klipdassies,' tell 'our' own stories, in language adapted to children of an age to prefer that their parents read aloud to them. . . Paul Bransom painted the pictures which make Mrs. Kaigh-Eustace's book so handsome to look at."

Books p10 N 16 '30 230w

Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 200w

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 80w

"The author has a real 'feeling' for her subjects, has become intimate with them, but not too familiar. She is, however, somewhat inclined to 'talk down' to her child audience. The animals tell their own story in human words. . . While the writer of this review does not object to a slight use of this 'system,' he does dislike to see it carried throughout a book. It becomes monotonous and soon grows to lack a certain amount of conviction. . . The illustrations are excellent. The cover picture, by Paul Bransom, is a joy to behold. Fine, large type is used, and, generally, the format of the book is ideal." W. H. Carr

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 420w

KALLEN, HORACE MEYER. Indecency and the seven arts; and other adventures of a pragmatist in aesthetics. 261p $2.50 Liveright

801 Esthetics. Censorship 30-9355

Eleven critical essays, the first group, on the question of censorship, lending title to the volume. The other essays are concerned, as Mr Kallen states, with "the qualities and functions of the arts and their relations to the institutions and ideals of a community; language as a medium of creative imagination; and the nature of tragedy and comedy."

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"All the descriptions and suggestions are eminently sensible. That his essays are not more than that—that they are not also inspiriting and positively activating—is perhaps the price of being sensible, too sensible." Ferner Nuhn

+ — Books p4 Mr 30 '30 700w

"Mr. Kallen's style is inflated, garrulous and unsuccessfully jocular. It is addicted to puns (proCrocean bed) and outmoded slang (snuff sed), to boyish heartiness and bombast. The last essay, 'The Essence of Tragedy,' is a fine piece of definition and, perhaps because of the restraint of scholarly footnotes, a good piece of writing. Mr. Kallen redefines tragedy for the modern world with subtlety and skill. The essay compensates for the many disappointments in the book—and makes them inexcusable." Lionel Trilling

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 800w

"With sardonic delight, but always with high seriousness, Mr. Kallen in these essays attacks everything under the sun. In his dithyrambics he spares neither our feelings nor our idols, whether in art, poetry or morals; and the result, if not always convincing, is no doubt very stimulating and, at times, very entertaining." Dino Ferrari

N Y Times p2 Je 15 '30 700w

Reviewed by Louis Grudin

N Y World p11m My 4 '30 800w

Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

Reviewed by James Orrick

Sat R of Lit 7:210 O 11 '30 800w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:155 My 1 '30 250w

KALLINIKOV, IOSIF. Women and monks; [auth. Eng. version by Patrick Kirwan]. 876p $3.75 Harcourt [15s Secker]

30-30226

Against the background of pre-revolutionary Russia this lengthy and humorless story of monks and their mistresses panoramically unfolds. Episodes in the lives of monks in their cloisters, of merchant-bourgeois, peasants, and students in St Petersburg are narrated with almost microscopic detail. The animal passion that dominates all these phases of the Russian scene reaches a symbolic climax in the final chapters, which describe the country on the brink of the revolution.

Reviewed by R. P. Blackmur

Bookm 72:421 D '30 230w

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

Books p7 N 2 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p3 D 6 '30 700w

New Repub 65:118 D 10 '30 30w

New Statesman 35:370 Je 28 '30 150w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 100w

"We may as well admit at once that among the books which we have attempted to review in the last three years this is one of the two which we have been unable to read through. It seems to us to possess all the faults of Russian fiction without any of its great virtues. There is in it sensuality ad nauseam and talk ad infinitum. . . One no sooner becomes interested in an episode that promises to be different than a woman enters the scene, then a monk. Then we retire." F. L. R.

— Outlook 156:428 N 12 '30 200w

"Imagine a Tchekov, without a sense of humour, writing on and on and on about the intimate love affairs of a group of people, in which monks and their mistresses play the leading rôles. Yet the book is not pornographic; rather it is a study of Russian men and women seen dispassionately and scientifically, as it were under a microscope. There is all the Tchekov weariness of existence, without the illumination of the wit that in Tchekov redeems it for non-Russian readers. Yet wearisome as the story often becomes, it is difficult to set it down, so vivid is the panorama of life it displays, so compelling the portraiture, so delicate the workmanship."

+ — Sat R 149:830 Je 28 '30 230w

KALLINIKOV, IOSIF—Continued
"The book, in its Russian edition, may be rendering excellent service to the Communist leaders in Russia in the way of helping their anti-religious and anti-capitalistic propaganda but, for the same reason, the value of the novel as a literary work is greatly impaired." A. M. Nikolaieff
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:426 D 6 '30 650w

"The author uses a huge canvas, and fills it in with undoubted power. . . But many readers will find 916 pages of unsuccessful and mostly half-hearted struggles against the flesh an over-generous allowance. The translation reads admirably."
— + Spec 145:358 S 13 '30 220w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 100w

"The novel is a dull and annoyingly pretentious piece of work. . . The singular point of view of the novel, in which animal passion is dressed up in a grotesque sort of religiosity, is not the most trying thing about it, however; the chief trouble is that the author has very little of the novelist's equipment, and that the extraordinarily ambitious nature of his work emphasizes his deficiencies and his commonplace manner of writing. There is only an occasional touch of humanity in the characters of the novel, not one of whom is drawn with any consistency; they are virtuous and mystical on one page, lecherous and theatrical on the next."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 270w

KALTENBORN, HANS VON. We look at the world. 272p $2.50 The author, 9 garden pl., Brooklyn, N.Y., for sale by Baker & Taylor
327.73 United States—Foreign relations. Internationalism

What the rest of the world thinks of America is Mr Kaltenborn's chief concern in this analysis of America and world-consciousness. He shows the qualities of materialism and idealism in the American character and how this dualism affects international relationships.

Reviewed by W. W. MacLaren
Ann Am Acad 150:302 Jl '30 180w

"This little book is a valuable aid in the popularization of the foreign responsibilities of the United States."
+ Books p16 Je 22 '30 130w
Christian Century 47:1092 S 10 '30 220w

"Mr. Kaltenborn has not delved very much beneath the surface. His book is part travel diary, part political discussion; it is lively and readable. We should not perhaps expect anything more in a study of world conditions so evidently designed for popular consumption, but when the author is so confident in certain of his judgments as to the future, his superficiality becomes less easy to excuse. . . Unfortunately the economic aspects of America's position in world affairs do not receive the attention they deserve. . . Finally there are occasional minor mistakes of fact which do not make for confidence in the author's more important statements." F. R. Dulles
— + N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 600w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 80w

KANTOR, MACKINLAY. El goes south. 297p $2 Coward-McCann
30-21867

In Rogers Park, a Chicago suburb, lives Lester Troutwine, widower, claim correspondent in Hirschfield's and the father of four grown children: Charlotte, Theodore, Douglas and Pauline. This is the story of their lives, their jobs, their little pleasures, tragedies and love affairs. The main interest centers about the father and his second marriage. The realistic, everyday pictures of this middle-class family life are bound together by the clatter of taxi, truck and police ambulance, and the roar of the "El" going south.

"This story of Chicago is an authentic picture of our time, done with color and energy and understanding and sometimes with beauty. If at times Mr. Kantor's canvas is necessarily drab, he has made up for it with brilliant bits of portraiture. The story has movement and life and insight." T. S. Winslow
+ Books p2 S 7 '30 900w

"'Diversey' was, to me, a much more interesting piece of work than 'El Goes South.' It sounded as if it were dug out of the author's heart, while 'El Goes South' seems as if it were a task which the author had set himself. However, [this book] shows more confidence in his medium on the author's part, more assurance that the style which he has chosen—in moments of tenseness a staccato, often imagistic prose—fits his subject." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Ag 30 '30 250w

"There is no possible fault to be found with the technical treatment of Mr. Kantor's novel. He writes in a clear, vigorous style, and he knows thoroughly the characters of whom he writes. He defines them, their clothes, their sentiments, their pursuits and aspirations with unmistakable reality. But he falls somewhere short of the necessary conviction. Their emotions appear almost as hurried and mechanical as the elevated trains which carry them to work, and they have little more artistic depth or significance."
+ — N Y Times p6 S 21 '30 550w

"The spirit of the book as a whole is as contemporaneous as tomorrow's paper. States of mind are well represented, as is the lingo of these people when they achieve articulateness. . . There is no lift to the book, only the delight of recognizing how truthfully common things and ordinary people and obvious remarks and too familiar touches may be rendered by an exactly observing novelist." Harry Salpeter
N Y World p9 Ag 25 '30 1000w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:30 S 3 '30 100w

"For all its sleek and wiry sophistication, and in spite of its ingenious construction, 'El Goes South' does not take hold. It is brilliant but shallow. . . There is raw material for high drama in the plot, but it is never shaped or realized." R. B. Macdougall
— + Sat R of Lit 7:70 Ag 23 '30 450w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 550w

KAPUSTIN, HARRY. Crowd your luck on death. 241p $2.50 Harcourt
30-6152

Eleven short stories, written in an impressionistic manner, presenting certain American types from a realistic viewpoint, or employing a touch of fantasy and mysticism, as in The Deep Kindergarten and in Kark, tho the emphasis thruout is upon technique rather than content.

"Mr. Kapustin has the sure touch of a real artist. He is evolving his own technique. Here and there he recalls Hemingway, here and there Ring Lardner. Why should he not learn from them? Even when he goes into an occasional huddle with Gertrude Stein, there is a method in his craziness. He never lets it spoil the story." William McFee
+ Books p20 Ap 6 '30 450w

"The sombre, the unhappy or unfortunate, are Mr. Kapustin's interests. He submits the othersidedness of life. There is no question as to the truth of the things he writes about. They exist not only as the predominant aspect of the existence of many persons and classes, but as elements in the career of most." B. M. F.
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 22 '30 430w
N Y Times p9 My 25 '30 300w

"There is originality here, newness, invention, imagination. Most of the stories are short. Only two of them are as long as thirty pages. There is some nice compression and a good sense of selection. On the whole, an unusually interesting offer from a newcomer." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 200w

"Even the least of his stories is quick with life—directly presented, without too much cerebration, without embroidery, without distortion for dramatic effects or sentimental uses. He seizes the essence of certain simple emotions and conveys it in a blunt, economical narrative, pungent with the language of his characters." Marshall Best

+ Sat R of Lit 6:840 Mr 22 '30 400w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 200w

KARLWEIS, MARTA (MRS JAKOB WASSERMANN). Viennese lover. 315p $2.50 Washburn

"A searching character study of an Austrian Don Juan, through whose career the decay and collapse of Old Austria is presented."—Outlook

"The author writes with notable vigor in some places and flounders badly in others. Right in the middle of a scene whose power is dependent upon the exclusion of the least jarring note, she is likely to put a phrase such as 'I'm not telling you the half of it,' or 'Nothing doing' into the mouth of a character, with effects on the web of illusion which may be imagined. And in her next novel one hopes that she will have outgrown her editorial interruptions and ineptitudes. They hinder an otherwise well-handled story."

— + Books p10 Je 1 '30 550w

"The odor of putrefaction permeates the whole novel, depicting the decay of the old Austria. The disagreeable qualities of the characters in the book are so admirably depicted that the reader is likely to remember them for some time. But for the rest, the story is slow moving and tedious; there are many irrelevant details, and in general a bad taste is left in the mouth."

— + N Y Times p7 Je 15 '30 450w

"A strong, dramatic novel. . . Although fundamentally a character study, the novel has plot and action, brilliant scenes, and a clever use of indirect speech instead of dialogue. It is a book which gives intellectual rather than emotional pleasure." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:187 Je 4 '30 200w

KASOVICH, ISRAEL ISSER. Days of our years; personal and general reminiscence (1859-1929); tr. by Maximilian Hurwitz. 358p $3 Jordan pub. co, 632 Broadway, N.Y.

B or 92 Jews in the United States. Jews in Russia 29-13044

The autobiography of a devout and orthodox Lithuanian Jewish scholar, who, after many years of poverty and disappointments in Russia, emigrated to America where for some sixteen years he was associate editor of the Yiddish publication, The Jewish Farmer.

"The biography of Israel Kasovich lacks the rich literary flavor and intellectual robustness of Shmarya Levin's narrative; it possesses, however, a fine feeling for detail, a quiet humor that saves its drabbest scenes from morbidity and a sensitiveness that only occasionally runs over into sentimentality. The English is often careless and slangy. The correction of the English and the elimination of the epilogue would improve the tone of what is a most worth-while autobiography." Ruth Sapin

+ — Books p2 Jl 27 '30 870w

"Throughout the volume, Mr. Kasovich endeavors to present and succeeds in presenting an exposition of the Jewish faith in its broadest and most universal conception. Mr. Kasovich's book gives an invaluable picture of the spiritual and physical details of the life of the old-world Jews." M. S. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 900w

"The translator has done his best to make the book completely understandable to American readers. I believe, at times, that he tried a little too hard, that without the footnotes or the glossary the readers would have been able to sense obscure meanings. The style, as it appears in English, is patient and satisfying. If here and there a phrase or a metaphor appear trite, it may be explained in part by the difficulty which always attends the transplanting of a masterpiece in one language into the medium of another. It goes without saying that Jews will enjoy 'The Days of Our Years.' I should like, however, to recommend it to my Gentile friends, in the interest of a better mutual acquaintance." H. E. Burrougns

+ Sat R of Lit 7:208 O 11 '30 1050w

KASTNER, ERICH. Emil and the detectives; a story for children; tr. by May Massee. (Junior bks.) 224p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-24339

On his way to Berlin to visit his grandmother Emil fell asleep and had his money stolen by the man who shared his compartment. Altho he came from the country Emil was not stupid, and he determined to get that money back. He followed the man, met the boy with the auto horn, who summoned his friends, and among them all they caught a very clever thief.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

"Emil and the Detectives is hoped-for adventure come true—a kind that most young boys would give their hats to have. . . The translation, by May Massee, uses slang in the city boy's own manner and Walter Trier's portrait gallery at the beginning of the book is irresistible. American boys—girls, too—are going to have a grand good time with Emil and his detectives." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:246 N '30 220w

"One suspects that May Massee was moved to make her admirable translation not alone for the sheer fun it was to introduce Emil and his friends to American boys and girls, but also out of her own realization both as a teacher and a librarian of the value of this fresh material as a human document in education. It should enlarge the world of many an American teacher of the fourth grade and beyond to know that the small boys of Berlin are so near of kin to the small boys of Buffalo and Chicago.' A. C. Moore

+ Books p8 S 14 '30 650w
Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 80w

"This story of a gang of Berlin kids is entertaining enough, but I wonder why it has been translated—there must be many more entertaining books for children written in German today. The illustrations are amusing, and the story gives an account of children's lives in Berlin that has much interest." Padraic Colum

+ — New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 120w

" 'Emil and the Detectives' is likely to do more than any 'Little Cousin' series to make boys and girls in this country feel that the boys and girls of Germany are like the boys and girls of the United States. The illustrations have the gayety and humor of the text and seem peculiarly a part of it." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 230w

"The undeniable charm of the story is attributable to two things—the situation and the characters. There is something very beguiling, absurdly moving, in the picture of this bold thief surrounded by a swarm of youngsters who by mere force of numbers nullify their weakness as adversaries. As for the characters—not for a long time have we met in a book children so real, real as salt and bread. . . Let no one who really cares for children and finds a peculiar appeal in that which goes on beneath their apparently unsubtle surfaces, let no one who believes in and loves the idea of the family as an institution, miss this book." Marcia Dalphin

+ Sat R of Lit 7:191 O 4 '30 800w

KAUFFMAN, REGINALD WRIGHT. Pirate Jean. 322p $2 Macaulay

30-5176

Jean Lafitte, pirate and patriot, is the hero. The story shows him at the time of the battle of New Orleans rescuing a young girl from the clutches of a fortune-hunting Spanish youth, and participating in the battle.

KAUFFMAN, R. W.—Continued

Bookm 72:xi S '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Mr 9 '30 100w

"'Pirate Jean' is a conventionally superficial romance. But it retains much of the frontier flavor, many echoes of clashes when men of a dozen nations mingled in the marts of New Orleans, and it presents above all the convincing outline of a dashing character who richly deserves a good biographer."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 6 '30 270w

"This volume is the lightest of light reading."
N Y World p10m Ap 20 '30 100w

KAVANAGH, MARCUS A. You be the judge. 311p $2.50 Reilly & Lee
343.1 Trials 29-19235

"A collection of twenty-six stories of criminal cases which the reader is asked to judge. The actual court decisions are printed at the end of the book. The author, a jurist of the Superior Court of Cook County, Illinois, from his own experience has selected this novel group of cases."—St Louis

Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '30 550w

"Judge Kavanagh has written these little tales from his own experience and knowledge very well, with much understanding of criminals and their ways, appreciation of dramatic situations and skill in keeping his narrative at high tension."
+ N Y Times p20 Ja 12 '30 200w
St Louis 28:66 Mr '30

KAYE-SMITH, SHEILA (MRS THEODORE PENROSE FRY). Shepherds in sackcloth. 379p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Cassell]
30-16250

For more than twenty-five years Mr Bennet, a true shepherd of his flock, has ministered to his tiny parish on the borders of Sussex. Discord enters the quiet parish with the advent of the rich and domineering Mrs Millington who tries to force her religious convictions on the vicar and set him at odds with his bishop. Mr Bennet and his gentle wife also become innocently involved in the tragic love affair of Mrs Millington's niece, Theresa, and a young nonconformist preacher.

Booklist 27:104 N '30

"Not since we read Joanna Godden has a novel by Sheila Kaye-Smith touched us more poignantly than this latest romance of hers—Shepherds in Sackcloth. . . Sheila Kaye-Smith, an English novelist of the highest rank, is a person to be thankful for, and one whose compassionate criticism of life deserves wide consideration." Lynn Anderson
+ Bookm 71:547 Ag '30 350w

"When credit for having written one more sympathetic story of Sussex life has been given to Miss Kaye-Smith, it must be admitted that her work drops this time quite a bit below the high-water mark. It is true that by choosing to deal with very simple themes, with the people who are close to earth and with the countryside she knows so well, she has picked stuff of enduring quality and beauty. But perhaps no one scene or atmosphere can yield fresh inspiration beyond a certain point. Perhaps it is time for an excursion into fresh lands. Whatever the cause, it seems to me that this book is without the power to work its way into the hidden places of the mind where our really important impressions are treasured." M. C. Dawson
+ — Books p5 Ag 24 '30 600w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 30 '30 1550w

Cath World 132:374 D '30 220w

Reviewed by Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p13 O 4 '30 120w
Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30
Nation 131:228 Ag 27 '30 180w

"Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith can use the Christian sacrificial language intelligently and beautifully; it is a pleasure to read someone who both believes in the religion and understands it."
+ Nation and Ath 46:682 F 15 '30 100w
New Repub 64:135 S 17 '30 250w

"The strength and beauty of this book lie partly in the perfect balance between characters and setting—for not only do the people all stand up, but the trees have real roots; partly in the fact that its humour and its pitifulness are, as in real life, imperceptibly blended; and partly in Miss Kaye-Smith's gift for unobtrusive epigrams, and not satirical epigrams alone, but good-natured ones, which are rarer. . . This is a story which condemns nothing save intolerance, pleads for nothing save kindness. If it does not haunt you a little, either you are very hard-hearted or else you are already a saint."
+ New Statesman 34:670 Mr 1 '30 500w

"It may be admitted at once that, in 'Shepherds in Sackcloth' the original triumph of 'Joanna Godden' has not been equaled. It is perhaps less necessary to add that 'Shepherds in Sackcloth' is an unusually competent and satisfying novel. . . Miss Kaye-Smith has woven together very neatly the diverse threads of her story. It is not lacking in drama, or in conviction, or in profoundly simple human understanding, but it falls somewhere short of unity. The pathetic, shadowy figure of Mr. Bennet is scarcely sufficient to weld into a single theme the bold and inharmonious destinies of Theresa Silk and George Heasman." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 750w

"There are scenes in this novel which equal in power any which Miss Kaye-Smith has written, except perhaps the climactic passages of 'Joanna Godden,' which is, after all, one of the high peaks in English fiction of the last thirty years. Readers who find themselves at sea in the mass of fumbling, half articulated novels by half-baked writers who have nothing to say and say it badly, should not miss this work of an accomplished craftsman who knows her way about life and gazes upon it with sane and penetrating eyes."
+ N Y Times p7 Ag 31 '30 600w

"The book is rounded, replete with detail. Because it is real, it bites deep into your sympathy. It leads you, perhaps, into a world alien in its preoccupation with doctrines, creeds, and church ceremony, in its tremendous ignoring of the universe. Yet this little world soars above its own limitations, as Miss Kaye-Smith describes it, and you find yourself at the center of humanity. You know that she is giving you the truth." V. P. Ross
+ Outlook 155:666 Ag 27 '30 900w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"This is a powerful, fascinating, and thoroughly sincere story, distinguished by the author's customary skill in the delineation of character and by a high degree of literary craftsmanship. It serves to confirm Sheila Kaye-Smith's position in the very front rank of the younger English novelists." Stanley Went
+ Sat R of Lit 7:177 O 4 '30 420w

"Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith knows the clerical atmosphere well. Her creatures are something more than lay figures, although they are there to make a case in religious controversy. She does this with rather suspicious melodramatic effect." V. S. Pritchett
Spec 144:99 Ja 18 '30 130w

"Sheila Kaye-Smith has always used simple materials, and in 'Shepherds in Sackcloth' she has made a fine novel out of them."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 16 '30 500w

KAYSER, RUDOLF. Stendhal, the life of an egoist; [tr. from the German by Geoffrey Dunlop]. 278p $3 Holt

B or 92 Beyle, Marie Henri 30-7319

A biography, novelized in treatment, of Henri Beyle, the precursor of the modern psychological novelists, by one of Germany's best known critics. The biographer describes the author's childhood, his life in Paris as a Don Juan, and his miserable death in the streets of that city, and gives an appreciative estimate of his work.

"This biography was not intended as a critical study. By making this clear in the beginning, Kayser apparently regards himself as relieved of the necessity for a detailed consideration of Stendhal's work. He dismisses La Chartreuse de Parme, for instance, with a bare page or two of aimless discussion. Yet he gives us, without permitting us to follow the steps by which they are reached, conclusions which are manifestly drawn from a study of the novels. In a book whose intention is purely informative, this method is certainly unsatisfactory and, if you will, a little unfair."
— Bookm 71:115 Mr '30 460w

"The essential criticism is that its effect is that of being feeble invention, or rather a detail copied from any conventional portrait of a Roman prelate. Scenes in the book, true or false, are chosen with no sense of the vivid or the specific, they carry no conviction and they leave us with the general impression of having read about a fictional character who was mildly original, safely liberal, timidly deceitful, but who certainly was not the real, the notorious French consul, Henri Beyle-Stendhal." Malcolm Cowley
— Books p17 Ap 6 '30 700w

"We must thank Rudolf Kayser for giving us a critical insight into Henri Beyle's life and Stendhal's egoism. The one molded the other and only a careful student like our German biographer could possibly trace his path through the tangle caused by the interplay of forces." S. H.
+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 22 '30 1300w

"Kayser's book has all the defects of its genre. It is that pernicious thing, a fictionized biography. But it triumphs in a sense because it portrays vividly a man of immense importance, a man to whom one can turn today and learn a great deal." C. H. Grattan
— + Nation 130:630 My 28 '30 370w

"Rudolf Kayser has done very well by Stendhal. Despite the lures of novelized biography, he has made Stendhal a noble and important figure. The book is serious, sensitive and scholarly. If it is perhaps impossible to create a picture of the man which will stand for examination, Kayser has at least given us the essence of his personality. One cannot help feeling, however, that the old apparatus of literary biography—authorities, critical opinions, categorical chapters, etc.—would have added weight and reality." Lionel Trilling
+ — N Y Evening Post p6s Mr 1 '30 950w

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman
N Y Times p2 Ap 6 '30 1850w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer
N Y World p10m Mr 16 '30 950w

"The book is crowded with petty errors. A faint familiarity with Stendhal's life and works would have saved the translator from writing Place Grenelle for Place Grenette, Mathilde for Métilde, Mme de Chastellan for Mme de Chateller. It is only fair to add that Mr. Kayser shows a genuine sympathy for his hero; that many pages in his introduction sound convincing; and that his narrative is often vivid and well informed." Robert Vigneron
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1024 My 10 '30 800w

KAZARINE, MRS VIOLET (WHITE). Five sisters. 303p $2.50 Covici [7s 6d Chatto]

30-4854

"Miss Kazarine's five women are real in the sense that if one met one of them one would say, 'My dear, she's just like a character out of a novel'. One of them writes scandalous books, one has tuberculosis, one drinks, one dresses well, and the fifth 'goes to market'. For the most part the action centers about an interchange of husbands and lovers that results in what might be called Soul States."—Bookm

"Even granting the author's premise that these are startling and exalted women one cannot take this book seriously as a penetrating study of the feminine mind. For every time a crisis gives an opportunity for some genuine penetration, the author becomes either romantic or banal. None the less, it is interesting reading." Paul Allen
Bookm 71:109 Mr '30 150w

"'Five Sisters' belongs to the growing school of Michael Arlen. Lipstick, leisure, and moral turpitude are the rocks upon which this school is founded. And if you find a certain sameness, a certain monotonous familiarity about these Arlen women, remember that, although crème de menthe is tasty, too much of it will eventually cloy. But there are surely plenty of persons who have not yet had their fill. Such will want to buy Miss Kazarine's synthetic pint and mix it with their own alcohol."
— Books p10 Mr 16 '30 260w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:707 F 22 '30 400w

"Mrs. Kazarine's narrative methods are extraordinarily brisk and adept. She has a knack of lively dialogue and a talent for malicious characterisation. But what makes us particularly grateful to Mrs. Kazarine is her positive inability to pad and a refreshing faculty of saying honestly and exactly all that she has to say and being content to leave it at that, without decorative or sentimental trimmings. She sets to work to tell us the story of a group of five disagreeable and misguided human creatures; she tells it dryly and concisely. Five Sisters is a remarkable book."
+ New Statesman 34:638 F 22 '30 330w

"'Five Sisters' is clever, it is adroit, it is carefully formed and polished and it falls too easily into a slick pattern to be alive. It is the sort of book which holds the attention well enough so that one reads it through with pleasure; but which, interrupted in the middle, probably would be forgotten and left unfinished." Marjorie Johnson
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 400w

"The disasters and the love, owing to the looseness and indefiniteness of the writing never seem to be of any significance to the story, or at all inevitable; irrelevantly they happen, and are narrated with all the old clichés of the melodramatic writer. . . The writing is careless and unconsidered: effects are consciously strained after."
— N Y Times p17 Mr 2 '30 420w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley
Sat R 149:240 F 22 '30 200w

"As a straight tale, 'Five Sisters' is cheap and melodramatic. But as a comment on capricious femininity, on the cruelty and vindictiveness of passionate women thrown for a time into unwelcome intimacy, it is incisive and thorough."
Sat R of Lit 6:996 Ap 26 '30 180w

"Miss Kazarine's country is an amusing one to pass through. It is bright, bizarre and modern, littered with people who live in delirium." B. E. Todd
+ Spec 144:287 F 22 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 400w

"Undoubtedly Mrs. Kazarine has painted her pictures of a depressing group quite carefully and with truth, but she has not made them very significant."
Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 13 '30 200w

KEARTON, CHERRY. In the land of the lion. 298p il $2.50 McBride [10s 6d Arrowsmith]

591.96 Zoology—Africa. Photography of animals 30-6169

"For twenty-five years Cherry Kearton has been roving about in Central Africa studying

KEARTON, CHERRY—Continued
and picturing its animal life. He was a pioneer in the modern sport of photographing, instead of killing, big game animals, and he writes about them, and all wild life, with very great interest, knowledge and love. In this new book he takes as his special field what he calls the 'last and greatest stronghold' of the lion, almost the only place, he says, in which that animal can now be found in great numbers, an area of about 200,000 square miles in Central Africa."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:302 My '30
Books p16 Ap 6 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p1 Ja 25 '30 580w
Nation and Ath 46:sup232 N 9 '29 70w

"In its twenty short chapters the author has something to say about most of the animals of the African bush and many birds and insects. The best, perhaps, is his chapter on the white ant. Systematic natural history is not his strong point, but his light sketches of the doings, family life, and frolics of the larger animals, lion, elephant, giraffe, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, and many more, are excellent reading, and conjure up fascinating pictures of wild life in sun-scorched bush, river, and swamp. The eighty-eight illustrations are mostly photographs from the author's film 'Tembi', one of the best Central African films yet produced."
+ Nature 125:12 Ja 4 '30 230w

New Statesman 34:340 D 14 '29 180w

"His book has the unusual interest of devoting considerable attention to some of the small [animals], although he writes first and at more length of the large animals which have been described by nearly all visitors to that region. But he writes with so much knowledge, so keen an interest and with so many reminiscent anecdotes of his own experiences that his book is distinctive and is in high degree both entertaining and informing. Unfortunately, the illustrations, of which there are over sixty full-page reproductions from a cinematograph film, are not as interesting as the text. The majority of them are disappointing because of their dim and vague backgrounds and the poorly defined and hazy figures of the animals."
+ — N Y Times p20 Ja 19 '30 400w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:149 Ja 22 '30 120w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30
St Louis 28:210 S '30
Sat R 148:330 S 21 '29 220w

"Here is a book about animals by a man who knows animals and knows them well. Cherry Kearton is a rare combination of expert photographer and dependable naturalist. . . The only adverse criticism, it seems to me, that can be advanced against it, is that the author has not made the most of his material. He has shown the reticence of the best guides and hunter-naturalists. He hesitates to talk about himself, as an Indian does. But this is overbalanced by the considerations mentioned before." Clyde Fisher
+ Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 550w

"It is written simply: we see the animals at home, not only the lion, but the elephant, the rhinoceros, the giraffe. He does not say a great deal about each animal, but every word counts and reveals his intimacy with them."
+ Spec 143:496 O 12 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p712 S 19 '29 700w

KEATOR, MAUDE C. Eyes through the tree. 257p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton
30-4726

Olive Kirt, an attractive young artist, went to rural Pennsylvania to find scenery to paint. She found the scenery and other things besides; trees that vanished, murderous eyes staring out from trees, weird yells echoing thru the valley at night, stealthy footfalls outside her door, and an artist with loss of memory. Was the artist responsible for the two murders which had taken place before Olive came, and for the murderous attack on Olive herself? When eighteen-year-old Joan Whipple disappeared things came to a showdown and The Thing which lived in the forest was captured.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Ap 13 '30 100w

"There is a certain amateurishness of treatment, but the story has its clever moments."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 3 '30 200w

KEBLER, LYMAN FREDERIC. Eat and keep
[2] fit; preventing and controlling overweight, acidosis and constipation; with an introd. by Harvey W. Wiley. 302p $3 The author, 1322 Park rd, Washington, D.C.
613.2 Food. Diet 30-8571

How to reduce, without harmful effects on health, thru proper choice and regulation of diet; how to prevent acidosis, constipation and other troubles; how to exercise to keep fit.

"Dr. Kebler's book offers the reader a nicely balanced ration of facts about foods and physiology. . . Here is authoritative information about nutrition." Lettie Gay
+ Books p10 D 28 '30 250w

"For the central purpose of the book its pages are rather too many and too full and too entertainingly written. For the reader is likely to be so much allured by all the little by-paths and inviting subjects as to forget what he wanted to learn while he goes off on these other trails. But if he can keep his mind steady on his original purpose he can emerge from the book's end well informed on that subject with the latest pronouncements of medicine and hygiene, and with it all illuminated and variegated by much knowledge on contributory themes."
+ N Y Times p15 Ag 24 '30 320w

KEEBLE, ALFRED L. Cabinet making; theory and practice. 174p il $1.50 (3s 6d) Longmans
684 Cabinet-work 30-20289

"Well illustrated little manual of handwork—its tools, appliances, and methods. Has chapters on cabinet brassware and fittings, brief notes on woods, and a glossary. Author is associated with the Municipal College of Technology, Belfast."—N Y New Tech Bks

N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30
St Louis 28:212 S '30

"The problem of writing an elementary textbook for a craft is to show that practice is the outcome of theory without going too deeply into the theoretical side for the young pupil to follow. Mr. Keeble has by no means solved the problem, but he has nevertheless produced a text-book of considerable practical value."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p483 Je 5 '30 300w

KEELER, HARRY STEPHEN. Amazing web. 532p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d; 2s 6d Ward, Lock]
30-5697

David Crosby, a young criminal lawyer of Chicago, undertakes to defend Archibald Chalmers, charged with murdering Rupert van Slyke. The web of intricate complications closing in upon the hero gives the story its title; and as a background to this main plot the author weaves in the story of the quarrel between Captain Kidd and Captain Quarlbush, and the mysterious revenge of the latter when Kidd's descendant (the victim in the modern plot) falls dead.

Bookm 71:xxx Ap '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Mr 9 '30 150w

"The trial scenes are highly dramatic, and the story holds the reader's interest all the way through to a conclusion that is something of a strain on the imagination."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p477 Je 13 '29 200w

KEELER, HARRY STEPHEN. Fourth king. 317p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Ward, Lock]
30-13233

A Chicago broker who made most of his money thru "shady" stock received a death warning. He made elaborate preparations for the foiling of the murderer, but unfortunately played straight into the hands he hoped to avoid. After his murder his clever young English secretary found himself deeply involved, but he was able to clear himself and to aid in locating the murderer.

Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 100w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 My 18 '30 100w

"Mr. Keeler is keeping up his reputation as a good mystery writer."
+ N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 140w
Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 120w

"All in all a good yarn." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 140w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 100w

"This mystery is fashioned from very familiar material, but has the merit of being well designed, neatly assembled and carefully finished."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p980 N 21 '29 180w

KEELER, HARRY STEPHEN. Green jade hand; in which a new and quite different type of detective unravels a mystery staged in Chicago, Bagdad on the Lakes, London of the West! 327p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Ward, Lock]
30-20353

An intricate mystery story in which there are involved a green jade hand, a priceless manuscript and a sacred relic, and the many people who are searching for them.

"Too involved for casual reading, but plenty of blood and thunder."
Bookm 71:xx Ag '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 S 21 '30 150w

"The brightest part of this book is the jacket, for chapter follows chapter with dull and tedious sentences that suggest the monotony of the prairies. It makes close reading for the amount of incident involved. . . Simon is neither humorous nor clever. In this he resembles the story of which he is a part." Bruce Rae
— N Y Times p18 Ag 24 '30 180w

"The story has all the faults of this author's works—it is badly over-written, absurdly melodramatic, spotted with careless grammar—or lack of it—and yet it is so crammed full of action and excitement that its faults are swallowed up in the absorbing interest of the many-faceted plot. It is a completely good story." W. C. Weber
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 160w

KEEZER, DEXTER MERRIAM, and MAY, STACY. Public control of business; a study of antitrust law enforcement, public interest regulation, and government participation in business. 267p $3; text ed $2.25 Harper

380.16 Trusts, Industrial—Law. Industry and state—United States. Corporation law. Business
30-11533

"In the belief that government supervision of business will present a pivotal issue during the next decade this volume has been projected to deal with the three major methods for effecting such control—antitrust law enforcement, commission regulation of enterprises affected with a public interest, and government participation in business—three methods which seek to attain the same general end by different means." (Pref.) Mr Keezer is of the editorial staff of the Baltimore Sun and Mr May of the faculty of Dartmouth College.

"A clear, concise, temperate discussion of the important problem of government control over business. . . The book is a real contribution to the field of government control. It will be helpful to students of economics, as well as to students of political science. It aims at, and succeeds in, describing accurately the present confusion in the law of government control." E. W. Crecraft
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:1054 N '30 450w

"In this dangerous and fascinating field no author can hope to stir his readers without offering definite conclusions on specific issues; nor can he do the latter without arousing critics. This book has 'teeth.' It contains little that is new substantively, but it contributes a fresh and stimulating treatment of public regulation, and a significant emphasis upon the common purpose and essential unity of the several regulatory methods. Much of it is excellent, and as an entirety it is an important and successful piece of work." B. W. Lewis
+ — J Pol Econ 38:616 O '30 1350w
N Y Times p26 Mr 16 '30 380w
St Louis 28:207 S '30
Special Lib 21:344 N '30

KEITH, ARTHUR BERRIEDALE. Sovereignty of the British dominions. 524p $7.25 (18s) Macmillan

325.342 Great Britain—Colonies. Imperial federation
30-9499

"Its aim is not to describe all aspects of Dominion government, but to trace the growth of Dominion sovereignty, both in its internal and external phases, and to show the limitations to which, in the author's opinion it is still subject. Most of the matter contained in this volume can be found in the new edition of Responsible Government, but the two works differ in organization as much as in scope and object. In a sense the later book may be regarded as a rejoinder to the Balfour Report, and in the light of that document chief interest attaches to Professor Keith's views on Dominion status." —Pol Sci Q

"Professor Keith is one of the most distinguished and careful observers of tendencies in the British imperial constitution. His War Government of the British Dominions was a survey of the situation following a conflict that greatly stimulated the movement toward dominion nationhood. The volume under review is a further effort to appraise the constitutional changes after a decade. . . The task is performed without undue detail or technicality, and yet throughout the adequacy and accuracy of the examination are apparent." Howard Robinson
+ Am Hist R 35:618 Ap '30 850w
Nation and Ath 46:614 F 1 '30 500w

"Many informed readers of this important book of Professor Keith's may feel that he exaggerates the practical importance of some of the surviving limitations upon full Dominion self-government. But in the light of the facts which he presents it seems impossible to make good the claim that the Dominions today are actually on a plane of constitutional equality with Great Britain." R. L. Schuyler
Pol Sci Q 45:460 S '30 550w
St Louis 28:289 D '30
Sat R 148:678 D 7 '29 460w

"Few men are better equipped to write on the Sovereignty of the British Dominions than Professor Arthur Berriedale Keith, the distinguished lawyer who is Lecturer on the Constitution of the British Empire at Edinburgh University, and was formerly Assistant Secretary to the Imperial Conference. He has given us an invaluable book which can be read right through as a fascinating study in the extraordinarily elastic methods of British statesmanship, but which is also a work of reference."

KEITH, A. B.—Continued

+ Spec 143:879 D 7 '29 800w

"Professor Keith's new book faces the problems of sovereignty in the Empire with a lucidity that brings the intricacies of those problems and the lines of solution into the intellectual horizon of the plain man who is not a lawyer nor a jurist."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p907 N 14 '29 2000w

KEITH, KATHERINE (MRS DAVID ADLER). Crystal icicle. 287p $2.50 Harcourt

30-3538

Nancy and Harold Muirs have been happily married for seven years. Then Harold falls passionately in love with Joan Peal, who works in his newspaper office. He tells Nancy and she, in hysterics, plans to take their small son Peter and leave him. Harold's passion for Joan, meanwhile, wanes as her love for him increases, and when Nancy informs her husband that she is going to have another child, he makes it an excuse to break off the affair with Joan.

Books p12 F 9 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 12 '30 250w

"Katherine Keith's first novel was called—simply—'The Girl.' It was published ten or twelve years ago. 'The Crystal Icicle' shows technically and stylistically the result of those years of unhurried work. However long in actual time it took to write it, obviously it is the flower of those years of thought. It is a seasoned, skillful use of a very difficult subject. Its actual writing has charm, humor, grace and that rare quality, 'style.' The author could not have chosen a more difficult theme than the struggle in a man's mind between his love for his wife, who temperamentally was frigid, and his passion for another woman who was frankly highly sexed." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p9 Ja 25 '30 500w

"'The Crystal Icicle' is of small dimensions in characters and background, but it is a model of precision in selection and distribution of material and exactness of style. Miss Keith understands her people thoroughly in their relation to one another. She views the three, husband, wife and mistress, with complete impartiality. She realizes the pain which each suffers. And she is nice enough to abstain from any false emphasis or forced conclusion. The solution is implicit in the statement of the case." R. M. L.

+ New Repub 62:54 F 26 '30 120w

N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 200w

"Her subject matter is more suited to a short story than a novel. It has little power as a whole and is rarely built up to the crux of inevitable tragic climax that is suggested throughout. Although the writing is concise and effective, there is an air of padding about the novel and more than a little unnecessary reiteration."

— + N Y Times p27 F 23 '30 400w

Outlook 154:188 Ja 29 '30 70w

"Miss Keith infuses a magic into her writing which makes her characters glow with reality and her style radiant with the charm of one who has an instinct for precision. She evokes a suspense which compels the reader to share the lives of her people. She is at her best, however, in catching the tragedies of the minor characters—and they are infinitely more moving than those upon whom she concentrates." Horace Coon

+ Sat R of Lit 6:738 F 15 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 16 '30 300w

KELLAND, CLARENCE BUDINGTON. Hard money. 474p $2.50 Harper

30-13232

In the early years of the nineteenth century young Jan Van Horn, son of a Dutch peddler, sailed his sloop down the Hudson river to New York. His object was to learn all he could about money, and his quest was successful beyond even his dreams. With the knowledge gained on that trip Jan entered upon his career as a banker, and from then until his death in 1845 his was a figure to reckoned with in the banking world.

Booklist 26:398 Jl '30

Bookm 71:xi Je '30 100w

"It is far from biographical and is, on the whole, a very spirited romance most capably done." Bellamy Partridge

+ Books p19 S 7 '30 380w

"While it is good fiction, it is also a record of the growth of a great country and as such has the added breadth and interest of an historical novel." A. B. T.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"Swift, fluent, at times somewhat unequal historical novel. The tale is alive, and realistically evokes a vanished American scene." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 50w

"This is one of the historical novels with fictitious main characters, a surrounding group of actual figures, and incidents so distorted from fact as to be particularly tantalizing. . . The book is neither fish, nor fowl, nor good red herring."

— Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 420w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 300w

KELLETT, ERNEST EDWARD. Conflict; a saga of the seventh century. 262p $3 Smith, R.R. [12s Constable]

31-776

A retelling of the story of the struggle between Egfrith, king of Northumbria, and Wilfrid, bishop of York, in the seventh century. Egfrith's desire was to maintain the peace and prosperity of his kingdom; but Wilfrid's jealousy of the wealth and prestige of the church caused open rupture between them, and paved the way for later disaster.

"Mr. Kellett is no mean novelist; he knows how to make the most out of the opposition of two strong characters; and, though he has a wide knowledge of his period, he does not allow this knowledge to clog or divert his narrative. It is perhaps a pity that he should have committed his characters to such involved and unwieldy dialogue; there would actually have been more reality in the story if the characters had expressed themselves in a plain, unidiomatic English, and if Mr. Kellett's astonishingly rich and authentic detail had been allowed to speak for itself."

+ — Bookm 72:301 N '30 200w

"The author has done a very commendable piece of literary work. He set himself a difficult task, for it called for a deep appreciation of the genius of that early period. . . This whole period in the history of Britain and also of the Church is interesting, and it throws much light upon the thought, traditions, and general developments of later days." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 4 '30 450w

Nation and Ath 48:386 D 13 '30 300w

"That Mr. Kellett's work is excellent of its sort goes without saying. But to some readers this kind of half-archaic, half-familiar narration is as irritating as to others it conveys a real pleasure. There is actual history behind the story—and no mythology—and those who like the admixture of the first two, and the style (grown a little familiar of late), will give the book a very cordial welcome."

New Statesman 35:654 Ag 30 '30 800w

N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 80w

"Mr. Kellett succeeds admirably in reconstructing for us the atmosphere of a period when Christianity had only just established its footing in the North of England and the belief in the old gods was still strong; his pictures of social life and his descriptions of scenes of incantation show that mixture of imagination and documentation which marks the scholar, and his choice of vocabulary and style is sufficiently removed from everyday language to prepare the reader for the unfamiliar and the striking."

+ Sat R 150:56 Jl 12 '30 350w

"Mr. Kellett is already known as one of the most scholarly and interesting of literary critics; but to his latest task he has brought a quality and range of imagination that very rarely indeed accompany erudition. He does not cease to be a critic, but he becomes a creator as well. . . As for his vigorous, graphic narrative style, it attains the simplicity, without the baldness, of the old sagas. The writing is at once strong and beautiful, and is something unique in modern literature." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 145:104 Jl 19 '30 600w

"The general course of events and the characterization of the protagonists may be accepted as accurate. When, however, he attempts to fill in his outline, his picturesque detail often falsifies the study for the student. All this would matter little if he had a creative gift such as enabled Scott to carry off his anachronisms. But the narrative moves rather heavily, there is a suspicion of 'tushery' in the dialogue, and the characters rarely come to life. Still, Scott is a high test; and the book is certainly much superior to the generality of recent historical novels."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p623 Jl 31 '30 450w

KELLY, ELEANOR (MERCEIN) (MRS ROBERT MORROW KELLY, Jr.). Spanish holiday. 361p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper

30-10715

Five short stories, each with a Spanish background. In "Feria," James Boothby of Virginia, a young and very good-looking lad attracts the attention of a Spanish beauty in Seville. Jimmy almost falls in love, but wakes up when he discovers that the beauty is already married to a distinguished, but jealous husband. Contents: Feria; In heaven a little window; Hombre de amor; El u' y el dos; The diddikal.

Booklist 26:398 Jl '30

"These five stories plant bright, dewy images upon your mind. They could hardly be called travelogues; nor are they stories which could have happened anywhere else on the face of the earth. They belong peculiarly to the soil and the people which the author describes. They have a tartness and a sentiment, a wisdom and a naiveté, a grotesqueness and a grace, blended to make the compost which is Spain."

+ Books p11 Ag 24 '30 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"Mrs. Kelly's stories are no mere note book sketches garnered from a railway journey through a strange country. She is an intimate in Spain, looking from the inside out, yet with still enough of the outside to be equally sympathetic with its point of view. If her material is slight, her characters are never so; and in the manner of their telling the stories are delightfully unique. One cannot have too many of them."

+ N Y Times p9 My 4 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

Reviewed by Angel Flores

Sat R of Lit 6:1127 Je 14 '30 700w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 220w

KELLY, ERIC P. Blacksmith of Vilno; a tale of Poland in the year 1832. 184p $2.50 Macmillan

30-26899

A tale of Poland in 1832, when the land was kept in constant turmoil by the Russians. The story centers around the lost crown of Poland, which the patriots hid and re-hid whenever the Russians were suspected to be on the trail of its hiding place. A favorite meeting place of the patriots is the blacksmith shop of Peter, at the edge of the forest outside of Vilno, and Peter's adopted son, the boy Stefan, takes an important part in the book. For older boys and girls.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

Bookm 72:xiv O '30 100w

Reviewed by E. B. Thompson

Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 1750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Older boys will find this a book to their taste, filled to the brim as it is with thrilling adventure, excitement and mystery. In construction this story is similar to The Trumpeter of Krakow, but we do not feel that this lessens the value of the book. Mr. Kelly's attention to historic detail and his careful character delineation are particularly noteworthy." E. P. A. S.

+ Library J 55:925 N 15 '30 180w

"The story abounds in thrilling moments, and the gallant patriotism of a people fighting a losing fight shines steadfastly throughout. The book is the work of an enthusiast and of one saturated with his subject."

+ Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 100w

"One of those good books which will please girls and boys alike." C. L. S.

+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

St Louis 28:275 N '30

"It is a tale delightfully told, ingenious in incident, absorbing in development, and carried on a thread of poetic sentiment that lends dignity to its narrative. As a matter of fact, it a story not only interesting to boy as well as to girl, but to adult as well as to adolescent. Mr. Kelly, whose 'Trumpeter of Krakow' won the Newbery Prize in 1929. . . writes with a fervor of feeling that is completely in the tradition of Polish nationalism, but he keeps his tale free of sentimentality and maintains an even balance between the robustness of its happening and the warmth of its emotion." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 7:151 S 20 '30 300w

"Authentic historical background, realistic characterizations, suspense sustained to the very end, make 'The Blacksmith of Vilno' enjoyable reading for adults as well as older children. Mr. Kelly makes skilful use of the material he gathered at first hand, and with skilful touch has given vigor and appeal to a romantic period in Poland's tragic history."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 280w

KELLY, FRED CHARTERS. Why you win or lose; the psychology of speculation. 177p $2 Houghton

332.64 Speculation. Stock exchange 30-22741

From his observation of the average man's behavior in the stock-market game Mr Kelly has arrived at certain deductions concerning the psychology of speculation, and presents them herewith in this little volume.

Booklist 27:93 N '30

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Reviewed by P. W. Garrett

Sat R of Lit 7:264 O 25 '30 180w

KEMECHEY, L. Il Duce; the life and work of Benito Mussolini; tr. by Magda Vamos. from the Hungarian. 280p $3.50 Smith, R.R. [12s 6d Williams & Norgate]

B or 92 Mussolini, Benito 30-18578

An emotional biography of Mussolini, the "modern Caesar," by a young Hungarian admirer. The biographer draws upon Il Duce's autobiography, letters and speeches for much of his material; the early portion of the book is for the most part a romanticized account of Mussolini's boyhood and youth.

Booklist 27:156 D '30

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 9 '30 500w

"Many books have been written about Mussolini, some good and some bad. It would not be quite fair to say that this is one of the worst; for the vigour and impetuosity of its style, and the dramatic presentation of its hero, at least make it readable, and even give it certain distinction. But to the serious student of history or politics it is worthless. It tells us nothing that we did not know already about the Duce, and it leaves untold a vast deal that is necessary to the understanding of his character and his career."

KEMECHEY, L.—Continued
— + New Statesman 35:18 Ap 12 '30 730w

"To those who feel that the Italian dictator has already been over-biographied, especially from the appreciative standpoint, the present volume will hardly appeal. It is an emotionally exuberant glorification of 'the modern Cæsar, at whose magic word have arisen waving seas of golden corn, behind whose Roman legions are ranged a forest of factories, steamers and aeroplanes.' As a glorification it is a sincere, vivid piece of writing." F. H. M.
— + N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 120w
St Louis 28:273 N '30

"His book contains nothing that is new, but all the same it deserves a wide public, for it is written in a style that impresses the personality and the dynamic energy of the Fascist leader upon the reader in a way in which no previous writer has done. The translator, Miss Magda Vamos, has admirably preserved the spirit of the original." Charles Petrie
+ — Sat R 149:659 My 24 '30 80w

"Those who like plenty of strawberry jam will enjoy it. Personally, when I read a biography that on a certain day in the hero's childhood 'white fleecy clouds lingered in the sky like wanton fairies,' or that when he kissed a girl 'he felt under her thin coat the fresh rhythm of her girlish body. The wind sang a strange, fierce march and a blonde ringlet fluttered before his face,' I want to know (a) how the biographer comes to know all that, and (b) why anyone should be asked to pay 12s. 6d. to read about it."
— Spec 144:711 Ap 26 '30 130w

"The mixture of fact and imagination is curious, but it should be added that so far as the Duce himself is concerned the narrative is quite accurate. Substantially the truth is told, and no attempt is made to minimize the completeness with which Mussolini's opinions were transformed by experience."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p359 My 1 '30 420w

KEMPTON, KENNETH PAYSON. Loot of the Flying dragon. 269p il $2 Little 30-2054

A story of pirates, kidnapping, fights at sea, and hidden treasure, in all of which young Barny Vane is deeply concerned. The action takes place in the early years of the eighteenth century.

Booklist 26:286 Ap '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

"The author successfully suggests the atmosphere of the eighteenth century and the book is well written. The illustrations by Wilfred Jones are spirited and appropriate." A. T. Eaton
N Y Times p24 Ja 19 '30 250w

"It is a fine fresh tale, cleverly accelerated without seeming to hurry."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:857 Mr 22 '30 200w

KENDALL, EDWARD CALVIN. Thyroxine. (Am. chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 265p il $5.50 Chemical catalog co.
612.44 Thyroid gland 29-3554

"Dr. Kendall, who is associated with the Mayo Foundation, deals with the subject from the chemist's viewpoint and attempts to correlate the activity of the thyroid gland with reactions which involve oxidation. There is an account of early investigations as well as other interesting information concerning the important rôle of the thyroid in medicine."—N Y New Tech Bks

---

"The book as a whole is a most excellent piece of work. While the author states that he has approached the task from the standpoint of a chemist, he has presented the clinical aspects in a way to be of interest and information to the practitioner. The selections from the overabundant literature have been most judicious, and an adherence to factual evidence is maintained throughout, the latter a pleasing and refreshing contrast to some of even the more recent of the literature of the ductless glands. Dr. Kendall is to be congratulated on the production of a most readable and significant treatise on a subject of wide general interest and import." A. W. Rowe
+ Am Chem Soc J 52:4619 N '30 500w

"In this well printed and illustrated monograph Doctor Kendall gives a remarkably complete account of the essential chemical facts concerning the thyroid gland, including necessarily the diseases associated with the gland and the biological manifestations following administration of thyroid preparations and of thyroxine." A. T. Cameron
Ind & Eng Chem 21:291 Mr '29 350w

"The researches of Prof. Kendall into the chemistry of the active principle of the thyroid gland are well known: this monograph, however, is much more than an account of his own work, since the study of thyroxine implies the study of the physiology of the thyroid gland. The viewpoint is that of the chemist who is concerned with the relationship of thyroxine to the processes of oxidation in the animal body. . . This book should be in the hands of all biochemists, physiologists, and pharmacologists: it will be invaluable as a work of reference, since more than five hundred papers are reviewed in the text."
+ Nature 125:161 F 1 '30 280w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:14 Ja '29

KENDON, FRANK. Small years; with an introd. by Walter De La Mare. 196p $2.50 Macmillan [6s Cambridge univ. press]
B or 92 30-31261

In this book Mr Kendon sets down, with poetic charm and poignancy, the memories of his childhood at Gowdhurst in Kent. The narrative holds the essence of a country child's adventures in forest and field and in the small kingdom of the family garden; and it contains some convincing portraits of the grown-ups who were a part of his little world.

Reviewed by J. R. Meade
Books p24 N 23 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 300w

"'The Small Years' is a little masterpiece. He has not only expounded our early world, but has enlivened it with an exact and delicate configuration. In marking the limits of that little 10-mile saucer of Kentish woods, cottages and fields where, as a child of five, he wandered, he has made a contribution to the geography of memory which is as fascinating and exciting in its degree as the adventures of Cabot and Columbus in the great centuries of discovery." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 26 '30 550w

"Mr. Kendon has written beautiful poetry. But he has never done anything as good as this, and I feel it impossible that he can ever do anything better. To many it may all seem very trivial, but in the tone and manner of telling it can stand with the intense, pure quality of W. H. Hudson and Sir James Barrie for its power to convince and to charm, in what Mr. De la Mare rightly calls, in his Introduction, 'its lovely truth and clarity.' " J. C. Stamp
+ Nation and Ath 47:567 Ag 2 '30 750w

"It is not everyone who is able to recapture the moods and mysteries of childhood with Mr. Kendon's ability; nor for everyone is childhood worthy of being recaptured. But in his case it is the telling of his early experiences which is the excuse and merit of this book, rather than any particularly enticing adventures or grim fears which he himself experienced."

+ New Statesman 35:378 Je 28 '30 730w

"A rare delight for lovers of simple and beautiful English. To review it is actually to quote it, or to want to quote it page by page. It is not a book for many people. But the few who read it will cherish it and keep it to read again." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:506 Jl 30 '30 250w

St Louis 28:273 N '30

"The writing is simple and direct, but so sensitive and acute is the impulse behind it that the reader finds himself pausing again and again, cajoled into recollection of his own childhood, and forced by the magic of Mr Kendon's inspired sincerity to wander back along many paths that time, misery, and too-much-with-the-worldliness had long since closed. . . I should not be surprised if Gowdhurst and its neighbourhood, where his childhood was spent, becomes another Selborne." Richard Church

+ Spec 144:1060 Je 28 '30 770w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 21 '30 1000w

"The direct first-hand narrative is always admirable, full of authentic touches of delicate and penetrating recollection, which at once build up a scene and depict a character. The impression made by a snowfall, the whirling flakes grey against the sky; the acid smell of dead wood; the sweet, warm toasting smell of dried towels after the bath; the blackbird, musing, experimental, then practised and finally triumphant, tone sketches, done entirely for the blackbird's pleasure; such things as these are bits of pure life. And the pictures of people are only a little less actual."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p531 Je 26 '30 870w

KENLY, JULIE (CLOSSON) (MRS WILLIAM L. KENLY). Green magic, the story of the world of plants. 184p il $2.50; school ed 69c (7s 6d) Appleton

580 Botany—Juvenile literature 30-11518

Stories which relate for children the life, habits, and ways of plants, stressing the parts played by seeds, fruit, and flowers. Besides demonstrating the workings of this "green magic" the author brings out some startling resemblances between plants and animals and people.

Booklist 26:401 Jl '30

"It tells countless unsuspected things about plants and plant life and throws fresh light on those accepted bits of knowledge that hitherto one just took as a matter of course. Botanical terms and classifications are explained in a way that gives them meaning and reality. I can see children thrilled by Miss Kenly's description of the little plant babies setting out with their packed luncheon baskets and of the dramatic things that happen to them on their journey. A grand book this, presenting a new world as fascinating as any fairy tale and scientifically true." M. W. Bianco

+ Books p8 My 18 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

"Though the style sometimes seems a bit written down, one is inclined to forgive it for the sake of the striking way in which interesting facts are presented. . . The illustrations are unique, combining as they do clearness and correctness with artistic merit." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 100w

"It is an eye-to-eye explanation of how plants grow; the text is inspiring and the pictures by Edna Reindel are accurate as diagrams and highly decorative."

+ Outlook 155:345 Jl 2 '30 50w

St Louis 28:248 O '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p981 N 20 '30 100w

KENNEDY, LOUISE VENABLE. Negro peasant turns cityward; effects of recent migrations to northern centers. (Studies in history, economics and public law) 270p $4.25 Columbia univ. press [17s King]

325.26 Negroes—Economic conditions

30-27937

As the first of a series sponsored by the Council for research in the social sciences, Columbia university, the present volume is concerned with the effects of Negro migration to northern centers during the last fifteen years. Miss Kennedy outlines the reasons for this northward shift and lists the main economic and social effects of the rapid growth of Negro groups in northern cities. The appendix contains a general bibliography and index.

Reviewed by Alain Locke

Books p14 N 23 '30 320w

"It is by far the most dependable study of the Negro migration now available. Anyone wishing to study this important social phenomenon, which may have as much influence on the character of several American cities as it has on that of the Negro himself, will have to take Miss Kennedy's work into account."

+ Christian Century 47:1124 S 17 '30 100w

Reviewed by Haynes Trebor

N Y Times p16 S 14 '30 400w

Reviewed by Nels Anderson

Outlook 156:429 N 12 '30 200w

"An admirably documented treatise of considerable importance."

+ Spec 145:284 Ag 30 '30 180w

"Dr. Kennedy's study is an admirable example of how research of this kind should be carried out. While she has overlooked no important source of information, she has resisted the temptation, to which so many American investigators succumb, of sending out questionnaires for the ascertainment of what was already obvious and of piling up statistics about matters of only third-rate importance. Special praise is deserved by her bibliography, which one would like to see generally used as a model."

Times [London] Lit Sup p750 S 25 '30 1500w

KENNEDY, MARGARET (MRS DAVID DAVIS). Fool of the family; continuing the story of Sanger's circus from The constant nymph. 337p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-29828

Caryl, the plodding and honest son of the famous Sanger, falls in love with pretty and proper Fenella. Then Sebastian, his brilliant but irresponsible half-brother, comes along and, as usual, steals Caryl's thunder. The two Sangers, accompanied by Sebastian's girl, Gemma, and her baby, set forth thru the Dolomites with their puppet show searching for Fenella, who has been removed from Sanger contamination by her parents. Fenella finds Sebastian so attractive that he eclipses, temporarily, her love for poor Caryl, ever "the fool of the family." The Sanger loyalty, however, saves the situation.

"This should be a popular novel; it has, far above the average, the appeals of romantic fiction. It has the lovable though irresponsible bohemians out of William J. Locke, without the latter's easy sentiment; it has something of the fantastic plotting of the New Arabian Nights· it has the deft touch, the warm feeling, the humor, the happy ending. Added to these traditional attractions is modern frankness about sex. The author nowhere plumbs so deeply into her characters as to make us uncomfortable at depravity or exalted at nobility; her deftness in large measure consists in stopping just short of the thorough-going treatment which would transform her novel into either a dull and pretentious or an important one." A. R. Thompson

+ Bookm 72:313 N '30 600w

KENNEDY, MARGARET—Continued

"Miss Kennedy pipes a tune which, while it eludes you, is tensely personal. And therein lies the secret of its charm." V. P. Ross
+ Books p3 O 19 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p1 N 19 '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

"Adventure is so recklessly busy with their the Sanger family could maintain their freshness in another book. With members of the Sanger family there will always be another river, though it is doubtful whether they will reach their destination. Miss Kennedy describes the picturesque and richly coloured with enviable ease. She is a storyteller with a spell difficult to withstand." K. C. Tomlinson
+ — Nation and Ath 48:140 O 25 '30 180w

"Adventure is so recklessly busy with their lives in this book that unreality is forced on them by their own unlikely acts. There is bright and wistful and tender writing, but the invention which should sometimes walk is always prancing. The author takes much too seriously the nineteen-year-old Fenella's grand passions, conceived at a glance; and the tossing of this inconstant nymph from brother to brother becomes finally so fantastic that the reader begins to wonder how such fictions came to be associated with the solid fact of Sanger."
— New Statesman 36:84 O 25 '30 450w

"'The Fool of the Family' is undeniably good reading. The narrative is carefully and in the main convincingly plotted, and it is packed with thrilling incident to the point of melodrama. Its principal fault is one of structure. The interest and sympathy of the reader are shifted, often uncomfortably between Caryl and Sebastian. . . [The story] will not bear very close inspection with regard to consistency or probability, but it rates a very high score as entertainment."
+ N Y Times p7 O 19 '30 600w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 O 17 '30 250w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:470 N 19 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"Lest her own gift for easy, vivid character-drawing should prove insufficient, Miss Kennedy has packed her latest novel with every possible adventitious attraction. Readers like Incident: let a Fascist Marchese be ambushed, a car flung over a precipice, a ballet be produced, a baby die. Romance? There are amours here, abundant if not significant. Colour? To be sure; here is Venetian moonlight blue, the crimson grandeur of the Dolomites, dappled green on the English countryside. In London, even, there shall be the yellowest of fogs. Miss Kennedy is lavish, inexhaustible."
Sat R 150:453 O 11 '30 400w

"With all the irradiance of her wit, the extravagance of her fancy, and her unerring sense of how musicians actually feel toward their music, Margaret Kennedy has not recaptured the fresh tang, the midsummer madness, of her former book. She has, however, concocted a very diverting novel, a novel that is gay and wanton, yet with sly wisps of wisdom pocketed among its bright pages. Yet the book at its best is so fresh, original, and entertaining, and at its worst so much better written and constructed than the average novel, that one can conscientiously recommend it to all who would know more of Sanger's children, to all who did not meet them in the earlier tale and are willing to forgive the author for not performing the same miracle twice." Grace Frank
+ Sat R of Lit 7:241 O 18 '30 650w

"The sequel to The Constant Nymph is in every way as exciting, amusing, shrewd and unashamed, and is indeed marked by a greater ease and subtlety of narration. . . Smile as one may at this picture of the vie de boheme, it contains much good workmanship and has a resilience and psychological exactitude which are extremely pleasing." V. S. Pritchett
+ Spec 145:504 O 11 '30 400w

"The setting is so excellent, the background, whether abroad or at home, is so admirably done, that the comparative failure of the leading two women characters matters much less than one might suppose. There is vivacity and ease in the telling of the story, and some thrilling pages of Fascist adventure. Caryl and Sebastian Sanger are a delightful pair, endowed with the Sanger carelessness and fun, drifters who are capable of concentration and gifted with clear brains."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 2 '30 500w

KENNEDY, MILWARD, pseud. See Burge, M. R. K.

KENNEY, JAMES FRANCIS, ed. Sources for the early history of Ireland; an introd. and guide. 2v v 1, Ecclesiastical. (Records of civilization; sources and studies) 807p $12.50 Columbia univ. press [63s Oxford]

016.9415 Ireland—History—Sources. Ireland—History—Bibliography. Manuscripts, Irish. Ireland—Church history (29-30667)

The present volume, dealing with sources that are predominantly ecclesiastical in nature, and with the references to Ireland that are found in the ancient writers of Europe and Britain, is the first part to be published of a guide to written sources for the early history of Ireland. The second volume is to cover the Irish secular sources.

"It would be difficult to over-praise this book The author states that he devoted portions of his time for nearly twenty years to its preparation. Had he told us that he had worked at it exclusively for a period twice as long, our wonder at the extent and thoroughness of his researches would be merely diminished, not removed." M. T. H.
+ Am Hist R 36:108 O '30 900w
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 22 '30 200w
St Louis 28:201 S '30

"No previous work has dealt so fully with the ecclesiastical sources of Irish history. It is a matter of regret that for so important a work we should have to look to Canada and New York. There is one advantage, however. Dr. Kenney, although presumably an Irishman by origin, if not by birth, has been able to write with a freedom from the bias, religious or political, with which so many learned works by Irish authors are to a greater or less degree tainted."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p373 My 1 '30 350w

KENT, JOHN. Episode in Luxor, and other stories. 268p $2.50 Brentano's
29-25606

"Unhappy people who live in European hotels are the subjects of most of the stories in this collection."—N Y Times

"An excellent book of stories, cosmopolitan, exotic, sophisticated." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p10m O 12 '29 180w

"Mr. Kent has an insight and a sympathy which leads him into the less cheerful paths of human understanding, but it is the same sympathy which keeps the stories from being morbid."
+ N Y Times p7 D 29 '29 550w

KENT, ROCKWELL. N by E. 281p il $3.50 Brewer

919.8 Voyages and travels. Greenland—Description and travel. Direction (yacht)
30-34089

Rockwell Kent sailed with young Sam Allen in a small boat to Greenland. This is his illustrated record of the voyage and the glorious days in Greenland among the Eskimos and friendly Danes.

"There are pictures on almost every page; and, in the text, descriptive passages which bring the scenes before one in color and clean-cut lines and rhythmic motion; and the spirit of the whole is the author's high zest for life and everything appertaining thereto except the ship's mate." C. L. Skinner

+ Books p1 N 30 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 950w

"There are descriptions, living descriptions, of men and women at their work, men and women who live so far out of the world that they have no idea what the world is like. And the descriptions are vitalizing, filled with color and sympathy. The barrenness of these lives is profoundly moving."

+ N Y Times p6 D 7 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 D 1 '30 650w

"This is the best kind of travel book, far better than the story kind, and this is the kind of book you would take along (if you ever went to Greenland) with two or three histories and geographies, and finally throw away all but it. . . It is a picture book, and cannot be fairly judged otherwise. It is a difficult art to be perfect at; and Mr. Kent is not perfect; but he has done so much in 'N by E' that I hope the publishers will let him go on and be his own stylist and his own illustrator always in future. He is a man with two swords, and should be allowed to keep both sharp and play with both together." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 7:413 D 6 '30 680w

"Here is one of the finest books of adventure written in our time. Beside it Lawrence's questionable traffickings in Arabia seem tainted, even Count Luckner's sea-voyaging but braggadocio. In every way—in prose style, in illustrations, in format—it is the one book of the year not to be missed. It will go on the small shelf of unforgettable books."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:508 Ja 3 '31 280w

KENT, WILLIAM WINTHROP. Hooked rug;
2 foreword by Will H. Low. 210p il $5 Dodd

745 Rugs 30-28751

The first detailed study of the hooked rug is a "record of its ancient origin, modern development, methods of making, sources of design, value as a handicraft, the growth of collections, probable future in America, and other data." (Subtitle)

Booklist 27:147 D '30

"This book has importance chiefly, of course, for collectors, but every admirer of these farmhouse rugs will find delight in this collection of pictured patterns and in Mr. Kent's comments on the probable origins of many of the designs."

+ Books p11 D 28 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"Although recent years have seen a remarkable growth of interest in the hooked rug on the part of both the general public and collectors, this beautiful, large octavo volume is the first searching historical discussion of its origin and allied matter that has been made."

+ N Y Times p27 N 23 '30 230w

St Louis 28:295 D '30

KENTON, EDNA. Simon Kenton; his life and period, 1755-1836. 352p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Kenton, Simon 30-9600

A lineal descendant of the great frontiersman writes this, the first biography of the man who stands with Daniel Boone and George Rogers Clark first among Kentucky pioneers. At sixteen he ran away from his parents in Virginia into the Kentucky wilderness, became an Indian trader and fighter and entered on a long career of peril and service in the early settlement of Ohio and Kentucky. Miss Kenton has based her work on old records and papers, making skilful use of them in quotation.

Booklist 26:355 Je '30

"The book is an important addition to our records of the early days of Kentucky and Ohio as well as a skilful portrait of a most unusual man."

+ Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 100w

"This is a valuable biography. It is not particularly well done, but it is based on sound sources and fills a gap that has been rendered more serious because of the fact that Kentucky pioneers have become the type in the minds of the nation." Avery Craven

+ — Books p7 My 11 '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

"A remarkably coherent and well-documented story of the immortal Simon . . . reeking with grand detail, studded with names, dates, descriptions of places and contemporary quotations. . . It is in its description of Kenton's fights, his almost superhuman deeds in battle, his marvelous deadly aim with the rifle, and the torture which he underwent when captured by the Indians, that Miss Kenton's biography is most fascinating." Stanley Walker

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 29 '30 950w

"This biography of a storied pioneer, by one of his lineal descendants, is all that a biography of such a figure should be. It is written in clear, disciplined prose, with due attention to background and to the pioneer salt that resides in the recorded sayings of frontier men and women." John Chamberlain

+ N Y Times p4 Ap 20 '30 1450w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 150w

"Miss Kenton's book is fascinating from the first page to the last. And largely so because she has kept her own twentieth century speculations out of it and allowed Simon Kenton's grand story to tell itself. Readers of The Great Meadow, Elizabeth Roberts' fine new novel, will especially enjoy this factual account of a pioneer life lived in the same time and place."

+ Outlook 154:466 Mr 19 '30 460w

KENWRICK, EVELYN, and KENWRICK, MIRIAM. Child from five to ten; interests and problems of early childhood. 299p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

136.7 Child study. Educational psychology [L30-132]

The first half of this practical book for parents and teachers is given to an analysis of the child at five, its characters, interest, and preparations for life. Part two deals with the physical and mental development of the child during the next five years. Part three considers several special types of children—clever, backward, nervous, sociable, and unsociable.

"The book is written in a pleasing manner and the average parent may read it with profit and pleasure, finding within its pages an account of his own perplexities and problems. At the same time it gives clear evidence of the fact that the philosophy underlying the kindergarten movement is lagging far behind the scientific conclusions reached by recent research in other fields of child welfare." G. E. Chaffee

+ Ann Am Acad 151:286 S '30 250w

J Home Econ 22:689 Ag '30 80w

"There is in their book plenty of sensible observation, shrewd comment, and wise advice. But the book as a whole is disappointing. It is incoherent, much too full of very miscellaneous quotations, and the endless small anecdotes of children and mothers, referred to as Joan or Marjorie or what not, become tiresome. The writers know a great deal about children, but they have not learnt how to make their knowledge into a well-written book. If they had but found a colleague familiar with punctuation, paragraphing, condensation, and arrangement, they might have produced the book for which every young mother longs."

— + Nation and Ath 46:463 D 28 '29 700w

"The writers owe nothing to the method of the questionnaire, or to any studies on the extensive scale. But their keen insight, their experience as teachers, and their adequate psychological equipment, have enabled them to give us valuable intensive studies of individual children."

KENWRICK, E. and M.—Continued
+ Nature 125:161 F 1 '30 280w

"While it adds nothing new to educational theory and has throughout a slight sentimental savor, it is as full of first-hand observations of child life as a mince pie is full of raisins. . . It has also the conscience, unusual in popular child training books, to include an index and a bibliography, which, in this case lists mainly English publications."
+ N Y Times p24 O 5 '30 200w
St Louis 28:202 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p1098 D 26 '29 150w

KEPHALA, EUPHROSYNE. Church of the
2 Greek people, past and present; with a foreword by the Archbishop of Thyateira. 128p $2 Macmillan [5s Williams & Norgate]

281.9 Greek church. Greece—Church history

A short history and discussion of the Eastern or Greek Orthodox church by a member who has carefully studied its ritual and precepts.

"If Miss Kephala's knowledge of history does not go very far, and her philosophy is not very deep, it is precisely these deficiencies which have enabled her to write a most valuable and convenient book for those who wish to inform themselves, at a glance, of the salient characteristics of the Greek Orthodox Church. Her style is lucid; she confines herself to facts; and the facts are well arranged. The book has its limitations: the chapter on monasticism is so slight as to be unworthy; and the occasional comments on the iconoclast controversy are entirely uncomprehending. But the author's main purpose, that of setting forth in simple English the doctrine and observances of the Orthodox Church, has been excellently achieved."
+ — New Statesman 35:420 Jl 5 '30 180w

"Excellent and clearly-written account. It is all the more valuable because written by one who has been brought up in that Church from childhood, and does not merely observe it from without."
+ Spec 144:914 My 31 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p615 Jl 24 '30 400w

KEPPEL, FREDERICK PAUL. The foundation; its place in American life; an account of the development of philanthropic endowments, and their present activities in relation to education and scientific and social progress. (Page-Barbour lectures, Univ. of Virginia) 113p $1.25 (5s 6d) Macmillan

060 Endowments 30-16033

A survey of the organization and procedure of American philanthropic foundations, by the president of the Carnegie corporation. The book is composed of a series of lectures originally delivered at the University of Virginia.

Booklist 27:47 O '30
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 500w
N Y Times p18 Jl 6 '30 250w
St Louis 28:232 O '30
Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 11 '30 970w

KERKHOFF, JOHNSTON D. Traitor! Traitor! 291p $3.50 Greenberg

B or 92 Dreyfus, Alfred 30-23074

"The author has told the entire story from October 15, 1894, the morning of the arrest of Captain Alfred Dreyfus, as innocuous a citoyen as ever gave or obeyed a command, to the day, dangerously near the outbreak of the World War, when, under President Loubat, he was acquitted of all criminal action or intention and restored to such rank as he would then have had in the French army had he never been incarcerated on Devil's Island."—Outlook

Booklist 27:156 D '30
Bookm 72:x N '30 150w

"We close his book with disappointment. The reason for this comparative failure is, we believe, that a novel demands as its center an arresting personality, and Dreyfus had nothing of the kind to offer. His character was well-nigh blameless; his purposes noble; his intelligence far above the average; his fortitude far beyond reproach; yet as a man he leaves us cold. For the hero of a dramatic tale, this fault is irremediable." Albert Guerard
Books p16 O 12 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
New Repub 65:25 N 19 '30 250w

"No one, probably, will deny that the narrative before us is skillfully composed, that it is vivid and moving, and that it will revive in the minds of those who absorbed the case at the time of its unfolding many intriguing memories. Moreover, we venture to say that a person who reads the book with no previous knowledge of the case will be positively thrilled by the narrative, marvel at the credulity of the Frenchmen of those days and the vivid spectacle of their nation gone mad. All this, however, is not the Dreyfus case as it is now possible to record it. Moreover, in his attempt to produce in the reader's mind reactions similar to those produced in the mind of the public of the last generation, the author makes use of the identical information as it was variously imparted in those days with all its errors of fact and judgment." Walter Littlefield
+ — N Y Times p13 N 30 '30 1250w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e O 26 '30 150w
Outlook 155:669 Ag 27 '30 350w

"Through the political subterfuge and legal tangle the author pictures, without laying undue stress on it, the development of the affair into a racial and religious conflict. The author will have to be trusted for some of his colorful details, but the essential narrative of the affair is undoubtedly authentic."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 29 '30 800w

KERR, ESTELLE M. Town crier of Gevrey. 129p il $1.75 Macmillan

30-9736

In a little French village in July, 1918, Pierre was acting as town crier, altho he was only thirteen. All the older men had gone to war. That was the summer when little orphaned Marie appeared in Gevrey, and Pierre saved her life, and was instrumental in locating her brother. For younger boys and girls.

Booklist 27:33 S '30

Reviewed by A. T. Eaton
N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 170w

"Gives a faithful picture of the life in a small French country village in the summer of 1918." D. C. Fisher
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1078 My 24 '30 370w

KERR, LENNOX. Back door guest. 275p il $3 Bobbs [6s Constable]

339.1 Tramps. United States—Description and travel 30-9723

"'Back Door Guest' [is] a Britisher's book about America, written from a new angle. Lennox Kerr was an elevator boy in New York and spent his days and nights as the guest of flop houses and rescue missions. He traveled in de luxe freight trains. He saw our so-called United States from the back door, not the front. 'Back Door Guest' is a record of hoboing—a human document from the depths."—Chicago Daily Tribune

Books p14 Ag 3 '30 380w

Chicago Daily Tribune p10 My 3 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30

Reviewed by R. M. Fox
Nation and Ath 48:20 O 4 '30 200w

New Statesman 35:386 Je 28 '30 180w

"Lennox Kerr has personality. Loads of it. He sells you himself by the ton. Right off the bat you know he's a refreshing, breezy fellow, a writing man who's going to tell you all about his experience as a hobo. . . Mr. Kerr would make a swell ghost writer; you have a hunch that in this book he's ghost writing for himself. Don't be surprised if you come upon him selling tinware in Africa or, if you have a fancy for Caribbean waters, you may find him en route, swimming the Panama Canal." Horace Gregory
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 550w

"Mr. Kerr has humor and it salts his account of his experiences as a hobo in the United States most merrily. Sometimes he gibes with genial grins at the things he sees and the people he meets and sometimes he turns his humor against himself. But he is always amusing and underneath his humor there is often sound Scotch good sense."
+ N Y Times p25 Mr 30 '30 450w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

"Mr. Kerr has given us a most arresting book, in the course of which he incidentally punctures most of the glamour of the 'Wanderlust' as seen by sedentary novel readers. . . Perhaps no one else has quite so vividly exposed the horrors of prohibition, with its illicit liquor that rots self-respect even quicker than it destroys the body, and in his sketch of the lodging-house keeper Mary, Mr. Kerr rises almost to a Russian level. This is a writer whose future work it will be exciting to watch."
+ Sat R 149:798 Je 21 '30 180w

Reviewed by Nels Anderson
Survey 64:45 O 1 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Je 5 '30 200w

KERSHNER, FREDERICK DOYLE. Pioneers
2 of Christian thought. 373p $3 Bobbs

922 Theologians. Theology, Doctrinal—History 30-24606

"This book endeavors to depict the continuity and development of theological thought in the Christian Church. It consists of a series of brief essays on men who are representative of the successive periods and the various phases of Christian theology. The list runs from the Alexandrian Jew, Philo, to Albrecht Ritschl, of Gottingen."—Books

"Dr. Kershner nowhere reveals an understanding of the inner religious problems which agitated the great men about whom he writes, and leads us to suspect therefore that he has no real understanding of the systems of religious thought that they sought to erect. But his book is well larded with facts, its opinions do not damage, and it is put together with even more than the usual amount of classroom humor." Gerald Sykes
— + Bookm 72:332 N '30 280w

"Within the limits he has imposed on himself, he has done well in this present work. Without being unduly profound, it is a very readable account of the main currents of theological thought." C. F. Ronayne
+ — Books p12 D 14 '30 750w

"It contains more essential history of Christian thought, in form both intelligible and interesting to the average minister or layman, than any other one book I know. In a series of chapters focused on sixteen great thinkers, from Philo the Jew to Ritschl, Dean Kerschner has written the romance of theology. . . Throughout, the romantic, the poetic, the human side receives a degree of attention quite unprecedented in any 'history of dogma,' but by no means disproportionate to its importance." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:1281 O 22 '30 550w

KESSLER, HARRY KLEMENS ULRICH, graf von. Walther Rathenau, his life and work; [tr. by W. D. Robson-Scott and Lawrence Hyde]; with notes and add. for English readers. 379p il $3.75 Harcourt [16s Howe]

B or 92 Rathenau, Walther. Germany—History—20th century 30-2508

A biographical appreciation of the Prussian Jew who, in the position of millionaire captain of industry and socialist, occupied a unique place in the formation of republican Germany. His amazing versatility as a man of public affairs and distinguished student of art and letters, and his rôle as a prophet without honor in his own country, are emphasized by his biographer.

Reviewed by Charles Johnston
Atlantic Bookshelf p32 Ap '30 250w

Booklist 26:310 My '30

"The public life of this man is told interestingly and well by Count Kessler, with an illuminating chapter on the memorable conference at Genoa. But there was also another Rathenau—the proud and sensitive Jew, philosopher and social reformer. It is this Rathenau in whom Count Kessler is primarily interested, and the story of the bitter struggle of his life, so symbolic of the conflict in our modern civilization between things of the spirit and things material, gives to this biography an unusual significance. . . Count Kessler writes understandingly and sympathetically of this interesting personality. His book is one of ideas fully as much as it is one of action. Seldom does a biography appear so soon after its subject's death in which character is analyzed with the perspective and careful judgment which Count Kessler brings to his study of Rathenau." F. R. Dulles
+ Bookm 71:111 Mr '30 430w

"There are moving pages in Count Kessler's largely conceived biography of this man's mind, and graphic pictures of some of the international conferences that Rathenau attended. The chapters dealing with his philosophy are probably inevitably difficult reading. For Rathenau's was not a simple or an easy mind; and the biography would be less convincing if it did not make that clear." Lewis Gannett
+ Books p5 Ja 19 '30 1200w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 1000w

"From the biographical pages of Count Kessler's painstaking book there is to be gained a new understanding of the personal qualities and political accomplishments of this pioneer of the new Republic. Count Kessler's book takes its place on the shelves of the important literature of post-war Germany at a peculiarly opportune and useful moment."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 My 24 '30 350w

"Those who are genuinely interested in the personality of the late Walter Rathenau—Jew, millionaire, captain of industry, mystic, socialist, and one time Foreign Minister of republican Germany—may find it possible to read this book, but we can recommend it only to his most determined admirers. Its form is chaotic, and it is hard even to be quite sure whether the writer of this passage or that is the author of the book or its subject."
— New Statesman 34:132 N 2 '29 200w

"In narrating the life of Walther Rathenau, Count Kessler has brought to his subject not only the keen eye and painstaking industry of the expert researcher but also the sympathetic insight of a friend. Indeed, so close was he to Rathenau that sometimes, in his writing, he is more the friend than the biographer; his affection now and then leads him into prolixity in elucidating the antagonistic strivings underlying Rathenau's beliefs and actions." T. R. Ybarra
+ N Y Times p5 F 2 '30 2000w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y World p11m F 2 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:30 Ap '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:24 Mr '30 220w

KESSLER, H. K U.—Continued

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"A truly noteworthy biography."

+ Sat R 148:583 N 16 '29 300w

Reviewed by B. E. Schmitt

Sat R of Lit 7:66 Ag 23 '30 850w

Spec 143:sup683 N 9 '29 900w

"Count Kessler's biography of Rathenau, while not exhaustive or faultlessly clear at every point, has the virtue of being authoritative, and is properly adapted by the translators for American and English reading."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 19 '30 1250w

"An English version of this biography is welcome. It reveals one of the most remarkable figures in German life and does so with a rare mastery of the highly complex material."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p907 N 14 '29 1150w

World Tomorrow 13:476 N '30 30w

Reviewed by Johannes Mattern

Yale R n s 20:207 autumn '30 280w

KETCHUM, ALTON. Follow the sun. 295p il $4 Farrar

910.4 Voyages around the world 30-25057

A college undergraduate writes of the adventures of his work-your-own-way around the world trip. He crossed the Atlantic on a cattle boat, spent some time in England and France, rambled here and there in Spain, Italy, Germany, etc. and then continued his journey toward the sun by dipping into Egypt, India, China and Japan.

"The book is bright, courageous, and entertaining." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 72:xviii O '30 180w

Boston Transcript p1 O 25 '30 600w

KETELBEY, DORIS MABEL. History of modern times; from 1789 to the present day. 623p $3.75 Crowell [8s 6d Harrap]

909.8 History, Modern. Europe—History 30-6647

A survey of modern world history from 1789 to the present, which is divided into the following sections: The last years of the ancien régime; the French revolution (1789-95), Napoleon; Europe from 1815 to 1850; Europe from 1850 to 1871; The Near Eastern question, 1856-1914; The age of armed peace (1871-1914); The World war of 1914-18 and after; The expansion of Europe, 1789-1920; The Far East; The United States of America. There is a short bibliography and an index.

"The book has much to commend it to the general reader as well as to the college student, for whose use it was obviously designed. The difficult task of selection and condensation has been performed with great skill and resourcefulness, and without omission of important facts. Forty well-chosen maps and charts illustrate the text. The story, which moves at a lively pace, is interspersed with vivid sketches in miniature of the dramatis personae." Hale

+ Ann Am Acad 150:299 Jl '30 260w

Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 350w

"This is an excellent summary in nearly 600 pages not only of European history, but as far as possible of the development of the whole world since the first days of the French revolution. A considerable number of well selected maps add to the usefulness of the book as a text for the use of college students."

+ Current Hist 31:862 F '30 70w

"Written in an interesting, often dramatic style, organized in a really teachable way, supplied with clear and well-arranged maps, well-balanced throughout, and interspersed with lively quotations, the book should prove highly popular both with general readers and with students."

Hist Outlook 21:138 Mr '30 380w

St Louis 28:274 N '30

KETTERL, EUGEN. Emperor Francis Joseph I; an intimate study; related by Cissy Klastersky; tr. by M. Ostheide. 253p il $5 Stratford [18s Skeffington]

B or 92 Francis Joseph I, emperor of Austria [29-21143]

Intimate glimpses into the personality and family life of the Emperor Francis Joseph, written by Cissy Klastersky from the verbal narrative of Eugen Ketterl, the emperor's valet de chambre for thirty years. The narrator has great admiration for his master's orderly conduct, devotion to duty, and kindly dignity in his dealings with others.

"There is substantial agreement among all the well-formed and unprejudiced that Francis Joseph was an unwise and unstable but honest ruler whose life was a series of mistakes and misfortunes, who governed badly but generally with the best of intentions. The personal memories of his valet de chambre will not affect his place in history—they are too naively done to win admiration for the author's opinion and too clearly though innocently biased to be implicitly followed—but as a collection of touching anecdotes of a clean, kindly, lonely and unbelievably unhappy personality, fairly well written and free from journalese balderdash, they deserve a sympathetic reading." R. T. House

Books p15 Ag 31 '30 800w

"This is a fascinating volume of memoirs. While it offers no great revelations, it does present a colorful portrait of the human side of the famous monarch." E. F. Brown

+ Current Hist 33:xxiii N '30 230w

"The book has a charm, a uniqueness and straightforward simplicity that ring true of Vienna itself."

+ Nation and Ath 45:174 My 4 '29 300w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

Sat R 147:442 Mr 30 '29 220w

"A moving account of the Emperor's last moments concludes a book which in its quiet way evokes the tragedy of a lonely and luckless reign and a failing empire."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p243 Mr 21 '29 450w

KEVERNE, RICHARD, pseud. See Hosken, C. J. W.

KEYES, FRANCES PARKINSON (WHEELER) (MRS HENRY WILDER KEYES). Queen Anne's lace. 288p $2 Liveright

30-23897

"A country girl marrying a promising young New England lawyer becomes a famous Washington hostess and helps her husband in his upward career to Senator and Presidential nominee."—Publishers' Weekly

---

Booklist 27:165 D '30

Reviewed by Louis Rich

Bookm 72:75 S '30 300w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross

Books p16 S 28 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p4 N 1 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

"'Queen Anne's Lace' cannot pretend to be a good political novel. Neither is it a good Washington novel. Its chief merit is the politician's wife's view of politics as a career for her husband and, despite the strong atmosphere of from-log-cabin-to-White House, it will encourage very few wives to urge their husbands to run for Congress."

— + N Y Times p7 Ag 24 '30 600w

"She is handling a familiar subject and has done so in an understanding way. The glimpses of Washington's social life, the petty bickerings among the wives of the nation's leaders, all are clearly defined. Mrs. Keyes is, however, capable of better things and we hope will do them at some future date. Her present book, while it may have a fair sale, is scarcely worthy of her best efforts." M. P. McKeefe

+ — N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 200w

KEYSERLING, EDUARD HEINRICH NIKOLAUS, graf von. Man of God. 231p $2 Macaulay
30-15342

Pastor Werner is secretly in love with the Baroness Carola of Dumala, whose husband is an invalid. His rival is an urbane roué, Rast, whom the pastor regards with jealous hatred; but he has not the courage to do Rast mortal injury. The course of the Baroness's affair proceeds, and the lovers elope to Florence. The dying Baron takes his wife's act with the philosophy of a man whom invalidism has taught much; and the man of God resigns himself to his flabby, inconsequential, but kind-hearted spouse.

Reviewed by M. M. Waterman
Bookm 71:443 Jl '30 380w

"Unlike the other works of Keyserling, which are beautifully constructed, this novel is full of beginnings and endings. The plot, barely covered, is more interesting on the jacket than in the book. There are glimpses of the author's dramatic and epigrammatic talent; but the undercurrent, the Baltic twilight, the sunshine, the great charm we find in more typical examples of Keyserling's stories, is entirely lacking." Jenny Ballou
— Books p4 Je 22 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '30 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '30

"For its like in aristocratic classicism, in elegant simplicity of line, in conscious mastery, in wit and poise, one would have to go as far back as Pushkin. No single aspect of the story either atmospheric, moral, social or psychological, is emphasized at the expense of any other; and it may be this restraint, which contributes so much to its artistic excellence, that robs the story of 'modern' significance." R. M. L.
+ New Repub 63:298 Jl 23 '30 200w

"'The Man of God' is a charming, witty and skillful tale, which displays on the part of its author a wide and urbane knowledge of human beings, and a profound skepticism regarding their motives. In other hands, this story of an honest and well-meaning pastor, torn between his duty to God and his own very fleshly desires, might have been a simple and rather hackneyed tragedy. In Keyserling's hands it is a small masterpiece of spiritual exploration—tender, disillusioned and eminently civilized." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 770w
N Y Times p7 Je 15 '30 280w
N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 130w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore
Outlook 155:350 Jl 2 '30 100w

KEYSERLING, HERMANN ALEXANDER, graf von. America set free. 609p $5 Harper [18s Cape, J.]

917.3 United States—Civilization. National characteristics, American. United States—Social conditions 29-24015

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:155 Ja '30
Cath World 131:247 My '30 450w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer
Nation and Ath 46:864 Mr 22 '30 1100w

"If this book were half as long, if its author would get on with it instead of enunciating on every other page with the air of a Columbus thoughts that were old in Plato's youth, it would be twice as readable. It remains readable, since his powers of observation—or, if he prefers, of intuition—are great; but the going is heavy."
— + New Statesman 34:644 F 22 '30 800w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 420w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:7 Ja '30
St Louis 28:51 F '30

"Nothing could be more mistaken than to regard this as simply another book about America; its significance as a contribution to the understanding of life in the technical age is irrespective of any particular interest in the actual field of operations which Count Keyserling has wisely chosen. Perhaps through having been written directly in English, perhaps through a mellowing of its author, it is, in spite of its concentration, a good deal easier to read than some of his earlier works."
+ Sat R 149:169 F 8 '30 400w

"We may not learn much about America from his self-confident assertions, but we do learn a good deal about the author of The Travel Diary of a Philosopher. What America has done to him is just as interesting as what he thinks America ought to know about herself. We consider this an interesting and important volume, although not so brilliant as the author's Europe."
+ Spec 144:203 F 8 '30 500w

"Count Keyserling landed in New York with a preconceived and fully worked-out philosophy. And it suggests that, while he may have honestly intended to pursue his researches in the spirit of an unbiased observer, what he was really looking for—and, of course, found—was material for the confirmation and illustration of his own ideas."
Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Mr 6 '30 900w
Wis Lib Bul 25:410 D '29

KHUN DE PROROK, BYRON. Mysterious Sahara, the land of gold, of sand, and of ruin. 348p $5 Reilly & Lee [21s Murray, J.]

916.61 Sahara. Africa, North—Antiquities
29-22413

"The author, an explorer of international fame, describes in an interesting manner the Sahara which few people know. He tells of its ancient and mighty civilizations and of the cities and palaces buried under the sands."—St Louis

Books p25 Ja 26 '30 150w

"His adventures and discoveries make more exciting reading than any mystery or detective story imaginable, for they are true. He writes with a flair and all he says is delightfully spiced with wit and humor. 'Mysterious Sahara' is a rare find." E. D. W.
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Mr 22 '30 180w

"The style of this book is too often that of a lyrical globe-trotter. Yet the subject-matter is serious travel and discovery in the Sahara and Libyan deserts, and at least one notable find is described in the opening of a tomb in the heart of the mountains a hundred miles south of the Hoggar, the legendary resting-place of a hypothetical Queen of the Tuareg. . . Some of the less florid descriptions are quite good, and the illustrations from photographs are excellent."
— + New Statesman 35:550 Ag 2 '30 150w
St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

"The many photographs repay detailed examination. . . These photographs, presumably the work of the cinematograph expert who accompanied the author, should go far to compensate him for certain sacrifices that the taking of them entailed. . . The author seems to have possessed in liberal measure the essential qualities of flair and pertinacity; and he makes it clear that they were abundantly rewarded."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p470 Je 5 '30 1150w

KIERNAN, R. H. Little brother goes soldiering; with an introd. by Stephen Gwynn. 136p $1.50 Smith, R.R. [4s 6d Constable]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives

"A quiet book, a narrative in diary form, of war experiences which came at a very early and sensitive age to one young English soldier."—N Y Times

KIERNAN, R. H.—Continued
Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30
Nation and Ath 47:710 S 6 '30 220w

"Not at all the sentimental product its unfortunate title would suggest."
New Statesman 35:312 Je 14 '30 250w

"Contains some of the most sympathetic prose writing that has recently been brought to play on scenes of the late great war. . . The cumulative effect of Mr. Kiernan's little book is very distinguished and very telling. He joined the colors below the legal age in a spirit of hero worship because his older brothers had gone. The worship died and he saw that men were seldom heroes. But the singularly clear and sensitive flame of the spirit survived, to play over these brief pages of horror with detachment and a grave, cool judgment." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Times p10 N 2 '30 200w

"Mr. Kiernan writes with extreme simplicity, but analyses his own sentiments with notable skill. He is particularly interesting in his description of the growth of fear. . . His book has been rewritten from a diary, but he has successfully recaptured the mood of an innocent and sentimental though plucky boy."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p567 Jl 10 '30 320w

KIESLER, FREDERICK. Contemporary art applied to the store and its display. 156p $7.50 Brentano's

658.855 Show windows. Art, Commercial 30-11272

"Presents, by means of illustrations, numerous examples, mostly European, of shop fronts, store windows and interior display designs in the extreme modernistic style. The author, formerly a scene designer in Europe, now an architect in New York, also supplies a commentary in which his theories are explained."—Springf'd Republican

"This unfortunate work is written in the rococo English that a German youth might acquire from a German correspondence school, interlarded amazingly with the magnificent business phraseology of the pre-Mencken, pre-Lewis, pre-Fortune era. To a reviewer who is not also a window dresser this matter does not seem particularly profound, but perhaps it would be a revelation to a gentleman in the profession." R. S. Josephy
— Bookm 71:xvi Ag '30 300w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30
St Louis 28:213 S '30

"As a peep show it is incomparable. But as a book it seems to me to need justification. The type has been thrown at the pages with a deliberate desire to reverse the ordinary rules of margin and grouping. Diversity is obtained thus, but at the expense of reason and logic. For after all, the traditional method of placing the type on a page has reason and logic behind it."
— Sat R of Lit 6:1098 My 31 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p10 Je 11 '30 300w

KIMBALL, DEXTER SIMPSON. Industrial economics. (McGraw-Hill industrial management ser.) 312p $3 McGraw

658.3 Industry. Economics. Efficiency, Industrial 29-14735

"'Industrial Economics' embodies lecture material given by Professor Kimball to third-year classes in engineering at Cornell University. The first four chapters comprise a discussion of industrial history, the high lights of which are handicraft production, the industrial revolution, and the effect of mechanical inventions. In the ten remaining chapters the following major topics are discussed: The 'Scientific Method'; Division of Labor, or Specialization; Elements of Cost Accounting; Production Economics; Standardization; Effect of Growth on Economics of Production; Elements of Organization; Management Principles; and the Mechanization of Industry."—Chem & Met Eng

"From the first page to the last, one is aware that he is being given the fruits of a wise and mature scholarship and the benefits of a broad experience. . . The book does more than present the economic setting of the engineer's work. In the reviewer's opinion it portrays and illuminates the influence of our developing mechanical arts upon our economic problems more adequately than any work that has previously appeared. . . This is that rare work, a really good textbook." J. B. Canning
+ Am Econ R 20:263 Je '30 1500w

"Professor Kimball injects real interest into such subjects as the principle of diminishing returns; consolidation and integration of industrial enterprises; the relation of size to output and to efficiency of operation; and the limitations of consolidations. These chapters are particularly timely in view of present interest in consolidations." Chapin Tyler
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:744 D '29 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30
Pratt p10 summer '30
St Louis 27:308 N '29

KING, BASIL. Adventures in religion; ed. by George L. Foote. 252p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Methuen]

377 Religion 29-23810

Written in the narrative form of a conversation between a father and his twelve-year-old son on problems about religion, the book makes answer to such questions as, What is religion? What is the New Testament? and What is the church?

Booklist 26:146 Ja '30

"The great value of this book is the help it will furnish parents in answering the questions of their children so as to give them adequate guidance through one of the most important phases of adolescence. Incidentally, it will assist the parent to clarify his own views, whether he accepts all that is set forth here or not."
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 250w

"Will [the parent] attempt the adventure of leading his child along the pathway of a simple and modern approach to Christian faith? Upon the affirmative answer to this question depends much of the success or failure of the Protestant church in the next generation. To this affirmative answer our author makes a valuable contribution. In view of this one can afford to waive the fact he does not always achieve artistic success. The virtue of his major premise far outweighs his minor defects." C. E. Lemmon
+ — Christian Century 46:1509 D 4 '29 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p20 F '30

"'Adventures in Religion' is a diverting Victorian farce. It takes us back a generation or two into an old-fashioned family circle. . . It all ends as happily as possible for such a family, by the children being baptized, the poor relatives being subsidized, and the parents admitting that a church is an obligation. These are the dangers of answering childish questions, and these are the religious 'adventures' of Basil King." H. W. Schneider
— Nation 131:73 Jl 16 '30 200w
Pratt p8 summer '30
St Louis 28:4 Ja '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p703 S 4 '30 80w

KING, BASIL. Break of day. 346p $2 Harper 30-18558

A mystery-romance in which the theft of sixty thousand dollars in negotiable bonds changes the lives of four young people.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Jl 20 '30 130w
Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 250w

"Mr. King always succeeds in annoying me before I am two chapters into him. His primness annoys me. The priggishness of his characters annoys me. His too obviously soldered plot-incidents annoy me. And, most of all, his manner of always addressing himself to a spinster who has never in the sixty years of her life been out of Newton Abbot annoys me." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 250w

"Aside from the author's customary pious ranting, the story is well told, readable, and though his characters are an unattractive array of shallow snobs, petty hypocrites, grasping parasites and pompous boors, they do not unfairly represent a darker phase of New England life." E. C. Beckwith

+ — N Y World p7m Jl 13 '30 350w

"The style, in strong contrast to the matter, is self-consciously strong, full of emotional passages and violent figures. But all that is powerless to lend conclusiveness to the plots, which are handled with a niggling hesitancy that ultimately frets the reader like a fidgety companion in a small room."

— Sat R of Lit 7:12 Jl 26 '30 500w

KING, DAVID WOOSTER. Ten thousand shall fall; with an introd. by Hendrik Willem Van Loon (Eng title: L. M. 8046; the war diary of a legionnaire). 187p il $2.50 Duffield [5s Arrowsmith]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives. France—Army—Foreign legion

30-13881

In 1914 David King enlisted with the Foreign legion. This book is a diary covering the four years during which he saw active service at the front. His varied experiences, and those of his oddly assorted group of comrades, are narrated in first-hand, realistic fashion.

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 12 '30 400w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson

Nation 130:330 Mr 19 '30 100w

"The interest of Mr. King's book depends partly upon the typically Eastern American mentality of the author, but mainly upon the extraordinarily wide range of his experience. . . His modest account of his adventures from first to last is well arranged and extremely readable. Particularly good is his description of how nervous and frightened he was in the hours before an attack and of how, when the attack actually began, he always felt the joyous exhilaration, as he describes it, of a schoolboy going home for his Christmas holidays."

+ New Statesman 32:644 F 23 '29 250w

"Mr. King fought the whole war through with the Foreign Legion. He fought plenty and saw plenty. His foresight and his hindsight, however, are not particularly illuminating. There is no art to Mr. King's narrative, and therefore very little real significance." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p10m F 1 '30 120w

"There is an impartiality about the narrative that raises it above any preachment. Here we have war with its compound of cruelty, horrors and gallantry all mixed together. . . A book that ranks with All Quiet on the Western Front." William Frauenglass

+ Outlook 154:225 F 5 '30 230w

"The narrative is apparently not touched up or fictionalized; it is jumpy, and only occasionally good reading. For the most part purely factual, telling of blood, carnage, and suffering, it adds little to our knowledge of the war or of men in the war."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1131 Je 14 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p210 Mr 14 '29 180w

KING, LOUISA (YEOMANS) (MRS FRANCIS KING). From a new garden; introd. by A. P. Saunders. 213p il $3 (10s 6d) Knopf

716 Gardens 30-9443

"She writes here about the general making and the special factors of a garden, of the kinds, the beauties and the planting of tulips and lilacs, of roses and peonies and delphiniums and other flowers of the garden in general during the Spring and Summer months, of ingenuity in gardens, of gardens in the South, of tools and house plants and of books about gardening."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

"It is always a temptation, when reviewing a new book by Mrs King, to extol her no less than her pages, for her contributions to the advancement of gardening in America have been incalculable. The whole present garden club movement sprang directly from her able pioneering. By leadership in writing and in person she has organized and inspired a vast army of followers. Her books deserve and have won an unmatched place in the horticultural hall of fame." R. S. Lemon

+ Books p10 Je 29 '30 170w

"Those familiar with Mrs. King's previous books do not need to be told how widely she wanders in her text from her own garden, how many interesting and illuminating instances of her ideas she remembers having seen elsewhere, even, perhaps, in other lands, with what acute, delicate and appreciative observation she describes effects she has made or seen, nor with what charm of spirit, of thought and of style she invests her every page."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 250w

St Louis 28:213 S '30

KING, RUFUS. Murder by latitude. 307p $1 ^{2} Doubleday, Doran

30-32902

The murder of the wireless operator on the Halifax-bound steamship Eastern Bay proves conclusively to Detective Valcour that the killer he is seeking is among the passengers aboard the boat. The mystery centers about the attractive and perennially young Mrs Poole, on a honeymoon trip with her fifth husband; the strange disappearance of certain articles from the elder Miss Sidderby's sewing basket; and a message that reads: "Death comes again and again when one is young, even tho the body does not die."

Bookm 72:xxiv D '30 100w

"Strange as the fatal motive turns out to be, Mr. King makes it seem reasonable enough as life goes aboard mystery ships. We have decided that nothing can be done about Mr. King's passion for quasi-ingenious chapter headings and tables of contents; a pity, for his stories are good enough to dispense with this sort of equine plumage." Will Cuppy

+ — Books p16 N 30 '30 250w

KING, RUFUS. Somewhere in this house (Eng title: A woman is dead). 292p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-7559

The house is in northern New York state; the scene is a snowy winter night. When Vera's maid, wearing one of her dresses, is shot and wounded, Lieutenant Valcour arrives to investigate circumstances and to warn Vera that the shot possibly was intended for her—since Vera's past has been such that she can be accredited with having roused enmities in addition to the growing hatred of her husband and father-in-law. When in spite of his precautions, Vera is killed, it is Valcour's task to discover, among the people in that house, the killer.

Bookm 71:xxx Ap '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p16 Mr 16 '30 140w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 26 '30 250w

"Rufus King has a style that is peculiarly adapted to the writing of mystery stories. He knows how to keep the reader's attention keyed up so that there can be no question of laying the book aside until it is finished. One has constantly the impression that something startling is going to happen on the next page—and it usually does. There is no waste of words; nothing is set down that is not vitally important to the story."

KING, RUFUS—Continued

+ N Y Times p28 Mr 23 '30 200w

"This is by long odds the best mystery novel Mr. King has yet delivered, and our sole complaint against him is that he limits his output to one book annually." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 200w

"Most detective stories confuse you with too much detail. . . But the stories of Rufus King are simple. The result is a tale which you follow easily, and which makes your flesh creep agreeably on your bones. A plus." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:511 Mr 26 '30 120w

"Read it and see how simply a good mystery story can be told." Eugene Reynal

+ Sat R of Lit 6:997 Ap 26 '30 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p849 O 24 '29 200w

KING, STODDARD. Raspberry tree, and other poems of sentiment and reflection. 144p $1 Doubleday, Doran

811 30-27953

Mr King's light verse selected from that written for his column in the Spokane Spokesman Review.

Bookm 72:x O '30 50w

"His columnar gayety is infectious, even when he proceeds so far in mirth as to utilize the refrain, 'Ti-diddlety-i-de-o,' which, be it stated in simple justice, he does with satire aforethought. Here are nearly a century of jingles set forth with skill and good humor."

+ Books p21 N 23 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

KING, WILLFORD ISBELL, and EPSTEIN, LILLIAN. National income and its purchasing power. 394p $5 Nat. bur. of economic research

339.2 Income. United States—Economic conditions 30-11532

"Data on the sources, the distribution, and the purchasing power of money incomes. The work contains 153 tables and sixty charts. In the body, the author presents the methods and statistical procedure employed."—Ann Am Acad

"Unlike the earlier works on national income, the present volume contains only the most unsatisfactory general description of the sources and methods employed in handling the material. It is stated, for example, that estimates for corporate dividends of certain major industries 'are based upon the dividend payments of a sample group of corporations' (page 181); but no mention is made of the way in which the sample is used. Likewise, for the esimates of corporate savings, there is no indication at all of the method or exact source. . . Of course, where so large a volume of material is involved as in the present study, some compromise must be made between giving a detailed description of all methods and sources and giving no description. But for such new and inportant series as the interest, dividends, and savings of corporations, a clear summary of methods seems esssenial, if other workers are to use the figures as a basis for further study." G. C. Means

— + Am Econ R 20:554 S '30 1000w

"Students of income will find in this volume the best studies and almost the only one, which have yet been made of income coming from profits, a field where the data have never been adequately reported." W. F. Ogburn

+ Am J Soc 36:337 S '30 130w

"No student of social and economic problems should fail to make a thorough study of this volume. The data and facts presented illuminate the most vital questions that might be raised with respect to the functioning of our economic system." W. C. Schluter

+ Ann Am Acad 150:308 Jl '30 280w

Reviewed by Hazel Kyrk
J Home Econ 22:687 Ag '30 270w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

Pratt p10 autumn '30

Special Lib 21:344 N '30

Reviewed by R. A. Brady
Survey 64:505 S 15 '30 2300w

"In all probability no study of the distribution of national income, and the multitude of social and economic matters connected with it, has ever been so thoroughly carried out, utilized so much research, and been so painstakingly scrutinized by a corps of experts for inaccuracies. It is one fine guide to what is good and bad about our economic life."

+ World Tomorrw 13:524 D '30 80w

KING, WILLIAM PETER, ed. Behaviorism; a battle line. 376p $2.25 Cokesbury press

158 Behaviorism (psychology) 30-11746

An attack, in symposium, upon the psychological theory and practice of behaviorism, by various leaders of religion.

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes
Books p19 Je 29 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 550w

"Seldom has such an array of talent spoken from one volume. The contributors differ widely in religion and views, but every one is a person of large achievement and high standing. In conducting this post-mortem (though not all of them realize that this is what they are at!) these writers make an immense contribution to current thinking in psychology, philosophy and religion. One would have to be a super-Diogenes to find anything 'shoddy' about their work (though many printer's errors give the reader constant offense)." J. M. Versteeg

+ Christian Century 47:659 My 21 '30 700w

Reviewed by F. L. Palmer
Living Church 84:51 N 8 '30 220w

"While certain passages in some of the seventeen chapters, the work of purely theological prejudice, are rather annoying to the scientifically disposed mind, the book as a whole well repays reading, and contains much that is both informing and of real interest. There is a satisfactory bibliography but the index, which would have been highly desirable, is not included." Maynard Shipley

+ — N Y Times p22 Je 8 '30 1000w

"A stimulating book and a veritable armory of ammunition for those who would go forth to war against the malevolent advance of materialism. Its fault is, that the authors, being propagandists, have a slight tendency to masculine emotionalism." F. G. Seabury

+ — Outlook 155:670 Ag 27 '30 1150w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

World Tomorrow 13:475 N '30 100w

KING-HALL, LUISE (MRS PERCEVAL MAXWELL), and KING-HALL, MAGDALEN (MRS ALASTAIR MACLEOD). Well-meaning young man. 303p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Jenkins]

30-17417

Dan Cavanagh, typical young Irishman with public school ideals and no special talent for work, is sent by the family to take up a foreign post in Italy. On this eventful trip Dan gets side-tracked to Germany, and becomes chauffeur to a glorious Italian princess, who joins Rex Guggenheim, movie magnate, in a rococo palace—but fails to get her contract. Dan finally reaches his destination, and writes to assure the nice little English girl he met in the early course of his travels that all is well.

Booklist 27:65 O '30

Bookm 72:xv D '30 30w

"The story is loosely constructed, but you would not willingly spare one lover's knot of it.

The point is that the characters are all flesh-and-blood human beings, not painted figures set up to be knocked down." R. B. Sanborn
+ Books p4 Je 8 '30 600w

"Whether your vacation means a deck chair, a Pullman, seashore, mountains, or your own home porch, 'The Well-Meaning Young Man' will prove good company." F. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 750w

"Miss Magdalen King-Hall, who, under the name of Cleone Knox was responsible for the delightful novel 'Diary of a Young Lady of Fashion,' and her sister have here evolved a light satire which lacks only a consistent centering of interest to make it altogether equal to the former book. It falls short as soon as the main character is allowed to take a back seat while others perform, but in spite of this the gentle smile with which the reader starts the book will probably persist to the end."
+ — N Y Times p8 Je 1 '30 600w

"It is a mad, whimsical entanglement that provides an entertaining evening." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 100w
Spec 145:260 Ag 23 '30 180w

"The authors show considerable humour, but the book is somewhat too episodic."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p437 My 22 '30 250w

KINGSMILL, HUGH, pseud. See Lunn, H. K.

KIPLING, RUDYARD. "Thy servant a dog," told by Boots. 95p il $2 Doubleday, Doran [5s Macmillan]
30-33156

A story about a dog's life written by a well-bred Scotty named Boots, and edited by Mr Kipling. Boots and his pal, Slippers, have many doggy adventures, which Boots faithfully records in his own special brand of dog vocabulary.

"The book would be a success for the pictures alone." Karl Schriftgiesser
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 22 '30 650w

Reviewed by H. M. Tomlinson
New Statesman 36:sup viii N 8 '30 1350w

"They are dog stories, told as in the first person and in baby talk, by Boots the Scotch terrier. For those who like baby talk, the method will be most ingratiating. Others had best be warned, it is wholly a question of taste. . . . They were model story-book dogs and did whatever the conventions of fiction demanded of them." Isabel Paterson
N Y Herald Tribune p12 N 21 '30 100w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p12 N 21 '30 50w
Times [London] Lit Sup p886 O 30 '30 620w

KIRCHON, V. See Kirshon, V. M.

KIRK, HARRIS ELLIOTT. Spirit of Protestantism. (Cole lectures, 1930) 233p $2 Cokesbury press
284 Protestantism 30-17544

"Dr. Kirk defines the principles that animated the reformers and shows their significance for our own time. It is a restatement of the message and the mission of the Protestant church in the midst of economic, cultural, and religious change."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Reviewed by C. H. Moehlman
Christian Century 47:895 Jl 16 '30 650w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30
St Louis 28:203 S '30

KIRKCONNELL, WATSON. European heritage; a synopsis of European cultural achievement. 184p $2 Coward-McCann [6s Dent]
901 Civilization, Occidental

Professor Kirkconnell sets forth in brief compass the contributions made to civilization by each of the European peoples.

"This little book embodies an admirable conception and a most commendable purpose capably and very interestingly carried out. The author is a Canadian scholar and poet whose keen interest in language and literature has given him a working knowledge of fifty languages and dialects and a wide acquaintance with the history of literature and the arts. He has applied all this varied knowledge and this eager interest in human achievement to the making of this brief but excellent synopsis of European culture."
+ N Y Times p24 N 2 '30 200w
Sat R 149:532 Ap 26 '30 150w

"Mr. Kirkconnell has set himself a high standard of accuracy and has usually attained it."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p339 Ap 17 '30 150w

KIRKPATRICK, CLIFFORD. Religion in human affairs. (Wiley social science ser.) 530p $4.50; college ed $3.50 Wiley [17s 6d Chapman]
201 Religion—History. Sociology. Sociology, Christian 29-14115

"An objective attempt to present in a broader way the best modern scientific thought with regard to the origin, social function and destiny of religion. Religion is approached as a culture pattern, and the sociological, rather than the historical or descriptive viewpoint, is stressed."—N Y Evening Post

"This is the sort of book which does much to discredit sociology in the eyes of some. Not that it is lacking in scholarship, but in a constructive philosophy of the facts which it presents. If the book were written only for sociologists, there would be little ground for complaint in such a deficiency. But it is apparently intended for popular consumption, and the negative results of its study of religion may lead to a wrong judgment concerning the attitude of the social sciences toward human affairs, and especially toward spiritual values." C. A. Ellwood
— Am J Soc 35:835 Mr '30 900w

"Will be welcomed as a scholarly and much needed summary of the theories and interpretations of religion. The material has been well assembled and judiciously handled. The author has taken account of recent interpretations, and his description of the influence upon religious thought and practice of the culture pattern and of new traits introduced by diffusion is almost a new note in the treatises on comparative religion." W. D. Wallis
+ Ann Am Acad 146:273 N '29 180w

"Professor Kirkpatrick's study of the achievements and the weaknesses of liberal Christianity is most stimulating. His criticisms of the church at large can be read with great profit; some may be refuted, others might well be taken to heart." J. C. Walker
+ Christian Century 47:1088 S 10 '30 800w

"The author is to be congratulated on his skill and candor in assorting systematically several hundreds of cards containing thousands of bits of information and constructing them into a clear, useful, and unconventional textbook." H. W. Schneider
+ Nation 131:72 Jl 16 '30 700w

"Whether or no one agree with all the author's conclusions, his book is a real achievement." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 80w

"Here is a sincere attempt better to understand the origin, development, and present significance of religion. Although the author has failed to rise above his own prejudices, as who does not, he nevertheless has succeeded in writing a book which, in balance and restraint, affords a much needed antidote to the partisan invective of Barnes and the lofty condescension of Mencken." A. L. Swift, Jr.

KIRKPATRICK, CLIFFORD—Continued
Sat R of Lit 7:103 S 6 '30 750w

KIRKWOOD, JOSEPH EDWARD. Northern Rocky Mountain trees and shrubs. 340p il $7.50 Stanford univ. press [35s Oxford]
582 Trees—Rocky Mountains. Shrubs
30-6965

"The present volume has been prepared to meet the need for a book on the trees and shrubs of the northern Rocky Mountains which will be of service in the hands of those not technically trained as botanists yet whose interest, vocational or otherwise, brings them into contact with the forest vegetation. While primarily designed for the use of the general public, the book has been so planned as to serve also the technical botanist interested in the flora from either the systematic or the ecological standpoint."—Pref.

Nature 126:467 S 27 '30 300w
Times [London] Lit Sup p516 Je 19 '30 70w

KIRSHON, VLADIMIR MIKHAILOVICH, and USPENSKII, ANDREI VASIL'EVICH. Red rust; adapted from the Russian by Virginia and Frank Vernon. (Theatre Guild plays) 182p $2 Brentano's
891.72 30-10691

A drama of Soviet Russia, which was chosen as the first production of the Theatre Guild studio. " 'Red Rust' concerns itself with the story of the downfall of a hypocrite—a hero of the revolution who is using his reputation and his gift for employing the catchwords of the new order for the purpose of furthering his selfish love of power." (Nation)

Booklist 26:349 Je '30
Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p20 Mr 16 '30 120w
Cleveland Open Shelf p73 My '30
Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Nation 130:160 F 5 '30 600w

"This Russian play, as is well known, has spread to numerous capitals in the world and with a very real success. Its virtue lies essentially in its profound and moving theme, in the exhibition made of the glory and destruction of human life as it exercises itself in its passion, theory and mutual dependence." Stark Young
+ New Repub 62:20 F 19 '30 480w

"All in all it is a pretty terrible picture of life in Russia under the new regime. There is a lot of cussing in it, and some all-around vulgar talk, but it is the type of play that always manages to emerge from a revolution. The most unbelievable part of 'Red Rust' is that though Russian it has a happy ending. That is, the villain is brought to punishment." Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p11m F 23 '30 250w
Reviewed by F. R. Bellamy
Outlook 154:191 Ja 29 '30 550w
Reviewed by Jane Dransfield
Sat R of Lit 6:1024 My 10 '30 320w

KITCHIN, CLIFFORD HENRY BENN. Death of my aunt. 247p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Hogarth]
30-4655

The story of a murder and its aftermath, the whole action of which takes place in four days. A young Londoner employed in a stockbroker's office is summoned to the country to advise a wealthy aunt about her investments. While they are discussing the question the aunt suddenly dies. The young clerk has a bad time of it, but a confession and suicide clear up the mystery.

Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 60w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 2 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 280w

" 'The Death of My Aunt' is a detective story in which the virtues lie in the normality of the situation and the characters, and in the intelligence of the writing. But the normality and intelligence hold up the action; the puzzle-find-the-criminal element and the element of excitement are both rather slight, but it should for that reason find readers among those who do not care for the average mystery story." L. L. Irvine
+ Nation and Ath 46:52 O 12 '29 80w

"The story is decidedly interesting even though no superlative detective talent is displayed by its characters."
+ N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 120w
Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p11m F 9 '30 130w

"For so simple, and so simply told a story, we don't see how it manages to be so baffling." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 100w

"One might say it sets a new standard in detective fiction. Besides the nature of crime, it illuminates many things: the patient persistence of the individual, for instance, crawling towards his goal, serving his private ends, fulfilling his secret nature against whatever lets and hindrances." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:552 N 9 '29 450w

"Well written but does not unduly try your powers in detecting the criminal." Eugene Reynal
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:830 Mr 15 '30 70w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p849 O 24 '29 220w

KITSON, HARRY DEXTER. How to find the right vocation. 202p il $2.50 Harper
374.1 Profession, Choice of 29-25473

"It is the opinion of Mr. Kitson, who is Professor of Education in Teachers College, Columbia University, that of the fifty million wage earners in the United States one-half are dissatisfied or inefficient in their work, and that of the hundred thousand college and one million high school graduates who annually enter the working world there are very few who know what they would like and are fitted to do. Accordingly, he outlines the steps which should be taken in order to choose an occupation on a sensible basis and explains the principles and methods that have been developed by experts during the last two or three decades."—N Y Times

---

Am J Soc 36:170 Jl '30 50w
Booklist 26:189 F '30
J Home Econ 22:501 Je '30 70w
N Y Times p18 D 22 '29 100w

"The net impression of the book is that it took Professor Kitson a good many years to garner the information and wisdom which he seems to assume that any sensible boy or girl can command at will. The common-sense rules he lays down sweep over the heads of 'problem children,' and of the vocationally maladjusted, whose number Professor Kitson counts in millions. In his laudable efforts to safeguard youth from vocational guidance quacks, Professor Kitson seems to me to overshoot his mark in failing to indicate to the rising generation the resources which the modern community affords for those who need expert as well as common-sense counsel." R. W. Bruère
— + Survey 63:485 Ja 15 '30 320w
Wis Lib Bul 26:100 Mr '30

KITTREDGE, BENJAMIN. Crowded solitude. 339p $2 Coward-McCann

30-12148

Ella, following an unhappy first marriage, went to the Riviera to reconstruct her life, and there met young Tony Howard. They fell in love, and married. Tony was not rich, and wanted to be an artist. Ella was used to wealth, and her friends were members of the social, fast-living Riviera set. The consequences of a yachting party, at which Ella was a guest, showed Tony the truth concerning their incompatibility. He left for America, his proper environment, leaving Ella at the baccarat table in a Riviera casino.

Reviewed by Lisle Bell
Books p4 My 25 '30 550w

"There is much real sustenance in the story that is not easily forgotten."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 28 '30 400w

"'Crowded Solitude' is unimportant, but it is not unpromising, though its subject and treatment, its characters and episodes are similar to so many first novels in which the authors invariably and methodically deal with the melodramatic and futile lives of expatriates in France or in Italy."
— + N Y Times p24 Ap 27 '30 220w

KITTREDGE, HENRY CROCKER. Cape Cod; its people and their history. 330p il $5 Houghton

974.4 Cape Cod—History 30-5060

A history of Cape Cod and its inhabitants, in which the first chapters are given over to the historical events from the days of the explorers and Indians, the later chapters being devoted to the occupations by which the people lived and their beliefs—religious, political and social. There is a bibliography, and an index.

Booklist 26:307 My '30

Reviewed by H. S. Commager
Books p5 Je 29 '30 900w

"No one interested in the history of the United States generally, and of New England in particular, should fail to read and if possible own this book—one of the most delightful and informative which we have ever read upon the subject." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p1 F 15 '30 1600w

"Henry Kittredge has written pleasantly and sometimes wittily and he has made an interesting narrative out of his manifold gleanings from countless arid sources."
+ Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 12 '30 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

"Henry Kittredge writes of a land in which his contacts are both wide and deep. And the known passion of Professor Kittredge for accuracy of information and thoroughness in interpretation will not be found lacking in the son. The book is eminently sound." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p5 F 16 '30 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

Pratt p34 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:10 S '30 80w

"The book is carried along by a concise and pleasing style that smoulders with humor and enjoyment of the subject. The Cape and this book about the Cape both smack of salt and sand." Gerald Chittenden
+ Sat R of Lit 6:772 Mr 1 '30 400w

"Exhaustive, illuminating, spirited and agreeable, a work of scholarship and fascination."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 9 '30 900w

Wis Lib Bul 26:103 Mr '30

KLABUND, pseud. See Henschke, A.

KLITGAARD, KAJ. Seven months and seven days. 305p il $3 Doubleday, Doran

30-6811

The fictionized account of a trip around the world in a tramp steamer, the St Ursula, told and illustrated by the second mate, who is gifted with a lively sense of humor.

"Realism which brings the very breath of far places, and a hard-headed scientific scepticism, here are coupled with an imagination to shame a teller of fairy-tales but, unlike some of our modern Irish-American writers, Mr. Klitgaard is careful to discriminate between fact and fancy. A robust and at times quite Rabelaisian humor informs his writing." R. P. Harris
+ Bookm 71:235 Ap '30 280w

"Mr. Klitgaard's book would have been better if he had followed more closely the chroniclers' sound example and left out some of his philosophy and his poetic fancies; for it is his characters who make the best part of the journal, and sometimes his philosophy and his poetry do not come off. But very often they do." Walter Millis
— + Books p10 My 4 '30 650w

"'Seven Months and Seven Days' has a flavor all its own. Klitgaard's descriptive passages, linked by straightforward recitations, sustain the interest and whet the imagination of the reader. The volume is, in effect, an exotic travel book, whimsically lovely in its style, and the author not only recognizes the beauty of the oceans but treats his theme with careful authenticity. Kaj Klitgaard is evidently that rare combination, seaman and writer."
+ N Y Times p2 Ap 20 '30 320w

2 KNAPP, CLARENCE HOLLISTER. Sob ballads; with a few kind words by Frank Sullivan and Corey Ford. 146p il $2 Putnam

817 30-30914

A selection from the "sob ballads" of Clarence Knapp, which originally appeared in the New Yorker, with woodcuts by Donald Streeter. Frank Sullivan and Corey Ford have each written a preface for the collection.

"'A pervading air of disingenuousness and gin lingers as well about the sob ballads of Clarence Knapp, whether they be direct imitations or burlesques of the more excruciating popular songs of the gaslight age. Mr. Knapp has performed the unlikely feat of squeezing an extra laugh out of things already patently ridiculous." Will Cuppy
Books p7 D 28 '30 150w

"Here is a book that should be in the waiting room of every dentist and doctor. The book is embellished with woodcuts by Donald Streeter, which add not a little to its attractiveness."
+ Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 320w

"Knapp's verses are take-offs on the sob ballads that used to make our ancestors weep in the late nineties. The joke, or the tragedy, is that if printed forty years ago they would have been taken quite seriously. Knapp is fortunate in being introduced to the public by the team of Sullivan and Ford. As a result his book is both a Sullivan and a Ford first edition, which may lead some people to buy a Knapp." Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 O 28 '30 250w

KNEEN, ORVILLE HAYTER. Everyman's book of flying; with a foreword by Roland H. Spaulding. 406p il $3.50 Stokes

629.13 Aeronautics. Airplanes 30-16366

A handbook of flying for aviators, instructors, and laymen, treating principles of flight, meteorology, engines and instruments.

Booklist 27:16 S '30

"Of a number of aviation manuals and handbooks which have recently appeared this is at once the most complete, the most adult and the most interesting. . . The language is lucid and direct; the author is not afraid of the simpler formulae and equations, but he is never unnecessarily 'technical.' The book will answer most of the questions which non-flyers can ask about aviation."

KNEEN, O. H.—Continued

+ Books p23 S 14 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:31 Jl '30
N Y Times p17 Jl 13 '30 130w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

"Seemingly every question the layman might ask is anticipated in Everyman's Book of Flying. But the book is not meant for the layman alone. It is, indeed, a curious mixture of pointed anecdotes for him and statistics for the professional. . . The book's fund of information has been checked by experts. Much of it is readable even to those who care little about flying; and only the small size of its many pictures mars it."

R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 180w
St Louis 28:211 S '30

KNEVELS, GERTRUDE. Molly Moonshine. 329p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-12301

Molly, a plucky and bright-haired orphan, works as a boarding house waitress, realizes her ambition to become a pupil in a ballet school, grows to be a famous dancer, falls in love, and becomes heiress to millions.

Books p13 Je 29 '30 150w
Books p14 O 5 '30 150w

"Pleasant reading either for grownups or juveniles is afforded by this merrily written story."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 21 '30 250w
N Y Times p7 Jl 13 '30 170w

"Miss Knevels tells her Cinderella story with charm and humour; the misadventures of Aloysius and Ignatius the Irish twins, are particularly entertaining."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p557 Jl 3 '30 100w

KNIBBS, HENRY HERBERT. Songs of the lost frontier. 86p $1.75 Houghton

811 30-21435

Ballads of the old West, songs of the cowboys, and lyrics, by the author of Riders of the Stars, Songs of the Outlands and other books of Western verse.

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

"The anecdote in verse is familiar enough, but Mr. Knibbs's treatment of the form is brilliant in its ease, its massing of detail, and its swift epigrammatic climax."

+ Bookm 72:viii O '30 100w

"The reader is likely to have an uncomfortable feeling that Mr. Knibbs is in the main turning barren ground, ground overclogged with stubble."

N Y Times p25 S 28 '30 200w

KNICKERBOCKER, EDWIN VAN BERGHEN, ed. Notable short stories of today. 523p $1.20 Harper

Short stories—Collections 29-9874

Eighteen modern short stories with notes, questions, and comments appended for school study. Contents: Gold-mounted guns, by F. R. Buckley; England to America, by M. P. Montague; The whirligig of life, by O. Henry; The penalties of Artemis, by K. F. Gerould; Tol'able David, by Joseph Hergesheimer; The kitchen gods, by G. F. Alsop; Clothes make the man, by Booth Tarkington; The monkey's paw, by W. W. Jacobs; The trawler, by J. B. Connolly; As a dog should, by Charles Alexander; Blue murder, by W. D. Steele; 'Lijah, by E. V. Smith; Basquerie, by E. M. Kelly; Miss Hinch, by H. S. Harrison; A source of irritation, by Stacy Aumonier; Legend, by F. C. Springer; Innocence, by R. W. Lane; Because of the dollars, by Joseph Conrad.

Booklist 26:33 O '29
St Louis 28:142 My '30

"It must be conceded that the editor has made an admirable selection of stories of the type he chose to include. Particularly worthy are the stories by Hergesheimer, Steele, and Eleanor Kelly. The chief criticism of the volume is that it emphasizes those features of the short story which have made it the most artificial of narrative literary forms. The volume contains a good bibliography of modern stories and study notes on all stories as well as a careful analysis of the elements of short-story technique. It is most attractively printed and bound." Russell Thomas

+ — School R 38:75 Ja '30 350w

KNIGHT, EDGAR WALLACE. Education in the United States. 588p il $2.60 Ginn

370.973 Education—United States—History

29-16334

This textbook in the history of American education covers educational practice from colonial times. Includes chapter references and questions.

Booklist 26:300 My '30

"The book seems to meet the urgent need for a new history of education in the United States. It is full of new information, and the author's treatment of his material is free from formalism and conventionality except as they are absolutely necessary for the true interpretation of American education. . . The book is written in easy narrative style and is interesting reading." R. R. Hollingsworth

+ El School J 30:555 Mr '30 280w
St Louis 28:67 Mr '30

"The style of the book is clear and interesting. The book should prove valuable as a textbook and reference book in college classes and should also claim the attention of general readers who are interested in educational problems." I. A. Booker

+ School R 38:150 F '30 620w

KNIGHT, G. WILSON. Wheel of fire. 296p $4.50 (12s 6d) Oxford

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Criticism and interpretation. Shakespeare, William—Tragedies

These essays in the interpretation of Shakespeare's major tragedies are a continuation of the author's Shakespearian studies begun in his Myth and Miracle. Contents: Introduction, by T. S. Eliot; On the principles of Shakespeare interpretation; Hamlet's melancholia; The embassy of death: an essay on Hamlet; The philosophy of Troilus and Cressida; Measure for measure and the gospels; The Othello music; Brutus and Macbeth; Macbeth and the metaphysic of evil; Lear and the comedy of the grotesque; The Lear universe; The pilgrimage of hate: an essay on Timon of Athens; Shakespeare and Tolstoy; Symbolic personification; The Shakespearian metaphysic.

Bookm 72:326 N '30 220w

"Mr. Knight enforces our admiration by the subtlety of his understanding. The essay on the grotesque in 'Lear' enlarges our understanding. Quite admirable is this interpreter's ability to indicate how the poet by the use of symbols of storm or sea or night or blood creates his atmosphere. . . But he is at his best when he forgets or neglects his philosophic quest and is content to descend to lower planes. Then he speaks with something of the accent of Coleridge or of Bradley. He speaks with the authority of one who has indeed lived with Shakespeare's creations, has 'merged into the work which he analyzes.' " S. C. Chew

+ Books p11 D 21 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren
Nation 132:19 Ja 7 '31 380w

"Mr. Knight has so earnestly pursued his Shakespeare into the original conjunctions of experience and reflection which gave the Plays their opportunity that, generally, he escapes the reviewer. One may say that his interpretations are always likely to be right, for he reveals an intense patience in choosing and linking his evidence; and where there is a doubt, the doubt itself probably does him honour. . . It is because Mr. Knight is able to handle the language with eminent felicity that I have written of his book, rather than because it is (and it certainly is) a distinguished addition to the discussion of Shakespeare." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 47:593 Ag 9 '30 1500w

Sat R 150:646 N 15 '30 230w

"G. Wilson Knight has done that which had begun to seem impossible; he has written a book about Shakespearian tragedy which will annoy and irritate some, which will satisfy and delight others, but which will stimulate and excite all save the dull and the indifferent. . . From beginning to end the book is the product of a mind capable of dealing with great poetry in a great way, of a mind delicately sensitive to beauty and to the suggestion of poetic images, a mind which has both power and subtlety, which is at once really receptive and really creative." W. H. Durham
+ Sat R of Lit 7:485 D 27 '30 2150w

Reviewed by Bonamy Dobrée
Spec 145:405 S 27 '30 1450w

"Mr. Wilson Knight is a critic entirely without caution. He follows his own intuitions recklessly, and this recklessness leads to extravagance and even absurdity. Yet he does, as Mr. T. S. Eliot says in his Introduction, 'enlarge our understanding of the Shakespeare pattern'; and this makes his book an important one. The value of his contribution is most obvious in the essays on Lear and Othello."
+ —Times [London] Lit Sup p696 S 4 '30 1400w

KNOBLOCK, EDWARD. Ant heap. 326p $2.50 Minton [7s 6d Chapman]

30-12147

An involved tale of life in rural England and London as seen by Tim, sensitive and lame, and terrified by his cold-blooded, scientist uncle who brought him up. The author, an American who lives in London, is known for his plays Marie-Odile, and Tiger, Tiger.

"Fantastic horror, noble aspiration, bludgeoning cruelty and rare tenderness follow each other without reaching you. Although the book seems carefully planned, cerebrated and executed, it falls into the limbo of artifice. It lacks a fundamental art."
— Books p11 Jl 6 '30 470w

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 650w

"If Mr. Knoblock had completed his novel in fulfilment of the promise of the first third of it one would know better how to appraise it. Mr. Knoblock has no right to practice invention on this scale unless he proposes to make a proper use of what he has invented. The laboratory-production of living monsters is a theme that can be well or ill done. If it is ill done, there is no more to be said. If it is well done (and Mr. Knoblock does it well) then it demands to be worked out, not merely thrown aside. The result of Mr. Knoblock's abrupt change of direction is to make it very difficult to adjust one's mind to the consideration of the remaining two-thirds of the book." E. S.
— + New Statesman 34:124 N 2 '29 500w

" 'The Ant Heap' is his first novel, and the amazing thing about it is that in spite of the years of writing its author has known, it still reads like a first novel. The snare of overwriting and confusion of plot which Mr. Knoblock would doubtless have been deft enough to avoid had he been writing for the stage proved stronger than his abilities in this form of fiction. Not that 'The Ant Heap' is a poor job. It isn't. It is well written and often interesting. But one always, perhaps unfairly, expects greater craftsmanship from a person whose name is known in the artistic field than from a newcomer."
— + N Y Times p22 My 4 '30 600w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson
N Y World p7m Je 8 '30 500w

Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 300w

"A curious blend of an attractive narrative style with a distinctly clumsy construction. The title gives a misleading impression of the nature of the story; and we found it difficult to dismiss the impression that Mr. Knoblock began it without being at all clear how it was going to end. . . The later parts of the book, though they do some credit to Mr. Knoblock's observation of low life and to his admirable sentiments, are formless and undistinguished."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p788 O 10 '29 550w

KNOX, HOWARD VICENTÉ. Evolution of truth, and other essays. 180p $3 Smith, R.R. [10s 6d Constable]

104 Philosophy—Addresses, essays, lectures. Pragmatism

30-31394

Collection of eight essays republished from Mind, the Hibbert Journal and the Quarterly Review. Contents: Green's refutation of empiricism; Mr. Bradley's 'absolute criterion'; Pragmatism: the evolution of truth; What is pragmatism? by J. B. Pratt (a review); The philosophy of William James; Has Green answered Locke? The letters of William James; Is determinism rational?

"The reasoning followed is impressive without being over-technical, and Dr. Knox goes far towards clearing up an issue which has long been under discussion among thinkers on both sides of the Atlantic. But for American readers the main interest of the book is its setting forth of pragmatism and the philosophy of William James."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 400w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Knox's book has the defects attending every collection of somewhat miscellaneous articles, in spite of the continuity of interest claimed for them. The majority were sufficiently technical for 'Mind,' although no writer could more effectively reduce abstraction to its minimum; while the reviews of William James's Letters and of Professor Pratt's work are almost too slight to merit permanence." J. E. Turner
Nation and Ath 47:386 Je 21 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p328 Ap 17 '30 230w

KNOX, RONALD ARBUTHNOTT. Caliban in Grub street. 222p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Sheed]

210 Religion. Religion in literature 30-20191

Father Knox, in his defense of Christianity, herein attacks the statements of certain modern writers on the question of religion. He critically examines the symposia which appeared not long ago in certain English newspapers, in which Hugh Walpole, Rebecca West, Conan Doyle, John Drinkwater, Arnold Bennett, Israel Zangwill and others expounded their opinions on the Virgin birth, atheism, a future life and other religious matters.

Reviewed by Justin O'Brien
Bookm 72:327 N '30 280w

"It is many a moon since I have enjoyed a book as much as this. Father Knox is perfect master of his craft, and not since the Democratic convention of 1924 have so many famous men been made to look so futile and so foolish as the distinguished authors stuck on pins of ridicule in his pages. But this book is devastat-

KNOX, R. A.—Continued
ing as well as delicious, formidable as well as funny." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p10 Ag 17 '30 550w

"Father Knox punctures these gayly colored balloons so casually launched by the editors of newspaper Symposia to divert the childish mind. As he is a specialist, these amateur theologians are made to look very foolish indeed, and must seek solace elsewhere than in the rewards of exact and clear thinking." M. C. M.
+ Cath World 132:248 N '30 320w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer
Nation and Ath 46:895 Mr 29 '30 700w

New Statesman 35:162 My 10 '30 100w

Reviewed by G. N. Shuster
N Y Times p9 Ag 31 '30 420w

"Mr Knox has discovered a great deal of mush in the popular writers on or against Religion in the Press, but his book will supply the orthodox of all churches, with a sensitive pair of scissors and some satirical paste. As he sticks to methods of logic and banter, his victims will have plenty of exercise in struggling free from nets sometimes made of gossamer but surprisingly often of tenacious gut. Mr Knox does not believe people to-day are more religious but that they are fonder of talking about it, as, indeeed, [he] appears to be himself. A thin streak of quiet humour makes him readable even when cutting up the deadest of last year's hay." Shane Leslie
Sat R 149:528 Ap 26 '30 1050w

"There is something unpleasing about the sustained note of contempt with which these honest if undistinguished utterances are here discussed. We are reminded of a group of earnest but muddle-headed undergraduates being trounced by a supercilious don."
— Spec 144:435 Mr 15 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p260 Mr 27 '30 1400w

KNOX, RONALD ARBUTHNOTT. Essays in satire. 287p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d; 3s 6d Sheed]
827 Humor. Satire 30-7434

Father Ronald Knox introduces these essays in literary and scholarly satire with a chapter on analysis of humor and satire in which he brings out the nice distinction between the two. Contents: Introduction: on humour and satire; Reunion all round; Absolute and Abitofheli; A new cure for religion; The new sin; Studies in the literature of Sherlock Holmes; A ramble in Barsetshire; The identity of the pseudo-Bunyan; The authorship of "In memoriam"; Materials for a Boswellian problem; Jottings from a psycho-analyst's note-book; A forgotten interlude.

Reviewed by Grenville Vernon
Bookm 71:231 Ap '30 400w

"Mr. Knox has written a stimulating, refreshing, and amusing book. It abounds in clever phrases, and is not without its discerning comments on life. Real satire cannot be derived simply from a feeling of resentment, nor from uninformed dislike of what is being done and said by others. This author's satire has sparkle and substance; it reveals observation as well as powers of discriminating criticism." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 22 '30 600w

Cath World 132:248 N '30 350w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 370w

"Father Knox does not indulge in complicated dialectics. His ideas are ingenious and amusing rather than carefully reasoned. The essays are the best proof that he understands the true nature of satire. They are suave, it is true, and lacking in venom—the author hardly belongs to the breed of Swift and Pope—but they hit the target very precisely if not with shattering force. Unfortunately, Father Knox extends this formula too far. The trick, once learned, soon palls. The inclusion of so many essentially similar essays makes the whole book seem monotonous." E. H. Walton
+ — N Y Times p2 Jl 27 '30 600w

"Far the best essay is not satirical at all. It is a serious essay upon 'Humour and Satire,' full of wit and sympathy. The other essays in the volume, or nearly all of them, are like those bitter drinks which increase appetite in some persons and turn the stomach of others. . . Will he call us cowards if we beg him for a little sweet humour to take after this book, and if we beg him to let us have it soon?"
Spec 142:53 Ja 12 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 420w

KNOX, ROSE B. The boys and Sally down on a plantation. 276p il $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-26830

Sally and her younger brother spend a year on a southern plantation with their uncle and aunt not long after the Civil war, and have a very eventful and jolly time. The author has blended seasonal activities in the South with the story and made a true picture of plantation life.

Booklist 27:33 S '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Except for Uncle Remus, one can hardly think of another book for children in which the plantation darkies are so well portrayed. There are bits of description of flowers, birds and seasons, sunny afternoons, twilight and moonlight nights that are lovely in themselves and convey to the reader something of the charm and beauty of the South." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p15 Ag 17 '30 450w

Reviewed by M. C. Dodd
Sat R of Lit 7:207 O 11 '30 400w

KOBAYASHI, USHISABURO. Basic industries and social history of Japan, 1914-1918. (Carnegie endowment for international peace. Division of economics and social history of the world war: Japanese ser.) 280p $3.25 Yale univ. press [15s Milford]
330.952 Japan—Industries. Japan—Economic conditions. Japan—Social conditions. European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects
30-5328

This volume deals with "the economic and other changes which the War brought about in Japan, and the policies which, in consequence, were adopted by its government. Parts I, II and III treat of such changes as were most largely economic and the effects they had. Part IV treats, first, of the measures taken to meet them and of the results of such measures; and, second, of changes in the world of Japanese thought."

"Much of the statistical data included is either unnecessary or inadequately digested. For example, the author sometimes uses 10 kin as the unit in quoting prices of raw silk, sometimes the kwan, sometimes the picul. Here and there are obvious errors. . . Errors in proof reading are easy to overlook or correct, but errors of interpretation leave the reader with a sense of a confusion and bafflement." W. W. McLaren
— Am Hist R 35:873 Jl '30 630w

"While the author has made some contribution in assembling the various measures taken by the government and private associations to control and direct the economic forces of the empire during the war years, numerous errors in the statistical material presented undermine the reader's faith in the value of any conclusions that he may reach. Besides careless and ineffective statistical presentation, omissions of the unit or of the base year, errors in the use of percentages, and failure to give the source of the data, the author has not co-ordinated his material for the best understanding by the reader. In the discussion of a commodity, he makes use of different units of measure, which either force the reader to do considerable mental arithmetic or leave him without any basis of comparison. . . There is also considerable unnecessary repetition." D. J. Orchard

— Hist Outlook 21:294 O '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 17 '30 130w

KOCH, ERICH FRIEDRICH LUDWIG. ^{2} Germany in the post-war world; tr. by A. Paul Maerker-Branden; with an introd. by Jacob Gould Schurman. 218p $2 Dorrance

327.43 Germany—Foreign relations 30-33148

"Here is an account of the new Germany by the leader of one of the moderate parties in the Reichstag; a man steeped in the new politics, internal and international, broad enough to see his country under the new conditions, not only as a patriotic German but from the outsider's point of view. He was a member of the Weimar convention which framed the new constitution; he has served in the cabinet and as vice-chancellor. He has been mayor of at least three important German cities. He has traveled widely abroad, including an extensive tour of the United States. . . Koch-Weser makes it very clear that the Stresemann policy of conciliatory foreign relations has and has had his complete sympathy; that it represents the desire of the great bulk of the German people."—Survey

"Dr. Koch-Weser develops with moderation and tact the revisionist claims." L. R. M.

+ Christian Science Monitor p6 O 11 '30 350w

"This is a simple, realistic statement of Germany's post-war position and political aspirations." John Carter

+ Outlook 156:111 S 17 '30 280w

"With a sure hand and a scholarly historical knowledge he traces into the long past the roots of today's Germany in the world-perspective. He deals with the present and scans the future that well-informed, common-sense Germans see, hope, and expect." J. P. Gavit

+ Survey 65:168 N 1 '30 750w

KOCH-WESER, E. See Koch, E. F. L.

KOCHKA, MARY MURRAY. Washington; its early days and early ways. 84p il $1 Scribner

975.3 Washington, D.C.—History 30-16382

Washington, D.C., from the days when it was a swampy wilderness is here described and pictured for children.

Booklist 27:167 D '30

"An unpretentious but useful little book on the history of Washington, D.C. The book will be interesting to young children who enjoy reading simple books about American history. The illustrations in black and white are an attractive feature of the book. With extreme simplicity they combine a certain lively quality that will appeal to children, and they serve admirably to bring out the points made in the text." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 20 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 100w

KOENIG-WARTHAUSEN, FRIEDRICH KARL, freiherr von. Wings around the world. 185p il $1.75 (6s) Putnam

629.13 Aeronautics—Flights 30-13376

Account of a young German airman's journey around the world in a tiny airplane.

"An entertaining piece of work, done with an engaging modesty, but recording a really remarkable achievement." Walter Millis

+ Books p10 Je 29 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

St Louis 28:211 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p923 N 6 '30 130w

KOHLER, WOLFGANG. Gestalt psychology. 403p $4 Liveright

152 Gestalt (psychology) 29-10486

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by Harry Helson

Am J Psychol 42:657 O '30 2050w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '29

Nation and Ath 48:sup217 N 8 '30 380w

"Dr. Köhler's argument is a brilliant one, though parts of it are extremely speculative."

+ Spec 145:19 Jl 5 '30 180w

KOHN, HANS. History of nationalism in the East; [tr. by Margaret M. Green]. 476p il $7 Harcourt [25s Routledge]

323.1 Nationalism and nationality. East—Politics 30-5727

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"This book is noteworthy for clearness of statement, logical interpretation, range of ideas, absence of prejudice, and fairmindedness toward all human groups and ideas mentioned." A. H. Lybyer

+ Am Hist R 35:877 Jl '30 950w

Reviewed by Rupert Emerson

Am Pol Sci R 24:507 My '30 650w

"It is one of the most important books on world politics that has been written since the end of the World War." R. L. Buell

+ Books p21 Ja 12 '30 570w

"Comprehensive and illuminating book." A. H. Lybyer

+ Current Hist 32:626 Jl '30 800w

"Not often does a valuable historical work, published originally in a foreign language, appear in an English translation as soon as has this book. It was first published in German in 1928, and is now made available in this English translation by Miss Green. Students of nationalism in particular and of international relations in general have been placed in debt to both the author and to Miss Green." D. C. Blaisdell

+ Hist Outlook 21:236 My '30 700w

"It is an up-to-date and inclusive textbook in a field where such textbooks have been noticeably lacking. Hitherto scholars have treated Eastern nationalist movements individually for the most part, leaving travelers and popular writers to enjoy what has been a near-monopoly in the field of synthesis. Dr. Kohn's book is one of the few attempts that have yet been made to treat historically and between the covers of a single book those separate nationalist movements which have changed the face of Asia in the last century." E. P. MacCallum

+ Nation 130:301 Mr 12 '30 900w

"His book's one great shortcoming is that it deals only with the Near East and India, for no study of nationalism in Asia can be complete which does not include in its scope China and Japan. But for the countries with which he deals—India, Turkey, Arabia, Egypt, Persia and Afghanistan—the author has given us in an unusually clear and lucid style an authentic picture of just what has happened to the East during the past century." F. R. Dulles

+ N Y Evening Post p9m N 30 '29 900w

"The theme is so important and the manner of treatment so admirable that one regrets the prohibitive price of the volume."

+ World Tomorrow 13:232 My '30 80w

"The volume is in excellent temper and is written almost entirely without bias. If there is any prejudice, it is probably against the French, but even that is not particularly noticeable. To those who may have dismissed lightly the obviously journalistic and inaccurate pictures of the waning political control of Europe over the East which have recently been so numerous, this volume will prove unusually thought-provoking and sobering." K. S. Latourette

+ Yale R n s 19:858 summer '30 250w

KOMMISSARZHEVSKII, FEDOR FEDOROVICH. Myself and the theatre. 205p il $3.75 Dutton [12s 6d Heinemann]

792 Theater. Theater—Russia 30-12259

An account of the author's experiences in connection with the theatre in Russia before the Revolution, the struggles against poverty during early Soviet years, and the production of plays, since 1919, in Paris, London, New York and elsewhere. He has embodied his views of the theatre in the chapter called Systems of acting. The book contains also a vivid study of the work of the author's sister, Vera, the leading personality of her time upon the Russian stage, and a criticism of the weaknesses of the English theatre.

Booklist 27:62 O '30

Bookm 71:xiii Ap '30 250w

"In 'Myself and the Theatre,' briskly written, with many amusing anecdotes and much satire, Komisarjevsky expounds his theories of production and especially discusses the art and training of the actor. It is an interesting book both as narrative and theory, and typically Russian, though couched in idiomatic English." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p16 Ap 27 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 700w

"The title gives exactly the right impression of these pleasant, rambling, inoffensively egotistical reminiscences."

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 15 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30

"His book is extremely valuable, and most entertaining. It is full of amusing anecdote sandwiched in between the declaration and exposition of his principles." Bonamy Dobrée

+ Nation and Ath 46:611 F 1 '30 280w

"If Komisarjevsky's pointless and fatuous book has any value whatsoever it is in its constant reminder of the actor's crucial position in the theater." Harold Clurman

— New Repub 63:324 Jl 30 '30 450w

"Komisarjevsky's book is fascinating enough as a record of adventure. His non-partisan picture of Soviet Russia is a contribution to social history, if it were nothing else. Also, he writes well, and he has a sense of humour."

+ New Statesman 34:447 Ja 11 '30 650w

Reviewed by Rosalind Ivan

N Y Times p4 Mr 30 '30 700w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge

N Y World p10m Ap 6 '30 400w

St Louis 28:214 S '30

"To all other lovers of the art of the theatre, this book should be a treasured source of entertainment, inspiration and advice." I. B.

+ Sat R 148:728 D 14 '29 700w

"Theodore Komisarjevsky has here written a loose and haphazard account of his career in the European Theatre, and interspersed it with his own theories of acting and directing. From the colorless writing of the book one is never aware of the full stature of M. Komisarjevsky as a force in the theatre."

— Sat R of Lit 6:1131 Je 14 '30 220w

"It is the second section that makes the book one of the most valuable and interesting that have appeared on the 'new' theatre since the War. It is a defence of that powerful invader, the producer. The plea, the position, has never been better put than in this book. It is only in looking at the designs which show Mr. Komisarjevsky's 'synthetic' views in practice that one has doubts and fears." R. J.

+ — Spec 144:171 F 1 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 21 '30 280w

"Mr. Komisarjevsky's book is simply and modestly written, but it contains a great deal of instructive matter about the theatre in Russia before the Revolution and about the commercial theatre. The book [is recommended] for its informal ease and sincerity. The personal reminiscences, although rather disorderly—the story skips from past to present and back again a little bewilderingly—are always interesting, and there are a number of distinctly amusing episodes to confirm and enliven the general point of view about the theatre which Mr. Komisarjevsky puts forward."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1060 D 12 '29 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p342 Ap 24 '30 300w

KOMROFF, MANUEL. Coronet. 677p $3; also 2v set $3.50 Coward-McCann [8s 6d Harrap] 29-29970

An epic romance, extending from 1600 to 1919, the theme of which is the decay of aristocracy, symbolized by a jewelled coronet which passes from one generation to another of the Burin family. The novel is made up of a series of episodes beginning with the Italian renaissance. Following the passing of the artistic aristocracy represented by this period, the author presents, in Napoleon's invasion of Russia and the Moscow retreat, the downfall of military aristocracy. In the chapters entitled The arts bow low, we find Chopin dying in France, and the disintegration of Balzac. The last part of the book deals with the collapse of intellectual aristocracy, reaching its climax with the War and the Russian revolution. With the effect of anticlimax, the coronet finally passes from the hands of the last of the original Senlis family to Chicago, where it is purchased by a hog-butcher millionaire, Mallet, as a gift for his daughter.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"Imbedded within the garrulity of these eight hundred pages there lie many passages and sections which proclaim, not merely an excellent artist, but a prophetic, a profound spirit; yet the book as a whole is a mechanical performance. Coronet is a titan made of wax. Among the defects one might list the vagueness of Coronet's central conception, the ambiguity of its symbolism, the artificiality of its structure, the woodenness or eccentricity of its characterization, the triteness (with several gorgeous exceptions) of its ideology and the slavic loquacity (again with some notable exceptions) of its style." C. P. Fadiman

— Bookm 71:94 Mr '30 2250w

"At times it seems best to forget entirely the interpretation of this and that and to enjoy simply the clarity and smooth pace of Mr. Komroff's style. But whether you bring a complex or a forthright mood to the reading of this unusual romance, you are almost bound to find much to your satisfaction—and probably something to your bafflement." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p3 Ja 5 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p4 F 19 '30 1050w

"Primarily it is an heroic-sized panorama of almost four centuries of human life, with amazingly living and vivid foregrounds against which the drama of history becomes a melodrama at once ironic and impressive. 'Coronet' has an epic swashbuckling quality that will endear it to many more readers than its 'symbolism' will. The author has used, when the reader removes himself enough from the spell of the story to look upon the method with undazzled eyes that old prop of the writing world, the long arm of coincidence, a little too heavily and often." Fanny Butcher

+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p9 Ja 18 '30 450w

"The handling of these varied materials is a task calling for the hand of a master, and the author exhibits a power commensurate with the scope of his ambitious undertaking."

+ Christian Century 47:147 Ja 29 '30 150w

"In so large a piece of work it is hardly possible that all portions can be of equal value or merit. If the quality of the second part had been sustained, if all of it were as powerful as that account of the Russian campaign, and the fall of the Empire, with its bitter drama, its sharply selected incidents and tragic pulsation, the book would be nothing short of great. That has not happened. As it is, the book is lavish, vivid, keenly realized, a remarkable chronicle of historic events, an intricate and unusually careful piece of narration, but occasionally confusing in its speculations and theories."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 18 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 31:1044 Mr '30 480w

" 'Coronet' is a romance in the best and most spirited meaning. It has adventure and extravagance together with that greatest of all virtues of its kind—plausibility. Among the scenes is traced the record of five civilizations in a simple, direct language which by its very plainness, like the language of a chronicle, lends worth to the deed. 'Coronet' should be a particular solace to those discomfited by the more effeminate literature of the day." Florence Codman

